couldn't walk on it, and he said to me his name was Cribby or Crippy, or something like that. I mean, I don't know if he was making a joke because he was, like, being crippled or whatever it was, but I know that when this group of people had left, my partner was, like, you know, are we leaving with this group? And I'm like, listen, we could try to manage to carry Fu the hell out of here, but this other guy's got to weight 250 pounds. I'm not made with that kind of strength. I said, "I can't carry that guy." We have to wait until eventually vehicles start coming in, because this whole area -- and like I said, I don't know where the hell I am in -- you know, in relation to the trade center, and all I know is I can't see a damn thing.

I mean, it's not black outside, but it's dark as hell. You can't see anything, and I said eventually a vehicle is going to start coming down this way, and when one does we will try to flag him down and, you know, throw a patient in there.

So we waited there for awhile, and I know that the whole time that we were in that building I was scared, because I thought that -- you could hear planes and stuff around flying outside. I mean, eventually, like I said, once I get out to -- once I get into the hospital I realized that they're the fighter jets, but, you know, I don't know what the hell is flying around. Like I said, I can't see anything.

To me, every time one of the buildings fell down, it was a plane coming in, and then I saw -- I'm thinking to myself, you know, how many -- LaGuardia and Kennedy. I mean, there's got to be dozens of planes out there. I'm waiting for the next one to come in any second now, you know, and I know that my impulse was just to run like hell, and I wanted to get out of Manhattan in the worst way, and we were listening to -- they had a clock radio in the -- by the security deck, and we were trying to listen to it. It was very staticky, but we could hear reports of there were -- planes were hitting Manhattan, that they were going -- that they hit Pittsburgh, that they were trying to do something to Chicago, that they attempted something at Camp David, that they hit the Pentagon, and I'm thinking Jesus Christ, how many -- there's going to be a million planes up there. We are under a full-scale attack, you know, and, like I said, I wanted to get, I mean, I want to go back out to Long Island, way out east where I live.

I don't want to be anywhere near the city. I want to get the hell out of here, you know, but we stayed there, you know, because, like I said, you know right from the 10-10 house. I mean, I could have walked away, but, you know, I don't think I could have, you know, lived with myself if I walked away from people that, you know, are going to be stuck in there.

It's nice to be able to walk away. These people didn't have that luxury, so we waited in there for awhile, and eventually I could start to hear emergency vehicles outside, and I went to -- I went outside to see if could flag down. Eventually I flagged down an RMP and, you know, just a regular -- regular precinct, you know, regular police unit, and I said to him -- I said, "Listen, I got two patients inside that can't walk, and need to go to a hospital, you know. They're hurt pretty bad, and, you know, they -- would you guys be able to take them out of here?

And they were like, yeah, all right, so we went inside. We carried the two of them out to the car, threw them in the back seat of the car, and I remember they were -- Fu was like, you know, I never forget you, I never forget you. I said, "I know, Fu. Get in the car. Get to the hospital." And whatever hospital they went to, I mean, I don't know. I told them go to any kind of hospital.

So they sent those guys on their way, and at that point, I said to my partner -- I said, "Listen, there's nobody left. You know, there is nobody left to treat, or to carry or to save or anything else." I said, "Let's start going home, and let's do what we can to get back to Brooklyn."

At that point, we started walking down. Like I said, when we started taping again, down towards Wall Street. I remember because as we were walking down, Gordon and myself, we reached the bull. That's where we meet up again with Murray.

We were with him in the 10-10 house, but we got separated when we left, and we eventually -- like I said, we meet up with him again, and as we start heading down towards Wall Street, and we walked down there, and his vehicle was parked somewhere around there. I mean, I don't know where the hell it was parked, but I know it was definitely in the line of fire, because his vehicle took a beating.

He was, like, listen, my car is not too far from here. I'm going to run down and get it. You know, because my partner -- he had a sprained ankle.

He couldn't walk all that well, and, like I said, I'm starting to feeling the pain now. I could feel the back of my neck was all swollen. My head was splitting, you know, a real back headache. I was bleeding, you know, I was sore, and the adrenaline and everything else was starting to wear off.

I mean, I don't know what time of the morning it is at this point, but, I mean, I hadn't had anything to eat since dinner, three o'clock in the morning, the tour before, you know.

So we went to -- so this guy is, like, I'm going to be gone. Hang out here, I'll be back to you guys and see if I can get as far as the vehicle and see what we could do to drive out of here. He left, and my partner and I were waiting down in the street for a while.

Eventually Murray came back. He got us into his car. I had to sit on my helmet, because of all the glass from the windows were blown in, and the car was full of debris. There was so much dust on the street you couldn't see anything. In fact, I gave him my sunglasses so he could see while he was driving, but the windshield was gone, and he -- we started driving, and I don't know where the hell he was driving us, and I said to him -- I said, "Listen, all we want to do is get back the Brooklyn, because all I want to do is get in my vehicle back at Battalion 31 and just drive --" I knew we had to go to the hospital. I told him let me drive out to Long Island. You know, a Long Island Hospital, because I'm imagining like these war stories, you know, like, being on the stretcher in the hallway in some hospital with the lights flickering on and off, and I'm looking like this, and, again, like I said, we're expecting the next wave of assaults coming in. I'm, like, the last thing I want to do is be in -- I don't want to be anywhere near the city. I want to get the hell out of here, and so we started driving down -- started driving down Wall Street, and we made a stop at 100 Wall Street. I remember the address because we saw a conditions truck, and I remember stopping, and I said, you know, let's -- you know, maybe it's a Brooklyn boss. You know, if it is, we'll hook up with this guy, because he's, like, let's go back to Battalion 4, and, you know, we'll go to the hospital. You guys get checked out.

I said, "Listen, I don't want to go anywhere in Brooklyn. I mean, in Manhattan." I said, "I want to get back to Brooklyn." Whatever it takes. I don't know care if I got to walk over the bridge and carry Gordon the whole way. I said, "I got to get the hell out of here."

So we went to see where this guy was a boss out of, and we got out, the three of us. We walked into the building 100 Wall Street, and, like I said, it was dusty as hell. There were emergency vehicles going this way and that, and the lieutenant comes out. Hey, how you doing, lieutenant, you know, we're a Brooklyn unit. We are trying to see what we can do to try to get back to Brooklyn, and ended up this guy was -- he was a [redacted].

The guy was an idiot. I mean, I don't know what his name is, but this guy was -- I'd really like to meet him, because I'd really like to know where the hell his head was, because, I mean, if you could imagine, I mean, my partner and I, we got our asses kicked in a really serious way, you know, and I'm bleeding, and we're covered with dust, and my partner can't even walk, and he sees the two of us come strolling up on the building, the three of us, and he says, "Oh, good. I'm glad you guys are here. I have a patient inside, and I need you guys to hang out with her, you know. I got a few other calls I got to run to."

What's wrong with the patient, you know? He says,"Well, she's -- she fainted and she's feeling a little weak, a little dizzy, a little nauseous, and, you know, just the excitement of everything has got her a little frightened, and she's a little lightheaded."

I said, "What, are you kidding me?" You know, and the guy is, like, don't worry about it. I called an ambulance. They should be here in a couple of minutes. Just hang out with her for a little while, and I said, "All right."

You know, this guy gets in his truck and leaves us there, you know, and I remember there was -- you know, we must have looked like the two biggest jerks in the whole city, because here we are -- I mean, beat to hell, and I'm literally laying in the floor of this lobby. This woman is on a chair with -- he didn't even leave his oxygen.

I said, "Can you leave your oxygen?" No, I need that for my calls. Here, here is some information about her vital signs and stuff. I said, "We don't have any equipment. We got nothing. Technically we are off line. They have us off line, because we are injured."

And he said, "Don't worry about it. Just kind of hang out with her and keep an eye on things.".

Murray was pissed off, who the hell is this guy, because the two jerk lieutenants -- I mean the two jerk EMTs are sitting on the ground like this. We couldn't even stand any more, and we were like, do you have any allergies to medicine, going through, like, I'm going to treat this woman. Like, we couldn't do anything if anything ever happened anyway.

Stupidest thing. I mean, again, like, we were living through it, you know, I mean, it didn't seem -- I mean, it bothered me. I said, like, "All right, you know, whatever."

Now, this guy is a jerk, but we were there for over an hour waiting for an ambulance, and I remember thinking to myself, what the hell is this guy kidding me? If an ambulance actually did get dispatched, could you imagine an ambulance getting a call for a syncopal episode and dizziness at 100 Wall Street. Who the hell knows what's going on down by the trade center, what other kind of crap is coming in.

This is a joke, and what are you guys kidding me? And eventually this knucklehead comes back, and I mean, I don't know what, you know, whether any of this gets archived or anything else --

Q. Don't worry about it.

A. You know, the guy was an idiot, you know. I don't -- I'm not out to get anybody in trouble. Maybe the guy just couldn't think straight either, because it was hectic, so give him the benefit of the doubt, but he came back, and he said, "You guys are still here? The ambulance didn't come yet?" What are you an idiot? Murray was saying the whole -- he was mad as hell trying to -- he was, like, get up, see if you can find when this guy is coming back. When is the ambulance coming, and we kept calling, and we didn't get shit, and we -- you guys -- like I'm going to flag down somebody. I'm going to get you guys out of here, and he eventually gets a police van, whatever it was. It was a van of some sort, and the guy -- I mean he said to me -- he was, like, all right, listen, we are going to take her to Beekman. I want the two of you guys to go with her. You got to escort her to Beekman.

I said,"What, are you kidding? What the hell is Beekman?" He said, "It's a hospital in Manhattan." I said, "Listen pal," I said, "wrong borough." I said, "I'm going to Brooklyn." I said, "I stopped here to see if we could help you out."

[redacted]

He said, "Well, like, as long as you guys make sure you get to an emergency room. You guys are hurt really bad." I said, "Yeah, no kidding." So we -- and I remember that Murray was kind of -- he was trying to convince us, too, to go to a hospital, go to Battalion 4, and maybe we could hook up with a ride from there, but, like I said, I was -- like I told him, I said, "Listen, we will meet up with you again."

I remember when he first told me he was a lieutenant from BITS, too, because he was a lieutenant, but he was wearing, you know, stuff like you guys. I don't know what the hell he was a lieutenant of. So for a minute, I was, oh, EMS. I said, "Oh, what battalion?" He goes, "I'm with BITS," and I remember I started laughing.

I said 31 Henry, Tour 1. 31 Henry, Tour 1. I said, "Don't forget it. If you catch us sleeping remember us," but I said, "You know, we are going to hedge our bets, and we are going to try to walk down to the ferry, and we're going to see if, you know, we can hitch a ride over back over to Brooklyn, and we get down to the ferry, and we have -- there was a surgeon that was over there that looked us over.

We spent a little bit of time at the dock trying to figure out, you know, what ferry was leaving for Brooklyn, and eventually they got us on a ferry, but then they took us back off because they had -- they got us a ride with harbor patrol.

All this time is, you know, hours are going by, you know, and we -- eventually the NYPD harbor patrol takes my partner and myself over to the Brooklyn Navy Yard, because they said, you know, "Where do you want to go in Brooklyn?" I said, "Anywhere, wherever it is. I'll walk the rest of the way, get a cab, whatever, who cares. Just get me back out there."

They took us in the Navy Yard, which is pretty close to here, so I was pretty happy, you know. I said, "This is great. If I have to, I know I can walk to the station."

So we -- there was a security guard. I mean, there was a -- you know a small entourage of firefighters on that side that met us. They walked us over to a van, and a security guard was there, and the security guard gave us a lift back to the station, and we got into the station, and I remember he pulled up, and, man, I was really hurting at this point. I was sore as hell, because I remember every bump that he hit going down Park and coming down, and I was, like, I'm going to murder this guy because he hit some big potholes, and we get into the station and Gordon and I, I mean, dragging ourselves with whatever we had left.

I don't know what time it was. I'd have to look at my ACR's that people wrote on me, but I remember we came inside, and people were like -- they gave us, like, a double take, because they, you know, they all thought we were dead, because when we were radioing out, the guys were in the lieutenant's office listening to the radio, because we were on Brooklyn North, and all they are hearing is us, you know, going through these transmissions. We are buried in here. We can't breathe, you know. The building came down us. We are trapped in the rubble, and these guys are all in here crying, thinking they are listening to us die.

Meanwhile, you know, four hours later or five hours, six hours, whatever the hell it is, we come stumbling into the engine bay that -- the garage there, and, again, I mean, we must have looked pretty awful.

I mean I know I felt pretty awful by that point, but we got into the station, and like I said people did a double take. They were, like, oh, shit, you guys are alive, and they came in and like immediately like -- it was just like ants jumping on us, and, you know, sat us down, and got us some Gator Aid, took my boots off, and then started going through the, you know -- blah, blah, blah, blah, blah.

You know, we have to take you to a hospital. I'm, like, I don't want to go to the hospital. Who cares what you want, that kind of thing. So it was kind of weird, you know, being on the opposite end. People -- what is your date of birth? What is your Social Security number? I'm, like, those are my questions. Don't be asking me that crap.

So we went through the -- we went through the whole rigamarole. We were boarded and collared and did the whole nine yards and they took us over to KCH, and we went in there, but that was like the -- as badly as I was beaten up at the trade center, these guys, they were -- they murdered me.

BRIAM SMITH

He wasn't working. They called him in. He's working right now, but he's okay. It's just your father. No one has heard anything from him.

So I called over to HazMat, and I was able to get through, and I said, "Listen, blah, blah, blah, take a message, and I'm trying to find out. What's the story?" Well, who's calling? I explained to him who I was, where I was, and I remember the guy was crying.

He said like, we lost them all, and after I got discharged from the County, I came back here, got changed, did some paperwork with the lieutenants, because I had the uniform here. I got changed, and one of the lieutenants here, one of my lieutenants -- one of the tour one lieutenants gave me a ride over to Haz-Mat 288 in Maspeth in Queens, and I went in there, because I figured maybe these guys would have, you know, some more news and what have you, and I went in there, and the captain pulled me in the office and basically went through the thing.

He's, like, listen, you know -- because I told him. I said, "You know, don't beat around the bush with me. You know, I'm MOS." I said, "You know, other than the fact that I'm his family, so be straightforward with me."

He said, "Well, the last radio transmission we had from your father, he was on the 11th Floor of Tower 2, and then it came down, so we haven't heard a word from him since, and to this point, no one has heard anything from him since, so he's, you know -- they haven't made any kind of recovery or anything like else like that, but, you know, from there I get picked up.

One of my fire chiefs from my fire department on Long Island, a friend of mine came out to -- because they were only letting emergency vehicles in the city at that point. They shut down the expressway. So he came in. He picked me up. Went home, and the rest is, as they say, is history, but that's pretty much, you know, soup to nuts, I guess.

Is there anything I missed on the question sheet?

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

DEPUTY CHIEF CHARLES R. BLAICH

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. CASTORINA: The time is 0910 hours. We are conducting an interview. We are at the World Trade Center Task Force on Duane Street. I'm Ron Castorina.

MR. McCOURT: I'm Tom McCourt.

MR. CASTORINA: Sir, your name and your title.

DEPUTY CHIEF BLAICH: Charles R. Blaich, Deputy Chief.

Q. Chief, can you tell me on September 11, 2001 the events that took place that day.

A. Yes. [redacted]. I received a call from my brother that the World Trade Center was burning. His wife drove both of us to the ferry, Staten Island Ferry. We live on Staten Island obviously. And we got a boat that departed approximately 0930 hours in the morning. On board that boat were various police detachments and vehicles and a number of volunteer firefighters taking the boat over to volunteer.

At some time off the Battery, off the Whitehall ferry terminal, the first tower collapsed and then it appeared after that the second one collapsed and in between that time frame, the boat finally got into the slip. We worked our way off the boat. My brother went to the east side to try to work his way up Broadway to get to the Duane Street fire house to get his gear.

Q. Who is your brother?

A. William.

Q. William Blaich?

A. I worked to the west side with the people from Staten Island who had volunteered. We stopped for a few minutes. There was a traffic supervisor that kind of directed us through the subway at Whitehall Street to see if we could work our way up north that way and there were just too many non-answers. We decided to proceed to the west away from in the dust cloud as much as we could. We worked our way up around the Battery.

In that route, we bumped into -- the first Fire Department activity we bumped into was a mobile command post, which was -- apparently had just come out of the Battery Tunnel and was trying to set up, I guess Battery Park Plaza there, that street just north of the Battery.

I went on board that vehicle and received a radio, tried to find out what was going on. There was really little or no information. I got my volunteers together. We had a contractor giving us an assortment of shovels and picks and whatever and we proceeded further up to the west. I bumped into Dr. Prezant, who looked like he had just been put in a bag of flour and shaken up and down several times. He was very disoriented, but he was able to give me a little bit of information of what was going on. We commandeered, or we asked actually, one of the volunteer ambulances that were there, gave us some face masks to wear at that point.

We grabbed a pile of those and proceeded further north. I eventually arrived at Liberty and West Street, where basically I was -- Rescue 2, whose rig was there. There was an engine company behind Rescue 2, although I don't remember the number of it. That was on the north side of Liberty Street and on the south side there was a commercial van of some sort.

I grabbed a Lieutenant Ryan, who I believe works in the -- he used to work in the Medical Division and I believe is in Staten Island now. I designated him as my aide and we attempted to establish a command post. We were attempting to establish it on top of the roof of the van. People were coming in asking directions. The scene at that point where there were numerous fires burning through the pile. We were tentatively directing the volunteers to start fanning out on top of the pile to see if we could make any spot rescues, if anyone was alive.

At the same time we were informed that there was no water in the hydrant system and what engine companies we had that were still remaining, they were back towards the west end of Liberty Street there, I guess sometimes called the South End Avenue or South End Street, were reporting they had no water.

At some point during this, the difficult part was people were trying to make rescues of victims that they could see in the pile and we had to force them away because people had I beams through them and things like that. We just didn't have the time to invest in bringing out dead bodies. We were trying to find live bodies. We were getting reports, to the best of my knowledge, they were caught like that, I believe it was 58 Engine. They were reporting their officer was missing and they were digging themselves out from Cedar Street, which is that street just south of the hotel.

And I kept hearing 65 Engine, but I'm not sure where they fit into this. I never did confirm where they were. We did confirm we had lost the 58 Engine officer, because some of their people came out. I was informed that we had gotten word that people had got up and gotten [redacted] My aide, we kept attempting to make a list of where we were putting these casualties.

I know it was at that point that Ladder 131 members were being thrown on a boat and either sent to the Statue of Liberty or to New Jersey. There were some ambulance rep there who said we couldn't move ambulances north or south and the only way out was by boat.

At some point there, Chief Hayden came on the scene with basically slits for eyes. I tried to tell him to go to the ambulance, but he remained on the scene and we attempted to operate a command post. He re-established it on the back of the pumper. Kevin Cully from OEM surfaced at some point. He also looked like he had been shaken in a bag of flour. Then we attempted to establish a command post.

At that point a member of the Fire Department, in a blue uniform, informed me that the fire boat Harvey was on the scene. I stopped in disbelief, half knowing that the Harvey was sold a while ago, but he said it was here, had no equipment and an hour's worth of fuel, so OEM attempted to get fuel but apparently the fire boat flagged down a passing oiler and got fuel.

We were able to get a couple of engine companies back in service and they stretched from the fire boat. That was our only source of water at that point. I was also informed at that point that there was a fire, of all hands proportion broken out in the south end apartments. All I could dispatch was one group of firefighters to work on that.

Chief Mosier from Staten Island, 8th Division, arrived on the scene. This is how we established the sectors at that point. I looked as far north as I could see and called that the Liberty Street sector. I believe Chief Visconti was somewhere on the other end, on the north side of that pile in the middle between West -- on West between Liberty and up to where that bridge had collapsed up further and we said, all right, you will be the Vesey Street command. At some point Chief Haring came on the radio and he designated himself as Church Street command. He had numerous fires going on his side. We had a tower ladder. For some reason, 15 truck was still in service, but without water. When the boat finally got the water going, we hooked up the water to the tower ladder. We stretched several hand lines, proceeded to search the pile in even more detail.

Chief Mosier's building now, the twenty story, number 90 West was becoming fully involved. He had approximately 40 firemen without any equipment. I believe Marine One eventually supplied water to him and that's what he operated. That was a sector, sort of an adjunct sector to the Liberty command post.

I proceeded to direct operations. At some point Chief Hayden was removed, I believe to try to get some sort of first aid. I remained in command until approximately midnight and I was relieved by another Deputy Chief, who I relieved the next morning when I came back and that just sort of flip flopped back and forth till Friday.

That's basically what I recollect. Somewhere during the -- time was totally condensed here. I don't remember exact hours. We received several reports. One from Ladder 6, reporting talking to Chief Cruthers, but he was calling Car 4 Charlie and I realized there was no command above the Sector Chiefs at that point so I answered and asked him what his situation was.

The Captain was reporting that he was trapped in the B stairway and I said we are noting your position. What is your situation. He said, well, we are here. We have a civilian, but did he have any immediate danger, people crushed. He said no. I said I have no access to help you. I said I have noted where you are, as soon as I get some help, we will try to work on that.

My brother came on the radio at some point. He was up at Vesey Street, trying to work his way one way or another into the Trade, probably into a garage or something. He had, I think, 43 Truck or somebody with him. I relayed that information. I don't believe he ever got the 6 Truck. I believe 6 Truck eventually got themselves out.

The only other report I got was there was some confusion. They thought my nephew Peter was a fireman in 9 Engine and located him, and they told me that.

That's all I have to say, unless you have any particular questions.

MR. CASTORINA: Okay. The time now is 0920 hours. Thank you, Chief.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF JOSEPH PFEIFER

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. McCOURT: This is Tom McCourt. We are at the World Trade Center Task Force on Duane Street.

Q. Your name, sir?

A. Joseph Pfeifer, Battalion Chief, Battalion 1.

Q. Sir, on September 11, 2001, could you tell me the events that took place that day?

A. Okay. I was working the night before in the 1st Battalion, and sometime about 8:15 or so in the morning we got a call to Lispenard and Church for a gas leak in the street. We were there for a while checking on the gas leak, and then we heard the loud roar of the plane come over, and we turned around and we looked and we saw the plane coming down, heading south towards the Trade Center, and made a direct hit on the Trade Center.

Q. You actually saw it hit?

A. I saw it hit. Within about ten seconds after that or so I gave the first report on the radio and transmitted a second alarm for a plane into the Trade Center, and then shortly after that, the units I was with, I told them all to start in to the Trade Center, and shortly after that I found a radio to transmit the third alarm. I told the dispatcher this was a direct attack on the Trade Center and we had the second alarm coming in on the north tower and to stage the third alarm on Vesey and West.

I pulled in front of the building. I looked up and I saw no fire coming out, no smoke coming out, which would have been the west side of the building.

If I can back up, as we went down the street after the initial explosion of the plane hitting, we saw there was somewhat of a hole, from our position, certainly, maybe three or four of the stories, three stories I think I said. Again, there was no fire coming out. So, when we got there, there was no fire and on the west side there was no smoke. But there was an obvious hole in the building.

I went into the lobby. There were people injured. I went into the lobby and tried to gather information, where the plane hit, what floor, and the best we could get is somewhere around 80. As the units were coming in, we checked for the elevators to see if we had any elevator service. There wasn't any. Then what we did was I started to send people up to perform a rescue because we knew there were people trapped above the fire and we were getting reports in the lobby people were trapped in the elevators and people were trapped, and I believe we started sending units up.

Q. You were the first highest ranking officer on the scene?

A. Correct. Shortly after I was there, the division came in. They started out the same time we were rolling. So they were there very quickly, and I briefed Chief Hayden on what I knew at the time, which was an approximate floor and we believe we had people trapped. Then we kind of went through a high-rise operation to try and get people up there. We paired the engines. I know I told engines, half the group to take hose, the other half not to, at least early on, and started their way up. Also, I saw my brother, who was a Lieutenant in 33, and we spoke a little bit and then he went up also.

By this time all the Chiefs in the world and the Commissioner and everybody else was there and I was just in a support role of the operation of the lobby command post in the first tower.

Then the plane hit the second tower, the south tower. At that point Chief Donald Burns and Battalion Chief Orio Palmer went into the second tower and I took command of that.

Right before that we discussed the operation of the radio. Any time in a high-rise building, communications is difficult. We tried to get repeaters to work. The Trade Center had a repeater. We tried to get that to work. That did not work for some reason, and there were problems with the repeater in the car also. So communications from the onset was difficult and both Orio and myself tried to get that to work. We tried it numerous times and we couldn't get the repeaters to operate properly, so we had to rely just on handie-talkie communication, which is at best hit or miss in any high-rise.

At one point I was asked to get the operations with the helicopter into motion. Unfortunately, or fortunately, I could not get ahold of the dispatcher to do that. One of the citywide radios got moved around and I couldn't grab that, and there were no phone lines. The phone lines were out and nobody was picking up or the lines were busy to the dispatcher, so I couldn't get through to them on a landline or a cell line.

We weren't getting good reports from the police at all. There was one point there was a possibility of a second plane coming in and somebody said something and I turned around to try to confirm that and we couldn't confirm that. There was also later on the possibility of a third plane. Again, we just heard somebody say it and we tried to confirm it. We could not confirm it with any law enforcement people. We all ran out at that point. So that was the difficulty we had.

At one point after the second plane hit, I think, I'm not positive of the time line, I know Chief Callen asked over the radio to come down to the lobby. But with difficulty with communications, that didn't happen. It didn't fully happen. I'm not too sure who heard that or how many people came down. There was no way of really telling at that point.

But right before the south tower collapsed, I noticed a lot of people just left the lobby, and I heard we had a crew of all different people, high-level people in government, everybody was gone, almost like they had information that we didn't have. Some of them were moved across the street to the command post.

Q. Who were you with at this time?

A. You name them, they were there.

Q. With you?

A. Yes, in the lobby. They were moving the command post. So, I guess, after that companies were coming in and we were listing them on the command board so we had an account of everybody. Unfortunately, the command board is not around any longer.

At one point the Fire Safety Director, Mike Hurley, asked us if we wanted the building evacuated. I'm not too sure if he meant both buildings or he was just talking about this. In either case, I believe he was talking about both buildings. I turned to Chief Hayden and said do you want to evacuate the buildings? He said yes. I turned to Mike and I told him evacuate the buildings.

So there were definite communications back and forth that we wanted the buildings evacuated. I forget what stage that was at that time. Again, I can't put that on a time line. But it was before the second building collapsed for sure because Mike wasn't in the lobby with us. So it was sometime before that.

Then in the lobby we heard the south tower is collapsing. I'm not sure, like I said before. I get mixed up with south and north and two and one. But right before the south building collapsed, we heard a loud rumbling noise, and those that were left in the area, we knew something was collapsing, and I noticed in the lobby area where you go around the corner to an escalator that leads up into the Customs Building, and as things were collapsing into the lobby of the north tower, I pushed everybody around the corner. I knew where I was so I pushed people around the corner.

There was my aide, Chief Hayden, Chief Callen, an EMS Lieutenant, Father Judge, I think Chief Villani, and there might have been a couple other people, a Lieutenant, I don't know his name, a Fire Lieutenant, and maybe a couple other people. They were just pushed around a wall literally and then the whole area went black. We heard things collapse. There was debris falling in and everything was black.

At that time I went around to Chief Hayden and said I'm going to evacuate the building. I got on the radio and I called up to the Battalion Chief upstairs, which I got an acknowledgment to evacuate the building for a number of times.

Q. Do you remember what Chief that was?

A. I don't know what Chief. But I did get acknowledgment, like I said, a number of times firefighters said they heard me and that's why they got out. And that was just in the blackness where at that point we didn't even know our way out.

Then Father Judge was there and he was lying on the ground and I went over to him, took off his collar, I opened up his shirt, checked for a pulse, and I knew at that point that he didn't have any.

Q. Where was he?

A. He was with us in the lobby all the time.

Q. In the lobby?

A. Right. He was saying some prayers and he was very anxious in the lobby. I could watch him. He was very concerned, very different, Father Judge, as I know him. Apparently, what it was, it was a heart attack. We didn't know at the time it was a heart attack. We thought he was hit with debris.

Q. He didn't have any obvious injuries?

A. He didn't have any obvious injuries. Then again, we're in black with just a couple of flashlights. So at this time we had to figure out how to get out of here now. So I kind of had an idea where I was going in the building.

So I went up the escalator and now some of the other guys are taking Father Judge and they're carrying the body up and out to the top, and then there was a bridge across, and I told them, I told Chief Hayden and a whole bunch of people, hey, listen, let me see if the bridge is still here, whatever, and let me go across and I'll let you know if we can get out this way.

Again, I had no idea. At this point we had no idea that the whole south tower had collapsed. No idea. We didn't hear any reports. We knew something collapsed, part of the building came down, elevators collapsed. We knew we had something but no idea.

MR. CASTORINA: Meanwhile, the building you were in was evacuating; you gave the word already?

MR. McCOURT: In other words, the firefighters and everybody were starting to come down?

A. Well, I gave an order to evacuate and it was acknowledged and there were reports that people heard that and they were coming down to the extent, again, communication was difficult. It was difficult. I was glad somebody heard it.

Q. Did you see Commissioner Feehan there at all?

A. He was there in the lobby earlier along with Commissioner Von Essen and OEM.

Q. And Chief Ganci?

A. I didn't see Chief Ganci myself. But everybody had to come there first.

Q. The bridge was intact, that footbridge going across?

A. The footbridge that went across, pretty much you couldn't see out of any of the windows and everything and it was like fire. Everything was smoky so you couldn't see anything. So I walked all the way across the bridge and found out that the bridge was intact. I radioed back to tell them that you can come across the bridge, that everything is intact, you can get out this way, and I was getting no answer on the radio. I called a number of times, a number of times.

I went across with four guys. So the four guys I was with walked all the way back across the bridge again and I tried to contact them, and I was able to contact Chief Hayden, who took a bunch of guys out, like out a window onto the side plaza. So I knew they were out and it's not exactly the area I wanted to go because things were falling down and people were jumping. So I took the group I was with back across the bridge, my third trip across the bridge.

Q. Where did that lead you to? Where did that come out?

A. It came out to the World Financial Center. We got out there and then we were standing under the bridge trying to see what was going on. I couldn't see what was going on. Everything was covered with smoke.

I couldn't see what collapsed. Our eyes were full of garbage.

We wound up walking out into the street on Vesey and West pretty much standing in front of 1, the north tower, or hopefully the north tower, just north of the bridge, and I met up with Chief Cassano at that point and then I think Chief Hayden came in a little later.

Again, the timing, it felt like seconds but I imagine it was a little longer than seconds. But things were happening very quickly. We're standing on the street and still not knowing the full implication of what took place because you couldn't see. It was all smoke. It looked like a fire. But it was the buildings. So still I didn't know the whole thing collapsed. I knew we had a big collapse but I had no idea. What people saw on TV I didn't see and nobody told me that's what had occurred and I didn't hear any radio communications of that either.

But standing out there, at one point, we just heard a loud, thunderous, rumble sound, and that's when people really were saying run, run. I must have had my back to the building or was talking to one of the Chiefs because I never saw it. I just heard the sound and ran about 50 yards west up Vesey Street towards the river and got about half a block at most and dove behind a car or between cars in the street.

Q. The smoke and the rubble was coming at you?

A. Yes. Everything was coming at us, and as it started to turn brown, we dove behind the car, and then the whole street went black and at that point I thought that was it. When the whole street goes black in the middle of the day, that's not a good thing. At that point it was real difficult to breathe. You couldn't see anything now with the debris being under a lot of force.

Then after a while it started to clear. Actually, I was with a civilian. Actually, I was laying over him because he had no helmet or anything. Then we got up and we couldn't see, but it started to clear to like a brown, cloudy smoke, and I hear pop, pop, pop, which sounded like gunfire to me. Then right after that I hear people screaming get down, get down. It's not normal. I worked in the ghetto long enough that you get down.

Q. Of course.

A. Because it sounded like gunfire and I've heard gunfire before. It could have been something totally different. I have no idea. I grabbed the guy I was with and told him, hey, we have to get down, we have to get some cover.

Then it started to clear again a little better and we got up and I looked down the block and I saw some law enforcement taking a guy away in handcuffs and he was very agitated.

Q. Would that be on the other side of west?

A. On the west side of West Street.

Q. Towards the river?

A. Towards the river.

Q. Did you ever find out what he was --

A. No. But the cops were real agitated and it was early on. I couldn't imagine what they would arrest somebody for. Again, it could have been almost anything creating that sound. I have no idea. But I figured that was three strikes at that point. And then I came back to the scene and tried to figure out what took place here and what we had.

Q. Did your brother make it out?

A. No.

Q. I'm very sorry.

A. That's the toughest part. And that's the story.

Q. You answered all the questions. Is there anything else you want to add?

A. No.

MR. CASTORINA: The time now is 9:00 o'clock. That concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF PETER HAYDEN

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CASTORINA: Today is October 23rd, 2001. The time now is 0805 hours. I'm Ron Castorina.

MR. McCOURT: Tom McCourt.

MR. CASTORINA: This is an interview with -- your name, sir?

CHIEF HAYDEN: Chief Peter Hayden, H-A-Y-D-E-N.

MR. CASTORINA: This interview is taking place on Duane Street at the World Trade Center Task Force.

Q. Chief, can you tell us on September 11th, 2001, the events that took place that day?

A. I was the on-duty deputy chief in the first division. I was in my quarters at the time of the events. At this point in the event, I heard a plane passing overhead extremely low. I ran to the window to see what I could see. The building line obscured my vision, but I did hear a large impact. And right away I suspected that a plane had hit somewhere in lower Manhattan.

Very quickly thereafter there were alarms transmitted and a report that a plane had hit the World Trade Center.

I responded from quarters with my aide. We responded down Broadway to Canal Street. We went west on Canal Street to West Street and stopped on West Street at number One World Trade Center, which is the north tower.

Visible in the sky you could see at that time a heavy amount of smoke obscuring other portions of the building. I really could not see any indication at that time that a plane had hit it, but certainly it appeared some catastrophic event had occurred.

When I got into the lobby -- or let me back up a little bit. I heard the transmission file to respond. It was a third alarm transmitted by Battalion 1 Chief Pfeifer. He also established a staging area at West and Vesey, which is standard procedure.

He transmitted a 10-60, which is for a major mishap, such as an airplane crash. We brought collapse units and additional units over for a mobile third alarm assignment. We asked for additional rescue also.

When we responded in, I entered the lobby. There were a number of people outside of the building who were burned and in need of assistance. There were people jumping from windows. It was very chaotic.

When we entered the lobby, there was a lot of damage in the lobby, broken glass, tiles dislodged and laying on the floor, you know, the decorative panels all around the walls. But it was rather calm in the lobby.

Chief Pfeifer was in control. We responded in. We tried to gain control of the building systems, meaning the communications systems, the elevators. None of the building systems were working. The elevators were all out of service. The communication lines were not working.

The initial orders were to try and get the elevators in operation. We met up with the fire safety director from number One World Trade Center, Jim Corrigan, who is now deceased, and we told him of our problems, what we needed to do, what we needed from them to gain control of the building systems. He put his engineers to work on that.

We set up the command board and the command post. As the companies were coming in, we were giving them assignments based on at that time, mostly the distress calls. There were numerous distress calls coming in from the dispatcher and also coming in directly to the lobby of people trapped in elevators, people burned in different areas of the building, people needing wheelchairs and unable to get downstairs. There was one report of a blind woman. So there were numerous distress calls and numerous people in the area in need of assistance.

We were sending the firefighters up and giving those assignments as they came in. As the units came in -- I guess you want to know what we saw in the lobby?

Q. Yes.

A. It was Chief Pfeifer and his aide, a number of -- Chief McGovern coming in. He was in the 2nd battalion. I can't necessarily recall the order of these arrivals and response. Chief Ryan also came in. Chief Palmer came in from 7th battalion. And Chief Ryan was in the 4th battalion.

They all came in, and they were all given assignments, as were the company officers and the firefighters. In the initial stages it wasn't chaotic. It was under control, very calm. Certainly we were very calm.

Shortly thereafter a number of the uniformed and civilian staff of the department arrived in the lobby, Commissioner Von Essen, Commissioner Fitzpatrick, Commissioner Feehan.

The tour commander, who was Joseph Callan arrived on the scene. I spoke with him very briefly. He came in, and I kept him apprised of what happened thus far. He asked me at some point in time if we were thinking of collapse. I said yeah, we have to, a plane just struck the building. We also said we're pretty sure this was a terrorist attack. Everybody recognized early on that this was an intentional act.

Q. This is after the second hit?

A. Yes, this is after, oh, yeah.

So the potential and reality of -- or possibility of a collapse was discussed early on. But we were at a level of commitment. We also received numerous distress calls. We realized we had a lot dying and fire up there. When the civilian staff arrived, then Commissioners Feehan, Fitzpatrick and Commissioner Von Essen, we discussed strategy and tactics.

I specifically remember telling Commissioner Von Essen that we were not attempting to extinguish this fire. It's just strictly a search and rescue operation. We were not trying to put this fire out. We had thousands of people coming down the stairs, and that was our focus, to answer as many distress calls as we could and complete whatever searches we could. That was the focus of our strategy there at the time.

At one point in time, there were numerous bodies coming down, and I really lost track of time there. There was a discussion that we had to get out of the lobby. It was not a good place to be.

We talked about setting up the command post across the street outside the building at West and Vesey. I remember saying we can't go out into the street because of the numerous bodies that were coming down. It was actually dangerous to try to enter or exit the building onto the street. We said let's go up and cross the escalator through six and cross the overpass at West and Vesey and come down and set up a command post on West and Vesey. They left the building to establish a command post over there.

I heard Chief Ganci on the air at that time. At that time the Chief and -- that was in the lobby. It was Chief Callan. He was running that. Chief Ganci was over there, and I imagine Commissioner Feehan and at one time Commissioner Von Essen. When they left the building, that was the last I ever saw of them, although we did have radio communications with their car 3 about what was going on.

There were numerous discussions in the lobby. The chief of safety came in. He discussed his concern about the collapse. His advice to us was to let the building just burn, you know, get the people down and get out. We said that's exactly what we're planning to do. He said okay, do you want to get some of the apparatus moved back. I don't think that was ever accomplished.

I really didn't get involved with that because early on we realized that a number of the companies were coming in and were not reporting to any staging area we established. So we were losing some control of the companies coming in.

There was also some communication problems later on with companies coming in, units responding to the second alarm after the other plane hit. They weren't sure which was World Trade Center One and World Trade Center Two. So that became confusing.

Of course off-duty members were coming in, and they were reporting directly upstairs. So at one point in time -- I want to say that Chief McGovern was still in the lobby -- we had to account for everybody that was going upstairs. It became a critical issue.

We discussed with Chief Downey the operations, and that continued for a while. We were making a concerted effort to get the elevators down and answering all the distress calls. We were working with the engineers.

We were working the intercom in the lobby between the elevators, trying to get an idea what floors they were on. The engineers told us we have people on this floor, that floor, 66th floor, 71st floor, stuck in the elevators. We answered as many of the distress calls as we could.

We concentrated on trying to get some type of hand line hardware communications. We attempted the repeater system. The repeater system was not in service. The repeater system wasn't working. So we were at a distinct disadvantage because we had none of the building systems to work with.

(Interruption by FF.)

A. Where was I?

Q. Communications problems.

A. Throughout, of course, there were communication problems. All we had to rely on was handy talky communications. Once you go up several floors in the towers there, you have poor handy talky communications, and that's all we had.

At some point in time -- you know, we continued with the evacuations, thousands of people coming down the stairs, answering the distress calls, making assignments to the companies as they would come in, whoever reported into the lobby command post.

Then at some point in time we were told there was another event. We were in the lobby of the north tower. We weren't sure exactly what it was. We were told another plane hit the south tower.

Shortly thereafter we met in a little conference, myself, Chief Callan and Chief Pfeifer. Shortly after that discussion, we started to evacuate the north tower. We started telling everybody come on down. That was repeated a number of times. However, we didn't get a lot of acknowledgment off of the handy talky communications.

The latest report -- the last report we had from anybody at all was that there were people that were heading up around the 48th floor. That was several minutes prior to this collapse. So we had people as high as the 50th floor while we had communications. I think that's about as far up as anybody got.

We were calling people down on a number of occasions, but we weren't getting -- except for the lower floors, companies coming down, they weren't coming down. They were being directed north.

In the lobby at that time were a number of the Port Authority people and a couple of Port Authority cops. Members of Ladder Company 20, I remember were standing by. I remember remnants of the hazmat unit standing by and off-duty members coming in. We had them standing by there.

Companies there, I don't really recollect what exactly the companies were in the lobby area there. We lost the board after the collapse, so we couldn't go over the assignments.

My aide was there and Battalion 18 was there. Chief Karletta was there. So there was about at one point at least a dozen people in the lobby there. Some of them even left. Father Judge was in the lobby.

Then suddenly the -- we didn't know what it was. We found out afterwards. There was a violent impact and the south tower collapsed while we were in the lobby of one. There was a tremendous dust cloud and debris field thrown at us.

I was told that later on by the Port Authority people I met and we really couldn't see. It was pitch-black in the lobby after that. We gave an order to evacuate the building. Everybody in the north tower was ordered out.

We found Father Judge, who was dead. We moved out of the lobby. We went up the escalator to the -- I guess that's the concourse level up there, worked our way through six, around the outer part of six. Then we proceeded down a stairway and escalator down into the -- this is on the Vesey Street side. We proceeded down to the street level. We were at West Broadway and Vesey.

We turned father Judge over to EMS. Then we proceeded south on Vesey towards West Street to find a command post. When I arrived at West and Vesey, I met up with a number of chiefs. There was Chief Stack, who is now deceased or among the missing, Chief O'Flaherty and Chief Cassano who I ended up talking with. We discussed some issues there.

We directed everybody north. Then Chief Cassano and I started to go south, looking for the command post. We were just north of the north bridge overpass when the second building came down. I crawled under a fire truck, a fire pumper. I'm pretty sure it was a pumper. I'm not sure which one it was. To this day I don't know.

I just had my helmet off and just laid down underneath that. I was told later that Chief Cassano did the same thing. After the second building collapsed and the dust settled, I came out, and I'm here talking to you.

That's about as much as I can give you. If you want specifics, I'll try to answer questions.

Q. That's fine.

A. Like I said, I don't remember -- I'm sure you probably saw a tape floating around. Did you see a tape floating around?

Q. Which tape?

A. A tape going around regarding the fire?

Q. A videotape of it?

A. Yeah.

Q. No.

A. If you see that, that might be able to help you out. You know, showing the plane hitting the building.

Q. (Inaudible.)

A. As far as recollection of actually, the chiefs I remember more so than the firefighters that were assigned from the command board. Chief McGovern and Chief Ryan were there. Chief Cassano was another one and Chief Barbara.

Chief Burns was in the lobby also. I remember after the first strike we were talking. After the second plane hit, we conferred. It was Chief Callan, myself, Chief Pfeifer, Chief Burns and Chief Palmer. Over what handy talky frequencies we were to use so that we didn't interfere with each other's communications because he was going over to handle the south tower.

Q. Where?

A. They went over to the south tower, Chief Burns and Chief Palmer. So we worked out who was going to be on what frequencies so we wouldn't interfere.

Q. What frequency were you on?

A. I think I wound up on 1 and 6. I was the primary tactical and 6 was the command channel. I can't be sure what they went to, but they went to other channels as a tactical or primary. It was because Chief Burns brought up the issue that the last time we had the terrorist attack there, they had trouble with communications. I remember that discussion.

And they took off for the south tower. That was the last time I saw them.

Q. Did you see Chief Ganci or Commissioner Feehan?

A. I never saw Chief Ganci there, in the lobby. I heard him on the radio. Commissioner Feehan was there. In fact, I discussed a number of the issues that were going on at the time with Chief Feehan, Commissioner Von Essen and Commissioner Fitzpatrick. Commissioner Feehan, Fitzpatrick, Deputy Commissioner Tierney were there. Ray Goldbach, their exec, he was in the lobby. OEM representatives Kevin Cully was there. He was alive. Richie Schirer was in the lobby. Who else? There were a lot of people.

Q. Anybody else?

A. Well, a lot of people I guess should not have been in the lobby, in retrospect. You know putting all your eggs in one basket is another issue.

There was awareness there that certainly this was a serious operation. Certainly the awareness was there of the possibility of collapse.

Q. Chief Downey, was he there?

A. Yes, Chief Downey was there, sure. In fact he was there relatively late into the operation in the lobby. I don't know where -- he was there earlier on and then left and came back. So he was in the lobby there. I assume at one point from conversation that he was going to the command post.

Once we talked about establishing the command post on West and Vesey with Commissioner Von Essen, Commissioner Fitzpatrick, Commissioner Feehan and Chief Downey. I was under the impression they all left and went over there. Obviously Commissioner Von Essen did go there when he was with Chief Feehan. I was told that on the way over there Commissioner Von Essen was there and was interrupted by the Mayor. They went off in another direction, very fortuitously getting out of harm's way there.

If you have any questions, I'll be happy to answer them.

Q. No, Tom -- no, that's it.

MR. CASTORINA: The time now is 8:25. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER THOMAS GABY

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 23rd. The time is 10:16. I'm Mike Tambasco assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. We're doing an interview into the events of September 11th at the World Trade Center and our interview today is with...

FIREFIGHTER GABY: Tom Gaby, aide to Chief Cassano, Firefighter First Grade.

Q. Would you be good enough, Tom?

A. Okay. Prior to the date of 9/11, on 9/10, I worked as an aide to Chief Burns on an overtime tour. The morning of 9/11, I was having coffee right outside Chief Ganci's office, speaking to the secretary, Lisa DeFazio. Chief Ganci came out of his office and yelled out that a plane had struck the World Trade towers and that Chief Nigro should look out his window. With that Chief Burns, standing by the commissary kitchen, said come on, Tom, let's go, and we were off.

We went down the elevator with most of the staff Chiefs, Chief Barbara, myself, Chief Ganci, Chief Ingram, Chief Burns, and we went down to the C1 level. We got in our cars and proceeded to the Brooklyn Bridge heading towards the World Trade Center. I believe and I'm pretty sure I was the first staff car in line. Chief Ganci was driving with Chief Nigro. Steve Mosiello was driving both of them.

As we were going over the bridge, Chief Burns said to me, it doesn't look like the sprinkler system is working too well and kind of jokingly said that to me. I said, yes, I guess maybe it's too much fire, and we kind of laughed about it and proceeded to go over the bridge. As we approached the World Trade Center, we got there pretty fast. I don't think there were that many companies there at that time.

I pulled up as far as I could under the north bridge in front of 1 World Trade Center. I believe that was the north tower. With that I opened the trunk for Chief Burns. He proceeded to get his gear out and I -- well, basically he said to me, his last words to me were, Tommy, I don't want to get stuck here. Park the car far away. With that I took the car and made a U-turn and headed north on West Street. I parked the car on Chambers, on the corner of Chambers and West.

Looking back towards the scene as I was leaving, I wanted to see if I could find Chief Cassano's car because my turnout gear was in his car because I normally drive Chief Cassano. I proceeded heading towards Chief Cassano's car, walking back towards Chief Cassano's car, and Chief Ingram grabbed me and told me he wanted me to alert Field Com with setup in front of I think the Financial Building, on the West Street side, World Financial Center.

Q. The Merrill Lynch Building?

A. Right. The Merrill Lynch Building. That's where our command center was for the outside. Basically, that's what I did for a few minutes, even before I went and got my gear. I proceeded to look for the car again and then, spotting it, I came upon Chief Callan's aide.

Q. Who was that?

A. James Migalia. He came up to me and said he had no gear in his car; could he use my gear. I told him, here, take my gear, the key for the car was in the gas cap, there was a spare key, and I would get something else. With that Chief Ganci was yelling at me to get the rigs out of West Street, on the West Street promenade. In other words, he wanted all the rigs cleared out of the area. I ran back and forth a few times doing that and then left to get my gear.

Actually, what I did was I went up back to Chief Burns' car and took Kevin Glock's gear, which is Chief Burns' normal driver. His helmet doesn't fit me, but I had it. So I got his turnout coat and just his helmet. I took the -- which I had the radio on, I also took the cell phone with me, headed back towards the command center outside, and believe it or not, somewhere in between there the plane had hit, the second plane.

Q. The second plane?

A. I saw it coming in, I heard it, and bang, it hit. I proceeded to try to call my wife to tell her to stay home on the cell phone. It didn't work. I went into I believe the American Express Building and called her from there. I left a message at work for her to go home if she could, and then I went back towards the command board. I didn't know exactly where Chief Burns was, but watching all the outside activities going on, I was trying to get a feel for where he would be. I looked at the board and it was kind of like in disarray at this time. So, basically, I was just trying to help out and see if I could listen.

At some point I was able to ascertain that I think Chief Burns said that he was in 2 World Trade Center, the south tower, and I said, well, let me see if I can make my way down there. So I walked along the buildings on West Street, on the west side of West Street, because people were jumping and the stuff was falling out of all the buildings.

At that point I saw the bridge. I went under the pedestrian bridge to cover myself and I made kind of a dash for the Vista International Hotel. I couldn't tell what time it was. Like I said, this thing here, it seemed like it was just minutes, but I guess it was longer than that.

When I got into the Vista, I was looking to see if I could find somebody who knew exactly where Chief Burns was. So I went up to the Chief that was in the lobby of the Vista, which is, I guess, the Marriott, and I asked Chief Galvin if he had seen Chief Burns, and he said he did not see him, but he said that he might be in the south tower. So I said okay.

Having gone in through the side of the Vista, I noticed that there was a restaurant there and I felt this would be a good time for me to take a leak, and I just happened to go into that restaurant because I knew it was going to be a long time before I got a shot at it, and I was up since 7:00 o'clock. So I figured let me go now, I'll have a shot, and then I can go see Chief Burns, figuring that once I got inside, I was safe, to be honest with you. That was my primary thing was to get inside. Having spotted the restaurant, like

I said, I knew if I'd walk into the restaurant there would be a rest room there.

I walked into the rest room, went to the bathroom and was just about ready to come out and I heard a rumbling sound. Now, having heard on the radio previously that there was a possibility that the elevators were letting go, I was hoping that that was what it was. As it proceeded, which seemed like a long time, but I'm sure it wasn't -- when I look at it on television, it doesn't seem to be -- I could tell that it was much worse. In my mind, I thought it was the north tower, part of it was coming down, and I felt like let me sit down, get low. I might be okay here. As it turned out, after the roar, I had absolutely no damage in that bathroom. There was no damage, there was no smoke, it just was black as night.

I initially tried to get out and the door was jammed. I couldn't tell how it was jammed or why it was jammed. I had no flashlight. I didn't have my turnout coat, so there was no flashlight in there. I proceeded to give Maydays on every channel. I had the mobile radio, so I had every channel. I heard absolutely nothing. It was completely dead. I started to think that maybe I'd be okay there for a while because I could breathe, there was no fire, and I didn't seem to be hurt in any way. So I felt, well, at least I'm okay at this point. But the silence, the eeriness of having no mobile communication with anything made me feel a little uneasy. So I felt, well, maybe what I should do is try to get out of here. I eventually forced the door open. Just by banging it and pulling hard, it opened in, and not being able to see, I kind of just walked into what was like a wall.

Q. That wasn't there when you came in?

A. That wasn't there when I came in. So then I started to get a little nervous and I said let me sit down and calm down. I gave Maydays again on all the radio channels and I heard nothing. At this point I tried to use the cell phone that I had and there was no cell phone. That was probably the only light I could see. I really couldn't see much. I was a little bit nervous but basically still not aware of really the gravity of the situation. So what I thought was, well, you know what? Let me sit down and calm myself down, and then I thought, well, you know, I'd be better off if I could get out of here.

So I opened the door again and felt for a way

I could get out and somehow, through whatever divine force there was, there was a void low in the left-hand corner. I wasn't able to get out with my helmet on or my turnout coat, but I could fit through that crack. So what I did was I took the helmet and I pushed it ahead of me. There was all sorts of debris and stuff there, but it seemed to be moving. So I said, well, I'll go as far as I can. Maybe I can just see a light or whatever or yell to someone, and luckily I just was able to push it far enough that I could see that there was an opening all the way down.

I got maybe six feet and I could see to my left the entrance to the restaurant was still in good shape. Although covered with everything, I still could see. So I said I know I'm getting out of here now because I could see daylight, and I said, okay, and I just kept pushing ahead. It didn't take that long, maybe five or six minutes, and I was able to get to the point where I could stand up in that area of the restaurant.

I put my turnout gear back on and I proceeded to run outside, and I couldn't make heads or tails of what was going on because it was still smoky, kind of like a dense little fog kind of thing. There was a guy from rescue out in the street yelling to people to keep running, and it was all rubble all over the ground, a couple bodies and stuff like that. So I immediately just tried to run. I tripped a little bit, he held me, and then I ran across the street. Believe it or not, I ran across the street and I was looking for everybody and it didn't seem like I could find anybody. It was kind of eerie. It was almost like I was the only person around.

My immediate thought was let me call my wife, and I tried to call her to see if she went home, but I couldn't get her, but I left another message telling her -- and I listened to it later on at some point. I forgot I called her back up. But she saved the messages. I said I was a little dusty but I was okay.

So with that I heard on the radio for the first time a voice and it was Chief Ganci talking to Steve asking for truck companies. So I felt, oh, okay, I'm back in the game here. There's somebody around. But I still couldn't find anybody. I looked for Chief Ganci and I don't know -- some people say that I was on the south. I thought I headed north, but maybe I got turned around. Anyhow, I wound up talking to Chief Galvin again in the middle of the street, on West Street, someplace on West Street, and with that I said to Chief Galvin, I don't know if anybody else is around, but I'll stay with you because, you know, this way I'll know I'm helping somebody.

So he yelled to me to get the guys from across the street. There were car fires all over the place. He said get those guys and bring them over here. So I started getting guys who were trying to put out car fires to come across the street. Apparently Chief Galvin must have known about the other building. I had no idea that the first building was down to be honest with you. Because I couldn't tell. You still couldn't see it.

So basically I just told the guys come across the street, and guys were like stretching lines, I was trying to help a couple of guys that were hooking up the hydrants, I was yelling to them, come on, the Chief wants us over here, and what seemed like maybe ten minutes or whatever of trying to get the guys across the street, which we got most of them across the street, I heard a tremendous roar like I've never heard before and it sounded like a jet engine was like right over my head, like I was on a runway with a jet engine just taking off over my head.

At that point I kind of looked up in the air because that's where -- and I was looking for a plane. I couldn't see anything, but I saw people running. So I said, well, this may be a good time to start running. I wasn't sure which way to run, but I watched them run and I kind of went to my right and I started running, and then there was a complete -- a blanket over me and I banged and fell down three or four times, and each time I got up, I got up with more stuff in my mouth and it was becoming more increasingly difficult to breathe. I was trying to breathe through like the jacket part of my coat and just try to filter some of the crap that was coming in my mouth. I heard somebody yell breathe through your nose and I was trying that, but I wasn't getting enough air it didn't seem like. Now I wasn't running anymore. I fell down three or four times. I said, well, I can't even see. This is ridiculous to run. But I felt, well, you know what? Maybe I'll just kind of walk and try to head in the direction of the sounds of people that I heard.

There was an ESU cop and he had some kind of water bottle on his back with a bite ball, and he came up to me and said bite into this, flush around your mouth and spit it out, and that's what I did, and I was able to at that point clear out some of the crap in my mouth and I felt a little bit better. He had a towel or something and he said we'll share the towel and we'll start breathing, and at that point that's what I did. I started breathing through the towel with this guy. There was like three of us on this towel.

We got up to -- I don't know what street even. Somebody told me it was down on the west side by Albany Street and there was a hydrant open with very little water pressure and we kind of cleaned off there. Chief Lakiotes was there, a couple other firefighters and a couple other ESU cops and stuff. But we just kind of cleaned up, and at that point I started heading back to where I thought maybe people would be.

Guys were coming in from -- I guess from all over at this point now. I saw regiments of guys coming down the highway, and even training, they were coming from training, because I noticed a couple Chiefs, Santangelo and Chief Idiart from training that I've known and I saw them and they all started heading down towards the buildings, and at that point I somehow ran into Steve Mosiello again and he was looking for Chief Ganci. So I said, well, I'll help you look for Chief Ganci because I knew that, you know, that was his boss and, if I could find him, maybe we could find out what's going on, still not really knowing.

I felt kind of like, I don't know, but I wasn't being really aware of what was going on, but I was very lucky. It's bizarre, but through no really desire of my own, I was able to survive this thing, and it really -- it was just a matter of where you were.

Q. Basic dumb luck.

A. Dumb luck. Really basic dumb luck. Because the odds would be, even after the first building came down, I wasn't aware of it, and when the second one come down, I wasn't even thinking about that one coming down. So, I mean, it sounds crazy, but at this point I was just trying to hook up with somebody during this whole thing to help, you know, to get back into some kind of order of where we could find guys and do things, and it just never seemed to come about.

I went with Steve. We looked for Chief Ganci. He was very upset. Then we heard the command center was all the way up on Vesey Street. Then we went up that way and then it was like further north towards the park and we started heading up there, and we got a ride with the Commissioner's driver and we wound up with the Mayor up in 23rd Street by -- I guess that was where they made the command center for OEM.

Q. Right.

A. Steve wanted to tell the Mayor that Chief Ganci was missing and that we lost a lot of guys, and that was basically what we did. Then we went back, we hitched a ride back to Police Plaza to tell the Police Commissioner exactly what was going on, and we wound up getting some clean clothes there. They gave us police uniforms. So we wound up there and then they took us back towards the scene and we looked for Chief Ganci.

As we were going back down the West Side Highway, Chief Cruthers, we wound up seeing Chief Cruthers and Chief Butler, he was at the command board at Vesey and West, at Chambers and West rather, and then they said they found Ganci and Steve started running towards where -- Steve knew basically where Ganci was, and what I failed to say is, when we found Steve, when I found Steve, we actually went back to look for Ganci before we went up to the command center.

Q. Okay. From where he had last figured he probably was?

A. Yes. Because Steve had an idea because when he had talked to Steve on the radio, he had said that he was going to be -- I didn't know what he had told Steve, but I heard him ask for truck companies, and he must have told Steve that he was going to be south of where the command center was, and when I came out of the building, that was my first thing was to look for the command center, I remember that, and basically, when I saw where I thought the command center was outside, where the command board was, there was an airplane tire. My immediate thing was that another plane had hit. So that's what I said.

Then I went into what was, I guess, the World Trade Center -- the World Financial Center and Merrill Lynch and I made a phone call to my wife again. That's where I had left the message. So that's basically where I was at that point, and then I did hook up with Steve and we did go back to look at right around in that building there. He knew where Ganci was, but he was covered with rubble, I believe.

Army was there at that point, too. I don't know how much after, but there was Army there. That was after the second building I remember. The Army was there because Steve told a general that this is what happened, this is where our Chief of Department was, and they had a couple of bulldozers going there already.

Q. Already?

A. Yes. There were a couple of bulldozers going there. So, basically, I guess, wherever they got them from, they started picking up some of the rubble. Basically, that was all I can remember. It's kind of strange, but I saw the second plane coming in. I remember that vividly. I remember hearing it and thinking why is that plane coming so close to that building after it got hit, but thinking maybe it was an Army plane or just a plane coming in to observe what was going on, and then when it hit the building, to be honest with you, from where I was standing on the west side of West Street, it looked like it kind of glanced off the back of the building. You couldn't tell the damage it had done.

So, I mean, that was my recollection of that and, you're right, I mean, some of the things seemed like they took a couple of minutes, but other things seemed like they took a long time. Basically, that was it. I mean, I guess being very lucky was in it for me that day. One more minute and I'm probably in 2 World Trade Center. The weird thing was, like I said, it wasn't like I had a pressing need to go to the bathroom, but I just thought that eventually I was going to have to go.

Q. So it would be smart to do it now.

A. To do it now. Chief Cassano had told me he had done the same thing. He had gone to the bathroom just previous to that. So it was weird because we both picked the same bathroom to go to and just a series of events that happened that I just happened to be in there and that was -- believe me. I go back there, a couple times that I've been back there, I look at it, and it's amazing to me how nothing happened in that bathroom. That bathroom was perfectly intact. So when people say things were meant to happen, I just think --

Q. It's your day or it's not your day?

A. Yes. It's absolutely true, I mean, and never more vividly than that day. I wish I could say I was -- I guess the only good thing I did out of this whole thing was being able to extricate myself because I felt that, you know what? I could be here for a couple of days and that was an uneasy feeling. So I figured let me try to get out of here. But like I said, I was completely okay. There was no heat, no fire, no smoke, my body was okay. It was just that I felt uncomfortable being in this kind of like this six-by-six-foot room.

That's it. I don't know what else I could say. If I could answer any questions, I'll definitely do it.

Q. No, there's nothing else that I need to ask you. That's it. If there's anything else you just want to put after this, feel free.

A. Actually, basically, I think that most of the things that I said were just off the top of my head because that's all I can remember, but if I could remember any more, I would definitely give it to you. Except I'm very lucky. Thank you very much.

MR. TAMBASCO: That being the case, this interview will conclude at 10:40 a.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIRE MARSHAL STEVEN MOSIELLO

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. McALLISTER: This is Kevin McAllister from the Bureau of Administration. It's October 23rd, 2001, 1134 hours. We're with Steven Mosiello. And I'm also joined by --

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Assistant Commissioner James Drury.

Q. Steven, we'd like to just draw your attention to September the 11th and ask you to provide us with any recollections you may have of the World Trade Center attack.

A. At approximately 8:45 that morning, maybe 8:50, I heard Chief Ganci, whose offices are three offices away down the hall, call out to Dan Nigro that a plane just hit the World Trade Center. He was looking out of his window at the time. We all jumped up, ran to Chief Ganci's office, myself, Chief Nigro, and we looked out the window. And the World Trade Center was on fire.

At that point the Chief said a plane just hit it, and we responded. It was myself, Chief Ganci and Chief Nigro in the car, and we responded over to the World Trade Center. While we were on the Brooklyn Bridge, some five minutes later or so, Chief Ganci gave a fifth alarm for the World Trade Center due to the amount of fire and smoke we saw from our position on the Brooklyn Bridge. We were on the center of the bridge at the time, I remember. Chief Nigro said to Chief Ganci that it's probably going to be one of the worst days of our career.

With that we responded in. I believe I went down Chambers Street and wheeled my way in to where we parked. We parked on the corner of West and Vesey on the sidewalk. I gave Chief Ganci his gear. I took my gear. And we were setting up a command post, I believe it was in the street at that point, and somebody said -- I don't know who it was -- go over here by those two garages, where we eventually wound up setting up our command post in front of Two World Financial.

Somebody mentioned -- I don't recall who -- that this is our area of refuge should something happen, meaning the two garages, which during the course of the day did wind up being our first area of refuge when tower number two collapsed.

Q. Excuse me, at that time were the garage doors up when you were in the sloping driveway? Is that where the command post was?

A. They, yes were. Looking at the buildings, both garage doors were up. We were set up, looking at the building, to the garage on the left, which would be the south garage. And on the north garage there was a red van from communications. I believe it was where their communications vehicle set up.

Q. How many planes had hit at this point in time?

A. At this point there was only one plane. I was told by somebody that we had an eyewitness who happened to be an off-duty firefighter who told me that he saw the first building get hit and it was hit by a prop jet, which I think turned out to be the wrong information, but everybody sees things differently. But he said he was an eyewitness. I gave him to a fire marshal. I never got his name personally.

At that point we were set. This was our command post, and everybody was stopping in before they went to locations. You saw so many faces of guys that are dead today that were going into these buildings. They'd stopped by, how you doing, where do you want me to go, they went to their location and they went to work.

At that point we're standing there -- I remember a gentleman who worked in number One World Trade, a maintenance worker, who was talking to Chief Ganci, and asking him if he wanted to go into the building to check and see what pumps were working and how high the water was being pumped in the building, and I don't recall what the outcome of that was. I believe Chief Ganci sent a company in with him to go check these pumps. I don't remember what the company number was or anything else.

At that point the Mayor shows up. I was standing away from the command post, and the Mayor showed up. And one of his aides asked where the Fire Commissioner was. I remember the Mayor being with Commissioner Kerik and himself and a lot of their aides and escorts or whatever. Somebody said the Commissioner was in One World Trade Center, north tower, that was hit already.

I said go up and get him. What was I thinking all the jumpers and everything else.

I believe at that point when I went over to get the Commissioner, that's when the fireman of 216 was killed by a jumper when a jumper landed on him.

I went to the building, looked for the Commissioner, and they said he had just left. So now we've crossed each other's paths. I came back to the command post across the street at Two World Financial, and the Commissioner was there talking to the Mayor.

Q. Can you describe what the plaza and the area outside looked like at that point in time?

A. Outside number One World Trade, there were jumpers. There was a tremendous amount of bodies on the ground. They were hitting at a rate of probably one every 30 or 40 seconds onto the glass atrium that was there, which is a distinct explosion-type sound when they hit, as was -- I think you can close your eyes and you knew when a jumper hit the ground over there. It was very distinct.

After you saw enough of them, you just stopped looking. You knew what it was. I think this is a quote from somebody else: If it stayed the jumpers and the fire in number one, then there would have been a real bad day, not worse.

Q. Stopping and stepping back for a second. You were driving I assume on Vesey to the corner of West. Did you see any debris or anything in the street at that point?

A. I don't recall -- and I don't know if I came in on Vesey. I believe I came Chambers to -- no, I came over the Brooklyn Bridge. I came past City Hall, wheeled my way through I think that first street there -- I think if you make a left at Broadway going straight across may be Park. I'm not sure. We wheeled in in that way. And I came down maybe a street or two north of Vesey, and then we got in. I don't recall if I came down Vesey Street. I draw a blank on that.

Q. You left off with the statement about if it was left with just the jumpers and that one tower.

A. At that point I don't know exactly when the Commissioner and Mayor had left. It was pretty soon after they had left that Richie Zarillo, who works with EMS -- I believe he's an OEM liaison -- came running up to me. I was not on the ramp at this time. I was like almost at the sidewalk location.

He said Steve, where's the Chief? I have to tell him, you know -- I said tell him what, Richie? These buildings are in imminent danger of collapse. I said how do you know that, you know? So he ran with me. I ran over and grabbed Chief Ganci and said Chief, these buildings are in imminent danger of collapse. He looked up at me --

Q. Had the second plane hit at this point?

A. Yes, yes, the second plane hit. We saw the second plane hit -- if you want me to go back to when the second plane hit. I was told by Chief Ingram, who was a terrorist and hazmat-type guy, that we've got to be careful of secondary explosions or secondary devices. Who knew that the secondary device would be another plane.

People actually saw the plane. You heard it, the closer it got. It just got louder and louder. I say that he throttled up as fast as he could. That's what it sounded like, but I think he became more in earshot of us. And he just came in and put the plane into the building.

As I'm looking up at this stuff that's going on up there now, I just like -- I'm saying to myself I've seen this in a movie. My whole recollection is going back to a movie or something I saw. I just saw this before. It's like before my eyes. I don't know if I ever did or didn't, you know, in a dream.

Then at that point within a few minutes, Richie Zarillo came up to me. I'll go back to that. He said that these buildings are in imminent danger of collapse. I went right up to the Chief because I was a few steps away. I said Chief, these buildings are in imminent danger of collapse. And he said to me who would would tell you something like that?

And he looked at me and he had that determined -- I have to say probably scared look on his face, who would tell you something like that. I said Richie, come over here and tell the Chief what you just told me. He got the words out of his mouth. I think it was maybe 25, 30 seconds later, maybe, the building came down.

Q. Did Zarillo ever say what he based that opinion on?

A. I believe the Chief said where did he get that from? He said from OEM. We were trying to determine exactly how he got it. In retrospect, how did he get it? He was walking towards us. Was he coming towards us anyway and he got it over his radio? I think he told me he got it from Peruggia. There was like a relay type of thing, which maybe we should have and didn't have our OEM radios on at the location. There was a lot of havoc going on.

I believe you were there, Jim, and you saw it also.

So at that point the building comes down. I believe Chief Ganci said what the hell's this or what the fuck is this, looked up, and then we all just bailed out simultaneously into garages. I don't remember who went into the left garage and who went into the right garage.

I remember going into the north garage, which was on my right. There was a booth, if I remember correctly, between the two garage ramps.

I went behind the booth and into the garage. There was a lot of people in there. We wound up running into the garage, running to the right, and it dead-ended where there was like storage space behind doors, behind locked doors.

Q. Do you remember seeing Commissioner Fitzpatrick at that time?

A. No, I don't.

Q. He also went down there?

A. There were so many guys I saw. One guy I distinctly remember is Mike Donovan. We were all searching for a staircase or some way out for tools. I think a few people screamed for tools: Who's got tools, who's got tools. They found a staircase that led out.

At this point you're being choked out, totally choked out. I thought we were going to die in there because we couldn't breathe. There were low ceilings. Nothing was lifting. The dust wasn't lifting. It came in and just stayed.

Q. Stepping back for a minute, Steve. Had you seen Chief Feehan and Chief Downey at that location moments before the collapse?

A. Yes, yes. I recall seeing Chief Downey

I believe before the second plane hit. He was talking to Chief Ganci. I believe the firefighter already had gotten struck by a jumper, and Ray Downey was telling the Chief that he'd like to start bringing companies over via the north walking bridge and that that would be a safer avenue to get into the building.

Q. So this is after the first building came down, they were still planning --

A. No, no, this was before the first collapse, before any buildings collapsed.

Q. After the second plane hit, but before the first building collapsed?

A. Yes.

Q. Got it.

That firefighter, by the way, just for the record, is firefighter Suhr, S-U-H-R, who was hit by a jumper.

A. Right.

I was on my way out of that building when he was hit by a jumper. There was a company coming. I don't know the company. They were walking next to the building, and I yelled at the lieutenant to get in the street with his men because look what just happened. There were jumpers coming down. He probably wasn't very aware of it at the time. Probably like everybody else he was scared and he wasn't thinking either.

Q. So you are in the garage now and there's no air and the dust is in there and you're trying to find a way out?

A. Yes. I was checking some doors, and I heard somebody yell hey, Steve, we found the staircase. I got to the staircase and there was a lieutenant there named Mike Donovan who worked for us up here that day, and he said we found a staircase. And Mike said I want you guys to start getting out and I'm going to stay here until everybody's out of the garage. I remember that. I have a book at home. I wrote his name down, what he did. I thought that was quite heroic that he wouldn't leave that location.

Most of us from headquarters -- nobody had masks. The only people who had masks then were possibly companies standing by waiting to be assigned, which at that point I don't think we had that many, because the second tower -- the first collapse was the second tower, so we were putting as many men to work as possible.

At that point I recall going up the staircase, turning a few ways and we wound up back on West Street, I think just north of the north walking bridge we came out. At that point I saw Chief Ganci, Commissioner Feehan. I don't recall if I saw Fitz at that point, Commissioner Fitzpatrick. I saw Tommy McDonald limping. Tommy was walking with us.

Commissioner Feehan had kind of a limp to him, and I was standing on his right side. So with my left hand I went to grab his right elbow just to help him along. Arrogantly, the way he was, he pulled his arm and said I don't need any help, Steve. Thank you anyway.

We walked up to the corner. Chief Ganci said he wanted to move a command post and staging area as far north as possible.

Q. You said the corner. Is that the corner of Vesey and West?

A. Yes, Vesey and West.

I don't know if we all just realized exactly what happened or were confused. Glad to be alive, probably. I think maybe something clicked in Chief Ganci's head at that point that he had men in that other building and he knew that, and he started walking in that direction with Commissioner Feehan. I said Chief, where are you going? He said Steve, I'm going to take a walk down here. Go get me two trucks.

I went to -- I believe our staging area was around Barclay. I'm not exactly sure. I remember the Chief I spoke to was a Chief Mike Keenan from 46 Battalion.

Q. Barclay and West?

A. Yes.

We were on West Street then. And I asked this Chief Keenan for two trucks. He said okay, Steve, I'll go get them for you.

At that point Chief Ganci called me back on the radio and he must have seen something because he said Steve, I want two of my best trucks, rescue squads, two of my best trucks. He must have gotten to where he was going or in that direction and he saw something, possibly people who needed some kind of help.

Q. Can I ask, when you last saw them were they back near the Two World Financial Center garages where you had initially set up or were they farther down?

A. When they left me, we were all on the west side of the north walking bridge. That's where we separated. They went south. I went north to get the trucks.

Q. By the way, did you notice on West Street, either before the first collapse or after the first collapse when you came back around, the number of rigs that were on West Street?

A. There were a tremendous amount of rigs, because I believe those rigs saved my life during the second collapse. A tremendous amount of rigs.

On my way after I asked for the two trucks, I saw a fellow I rode up with and who I worked with years ago. His name was Lieutenant Wilkinson with 238. He was obviously in the first collapse because -- he was right near a fire truck. I don't know what fire truck it was. But he was obviously in the first collapse because I believe he had dust and stuff all over him. We talked, how are you doing, how's everything. And then I was still waiting for the trucks at that point.

I believe that was on the west side of West Street his rig was parked, or wherever he was. I'm going to say just south of Vesey but not as far as the walk before.

So I have the trucks -- the Chief calls me and tells me he's gathering up the trucks and going to send them down to me. I told him where I was. This is Chief Keenan. And Chief Ganci called me back and said Steve, I want you to bring those two trucks to me. He said stay on the westerly side of West Street. I'm 50 feet or 50 yards -- I forget exactly -- south of our last command post, which told me he was south of the garage.

Okay, Chief, I have the trucks coming. I'll be there in a couple minutes. The next thing, the second tower came down. I'm calling Chief Ganci: Car 3A to car 3, car 3 -- he never answered. I kind of knew something happened there.

At that point, as we know, the walking bridge was collapsed in the street. You couldn't get through that way. So I probably went into shock, knowing that my best friend was seriously injured or dead. I presumed the worst, obviously. And I went back to Chambers Street -- at this point the collapse happens.

And now we're running opposite of the collapse, obviously. I'm running north on West Street. I'm running in the southbound lane of West Street on the east side of the lane. There was rigs parked all along that curb, and I stayed in the street next to those rigs.

Q. This is at the time of the collapse?

A. At the time of the collapse. I heard the noise. I looked up. I saw the debris flying. And believe it or not, I never heard another thing. I did not hear another thing after that.

Same thing with the first collapse. After the initial rumbling, you look up, my ears shut right down. I heard nothing. Speaking to people, they say you probably thought you were dead, you were just shutting everything out.

So as I was going north on West Street, I stayed next to the rigs. And I don't know if I ran for a block or two. I'm not embarrassed to say we ran away from the scene. We had no choice. And I thought I was going to choke to death again. I was totally choked up. I wound up going to my knees -- I don't know at what location -- just saying this was it. Somehow I picked myself up and started moving again.

At first I thought I could outrun it, but it came so fast and furious. Like I said, I think I just kept walking after that. After the collapse was over, I just kept walking and walking. Of course this dust was rolling down and kept pushing towards you, but you couldn't outrun it. Eventually I think I saw a clearing somewhere around Chambers Street. There was a glass overpass there or something.

Q. Probably Stuyvesant High School and Manhattan Community College.

A. Right, right there. That's where it started. You started seeing it clear, clear up.

And that was it. And then I saw some faces and I kept calling Chief Ganci and kept calling him. I tried to get Dan Nigro. I thought he was dead. He wasn't answering.

At that point I went into a panic. I don't know exactly when, but I saw Chief Turi. I saw Frank Carruthers and I told him I think I know where Pete is and that I want to put together a couple teams and go down and see if we can search for them.

I grabbed Al Turi. I know he was in the military and he's a real trooper. We got a couple companies together. I believe they gave me ladder 144, the second section, if you will, and ladder 136. I believe it also was the second section there, the ones that we recalled, I believe.

Also now a bunch of guys wanted to be involved -- I forget who else -- a few captains, a few chiefs, whatever. Chief Turi took them on the side and told them we were going to search for Chief Ganci and probably First Deputy Commissioner Feehan and that this was our mission and they were to stay together and follow up.

We went to Vesey Street. We made a right. We went through Two World Financial off of Vesey because you couldn't get through down West Street, wiggled our way around, came out, came to the other side. You didn't know where you were, didn't know what direction you were anymore. The whole place was a complete disaster zone.

I grabbed a chief who looked like he recognized the scene. I don't remember who it was. I told him we were looking for the spot where the garages were. He said I think it's over here but the only way to get through it is through the garage, you have to go back in the building.

Somehow in all this confusion I lost the guys. I go back to the building and went over and spoke to somebody on the radio. I don't know who it was. Because Chief Turi's radio was dead at that point. They said they started the search.

At that point I went back to the command post, which was now set up at Chambers Street, and I believe it was Chief Carruthers who was there, or Chief Fellini -- I'm not sure -- and I told them I think I should go tell the Mayor and Commissioner I believe that Pete Ganci is dead, that we need lights here, it's going to get dark in a few hours and we need to find him.

Q. You said the command post was now at Chambers Street. Is that Chambers and West?

A. Chambers and West, yes, Chambers and West. That was the west command post at that point. I know there were other command posts set up at Broadway or over at Park Row. We never saw anything that was going on on the other side of the buildings, on the east side of the towers, because we were always on West Street. I heard some horror stories over there.

Somehow the Commissioner's car was around. There was a vehicle there or something with a driver. I said take me to the Commissioner. They told me he was over at the Police Academy. So they brought me over there.

I went and talked to him and told him what had happened and that Pete's probably dead. He told me calm down, Steve, you're thinking the worst, maybe he's not. I said I'm pretty damn sure. I'm talking to him one minute and the next minute I couldn't raise him on the radio.

I knew everybody was in good hands searching for the Chief and stuff. Don't ask me why, but Chief Ganci and myself had a very close relationship with the Police Department also, Chief Esposito and Commissioner Dunne.

And on the way back we were passing One PP, and I said maybe I should stop and tell Joe Dunne what happened also, and I did. At that point I just went and said Joe, I'm really sorry. I'm pretty sure this is the way it's going to play out, but Pete's gone.

Q. Hadn't Joe Dunne also had a close call?

A. I'm not sure. I'm not sure. This is the first time I saw Joe Dunne, I believe. But either way, I've got to go back to the scene.

Q. Can I just get a clarification, Steve. Were they still looking for Chief Ganci --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and Commissioner Feehan when you left to go to the Police Academy?

A. Yes. There was a very large pile there. There was a lot of steel. I knew this was going to take more than a 15-minute rescue. This was going to take time. And it did. It took a couple of hours.

I remember when I was talking to the Commissioner, babbling, I was very upset. I wasn't upset with anybody in particular. It was a bad day. I said Commissioner, it's 1:00, I cannot go home without his body. We have to get lights here. Because I looked at my watch. It was exactly 1:00. I said we have six hours of daylight left. We need lights. I cannot go home without his body.

We live across the street from each other. We've been best friends for many, many years. I often think to myself should I have stayed and dug with the guys and stuff. I didn't think that was necessary at the time. We had to get command and control of this whole scene. It was utter chaos, in everybody's eyes.

I went back to the scene. I don't think I was there 15 minutes. They called me on my radio, asked me to come down to the building, where they found Chief Ganci. They were just going to put him in an ambulance, for me to come down.

I went down there, and they put his body in an ambulance and off they went.

Q. Can you tell me with as much specificity as you can recall, where they found him?

A. Yes. They found him -- it was probably more like I would say 75 to 100 feet south of the first command post, which was on that ramp. I know exactly where they found him. I knew exactly where he was. It wasn't a surprise we found him first, him and Commissioner Feehan, because he had just told me on the radio where he was. He couldn't have moved that far in that time frame.

Q. Were you informed that they had found Commissioner Feehan too at this point?

A. I don't recall. I don't know. I honestly don't know. I know they told me they were 15 feet apart. It was actually on the sidewalk area. They were maybe 25 feet from the building, from the building walk. That building, if you remember, it juts in and out.

Q. The building being the Financial Center?

A. Two World Financial Center. It has different characteristics. This part was set back a little bit, about 25 feet from this part.

Q. There's another walking bridge down there; is that right? North?

A. They were so far north of that. They were just about, I was going to say, 75 feet -- 75 feet sounds like a lot. It's not. They were 75 feet south of exactly where our first command post was.

Q. Right. The south bridge is actually south of Liberty Street, so they were well north of that.

A. Oh, well north, absolutely. Well north of that.

Q. Literally only 25 yards south of where the command post at the Two World Financial was?

A. Yes, yes.

At that point I went to the ambulance. Henry McDonald was sitting in the ambulance.

Q. Henry?

A. Henry, Henry. My memory's pretty good. Henry was sitting in the ambulance.

I viewed the body. [redacted]

Through this whole course of all these events, I had a cell phone that was working and not working from time to time. I did get a couple calls out to my wife during a couple courses of events, such as a collapse or afterwards, whatever, to let her know that I was okay. I left a voice mail message on her work phone. She's a computer girl, so she would send me back on my beeper that she received my message and love you and all that.

Now I had to go back and tell Mrs. Ganci. I went to the command post at Chambers and West.

Q. Stop you there. Had they recovered Commissioner Feehan's body at this point, to your knowledge?

A. I don't know. I don't recall. I honestly don't recall. But I know they were recovered very close in a timely fashion to each other.

Q. So you made it back to the command post.

A. I'm back at the command post. I told Chief Carruthers -- I think Chief Butler was there also -- that we found Pete and I have to go tell his wife. He said go do what you have to do.

I grabbed I believe it was Chief Hale of the NYPD, told him I wanted a police car to take me out there. He said do you want to go by helicopter? I said absolutely not. I need to think of what I have to say to this woman.

[redacted]

[redacted]And I asked Al Turi to go with me.

Chief Ganci and I also have a personal friend, Dennis Conway, who is retired from the Fire Department who was at the scene helping there. He's still a big, big buff. He was a fireman for 30 years. He worked for Pete for many, many years.

So he went in one police car, and we went in another and we drove out to North Massapequa to tell Mrs. Ganci. There were some fire marshals there that I knew. I asked one of the chiefs if they could go and find Chief Ganci's son who was a fireman in Ladder 111 and pick him up and bring him to the house. Actually I told him to wait down the block and we'd all meet at that location.

Subsequently when we got there, I forgot all about this kid. They weren't there. We pulled in. I just kept going and told the wife. I felt bad about that, left the kid down the block.

[redacted] Then I came back to work that night. [redacted]

That was basically it.

We went back that night. They were moving cars and doing all sorts of things. They were digging out, trying to get equipment in there. It was pretty chaotic. Well lit. I remember there was a lot of lights.

I saw a police tow truck and asked him to tow our car out of there. It has been crushed by some debris. The trunk was popped open; I don't know how. Steering column was all ripped out; I don't know why. To this day I don't know why the column was disabled like that. They towed it to the corner.

I found a department tow truck. I asked them to tow the car to one of the shops, and I rode with the tow truck with the car and saw Tommy McDonald. That was probably around midnight. I asked Tommy for another vehicle. He said he didn't have any but I could have his.

[redacted]

Q. You said earlier that after the first collapse but before the second collapse you had seen Tommy McDonald limping.

A. Yes.

Q. The next time you saw him, was that fleet services when he gave you his car?

A. I don't recall that. I don't recall that. I remember him sitting on a rig, on the front of a rig or on the back of a rig. I don't recall if it was after that first collapse or after the second collapse. I remember seeing him on a rig sitting down resting.

I said Tommy, let me help you. He said I'm all right. I don't recall at what point that was. I guess that's the only cloudiness in a lot of this stuff. You saw faces. So many of these faces I saw.

I saw a friend of mine from when I was in high school, Bruce Gary, who was on the median. He said Steve, when are we going to retire? Every time I go into Manhattan, I always see Bruce Gary. He has been with 40 engine for 20-something years.

And he died. I was really surprised at that. I didn't notice that for probably a week or so. I really didn't keep up with the list of names. I was, you know, in denial, probably.

Q. Did you ever see Chief Burns?

A. Burns? Yes.

Q. What about Chief Barbara?

A. Yes. Both of them were at the command post before the second plane hit the second tower. I saw them both.

Q. I don't have anything further. I don't have any follow-up questions. Do you have any other recollections or observations?

A. No, I mean, I think most of that stuff is exactly the way it happened. I wasn't cloudy on any of this stuff. It's just a bad day, a bad day in my life. And hopefully we'll all get through this and go forward.

Q. Thank you very much.

MR. McALLISTER: We're going to conclude the interview. It's now 1207 hours on October 23rd, 2001. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF ALBERT TURI

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. McCOURT: The date is October 23rd, 2001. The time is 1445 hours. My name is Tom McCourt, New York City Fire Department. Currently I'm with Assistant Commissioner James Drury and we are in the process of conducting an interview with Deputy Assistant Chief of Safety Albert Turi.

Q. Can you just identify yourself, please?

A. Yes. DAC Al Turi, Chief of Safety.

Q. Chief at this time, you know the subject matter that we're here on, September 11th, and we would just ask you if you could tell us what you saw, heard and did that day starting with when you first found out that a plane had hit a tower at the World Trade Center.

A. Okay. I'll start right at the beginning.

At approximately maybe about twenty of 9:00, quarter to 9:00, we're sitting in the Command Center, Chiefs Barbara, Callan and Cassano, and heard a large thud, which I thought at the time was somebody dropping a case of books on the floor above us, and I made a little joke that I'd better go up and take a look; somebody may have gotten hurt. What that thud was as it turned out to be was the impact of the first aircraft hitting the north tower.

About 30 seconds later, a report came over the radio of a plane hitting the Trade Center, and I'm not sure if that initial report said a plane or a propane explosion, but they said the entire side of the Trade Center was on fire. Chief Callan immediately got up. He was the citywide on duty and he left the office immediately. I continued listening to the radio for a few more seconds and it was pretty obvious that something catastrophic had happened.

So I left the Command Center with the intent of responding and I saw Donald Burns coming down the hallway and he stated that a plane had just hit the Trade Center. My aide was on vacation, so I grabbed Lieutenant Chiafari, who was assigned to Safety Command, and we went down to the garage and we were responding.

At some point when I was going over the Brooklyn Bridge, I could clearly see the tower and I started counting what I thought was how many floors were involved in the fire, and from that vantage point I thought we had somewhere between six and eight floors of fire, floor areas that I would consider to be fully involved in fire, and I said to Joe, Joe, this is no accident. It's a clear day. No one could hit this thing by accident. This is something intentional.

Q. And Joe, chief, is --

A. Joe Chiafari. He's a lieutenant that works here. Then I further stated that we do not have the capability to put that many floors of fire out. I knew right from the start that there was no way this Fire Department could extinguish six or eight floors of fire fully involved in a high-rise building. It's just not possible because we don't have the means to do it.

So we were responding in. We parked the car on the corner of Fulton and Church. It was on the extreme east side of the Trade Center. I got out of the car, Joe got out, went to the trunk, and I was starting to don my bunker gear. I was putting on my pants and boots when I heard something similar to the sound of a jet aircraft taking off, and when I looked up I saw the impact of the second plane hitting the south tower and immediately an enormous fireball erupted that actually masked the entire upper half of the building and part of the north tower. It was so enormous that even from that great distance I could feel the radiant heat on my face. Within seconds we had to turn and run east on Fulton because debris was falling actually where we parked the car, even at that great of a distance, and there were it seemed like hundreds of people in the street running in every direction.

I ran about 50 yards and my hearing was telling me that the debris has stopped falling. I turned around to assess the situation, and the fireball had pretty much dissipated, and what I actually thought at that time, and mistakenly so, was it's not as bad as it looks; most of the fuel was expended on the exterior of the building. That's what I originally thought.

So we ran back to the car and laying right in back of my car was a large object which I thought was probably part of one of the aircraft turbines. It was laying about ten feet away from the car and it was still on fire, smoking and fire. I finished putting on my gear and Lieutenant Chiafari put on his gear, actually he put on my aide's gear, and we walked north on Church. As we were walking, I could see multiple jumpers jumping from Tower 1. I'm going to guess about probably ten. We turned left on Vesey and we headed towards West Street.

We got to West Street and I looked back up and now I could see the other part of the tower, more or less the north and west side, people jumping on that side, and I decided to enter the lobby of Tower 1, and I was pretty much looking up most of the time. I didn't want to be killed by someone falling on top of me.

We entered the lobby and I saw Commissioner Von Essen, Commissioner Fitzpatrick was in there, Bill Feehan, Joe Callan and Pete Hayden. Those are the people I immediately recognized. I went over to the Commissioner and informed him that the second plane had hit the south tower. He already knew that. I then said, you know, this is an absolute terrorist attack. They had already surmised that. I said you'd better put in a full recall. We're going to need all the help we can get. And we briefly discussed the recall.

Q. For the record, chief, would you explain what a recall is?

A. A full recall would mean we would call in every off-duty firefighter.

Then we briefly discussed how we would accomplish this and I suggested staging areas like Shea Stadium, Penn Station, Grand Central, where we could get large numbers of people and move them down by subway, because there wouldn't be a need for apparatus; it would be a need for manpower for relief purposes.

Then I went over to talk to Chiefs Callan and Hayden, who were the incident commanders, Chief Callan being the incident commander, Chief Hayden being the deputy chief in the 1st Division who had responded, and I stated to them that there is no possible way that we could extinguish this fire, and they were certainly in agreement with that, and that it should strictly be an evacuation procedure and to get as many people out of the building as quickly as we can, and I remember being extremely concerned that we would have a lot of our people up in the building and a third aircraft would then strike it. I was deathly afraid of another inbound aircraft coming in and hitting the building while our people were up in the stairwells.

Then there was a brief discussion about, since we had two towers going, that the lobby of Tower 1 would not be a good place for a main incident command post. I didn't know at that time that Chief Ganci and Cassano were already setting up something on the median of West Street. So I told them that I would go across on West Street and find a suitable place. As I left the building, I heard a body hit about 15 feet from me, but I never turned around and looked.

When I hit the median on West Street, the command post was there. It was in the process of being moved fully across West Street. I went across West Street. They had just set it up on I believe the building is 2 World Financial Center.

Q. Let me stop you there for a second, chief.

When you were in the lobby of 1 World Trade, can you describe the interior and the condition of the lobby?

A. Yes. I was surprised that all the glass was mostly out. I wasn't sure how it got out. I didn't think we took it out. I just assumed that it was the vibration of the aircraft hitting it. And I did notice some pieces of marble that looked like it was dislodged from the core area.

Q. Can you describe how many civilians you might have seen at that point?

A. I can talk about that because that surprised me. There were very few civilians, very few, which just led me to believe they had already left, the people that could get out on their own, or they were exiting another way out I couldn't see. But usually during a high-rise fire, and I've been to 20 of them in my career, there's usually so many civilians in the lobby that it becomes a problem, and that was notably absent.

Q. Just for the record, again, this command post inside the lobby faced out on what street; West Street?

A. Well, it's the lobby command post and it was closest to West Street. That's where the fire command station is for that building. That's where the lobby command post was being established.

Q. Was there any discussion at that point in time, before we get back to your story, with anybody or any of the personnel that worked in the World Trade Center about the condition of elevators, whether they were working or not?

A. Not to my knowledge. I'm sure it was done. I mean, in fact, I know it was done because I've seen the video, but not when I was in there, and I really wasn't concerned about it at that point.

Q. Did you later find out whether they were operational or not?

A. I believe they were not operational. That's what I believe.

Q. Okay. So you left off before I interrupted you about the command post now being moved over to 2 World Financial Center.

A. When I reached there, let me see who was there that I remember. Let's refer to these notes.

(Pause.)

A. When I got there, the people that I remember being there were Chief Ganci and Chief Cassano, and there were other personnel who I just don't remember who they were. And I said to them that even this place was not a safe position for it.

So I looked about 20 feet to my north and there was a ramp going to an underground garage and I told them to move it to that ramp for fear that flying glass would scale hundreds of feet and we would at least have a place to duck in and get away from it if it should happen, and that was done immediately. We did that immediately. And then I had a brief discussion with Chief Ganci and I told him that, Pete, we're going to lose some people here. It's inevitable. It's too tremendous. We're probably going to lose some people.

Then we were trying to establish communications with both towers trying to figure out what commanders were in what tower. We were trying to set up the command board to place units, where we had assigned them or who had been previously assigned before we got there, and the handie-talkie communications were very poor at best.

Q. Just stopping for a second, chief, when you said that to Chief Ganci, did he respond in any way?

A. He just nodded in agreement. We were looking at two large bodies of fires that neither of us in our 33-year careers had ever seen anything that enormous. So it's pretty much, you know, I thought we would lose a company or two possibly. I didn't think we would come out of this unscathed at all. It was just too enormous.

So we were trying to identify the companies and place them, we were trying to get units on the proper radio. We had chosen different frequencies for different buildings. We were not very successful contacting all the units or all the commanders.

Q. Do you know over what frequency you operated on?

A. No. And I started writing this all down on a clipboard, which I later lost, so unfortunately I don't have that record.

I knew that without communications there could be absolutely nothing that could have been done safely there because in every fatal fire that I've looked at where firemen have lost their lives, communications always plays some part in it, either a lack of or missed communications. It always plays a part in a firefighting fatality and I was really concerned about getting the proper communications network set up. And here is where I probably lose a little bit of my sense of time. I'm not sure how long we were trying to do that. I'm going to guess 15 minutes or so.

Q. Had you seen Chief Burns or Chief Downey at all up to this point?

A. No.

Q. What about Father Judge?

A. I hadn't seen him. He was probably in the lobby when I was in there, but I don't recall seeing him.

And I thought to myself that, based on other high-rise fires that had burned out of control, that we would probably have some type of localized collapse up on the upper floors, especially in the core area of the building, which I mistakenly thought was block construction. After further investigation, of course, after the fact, it wasn't block construction. The elevator cores were encased in sheetrock actually.

Q. For the record, would you tell us what block construction is?

A. Yes. Block is usually like a four-inch cement block that's laid and that's what encloses elevator shafts. In the construction of the Trade Center, due to the high speed and the travel distance of the elevators, they used a sheetrock construction over steel so there was more give for the wind forces created by the elevators. They felt that it would probably have knocked the block over. So I thought we would be pretty good for about three hours. Three hours is usually what the fire walls are rated for in high-rise construction. It's usually a three-hour rating. We didn't have any indications of any structural stability at that time.

Then Steve Mosiello, Chief Ganci's executive assistant, came over to the command post and he said we're getting reports from OEM that the buildings are not structurally sound, and of course that got our attention really quick, and Pete said, well, who are we getting these reports from? And then Steve brought an EMT person over to the command post who was I think sent as a runner to tell us this and Chief Ganci questioned him, where are we getting these reports? And his answer was something, you know, we're not sure, OEM is just reporting this.

And within ten seconds of that conversation, I was writing on my clipboard -- can I use foul language on this?

Q. Absolutely. That conversation, by the way, took place in the ramp driveway leading into the garage?

A. That is correct; right at the ramp. The ramp was still on the exterior. We were not in the garage. Maybe 20 feet from the opening of the garage.

The next thing I heard was Pete say what the fuck is this? And as my eyes traveled up the building, and I was looking at the south tower, somewhere about halfway up, my initial reaction was there was a secondary explosion, and the entire floor area, a ring right around the building blew out. I later realized that the building had started to collapse already and this was the air being compressed and that is the floor that let go. And as my eyes traveled further up the building, I realized that this building was collapsing and I turned around and most everybody was ahead of me running for the garage, and I remember thinking I looked at this thing a little bit too long and I might not make this garage. But I did.

And I got about 20 feet down the ramp into the garage, I'm going to estimate 15 to 20 feet, when all the dust from debris blew into the garage like it was a hurricane force wind and I ducked into some small alcove. Most of the remainder of the people were in the garage deeper than I was because I was still on the ramp. I could feel the incline. And you could hear heavy objects falling outside and I said to myself, well, if this building doesn't collapse around me, we'll probably survive this. Then the dust got so thick and it became so black at one time I thought, wow, 33 years under some terrible conditions and I'm going to smother in dust and die. I didn't like that thought.

When I stopped hearing objects hitting the sidewalk, I knew where I was, I could still feel the incline of the ramp, I decided to exit the way I had come in, and it was so dark, I could hear other voices around me, there was also other people coming out that same way, but it was so pitch black that I did not know I was outside of the garage until I walked into a tree on the sidewalk, and I actually felt good about that. At least I knew I was outside. I was extremely concerned that falling debris would block my exit out that way and then I would have to go back into the garage and find another way out.

Q. Let me stop you for a moment, chief.

How long do you think the debris was coming down for, guesstimating?

A. I'm going to guesstimate like a minute.

Q. And when you went back out, can you describe the type of debris you were walking around or over?

A. I stepped over stuff, I was tripping on stuff, I stepped over probably some pieces of steel, and I just waited until the dust lifted so I could see what the hell happened. I mean, I knew what happened. I just wanted to see how bad it really was.

Q. Was there anybody else with you at that time or within close proximity?

A. There were people but I don't know who. I could hear voices but I could not see. I couldn't see my hand in front of my face.

Q. And the debris went all the way up the driveway ramp?

A. Oh, yes. And I've got to regress a minute because I forgot something.

When the building started to collapse and I was outside, actually, the first thought that went through my mind was, my God, we just lost 250 men. That's something I'll never forget.

So I think I stayed out in the front for about I'm going to guess five, ten minutes tops, as the dust lifted, and Chief Ganci came around the corner. He had gotten out through a stairwell in the garage. And we regrouped at my position where the original command post was and I said, Pete, that building just collapsed. Get everybody out of the north tower. A collapse is imminent. If it happened there, it's going to happen here. We've got to get everybody out.

I heard him give that order over the handie-talkie. But not mine. Mine had ceased to work. Maybe it had dust in it or whatever happened. My handie-talkie was no longer working. I heard him verbally issue that order more than once. I could not hear if it was received or it was acknowledged.

And there were a lot of people mulling around in the street, people who were in shock.

Q. Firefighters, not civilians?

A. EMS personnel, firefighters and some civilians.

Q. Let me backtrack for a second.

Chief Feehan, do you know if he ran into the garage with Chief Ganci and was he back out on the street with Chief Ganci?

A. You know, I don't remember. I don't remember that. My main concern at this point was to move all the people that were milling around in front of Tower 1 somewhere else. I was still very, very concerned that there would be another aircraft coming in and it would hit one of the other tall buildings, and I remember looking up West Street thinking that I've got to move everybody almost up to Chambers Street because there were no high-rise buildings taller than about six stories there. I was looking for a place to stage a triage.

And I ran to the middle of West Street and I was screaming at people to move, move up north, move up north, and I saw an ESU vehicle, Emergency Services truck, and I saw Chief Garcia standing up there on West and Vesey and I asked him, Louie, look in that truck, see if you can find me a bullhorn, which he did. He gave me a bullhorn and I was screaming over the bullhorn for people to move three blocks north of my position. And Chief Ganci had been a little bit north at that point of that crossover that eventually collapsed with the collapsing Tower 1 and I thought he was coming towards where I was and I kept screaming over the bullhorn. I believe it was somewhat effective. There were people now listening to it and starting to move, and I saw a battalion chief coming up who was evacuating the area that I just was trying to get evacuated. I gave him the bullhorn and said continue this. Get everybody out of here. They've got to get three blocks north.

And I started walking south on West Street to find out where Chief Ganci went when I heard this enormous roar. It was the same roar I heard when the south tower collapsed and I knew that this was collapsing. I didn't even look at it this time. I turned around and I started running north on West Street. I probably ran a half a block before the dust was so choking that, if I continued to run, I thought I would die, and I laid on the ground and put my coat over my face. And there was a young firefighter next to me who said we're going to die here, we're going to die, I can't breathe, and I remember saying to him I just went through this 20 minutes ago. You're not going to die. Just calm down. We're going to wait here for ten minutes, whatever it takes, and we'll be fine. We're not dead yet. I could hear pieces of metal falling in the area but nothing really close that concerned me.

Then within about five minutes I pretty much peeked out of my coat and realized we could get up and move a little further north, which we did. Then I remember seeing firefighters coming from the Chambers Street area towards me and I saw Chief Nardone, who I know personally from the 9th Battalion, who was arriving on the scene, and I requested that he set up a staging and triage area up towards Chambers Street and to separate all the people that were coming out of the area versus the fresh troops who were coming in and to hold them all there; don't let anybody in. Then I saw Chief Fischler, who I also know personally, and asked him to assist Chief Nardone with that task.

Then I saw Commissioner Fitzpatrick and we were trying to get all the fresh troops on one side of West Street, all the walking wounded on the other side, and then my eyes were so irritated that I just couldn't see out of them anymore. I sat down on the median and someone brought me a bottle of water and I was trying to flush my eyes out. Then I talked to some news media people at that time. I'm not even sure what I told them. But I did talk to some news media.

Once my eyesight got a little bit better, I returned south on West Street to approximately Vesey, and I can't remember exactly who I saw there, but I knew that Chief Ganci was most likely dead because I had seen him going a little bit south after I had left him. The next thing I remember clearly is that I thought I might be the only staff chief left alive. I didn't see Chief Cassano. I thought Chief Ganci was dead. I had no idea where Chief Barbara or Chief Burns were, although I assumed they were in the south tower and I assumed that they were dead. I did not know Chief Callan made it out of the north tower. I thought he was probably dead.

Q. Chief Nigro?

A. I did not see Chief Nigro at all. I don't even remember seeing Chief Nigro when I first got there.

Q. Stepping back for a second, chief, when the command post was set up in front of 2 World Financial and after the first collapse and as you were coming back down the street even after the second collapse, can you describe what was in the street on West Street in terms of rigs, ambulances?

A. Well, I'll tell you the truth. I can't remember. I mean, it was just horrible. At some point after that -- I can't remember exactly when I met Chief Cruthers. I think it was probably very shortly after at that point. Chief Cruthers had made his way to West and Vesey and I saw Chief Nigro come in at that point from somewhere and my impression was that Dan was pretty much in shock, and I remember saying to Chief Cruthers, Frank, you're going to have to take charge of this. I don't think either of us are in any condition to do anything right now. And he acknowledged that fact and he then became the commander at that point.

Then I asked for two volunteer companies to come with me. I was going to go try and find Chief Ganci where I last saw him. Two companies came with me and we were poking around in the rubble, stepping over, climbing up. I looked up at the top of I guess at that point it was 3 World Financial Center just north of the Winter Garden and I saw large pieces of brickwork and building flapping, so I abandoned that search. I could not put those men in danger.

Q. How many men are we talking about at that point?

A. I had about twelve men with me from two companies. So I abandoned that. I said this is too dangerous. I can't get anybody hurt looking for one person. So I returned to the command post that Frank Cruthers had set up, asked him what I could do for him. This probably took a half an hour I'm thinking, somewhere around there, and at that time he said to me if I could find my way to the south end of Vesey Street, because the north bridge had collapsed in the street and you couldn't pass, if I could get down to the other end and take command of that sector.

So probably I went through the building at 3 World Financial Center, went through part of the atrium that was still standing of the Winter Garden, went around back by the river and came out somewhere I believe on Liberty Street, and Chief Visconti had responded. He was pretty much running a search operation with about five or six companies looking for victims. I made my way over to Chief Visconti and I actually told him that, Nick, I'm going to assume command here, but mentally I'm not in the best shape to do that and I would appreciate it if he would continue operating and taking charge and just keep me informed of the status reports.

About 15 minutes later, there were a group of firefighters searching the pile who yelled over that

[redacted]

We put him in a Stoke and then we carried him -- let me see what building it was. We carried him through 2 World Financial Center. There was a doorway to the building. We carried him through there and through that same atrium I had come through before to an ambulance on Vesey. I'm through pretty much with that.

Then I saw Steve Mosiello and told him, I remember saying to him, Steve, I told you I wouldn't leave here without Pete. He's in the ambulance dead.

[redacted]

So Steve and I took it on our own and got ahold of a high-ranking police official and we got a car to take us out to Pete's house to notify his wife. And that's what we did. We went out, notified his wife, and I got a police vehicle to take me back to my home in Queens and I took a hot shower, change of clothes.

Chief Nigro, who does not live too far from me, he lives about a half a mile from me or a mile, I got ahold of him on the telephone. He told me he was home also and I said I'm going to go back but I don't have a car, you know, don't worry about it, I'm going back as soon as I just clean up, he picked me up and we went back to the site.

Q. What time was this about, chief; daylight?

A. No, it was dark. I'm going to guess it was 9:00 o'clock at night.

Q. Had you heard anything about First Deputy Commissioner Feehan at this point?

A. No. My memory is vague and I almost swear that I saw Bill with Pete pretty much on the north side of that bridge and, again, my handie-talkie was dead and I could see Pete on the handie-talkie and he started heading south and I think Commissioner Feehan was with him at that point. Later on I think what happened is there were probably dozens of Maydays transmitted and I'm sure that he was going back to address some of these, what he thought he could do, you know, when the second tower collapsed.

Q. When did you find out that he was missing or had been killed?

A. Well, after I started trying to set up that staging area, that triage area, you know, I was asking people, have you heard from him, have you heard from him. I saw Steve. He couldn't raise him. And I knew from where he was heading, unless it's a miracle, he was crushed down there. I pretty much knew at that point; in my heart I knew that I'm never going to see him again.

Q. Describe the debris you saw when you finally got down to Liberty Street in attempting to do the rescue with the other squad.

A. I guess the debris was steel and dust. Steel and dust, in some spots two stories hight, in most spots ten feet high covering the entire West Street.

Q. West Street entirely covered?

A. Rigs buried. I don't even remember seeing rigs. I remember seeing a crushed rig on the north side of the bridge, but I don't know what rig it was, and the debris was equally high there. I remember saying to myself this is not a survivable collapse, that any survivors that survived I can probably see. I didn't think there would be anybody else. Fortunately for five or six of our people, I was wrong and people were rescued out of a stairwell sometime later.

Q. You're referring to Ladder 6?

A. Yes, Ladder 6 and the 11th Battalion, Richie Picciotto, Jay Jonas. I didn't think there would be any survivors.

When we went back, Chief Nigro and myself, we pretty much just kept walking around the area looking in disbelief, looking at the operations that were going on, and then we came back here. I think we were here about 4:00 o'clock in the morning. We sat down and started making some notes so I would remember some things. There were some priorities that I thought what we had to do. That had already happened. I mean, priority? I thought the Department, at that time, I mean, we've got to man the units. We've got to provide coverage for the city. That's what was really important at that time. I didn't think this was going to be the end of it by any means.

I tried to lay down about 5:00 in the morning for about an hour. I couldn't sleep. Pretty much the rest of that day is a blur. I don't know what the hell I was doing.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: I think this would be an appropriate point to end this interview then, chief. I want to thank you very much.

The interview was concluded at 1527 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT MICHAEL CAHILL

Interview Date: October 17, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. ECCLESTON: Today is October 17, 2001. The time is 1236 hours. My name is Christopher Eccleston. I work for New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank and assigned command in the New York City Fire Department as of September 11, 2001.

A. My name is Michael Cahill. I'm a Lieutenant, I'm assigned to EMS Division 6.

Q. Were you assigned to the World Trade disaster on September 11, 2001?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your own words, can you please tell me the details of the day.

A. Absolutely. Absolutely. We did what we could to see to it that we were not stuck in the office buried under paper that day. You hang around 14 years, 11 months and 29 days, waiting for the big one and I thought Clifford Avenue was a big one. Then we went to Happy Lands. I thought that was the big one. We made a point to kidnap who we had to kidnap and get everybody in the Division office down to his job.

One of the guys in the office made a good point. He said if he or I were driving that day, we would be dead. But as the person who was actually operating the vehicle didn't know Manhattan. He's a vacation relief ALS coordinator. Good guy. First time I think he ever chauffeured the Chief around. He was driving very very carefully, as he should. He was using the directional signal and all that kind of stuff, which is funny with lights and sirens. You don't see that.

As a result, we didn't get there as fast as we initially would have liked to. Just around the time we pulled up, stopped the vehicle, actually we were getting out of the vehicle and the first thing I became conscious off of when we were stepping out of the vehicle, was a police officer was flying in our direction, yelling and screaming for everybody to back up and leave. There were a few thousand civilians, evacuating, going past us. About 30 feet maybe from the command car, a piece of what looked like the facade, looking at it now, not that I ever paid too much attention to those buildings before. It had to be two stories or three stories hit the street about 30 feet away from Chief Stone. Like that.

The cop -- it missed that cop by -- I don't know how many feet. He was probably standing right underneath it, which explains him yelling. We jumped back in the vehicle, figured it was a good idea to since we were mobile, move us far away as we could. We had no idea what was going on. We went there for a plane into a building, a fire. That's what we went there for. Now we show up and this big thing hits.

We got about 10 feet when all the people who were fleeing, there were still you know, some civilians and some rescue workers and some cops, were running in front of the vehicles. We couldn't really take the vehicle any further and we decided very quickly we will abandon it. We pulled over as close as we could, jumped out of the vehicle and were trying to organize getting helmets out of the trunk and those kind of things.

This cloud that had to be three stories high rolled right up on us. Like it was nothing. Stevie was very very anxious to get us away from that thing. As he was walking in this direction, it was unbelievable. It was black sort of, mostly gray, you couldn't see through it, and it was moving faster than any of us could run. No matter what we did.

We only got maybe half a block before it covered all of us. There were a few ambulances who were already parked there, with some very confused and frightened people sitting inside. All we basically did was duck behind one. There was really nowhere to go. I mean, we were completely disoriented, really. When you first get there, you know, you take a breath and look for somebody else, somebody else from EMS and the assignment, we knew where it was going. There were about 30 Chiefs assigned. What anyone's assignment was going to be we had no idea.

So we were still in that scene survey type mode and all of a sudden these bricks started falling around you. I don't even know how to describe it. Everything got black, nobody could breathe. After a while everything got gray again and then you could sort of breathe. We kind of mustered up our forces.

At that point, I found Amedegnato, the L.O.D.I. Limited person in our office. Sounds foolish, but we didn't know of any other command post that was still extant, that was sitting around there, and we knew, we hadn't seen any other supervisors or Chiefs at that point. We could barely see anything at all, very strange. Really eerie. Like being underwater at night. You know, you sort of -- total sensory deprivation. You are not sure exactly where you should go. There is so much noise. There is things you feel on your feet, just, you know, pieces whatever, hitting the street.

We weren't sure what to do next. What I was going to try to do is just do a fast head count of the people that came to me. I was going to try to find out where my two medics were and my APs were and my Chief. Some of the guys, some of the people who were in the ambulances started coming out of the ambulances, things started to settle.

The Chief popped up. I was telling everyone to stay exactly where they were. People were getting out of the ambulances. They were wandering, or trying to. I said stay right by your ambulance right now till we get a head count, find out how many people are here. You couldn't really see halfway down the block. It's sort of hard to describe. A handful of ambulances with us, we thought there was a MERV a little further down the block but we really couldn't see.

Chief showed up, and we kind of --

Q. Which Chief?

A. My Chief. My Chief showed up. She showed up. We kind of sort of came up with a very fast plan.

At the time, we had no -- this is going to sound absolutely bullshit, but we had no idea that we were about a block away from the building when it dropped. We really didn't know what that was. It sounds stupid, but it didn't enter my mind or I think anybody else's mind at that moment that there was any idea that that building was going to fall.

When that big piece or whatever it was hit the street, I thought it was a part of the building. That's what I thought. We knew that planes did substantial damage and you could see that as you were driving down the highway to get there. You could see it on TV before we even left the Division. It didn't occur to me that that was the entire building. And that's what all that dust was from. It didn't even cross my mind. It didn't occur to me that the second building would fall. I thought we were perfectly safe where we were.

So we set up ALS on one side of the street, BLS on the other side of the street, gave Amedegnato a clipboard and told her run up and down, start tracking people. We need to know what units were there, their shield numbers, who was doing what. Then we were going to set up a staging, triage, whatever else we had. A few people wandered up. A few EMS (inaudible). One very emotionally upset young lady, an EMS person I had never seen her before. Short little blond girl, probably from Manhattan. She definitely wasn't from the Bronx. I'd know her.

She was upset about her son who was in Queens in school. The whole situation. She was completely -- she was totally not functioning. I put her in the back of one of the ambulances and gave her a BLS unit to sit with her for a little while. I'd check on her occasionally.

Found the MERV, once things settled up a little bit, and saw there was a little further up the block, there was already activity taking place, people already triaging, people who were already working on transporting people. Basically got back up. We tried to find masks. There weren't enough masks to go around for everybody. Basically the only masks we had at the time was whatever was in the back of the ambulances that were there and there was about ten of them there. It wasn't enough to go around.

Treated a couple of cops. Treated a couple of firemen. Mostly walking out of the dust. We had to walk into the dust and pull somebody out. Things kind of happened quickly. We were just sending them towards people, towards vehicles. Getting things organized. At one point or another, I don't know the address of the building. There was an interior triage being set up. That was sort of underway. There was a very well meaning EMT waiting over there who was completely confused by the triage procedures, even though there was a relatively large amount of patients in one place at one time, including a lot of EMS people, who weren't quite sure what they were up to at the moment.

They were trying to find a bathroom in the building so they could wash up. Not being terribly verbal, I mean I was finding -- I came across Captain Rivera, who is a senior guy. He used to work in my Division, just, I think two days before he transferred out of the Division. Good guy, good guy, good boss. But a lot of people were sort of not quite sure how to proceed.

We were reverting back to these are the tags, tear off the tags, didn't really seem to matter at the time. That's what was going on. I don't know how to describe it. When you didn't know what to do, I guess you revert back to what you sort of understand.

That's what we were seeing. Well meaning

EMTs, but messing up the triage. Tearing off the wrong side of the tag. We found a lady who was relatively badly injured. We scooped her, put her on the side, put her on oxygen. There was a fire Chief, I don't know where he came from, he had a fracture, I believe in one of his arms. Took a nice knock in the head. He was very concerned about where we were. He kept looking from where we were to the skylight and he kept saying we need not to be there.

Steve was (inaudible) Chief Villani, Captain Rivera, Chief Pascale, I understand, was in the area at that point. I guess she went in to find a ladies room and a place to wash up. All this happened within a few minutes. All this really happened within maybe 10, 15, 20 minutes.

Steve was concerned about what this fire Chief had said, Steve is a very nervous type.

Q. Steve who?

A. Steve (inaudible). Sorry. (inaudible). From the time we got out of the car, huge cloud (inaudible). He came up to me and he said you need to hear what this Chief has to say. He went and found this fire Chief and he said we shouldn't be here. This area is not secure. He kept pointing up through the skylight. Sure enough, he was absolutely right.

Not too long after that I went outside to give an assist to -- the tracks on the MERV. They were trying to set the tracks up on the back of the MERV so that they could roll stuff. They couldn't get it straight. I walked past and was giving them a hand. All of a sudden somebody gave an alarm. I don't know who it was, that it was time to evacuate this area now as quickly as possible. Ambulances peeling out. MERV peeled out. People left their ambulances taking off on foot. People were confused. They didn't know, some of the folks who were assigned over there, knew where to report, but didn't know anything else about Manhattan, so they didn't know where they should go first, or where to report to at this point.

That's when the second collapse started to come down. All kinds of noise. Boom, boom, boom, boom, boom, very loud. Nobody knew what it was. Everybody stopped when we heard it. Everybody took it very seriously when the firefighters started running. When they start running, it's like maybe time to catch up, before you even ask a question and we didn't know if that was --

We started hearing the first building had come down completely. Initially we heard there were like 5 or 6 stories that were still standing. Then we heard that it was gas mains or cars going off. That's what we thought the thumping was initially. But I think it turned out to be the second building coming down, because right after that there was this monumental cloud. It was worse than the first one.

Looked for my guys, my medics were gone. They took off. One, I understand, headed into an ambulance. Neil tried to help somebody and he got behind the building. Didn't know where my Chief went. Lost Chief Villani completely.

Found Amedegnato. I was banging on the ambulance telling people just take off, head down as far as you can go until you hear the word stop, because nobody knew where to tell everyone to evacuate to. All everybody knew the second building was coming down and we were -- I think we finally decided I think the building we were in was probably 3 World Trade Center. I think that's where we decided we eventually ended up.

Q. Did you ever enter any of the buildings?

A. Yes, the interior triage building, whichever building it was. It's still standing I understand. It had a nice terrarium lobby. That was the first triage area. As far as entering actually one of the World Trade Center buildings?

Q. Yes.

A. There was enough to do outside. It sounds stupid. Eventually I had no doubt at all that we would eventually just wander on over there, but at that point nobody knew exactly how many Lieutenants were around. How many units were around. We were still trying to do the basic stuff.

How many people are here. Where are we going to send them. I had no radio. I actually -- no, I'm wrong. I did sign out a radio over there, but at that point it was lost. I was waylaid by an ATF guy, who was in such a -- in his exuberance to leave where he was, he took off like a linebacker, knocked me clean off my feet and I wasn't the only one.

He hit my watch. He knocked my watch off, knocked my watch off. Somebody found it in the rubble. Turned it in to Metrotech. Actually that's like --

Q. That's nice.

A. Absolutely, absolutely. So I found that little EMT who was hysterical, people were taking off, including the crew that was supposed to be taking care of her. They took off. So I stopped her for two seconds, because I knew she was with somebody. She couldn't tell me who her partner was. She wasn't able to tell me where her partner was and she (inaudible), it's hard to describe. She pulled away from me and ran into the dust where some of the ambulances were parked.

I turned around and I started heading off after her. People running this way and I'm running that way after this EMT. Ambulances going this way, ESU trucks flying down the street, cutting through the dust, people ducking out of his way. Absolute panic, absolute panic.

Then I saw Amedegnato. She was heading this way. I was going to tell her to stop and wait because I was concerned where everyone was. Sounds stupid. I was worried about where my little group of people were.

She was following two police officers and some ATF guys and some non-uniformed personnel, but I wasn't sure who they were. Who -- there was a -- I believe it was a construction trailer. They looked like construction trailers. Could have been a police trailer, that was half a block further up the street.

Basically what we were trying to do at that point was trying to get away from the dust. It's hard to describe. It's like somebody puts a black cloth over your face. You can't even breathe. They might see but you can't (inaudible) -- like that. Then it sits in your mouth. Like you couldn't even take a breath, couldn't even take a breath. Like I said, it was coming so fast. It was coming from this side, it was coming from that side. As far as you looked, there was more of it. It just like --

Q. (inaudible)?

A. You couldn't outrun it. You absolutely didn't have that. Everybody was heading in that direction. The ambulances were taking off. One or two stayed behind, stayed where they were. I headed towards the trailer with the idea of at least getting behind it, because I had took the attitude of somebody else that they were around building one when it came down. They started running. They got about a block and then they realized that they couldn't outrun it, and they should stay exactly where we were. Whatever was gonna happen would happen.

I figured I'd get as far as the trailer. I'd duck under it or beneath it, just follow the rest of the cops and firemen to see where they are headed. We managed to get in it just around the time the cloud hit. Everything got pitch black. There was no power. Stuff rained off it, banged off it left and right. It got pitch black, because when the cloud hit it was like nighttime. It stayed that way for quite a while. It stayed that way for quite a while.

I did a fast head count there. The only person I could find was Amedegnato. I didn't know where the Chief was. I lost Villani, didn't know where the medics were. There were no other units with me besides she and I, who were in that trailer. There was a couple of cops and some firemen, and whoever was the occupants of the trailer.

Found some water in the trailer and do what we can to irrigate some people in the dark who had some real trouble with what was in their eyes. I went outside while it was still kind of sort of coming down. The blackness was gone. Everything was sort of gray, looked like snow, with the intention of looking for everybody. I sort of felt responsible to know where they were. Nobody was around. It was dead quiet. The ambulances looked like they were covered with gray snow, the rubble on the ground, just looked like mounds of like gray -- just like clouds, because you couldn't even see. The dust was so thick you couldn't see a sharp edge from a smooth edge.

Eventually we left the trailer. I located Captain Rivera. Amedegnato stayed with me. We needed to find as many EMS people as we could, because really at that point there were no EMS people floating around. A lot of firemen, a lot of cops, still some civilians oddly enough who were staggering around, some plainclothes people I didn't recognize.

Most of the ambulances had evacuated except for the few who were sitting there and nobody was moving in those. Some of them were running, some of them weren't. Didn't think anyone was in them. Couldn't see anybody. Asked her to hang out, stay here and you and I will try to get some EMS people together to find out where to stage. We will find out exactly where we are supposed to be. I turned my back and she was gone. No idea where she went. We didn't find her till the end of the night. She turned up at one of the hospitals, not hurt, but at a field hospital.

Located Captain Rivera. Asked him if he was aware of any sort of command post, anything. He was absolutely unaware. He had no idea of what was going on. Figured we would stay together and set something up.

Then I looked around some more, saw Chief Pascale. I don't know where she ended up or where she went. She asked me what I was doing there. At that point I found a couple of firemen. I said well, there's two firemen over here and they need attention. See those ambulances? We need to find out who belongs to those ambulances, if they are still running. She is giving me orders. I said okay.

So I went looking, I found Neil, found Steve. So then it was me, Neil, Steve and Captain Rivera. Somebody, it was either an operations officer or a Chief, who I didn't recognize wearing white, had a white helmet, but it wasn't marked. Everybody was covered in dust. Couldn't identify. I was looking to him, we were looking to him to see where we should set things up. Somebody had to have a radio at that point. Most us didn't anymore.

We walked a block further up. We got some bottled water. There was bottled water amongst the rubble. Grabbed some bottled water, put it on the stair chairs we had and we were dragging it up the block. We figured Stuyvesant High School was where we were sending most of the ambulances to evacuate, go over there. A couple of ambulances were there.

Nobody had any clear idea what was going on. Nobody had any idea what was going on, I mean, at that point. Where is the command post, where is staging, we had no radio. We couldn't get in contact with anyone. Went into Stuyvesant High School because it was open. The Police Department was in there. They had set up sort of a command post. They were starting to set up the command post.

We walked back and forth. They had a gymnasium. Looked practical. They had an auditorium, looked practical, school guards, who were being very helpful. They had bathrooms, they had water. I said this is a good place to set up. It's not that far from where we were. It's right by the water. So I got ahold of J.R., Captain Rivera. I said this is where we should be. This is where we should do it.

I mean we should be inside this high school right now. He said, good, good. He's trying to get people at home on his cellphone. Steve is trying to get people at home on his cellphone. Cellphones really weren't working. I told Neil and Steve, go ahead and throw some water on your face because there was water in there. They were throwing -- they had glasses of water set up, the school staff did.

No sooner did we get in there, Neil was looking for a bathroom. He went into the bathroom. Steve was directed by me -- go over by the water. I was heading towards the auditorium because I talked to the school security guard and they said injured people had walked in already and they were kind of pointed in that direction. So I was heading towards the auditorium when a bunch of cops came running up the street yelling there's a gas main leak.

So everybody as a unit just left. We took off out of that place because they were evacuating, the school people, the injured people had to be dragged in. We just tore off the oxygen masks. They flew as fast as they could go. We evacuated at the rear of the building. At that point it was so completely disoriented, because now we heard from a lot of people, because you couldn't see in there. I don't know how to describe it. You couldn't have seen even half a block.

The dust stayed in the air. It was so heavy. You looked where you thought the building should be and if they were there, you couldn't see it, because the dust was so thick. Nobody knew what was going on. I mean you really didn't. (inaudible) second building came down. While you're trying to absorb that and I'm sitting there. They are saying there is a gas main leak inside this high school. We have to evacuate this building.

Under those circumstances, there is very little -- because I mean I have been -- we have been in the city for 40 minutes and I was already -- I had already seen my third skyline in 40 minutes. Three different skylines in the same square footage. I said, well, this is certainly possible. Everybody took off.

On the other end we were taking off down by the water. Nobody had any idea where we were going. We were just getting away from the building. I found a few EMS people that were just wandering. Had nothing with them. They were not Bronx people. They weren't with their vehicles. They had no helmets. They had no equipment. They were just covered in dust.

I spoke to one of my medics, you know what we should probably do, because we were still swamped with civilians. Let's get the EMS people here and at least stay in one spot or move as a unit, because we already lost two guys, okay, and he shrugged. That didn't kind of work out. That didn't work out too well. I'm sure people have other priorities in life. They only half heard what you were saying. I ran into one of the paramedics over here who when I was a Lieutenant, was a new recruit, Darnowski, whose brother also works in the system, who, his wife worked in the building. He hadn't been able to contact her. He was virtually useless.

Actually what happened, a lot of people couldn't find their partners. There was a lot of disorientation going around. People were not in a position to follow orders. No matter how nicely you put it, you are not going to order them, you must do this or you must do that, but people were not in any kind of position where they were going to follow any direction other than what they thought was most important at the moment.

Darnowski was out of it. I put him with his -- put him with his partner and then sent them on their way. Said you need to do this, you need to do this. Other people not so much. So it was definitely like a breakdown in discipline sort of. I'm not saying that to be critical. It's just that at that particular moment, nobody was paying attention. I wouldn't even have thought it myself. I felt I was sort of responsible, because at that point, there were no officers. We lost J.R. outside.

This person, he was probably a Chief, he was nowhere to be found, so I didn't see anybody else who was around. We walked up about half a block and I ended up being I think they said it was North, West and North, I think was the cross streets.

Q. North End?

A. Manhattan College.

Q. Okay.

A. There were a few EMS people. There was a Red Cross truck there that had shown up already. There were a couple of confused and lost looking fire people, and confused and lost looking EMS people. So I said, this looks like a good place to gravitate to, because we are confused and lost too. We kind of sort of took over the intersection. Again, nobody had a radio, nobody --

Q. Do you know about what time this was. It's very hard to --

A. So sorry. I lost my watch when the ATF guy blocker tackled me. I did. About an hour maybe, possibly. Bumped into a Lieutenant, who I never met before. His name was Pinky. Don't know what his last name was. He was a little character. He was giving orders, yelling. He didn't need a radio because you could hear him two blocks away. I said what's your name. He was keeping his head. He was doing all right. He said his name is Pinky, he worked in Manhattan. I didn't see him again. I was with him for half an hour and he kind of wandered off. This is at the point where everything I think, literally before the smoke cleared, people were doing sort of, a lot of free-lancing going on. There was a lot of -- whatever looked interesting is where people were milling towards.

Whatever people didn't want to go anywhere near, they would go in the other direction. It was hard to get control of people. Really was hard to get control. There was a group of people there one minute and you say you know what guys, hang over there, we are going to get filters for you. The Red Cross is floating around.

We were trying to set up an infirmary in Manhattan College. We are trying to -- hang there, hang there. Jerry Santiago, Lt. Santiago was there. Me, Jerry and Pinky were the only Lieutenants in there at that point. And a few EMTs, and a lot of law enforcement. Jerry Doyle, a former Chief's aide from Manhattan came in his car. He showed up and he saw me, because he recognized me.

He came up, and we decided every Lieutenant there, since only one Lieutenant turned out to have a radio, was going to get one EMT and keep him as a partner. We were going to try to establish something at this point because we didn't even know, was there a command post. Somebody said they thought there was a command post set up at one of the piers. At least that was where some of the Chiefs said they were going.

The Academy bus showed up with a bunch of people who were students in refresher. We ran into a little problem with some of them. Some people ran into a little problem, because one or two of them got off and kind of assumed this was -- they were going to assume command. This is what they were waiting for and you can tell the people who weren't actually there, because they came out in clean shoes. Everyone else was the same color gray.

Pinky is sitting there spitting stuff out between his knees. One or two guys looking exhausted sitting on stretchers on North Street. Right after we evacuated for the third time. I'm sitting. I had an oxygen tank on. I lost my nitro. I was sitting with an oxygen tank. I'm waiting for the pain to go away. One or two EMTs were totally confused.

[redacted] had just shown up and he thought he lost his car. He couldn't reach his wife, who worked within a few blocks away. Nobody was in a state for this. And this mook, who has more bars than me, he said men, we are mobilizing a task force. I need a bunch of you. We're going to go back there and get in those vehicles, because there was a few vehicles. If he would have understood. Didn't get much from us at that moment.

I hate to say it, but most of us were just too tired and a number of them had been absolutely petrified. I mean they were still like this, totally out of it.

Q. Oh, yes oh, yes.

A. And one of the Lieutenants with me stood up and said clearly you have been nowhere near that spot, because if you were, the last thing you would be asking us to do right now is walk right back in there to get an ambulance. You're kidding me. He said somebody hurt in there? I said we are not going back in to get a vehicle. We just left it.

I mean all of us were covered. Forget about it. Stuff in our eyes, cuts, bruises, equipment lost. Half the people we came with were lost. There were still people saying I can't find my partner. This guy was going -- very strange, very strange stuff. He took off. The Chief grabbed him by the ear and said get in my car, we are gonna take a look at something.

Where this guy ended up, but we never saw him again. He is the first Chief we saw at that point. Kind of talked to him. He said why don't you guys stay right here and I'll go a little further ahead, we'll find out what's going on and we will decide what's up with this. There were a few people showing up at that point that had radios and could talk to somebody and find out what was going on. Half the people without their vehicles didn't even have portables.

Sounds stupid, but you realize how important communication is at a time like that. In a situation like this, you are dealing with word of mouth. An ambulance, any ambulance, a voluntary ambulance rolled by, and you stopped them and said where are you coming from. We are coming from -- who did you speak to down there, EMS people, what did they say, where are they sending you. That's how we were running things. Okay, there are people down there, they are sending one block up this way, so they must be setting something up over there.

That's where we found out where the initial command post was, because a bunch of ambulances came out of nowhere, in a motorcade, and the city bus came with people from Brooklyn. We just jumped on the city bus and came down. They saw me standing there. At that point I was the only white helmet standing there. So they stopped in front of me and said where do you want us? I said well, I have 30 ambulances from Jamaica Hospital, some voluntaries on this corner. I got about 10, 15 EMS ambulances on that corner. This is the infirmary.

I got one Lieutenant who showed up off duty. He didn't have a radio. There was another Lieutenant who I walked over there and met. I don't know where he was from. He showed up with a radio. He was probably actually assigned, who was taking care of that end over there and the transport on that side that nobody knew was there. We transported about 30 people in our vehicles and nobody had seen anybody over there. Very disorganized.

They reported to me and said well, where did they tell you to go. They said, well they told us to go about a block that way. We saw you guys here. That's when we found out there was something going on a block down. I took Neil since there were two Lieutenants there now. I took him and I walked up a block. I had a fireman who had come over on the ferry. He gave me a business card with a radio frequency. He said, that ferry captain was over there. We were a block away from the ferry. All we had to do is go through a gate to the ferry.

He said, that Captain over there says he is ready to go. He would take people over to Jersey, but nobody is calling him, nobody knows he's there. This is his radio frequency. This was a fireman that came from home. I said absolutely. So I did a head count. How many paramedics and EMTs I had. How many voluntary ambulances and how many municipal ambulances I had.

We had had a city bus show up with doctors and nurses, PAs. The cops had opened up Manhattan College and they did a great job setting up a hospital in there. Kind of a M.A.S.H. Somebody showed up with a tractor trailer from Duane Reade, and we had all the batteries, flashlights, and orange baskets we could handle, work gloves. They were handing them out to anybody.

There was some people in that building, a Fire Marshal retrieved, transported. A lot of it was done verbally. I had kept eye contact with Neil. In the basement over there, there is a Fire Marshal. I told Steve, go over there. There is a guy holding his neck. Everything was like aye, aye, and verbal. I had my frequency, two Lieutenants and 3 ambulances. I was in charge. No one kind of knew we were there.

I ran into Joe Cahill. I saw him. I think he was kind of wandering around. I don't know who he came there with, but I don't think he was actually assigned to anybody at that point, because I turned around and he was backing up a voluntary ambulance to Manhattan College. I walked over and asked what are you doing here? He said I just went inside and talked to those doctors and they said they had no transportation. So I figured I would get them an ambulance.

Everybody at that point was a little bit -- they weren't looking at the big picture, because at that point the DOT was coming up to haul all the cars off the street so we could keep that block open. All sorts of bizarre little things went on. I walked to up to what turned out to be a command post about a block away. Saw a Captain who I didn't know at the time. Now I know who he was. He was in this little saw horse area. There were a few Chiefs.

Q. Who was it?

A. Captain Musto. I had never met him. I went up to him and I gave him the frequency. And he's on the radio -- Lieutenant so and so, Lieutenant so and so. This is where we are. You cannot see us. But we are a block and a half over there. Where do you want us. Where do you want these people and by the way there is a ferry parked over there waiting. I'm waiting. I walked up to him, he says what's your name and shield number. He gets my name, Neil's, Steve's, because he was with me. He asks how many people did you bring from the Academy?

I'm not from the Academy. I'm from Division 6. We came with a small group of people, but now we have -- just then, one of the Chiefs walked up to him and stuck a finger in his chest and said "I told you, no one but Chiefs behind that line." He looked at me like this and the Chief turned to me and said sorry out. I'm sorry. So (inaudible). Took the ambulances, (inaudible) radio frequencies. I don't know what they did.

These guys were besides themselves. Everybody was. I don't fault them. If he was the it man, if he was the guy that everyone was going to see, I don't know if I'd be in a good mood. Eventually all those people got organized and they got filtered in wherever. We stayed with them for a little while. There became an overabundance of people reporting in that area.

We got a radio, I found a van with a medic from the Academy. He was designated our runner because the one radio we did have among us went dead. So he was doing the running. They established another command post at one of the piers. There was another one further up the block. We decided we were going to take some of our resources. Lieutenant Trainer, I think was his name, showed up from Brooklyn. From Brooklyn with a couple of people. I don't know how he got there, in a van or a regular bus, they were on foot with their gear.

We established communication and they were asking for people here and they were asking for people there. So things were getting a little bit more organized.

Q. Do you have any idea what time frame we are in now?

A. Had to be twoish I guess, somewhere in that ballpark. We were there for a couple of hours. We were there for a couple of hours. Maybe even longer. By the time I left there there had to be 30 or 40 doctors at Manhattan College. Food had been delivered and it was being dispatched. We transported 20, 30 patients. Tracking was being done. Whichever Lieutenant was standing there without the radio is the one (inaudible).

Couple of guys showed up and said they told us to report here and set up a temporary morgue. So somebody knew that we were there. So as things got a little more organized, people started dispersing a little bit. Two other Lieutenants remained there. I walked up with Neil to the command post, because that was at the point where we had firemen working in the rubble.

All of a sudden the patient count stopped. We didn't see anybody. Then more and more free lancers started showing up. People identifying themselves as EMS employees who used to be on the job but are no longer. They were showing the old HHC I.D. card. All kinds of bullshit is going on.

We went up and we reported over there. I reported to Captain Nahmod. He was setting up (inaudible), Captain Rivera, he had set up a MERV and some triage, very close to building 7. They were setting things up as close as they could, because there were still people working in the area. Nobody was sure exactly how many people, because at that point there was so many free lancers showing up.

Somebody said they found a female that was on maternity modified on the pile. They took her off. (inaudible) showed up. Nobody knew how many people was actually there. The Academy was telling everybody, they said come up to the school, which is right around where the command post was being set up at that point.

Building 7 came down.

Q. Building seven came down I believe around 4:25?

A. Makes sense. At that point I had -- not St. Barnabas New York, but some out of state St. Barnabas ALS units with a Chief show up. They were good enough, when we set up. They wanted me to set up five stations, ALS, BLS, et cetera, outside the MERV. The MERV is going to be separate. I was going to be here. Nahmod was my boss. These guys were ALS guys. They brought tons of equipment they set up. I had a couple of EMTs. They didn't have a home. We set up very nicely and we were waiting. The building came down, we were still waiting. And waiting. We didn't see anybody.

Occasionally an EMS person needed a little irrigation or like that. We stayed until Chief Pascale showed up and took us off the line.

Q. Okay. Do you have anything else you want to add to this in regard to the events that happened prior to like roughly noon?

A. Meaning what? I'm sorry.

Q. Anything that you feel that you forgot to mention as you were talking. Sometimes things pop into our head, oh, I should have mentioned this. If you don't, that's fine.

A. Under the circumstances, a lot of people, you know, performed very very well. In a case like Darnowski, who was very concerned about his wife, was still functioning, able to follow whatever direction I gave him. The direction was basically get away from here because he would have done what any one of us would have done, walk up to the rubble, which other people had done for the same reason. They had spouses or whatever inside of the building. People performed very very well. I saw people who for 14 years I thought that the sun rose and set on them collapse.

I saw other people that I hadn't thought very much of at all, walk right into the situation and take control. Do what I thought at the time was exactly what they should be doing at that particular moment or at least the best that anybody could possibly hope to do at that particular moment, because the first couple of hours we were there, I don't mean in terms of free-lancing. The first few hours that we were there there was not much -- people would congregate in one space and a building would fall down and we scattered. Then smaller groups would get together and nobody was really sure who was in charge and I saw very few people walking around looking like they were looking to duck something.

Most people were okay. Most people were doing exactly what they should be doing at that moment. Very impressive. I didn't see anybody shaking any fingers at any voluntaries. I didn't see anybody do anything like that. You see that constantly. I'm a patrol boss out here. Conditions 18. I used to work with Barnabas units all the time. That was not a problem down there that day. Truly was not.

Communications was bad. The rumors were out of control. People who were showing up from Brooklyn and Queens, from outlying areas, a couple of hours after, came. I heard Chief McCracken and Chief Gombo were (inaudible) all day. That didn't help. We heard after we had already set up like a little hospital at Manhattan College about the Pentagon. That was the first time we heard it. I mean, we would normally hear WINS or something like that. That didn't help matters any. There was nothing you could do about it.

A big part of people's issues were their own families. You'd be surprised how many people who live and work in Manhattan and that was their primary concern. And while some of them cut out, because they couldn't reach home, a lot of people stayed right there.

My son goes to school in midtown and my mom works a little further uptown and I couldn't -- my cellphone was useless. Steve's cellphone was useless. Finally got an EMT that was good enough to give me a cellphone and I got through to his school that announced that they would not release him from school unless someone came to pick him up. I said well you just need to understand where I am right now. I can't do that. I'm doing the single parent thing and I can't leave right now. They said well, then he stays the night.

A lot of people stayed. Some people took off and some of us stayed right there. I mean it was a difficult choice for I'm sure a lot of people. Jerry (inaudible). Couldn't find his mother-in-law on the phone and when he did, he was told, I don't know, she was in the building, that's all. He stayed right where he was and did his job. Very impressive. I don't really have much else to add. Sorry.

Q. You gave us everything we wanted. Very helpful. Very very helpful.

A. (inaudible).

MR. ECCLESTON: That's what we are looking for. I thank you very much for conducting this interview with me. This interview is being concluded at 1318 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT MARY MERCED

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today is October 23rd, 2001. The time now is 2312 hours. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck. I'm with the New York City Fire Department. Tonight I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, your rank and your assignment.

EMT MERCED: EMT Mary Merced, Division 3.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: What's your rank, Mary?

EMT MERCED: EMT.

Q. Can you please give me your account of the morning of September 11th, 2001.

A. On September 11th -- well, let me go back. I work with Deputy Chief Goldfarb, and we were working 6 Charlie the night before. We had a meeting at 7:00 in the morning which exceeded our end of tour time.

Once we left the meeting, I was monitoring SOD and I heard a police officer yell there was an explosion in the World Trade Center. It came in broken up, but I made it out. I told the Chief, "Did you hear that?" He said he heard what I heard, but I had to repeat it. The police officer gets back on again and says about an airplane but didn't complete the word. I said, "Oh, shoot." I said, "An airplane crashed into the World Trade Center."

I quickly lit up the vehicle, and I'm heading towards Manhattan.

Q. Where were you coming from?

A. We were coming from -- we had a meeting here.

Q. At the division office?

A. At the division office, the Division 3 office, right.

I'm heading towards the Battery Tunnel, and all the while it's being confirmed, we're hearing it over EMS citywide and the PD radio and fire radio. When I was heading towards the Battery Tunnel, you could see the smoke on one of the towers. It was unbelievable. Initially I thought it was an accident.

So we proceeded, made our way in heavy traffic into the Battery Tunnel. The second plane must have hit while we were in the tunnel, because as soon as I came out, both buildings were on fire. I just looked up in awe. I never thought that I would ever see this.

It's ironic to talk about premonitions or stuff like that because two weeks prior to this -- I'm always talking about it. I always say that we're not prepared, that hazmat doesn't have enough training. I've got other training outside of here. I'm a WMB technician, I got the national certification from Jersey City Medical Center and stuff like that.

I'm always saying I learned more and I know that when I was taught in hazmat, they thought me this much is not enough. Chief Goldfarb, the funny thing when we started our 6 Charlie tour that Saturday night prior to this happening, he said, "Mary, you know what? I'm going to check all the MERVs and the LSU trucks because if something happens then I'll be sure we're prepared." It's funny, Saturday night, Sunday night and Monday night we did it. You wouldn't have thought that he would be right.

Anyway, we got to the scene. A bunch of fire trucks and police, fire equipment, everybody you can think of who was there were getting there or trying to get there. We got out of the vehicle. We grabbed the command board, something we seldom use. We used it one other time on a job.

I parked on the West Side Highway between Albany and Liberty Street, number one X marked on the map. We proceed up the West Side Highway towards the south tower. I see Chief Goldfarb is on the radio and I believe he's talking to Chief Gombo who is in the south tower.

Chief Goldfarb says, "Come on, Mary." I said, "Where are we going?" He said, "We're going into the south tower." It's customary we set up treatment and triage in the fire building. I look up and I said, "Chief, we're not going into this building. I said, Chief, the fucking shits going to fall," never anticipating the whole building but I just thought the floors up there.

I said, "This is not an ordinary fire." I said, "[redacted]." He said, "Mary, calm down." He probably thought I was being hysterical. He was thinking I was being hysterical. I was just putting my foot down. [redacted].

He gets on the radio. I don't know what he spoke to Chief Gombo about. He said, "Come on." I said, [redacted]

I said, "We have off-duty people here. We have units here, they need supervision, they're running around. He looked at me. I don't know what he told Gombo. We collected people. I took this off-duty guy -- I don't remember his name -- so he could help with the command board.

We also had Kevin Darnowski. He was off-duty but in uniform. He was on the way home when it happened, and his wife worked in the north tower on the 90th floor. He told me that his wife was in that building. I gave him a hug and I told him, I said, "Don't go in that building. You stay with me because she may have gone out."

All the time we saw debris falling, people either jumping or falling.

Q. Where did you set the command board up?

A. Okay. We went to -- fire had a command post across the street, right about here.

Q. By Two World Financial?

A. Maybe between here.

Q. On the West Side Highway, somewhere near Two World Financial?

A. Off the West Side Highway. So we were there. I set up my command board right by Fire, behind their's. There was an underground driveway right behind them. That's where we were, outside. Then the chiefs were there. (Inaudible) so they can see what's what.

Chief Goldfarb after a while, he says, "Mary, I want you to take everybody and move back into the entranceway to the underground driveway." So we did that. I'm over here trying to get units down. As a matter of fact, we had units down, that I put down on the command board that's still not erased.

After a while he said, "You know what, I don't like the way this looks, Mary." He said, come, Mary, everybody, we're going to go." We went up to Vesey and West. We went up to Vesey and West. That's where we saw a lot of supervisors and units.

All the while I'm like holding Kevin Darnowski's hand, because I didn't want him to go into that building. I knew if I let go of him, he would be gone.

I look up at the north tower, and I see see colors all the way up there. I'm thinking to myself, geez, I said, is that clothes? I thought since the airplane crashed there, I'm thinking about maybe it's the clothes from the luggage or something. Then I see something else drop. Then I look. I see debris drop. And I look, and it was people. I could tell you almost every color clothing all the people that I saw fall had on, how they fell, if they tumbled, if they swan-dived.

There was this one woman. She was dressed in white. [redacted] by this time, he was in shock, almost catatonic. He said, "Mary, do you see that woman falling in white? He said, my wife had the same clothes when she left this morning."

[redacted] I had to look because I knew we were close to the buildings and some of the people falling, debris was falling, and I had to watch out for that. And the noise of the people hitting the ground.

We were about ten yards from and the fire apparatus that was there, firemen and the ESU truck was there. We had set up a staging area with the buses on Vesey Street facing south.

ESU, anyway, they threw us out of that intersection. They said, "We want everybody out. This is a tactical area." I didn't understand what that meant at that time, but I soon found out they expected some ground attack of some sort.

The chief told us to go over in front of the American Express building, everybody set up their equipment and everything else in case we had any patients coming to this side.

Q. When you set up by the American Express, you were still on the West Side Highway side or you were on Vesey Street?

A. We were here. The buses were here.

Q. On Vesey.

A. Facing south on Vesey, for egress. The chief had everybody go in front of the American Express building with their equipment, stretchers and everything, you know, the usual stuff. After a while the chief says, "You know what? I want everybody inside the building. I want everybody inside. I don't want anybody outside the building."

As a matter of fact, Lillo was in our crowd initially. I'm thinking to myself -- I knew his wife was in there, probably (inaudible). Quinn was a friend of mine too.

Anyway, everybody went inside the building, and I took it to Captain (inaudible). He works at Metrotech. He was with a group of supervisors. The chief and I, we were on West Street. We came back over this way. I tell you, all this time I don't hear any radio transmissions or anything. It was looking and doing automatically. I wasn't even so much concerned for my safety. We just do what we've got to do.

All of a sudden, that's it, you hear the rumbling and it's getting louder and louder. I'm like, oh, shit. He said, "Mary, run!" I'm thinking, oh, shit, the building's falling. He's saying, "Mary, run!"

We turned around and ran west on the West Side Highway.

Q. You ran north?

A. I'm sorry, this is north? I'm sorry.

Q. On the West Side Highway?

A. Yeah, so then the buses were facing the --

Q. They were facing east or west?

A. They were facing west.

Anyway, we were running north. We got around the corner on Vesey Street, and there was an ambulance, like the last ambulance in the staging area, with the doors open. The chief jumped in there. But I had passed him, so I was like in front of the bus. I remember he said, "Mar." I turned around, and I'm looking at this -- is like in slow motion, like time stood still and it was slow motion. But I knew I couldn't turn back and go to the bus, so I had to keep on running.

I can't even explain this. Everything

So I'm running, and I'm worried about the chief, that he's there. Nobody expected those buildings to implode. They were thinking, it's going to topple. When it's falling, you think it's going to topple. Where is it going to go?

So I'm running, and people are running in front of me. They stop. They turn around. I think everything's over with. So I stop, all of a sudden the thing is coming at us. It was like in dark hell, like a nuclear blizzard. I couldn't explain it. You couldn't see in front of you. You couldn't breathe. You're inhaling. You're coughing. You're running. You can't see anything.

Once the building fell -- because you could hear it -- you couldn't hear anymore. Everything was silent. It was like if I was in a desert. I turned around and police officers are telling me, and other people, that we can't go back. I said, "I'm going back." I said, "The chief is over there, and I've got people over there and I've got to find them."

So when I went back, the first person I saw like through this cloud is Danny Rivera from Battalion 31. I looked at him. We both were in shock, of course, like everybody was. I said, "Are you okay, Danny?" He said, "Yeah, Mary, I'm okay." I said, "Where are you going? Don't go back there, Danny." He said, "I've got to find my partner." Everybody was concerned about finding their partners. You know how it is.

I'm on the radio trying to call the chief. He's not answering me. In the mean time I'm thinking about chemical and biological secondary devices or if it was there. There was a Hazollah bus, and I said, "Danny, come, we've got to get masks." We got masks. I was handing out masks. Whatever they had there, I gave them out to people. I don't know.

So I'm calling the chief. He finally answers me. I said, "Are you okay?" He said, "Yeah, I'm fine." He asked me where I was. I had made it back up towards North End. They had

I believe it's the Embassy Hotel Suites. We were there. Chief Kowalczyk was there, Mike Ober. He helps as an EMT at Battalion 39. Chief Villani, the guy in the MERV. Police officers, firemen, hacking, coughing. I had my water. I was sharing my water with the firemen, with civilians.

Chief Goldfarb finally came. We just started taking care of patients. We just turned the lobby of the Embassy Hotel Suites into a treatment triage transport area or whatever. We had I think it was a fire chief who had a dislocated shoulder. We had burns to legs, people in shock, minor injuries, leg, arm, smoke.

I remember they brought Gary Smiley from Battalion 31. They brought him on a stretcher. I believe he on -- he threw himself under one of the apparatuses when the building fell. I think some people got hosed down, so they brought him in. He was in shock, all wet and everything else.

He wanted to quickly get off the stretcher to go back. I'm saying, "Gary --" Gary is hyper anyway. "Gary, you're not going anywhere." "No, I've got to go back." I know he's not thinking clearly. I said, "Gary, you made it out alive. Don't go back and do something stupid." I said, "Stay here. Regroup. You don't know what's going to hit next."

It's a funny thing, because I forgot to mention when Danny Rivera and I made eye contact there was an airplane overhead. You couldn't see up in the sky. You couldn't see anything. Danny, myself and I'm sure everybody else, we were ducking like trying to see where it's going to hit. All the psychological games that come after all of this. At that time you didn't know whether it was going to hit or not.

I remember during that time as well the only radio transmission that I heard was Captain Deshore's. When she said she was heading towards Jersey and she was injured along with some other M.O.S., she was in need of medical assistance and they were taking a lot of people over there. That's the only transmission I heard. Anything else, everything was dead.

Chief Gombo was with us, with other chiefs as well, at the Embassy Hotel Suites.

They don't know what's going on, what's going to happen next, rather. So we had some people transported off the scene to hospitals, and the chiefs, they met and they discussed what their next plan was going to be.

I remember the chiefs were in front of the Embassy Hotel Suites, and I'm there. I said, "Chief, I hear the rumbling noise. The other building's going to fall." He said, "I don't hear anything, Mary." I said, "Chief, the other building's going to fall." The other chiefs are looking at me like I'm going crazy. I said, "Chief Goldfarb, you know I have a keen sense of hearing. The other building is going to fall."

Sure enough, another 30 seconds later, it got louder and louder. Then everybody is going to run, because we didn't see where the building toppled because we didn't know it imploded because you couldn't see anything.

So now we're running, and we go back inside the building here and you couldn't go past the Embassy Hotel Suites because you could see the World Trade Center from there too. It's a big open area on the other side. So we ran back in there and moved everybody to the left of the lobby, because they have an atrium there on the right, in case it topples on top of that building.

So we were there, and it fell. Of course more smoke, more stuff, papers everywhere. We got a little bit more patients. The chiefs, they do what they do, and I'm helping people, as well as the other medics, EMTs. Then some of the chiefs disappeared. I don't know where they went to.

Then we heard that there was a gas leak in the hotel, so we had to evacuate there. So we evacuated there, and we headed north on North End. That's when Chief Gombo -- they decided Chief Goldfarb would go with Chief Gombo to 1 PP because there was no more -- 7 Metrotech, because there was no more OEM over there.

So that's where we went. We went along with Lieutenant Terranova. That's his name; right?

Q. Ross Terranova?

A. Ross, yes, Terranova.

Q. I noticed that you said 7 Metrotech, but you meant Seven World Trade -- right -- where OEM is?

A. Yeah, I'm sorry.

Q. That's okay.

A. I'm sorry. Good thing you picked it up. I didn't realize it.

We went to 1 PP, Chief Gombo along with Chief Goldfarb, made decisions and stuff like that. So that's where we were. We didn't sleep. The chief and I went back -- that same night we went back to the site. There was an EMS operation.

Q. At Vesey and West?

A. No.

Q. Chambers and West?

A. Chambers and West. Yeah, at Chambers and West. We were there like every day. Then we hear that people are missing. They had the chief and I missing. Then the frustration not knowing who's missing, who's here, who's not.

It happened, and I was down there yesterday. I know it happened, but it still hasn't registered. I'm pissed at my job for the lack of support. Just the fact that everyone (inaudible), my family, everyone's family, I'm sure. I mean, we've seen how much support we've gotten throughout the United States and the country, which is great.

[redacted]

It's ironic because during this whole incident I wasn't even concerned about my safety.

I'm here now and I'm not like -- while I'm lucky to be alive, I had a brush with death, you know, I don't even think about it that way. We all did what we had to do, everybody down there. I've gained respect for many people, many people, and lost some for some.

It's going to take a while for everybody to heal because the scars are what's going to remain. [redacted] [redacted]I never, never take my cell phone with me on the job. I always leave it in my purse or in the car. This day I took it. I didn't even think about it.

My ex-husband called me on the phone. He said, "You're there, aren't you?" That day he had to pick up the girls for his visitation. He said, "You're there, aren't you?" I said, "You cannot believe what I'm looking at. You won't believe it." I said, "You know what? Tell the kids that I love them. I don't know when I'm coming home."

I knew it was going to be a long operation. My family didn't hear from me until that night because the phones were down, the cells were down. Even my childhood friends called my mother, and my daughter who lives upstate, she was frantic.

But I thank God that decisions that were made that day, even by Chief Goldfarb, putting those people in there. It would have been worse because we had 50 people easy. It would have been much worse.

[redacted]

But support that I've seen. I know everybody -- who knows, maybe everybody gets television, especially something of this magnitude. But, you know, the dust has settled. We should get better, but I don't see that and I don't feel it and I don't feel support. I really don't.

[redacted]

By the way, [redacted] wife, she was safe in Brooklyn Hospital. He was a wreck. Unfortunately Lillo went in the building. Aside from that, he was working. As you saw in the pictures, he was working anyway. Quinn, a buddy of mine, that's how he is. I would have done the same thing. I would have done the same thing. Even though I was on light duty, I would have done the same thing.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS CHIEF ZACHARY GOLDFARB

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 23rd, 2001. The time is 2318 hours and this is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade Center Task Force. I am conducting an interview in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001, with the following individual:

Please state your name, rank, and assigned command.

CHIEF GOLDFARB: Zachary Goldfarb, EMS Deputy Chief assigned to Division 3.

Q. Chief Goldfarb, were you working on the morning of September 11th, 2001?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you please tell me the details of the day?

A. Yes. We were actually working starting from the night before. We started working on the 10th at 2200 as car 6 Charlie EMS Citywide chief. I had a relatively uneventful shift and we stayed here in our office in Division 3 at the end of the tour for a little while. We were in a meeting with some staff people here. We left here somewhere around 0830 and were heading home, basically, heading off duty.

As we were heading out on Linden Boulevard, monitoring police special operations frequency, we heard someone scream over the police radio, Central, a commercial aircraft just hit the World Trade Center. Immediately I picked up the EMS Citywide radio and told the dispatcher to assign us to the job. I don't even think they knew at that moment that there was a job because it was just instantaneous and we spun around and started heading out Linden Boulevard.

Do you want to know our route of travel or any of that?

Q. Sure.

A. We headed west on Linden Boulevard from -- we were just about at Pennsylvania Avenue, so we headed west on Linden Boulevard from Pennsylvania Avenue. I was anticipating morning inbound rush-hour traffic to begin with let alone a problem with the Trade Center, and then I was anticipating that the Battery Tunnel would probably be open and clear for us to get through. So I said to my aide, Mary Merced, I said let's go out and take the streets down to the Battery Tunnel and we should be able to get through the tunnel and stay off the highway because knowing from how these types of events unfold that the highway tends to get messed up.

So we went west on Linden, continued out, hit the traffic circle by Prospect Park, went around, got onto the Prospect Expressway westbound for about two exits because we could see it was blocked up, jumped off down to the streets and worked the streets down to Hamilton Avenue right down into the mouth of the tunnel. We made really good time, I think, given the distance and the circumstances.

As we got to the Prospect Expressway, that was where we saw the first sight of the towers. At that point my impression was that the first plane had hit but not the second plane. As best as I can remember, there was one tower burning and you could see a huge volume of fire and a lot of damage, and our immediate assessment was this was going to be a major event. Actually, we used some other words, but I don't want to put them on tape.

During the course of our trip, my feeling was, I was the Citywide chief and I was still logged on as the Citywide chief. I didn't know what other chief officers might have been on duty in the morning, but clearly this needed some heads-up activity. So while Mary was driving, I was on the phone with the Citywide dispatch supervisor giving him some direction, and among the direction I gave him was to set up task forces in each borough consisting -- I believe I told him ten ambulances and an officer in each borough for a total of 50 and to mobilize them at two crossing points but hold them fast because I didn't know what we were going to need.

I have to tell you that at this point there was no thought at all given on my part to this being anything other than an accident of some sort. Despite training and I think a very high level of consciousness about terrorism and things of that nature, it didn't occur to me at that point in time that this was any kind of an attack, just some sort of an event where a plane hit the building.

It was an absolute beautiful day. The sky was just a perfect blue and not a cloud in the sky. Heavy smoke plumed up coming off the north tower. So we came by Hamilton Avenue.

As I was saying, I was on the phone with I think it was Larry Tobin, who was the Citywide dispatch supervisor, and I was giving him some direction. I broke off with him, then I called him back. I told him to activate our regional mutual aid agreement with the Office of Emergency Management. I told him to activate our agreement with the Private Ambulance Association and mobilize all our mutual aid agreements and get everybody moving because it was obvious that this would be a very large patient-producing event. Unfortunately, it didn't work out that way. Actually, it did work out that way. Anyway...

But those were the things we were putting in place on the way in. Now, I don't know what other direction anyone else was giving. Among other things I told him was everybody off the radio. I just wanted EMS officers on the radio and nobody else. So, again, I don't know what other direction he might have been getting, but he was certainly listening to the stuff I was telling him, and Larry and I work very well together.

So we got to the tunnel. There was already a line, a whole procession of emergency vehicles lined up trying to get into the tunnel. My aide is very good at dodging traffic, so we kind of wove our way around and drove right into the tunnel, and we got about halfway through the tunnel and traffic was stopped. We were in the Manhattan bound lane, but it was two-way traffic. We tried to get around them into the oncoming lane, but there's really no wiggle room in that tunnel, it's very tight, and everything was stopped dead.

One thing I remember is that everybody had their sirens on and, of course, the tunnel is not a place for a siren and nothing was moving, so it was very noisy in there. So after seeing that we were stopped dead for a couple of minutes and there were police officers out on foot in front of us, I felt that we were really kind of close to Manhattan.

So, as Mary knows, I have no tolerance for sitting in traffic when I have somewhere to be. So I said sit here, I'm going to get out and pull the traffic, and it was my intent to find my way to the front of this line and pull it so that we can get out of that tunnel because we needed to be out. Also, while we were in the tunnel we were off the radio, so I didn't know what was going on.

So I walked up somewhat to where there was a police officer and he told me that traffic was blocked up because of the blockage on West Street and they're working on it but we weren't able to get out just yet. So at that point I sort of had to acknowledge that I guess we weren't moving very far for a few minutes and I walked back to the car, and on my way -- actually, on my way up to the police officer in a car a few car lengths in front of us was one of our off-duty medics, and I don't remember his name right at the moment, but Mary will know in a second and she's probably telling Christine right now.

He rolled down his window very panicked and he was like chief, chief, and I recognized him. I just can't remember his name at the moment. Darnowski. One of the two Darnowskis, Kevin or Jim, one of them. I'm like what's up? He said my wife is in that building. I got to get to her. I said listen. Try and relax. We'll be out of the tunnel in few minutes. When we get out, follow me in to the job, stay with me, we'll find your wife. Very unnerving kind of situation.

Then, as I was walking back from the police officer, a woman runs up to me and, again, we're in the middle of the Battery Tunnel here. A woman runs up to me and the woman is completely hysterical and she's screaming. You've got to help me. You've got to help me. I said what's the matter? She said my son is in the car and he can't breathe. What's wrong with your son? Her son had a tracheostomy and she said it was clogged, and I look toward her car, which was a few car lengths behind us, and I can see that there is a boy, a child in the back seat of the car in his car seat, and he's awake and breathing but maybe he looked like he was in a little distress.

I'm thinking to myself I need to be at this Trade Center. How can I drive away from this little boy? We're stuck here in the tunnel anyway. Maybe I'll take Darnowski and tell Darnowski to go help this little boy while we pull out of the tunnel, and even as I'm having these thoughts, traffic opens up and now we have to move because we're in the column. So I said to the lady, we're moving out of the tunnel now. Keep going out of the tunnel. As soon as you get out, make a left and drive around to the hospital. She said okay. Apparently she was on her way to the doctor or to the hospital at the time. So I was like all right, that's one less thing to worry about.

So I told Darnowski get in his car, follow us. Traffic moves up. We pull out. We pull out onto West Street and this is like -- it's funny because it's almost like you thought it wouldn't get worse. Of course, we've seen it got a lot worse. But it was real bad. A lot of apparatus. At this point the second tower is going. Huge fire. Huge. You know, in retrospect, I look back and I say we should have thought those towers might not hold. There was a huge volume of fire. But, you know, it was so far up that it's almost away. It's like you can't really get a measure of it. So there was a lot of fire, there was debris in the street, body parts in the street, people all over the place, and you kind of tunnel in a little bit, you know?

So we're driving down and I'm thinking of all the stuff I want to bring from the car out to the scene. Mary, as she always says, where do you want me to stop? I'm like, all right, just keep pulling up. We're now going northbound on West Street. Let me refer to the map. So West Street is a divided street here and we're in the northbound lanes going north and we're weaving away and the cops or traffic folks, whatever, they're doing a pretty good job of moving traffic along.

At some point, I want to say probably around Albany Street, I guess, we cross over. There's a break in the median and we cross over, so now we're going northbound on the southbound side. There's stuff coming off the building. So we stopped -- I think our final stopping place was south of the pedestrian bridge. I'm trying to get this right. Maybe somewhere around Cedar Street, but we're on the west side of West Side Highway parked up against the curb facing north, and we're south of this pedestrian bridge. The staging area that they had transmitted was Vesey and West, and there was no way we were going to get up there and there was no way to walk around it, and it was a good stopping place and there were plenty of other people and, quite honestly, if the building hadn't collapsed, I'm sure it probably would have been fine.

Q. Can you just indicate on the map where you had parked your car? To the best of your memory.

A. I'm want to say somewhere like here.

Q. Okay.

A. Something like that.

Q. Okay.

A. So we get out of the car and there's stuff coming off the buildings. There's people coming off the building. We go around and we have a routine. We always try and do everything by routine because my feeling is, when you do everything by routine, then when there's a real crisis, you just follow the routine. I mean, I teach a lot, as you know. People do in a crisis what they do every day. So even in our routine, garden variety MCIs and responses, we always follow the same protocol, take the same equipment. We approach everything in the same way, very standard. So we pulled on the scene, we gave an 84 on the KDT. We got out of the vehicle. I said, okay, we're going to take the command board, we're going to take the vests.

The funny thing about the vests, because we've been carrying these command vests, I've been carrying them for years, since before we merged, and we had them made over after the merge and they said FDNY on them, but we have never deployed them, and when we set up the new car the day before, Mary was like, why are you carrying these vests? Why do you keep carrying them, chief? You'll never need them. I said, well, you know, one day there will be a big job and then we'll really wish we had them, so we're going to keep carrying them. Then here we are the next day and we needed the vests. So it's very strange.

Another strange little vignette I'll tell you is that when we started our 6 Charlie work that week, which was Sunday night, Saturday night, Sunday Tour 1, I said to Mary, I think -- she said do we have any plans for this week? I said I think what I want to do this week is I want to do inspections on all the MERVs and LSUs and I want to prepare a report for Chief Gombo of what their hardware stock levels are because I just somehow have a gut feeling that they're not at a level that we think they are, you know, ready to respond to a big event.

So on Sunday Tour 1 we went to Bellevue and checked Manhattan's MERV and LSU, inspected it, documented it, I'm sorry I'm off by a day, on Monday Tour 1 we went to Manhattan. On Tuesday Tour 1, the morning of this event, we were in Queens. At 4:00 a.m. I had Mike Sheridan out of his office and we got the LSU running and checking all the stuff. In fact, when I saw Sheridan a couple weeks ago, he said, boy, you had a premonition? I said you know what? I have no idea if I had a premonition or not, but just something was nagging me about those MERVs and LSUs.

So anyway, we pull up at the scene, get out of our car, we start to gear up in our safety coats and our helmets and stuff, which is just routine for us, we take our radios. One of the things that was interesting was that, thinking independently, you know, we have our department cell phone and usually we get out at a scene and she takes the cell phone.

Independently, both of us opted to take our own personal cell phones with us. In my mind, I had been thinking, I know the Department cell phone is on AT&T, which isn't always the most reliable, mine is on Verizon, if something big is going on at the Trade Center, you know, I might need the one as an alternative to the other, so I grabbed my private one and she apparently thought also of taking her private one. So we both left the car with three cell phones between us as well as all our standard radio equipment. We went to the trunk, took out the command board and the vest set, and the command board is a big thing, so we're dragging this thing.

Okay. So we get out of the car and we start making our way over to the Fire command post. I have to tell you that I can't for the life of me tell you how I knew where it was. I just don't remember. But we weren't dodging around. We went straight forward to the Fire command post, maybe we just saw it, which was in -- there's a parking garage that I think is right here. I'm depicting just south of the north pedestrian bridge, which would be between Winter Garden entrance and 3 World Financial Center. I think that there's a driveway. I think this is the placement of it, but it's somewhere in here between these buildings. But I think the driveway is here. It's like a divided driveway to an underground garage and that was where Fire command post was set up.

So we walk along here and make our way to the -- you know what? I'm thinking maybe it was here. One of these two places. You can go there and look where it is, okay? But wherever that Fire command post was, that's where we went. It's one of those two places. So we're walking along and along the way Darnowski hooked up with us and said he was coming with us and we picked up another I say stray because there was a lot of this going along. We picked up another off-duty member who we recognized, Mary probably knows who it was, I don't remember, and told him to come with us. So our jolly band of paras went over to the command post.

We got to the command post. Chief Ganci was there. There was no EMS representation at all at the Fire command post. Nobody was there. A Field Com was there. They had set up the table. Now, I knew at this point that Chief Gombo was on the scene and I think I was under the impression he had taken command. So I told Mary -- again, we have a standard approach to this. So I told her all right, set up the command board, let's start documenting who is here and get the information, start setting up command. I knew there was command on the scene and I wasn't trying to take command but rather just get the information to support command. I called on the command frequency to command and I think it was Ross Terranova that answered the radio. I think he was working with Chief Gombo, and I said we're on the scene, we're at the fire command post, what's your pleasure? So he said stand by, and then he came back at some point and said report to the lobby of building 2.

Then in the meantime, during this lag of time, I said a couple words to Chief Ganci. He was being very frustrated about his radio. I remember this. He was like what's that? What channel is this? Am I on the right channel? Goddamn it, the radios aren't working. He was very frustrated about his radio. Chief Ingram, Bob Ingram, was there and I talked to him briefly. Chief Burns was there and the Field Com crew, a bunch of other people, no EMS people. So I said okay, I'm here, you know, I'm reporting and I'm here, whatever you guys need, and they basically didn't have anything to tell me, I guess. So I had Mary set up the command board and start documenting who was on the scene.

So she started doing that. She had the two tagalongs helping her, and I'm looking out at the scene and there was stuff coming down. In fact, when we got out of the car, there was a lot of stuff coming down and I have to say that I was a little bit fearful that we were going to get hit with something coming down, you know, there was debris, there were I guess what I later learned were pieces of people coming down off the building. We got out of the car and Mary was like transfixed. She was just staring at this thing.

One of the things that I've learned over time is sometimes it's better not to look at stuff because sometimes you don't want to see things, you know? You see them, you start thinking about them, and then you can't do your job. But, of course, the downside is sometimes there's stuff that you don't see that you need to see. So anyway, Mary is just transfixed and I remember I had to tell her about five times, you know, we're prepared, let's go. She was just -- I don't know. It was like, come on, Mary, let's go, and so we went, we proceeded on.

So as we're standing at the Fire command post

looking at that stuff, you know, we're looking at what's going on, I told her and the other two guys, I said get in under the mouth of the garage. Everybody else was on the tarmac almost like at the curb -- not at the curb but kind of midway between the garage entrance and the curb where they were operating, and I said get under the overhang of the building so that you'll be shielded from stuff coming down. So they went down there and did that.

So I call command, as I said, and they tell me the chief says report to the lobby of building 2. So I called down to Mary. I was standing at the command area and Mary and the other two were down under this overhang and I called Mary and said come on, get the stuff, we're going over to the lobby of building 2, and I start to walk out to the street and my aide, who certainly earned her living watching my backside that day, looks up and sees stuff coming off this building and me, I mean, I don't know how far I actually would have gone, but I was prepared to follow orders and charge across the street and she was like, chief, you can't go across the street, there's debris coming down, I was like, come on, Mary, let's go. We've got to report to Chief Gombo, and she got upset with me. She was like, listen, you can't go across the fucking street, there's fucking debris coming down, and at that point, I guess, I looked up and I realized that she was right. There was like a shower of stuff coming off this building.

I have to tell you that standing below this building where we were standing looking up at a fire that was -- I don't even know what floor the fire was on, 80 or 50 or 70 or something like that. We didn't appreciate the extent of damage to the building that you would have appreciated if you were standing in Brooklyn or Jersey City looking at it, and in retrospect -- and I think about this day and night, but in retrospect, I think it's possible that the command, personnel in command, if they could have seen what you would see from Brooklyn, might have had a different assessment of the hazards of the building than what you could see from the street because you're basically looking straight up a vertical cliff, two vertical cliffs, and you're seeing the bottom of some smoke and fire and you see debris or whatever, but I don't think you had a full appreciation of the extent of damage, how many floors, the size of damage. Now, they may have had other sources of information for that. I don't know. But this is just my own assessment and I have no other source of information.

So anyway, I heeded my bodyguard and I called command back on the radio and said we're not able to make it across the street at this point. I'm at the Fire command post. There's no EMS representation here. Do you want me to take a liaison role here? He said okay, ten four. So I do that. So I come back to -- I guess a deputy from Division 1 was there and I just said okay, I'm here as your liaison, tell me what you need, and in the meantime my team was working on getting an assessment of what we have on the scene and they started writing up the command board, which is still downstairs written up and everything.

We were there, I don't know, five or ten minutes and then Chief Kowalczyk reports to the command post. As we had left Brooklyn, as we were heading out of Brooklyn, I called him on the phone, he was here in the office, and I told him, I said, Walter, big job, World Trade Center, we need you, come on out. But he was already moving. I think he heard the second alarm transmitted and he was already moving. So he reported to the Fire command post and I briefed him on what I had known, the little information I had at that point, and he said okay. He said go down to Vesey and West and take command there of operations on Vesey and West.

I have to tell you that at this point, up until this point, I'm saying to myself, I know this job. I've been here before. I was there in '93. I was the south tower commander in '93. I've seen this building in peril, I've seen a thousand patients. I mean, there's nothing freaky about it. It's just a big job. Okay. We've done big jobs. I do this. So I think that -- maybe I'm projecting now -- many of us were thinking that kind of thought. So he tells me go down to Vesey and West and take charge there. Okay.

So I leave the Fire command post and I proceed now north on -- I take my little band of warriors and we proceed north on West Street up to the corner of Vesey and West. We're in the southbound lanes of travel walking. We encounter probably about, right around here, we encounter about 40 or 50 EMS providers with stretchers and equipment and all sorts of stuff just standing, basically, not engaged in anything, just standing by waiting for instructions right here in the southbound lanes of traffic just along the median.

I see Jace Pinkus is there with them and I think Howie Hahn, who is a lieutenant, I think it was Howie Hahn he was with, and the scene over here was basically these streets were kind of clear because there was stuff coming down. North of Vesey on West Street were lines of ambulances and apparatus parked here or staged here or trying to get through here or stuff like that and there were all these members on the street, and they weren't treating patients. There were no patients apparent at that point in time. So I called all the officers together, which I think it was Pinkus and Hahn and I'm not sure of what other officers there were. It was just sort of a motley crew. There were EMS guys and voluntary guys and Hatzolah guys and numerous other people that looked like they were part of an ambulance team.

I called them together and I told them that I was taking command of Vesey and West and that I wanted to set up a triage and treatment area, and I told them to set it up in front of, that is to say, on the east side of 3 World Financial Center, on the street there. There's a pretty large, open kind of climate over there. I told them I wanted them to set up over there. I told them I wanted them to clear the street and I said be aware that there was debris coming down from the buildings, so hug the building as close as you can, 3 World Financial Center. I told Captain Pinkus to make sure he had accountability of the people who were in this area, all of these people are now his, so you've got Hahn and whatever other officer might have been there. I said go over there and establish accountability and prepare to set up to treat patients.

My strategy at that point was that we would be getting patients probably coming out of 1 World Trade Center trying to evacuate and the injured there, we would handle them there. At this point I was not thinking of triage and treatment in the lobby of 1 World Trade Center. I didn't feel that it was safe to be operating on West Street, you know, on the street or close to the front of the building, so I wouldn't have committed anybody at that point. Remember I had already made the decision not to go first to 2, so we weren't going to go across to 1. So I pull them up against the building.

Charlie Wells comes in and he wasn't really reporting to me. He was kind of moving past me, I guess. I think he had already some other marching order. But he had came in from the north going south and he stopped at my area. I told him -- maybe we talked for just a minute and I sort of exchanged information with him and said do you have a mission? He said he was reporting to the command post or something like that and he continued on. Commissioner Von Essen came by that way and I saw him and I talked to him just for a second and he went on to the command post.

Then I called Pinkus on the radio and said -- no, wait. Before this I think Chief Villani came down and -- let me back up. Wells came down and said he's here with a number of ambulances, he's got a bunch of ambulances staged north of Vesey Street on West. So I told him, okay, have the crews report here. We're setting up triage and treatment. Then he went on to the command post.

Then the next person I saw was Villani. Chief Villani reported to me and I said do you have an assignment? He said no. I said okay. I said would you do me a favor? Recon to see if we can stage on Vesey Street off of West heading west and if there's a way to get out so that we can cycle our rigs out of there without having to recommit to West Street because West Street was getting blocked quicker. So he went to recon and ultimately he got back to me and said yes, we can go out North End Avenue, there are already some rigs up there, and he was going to set up that staging for me on Vesey to North End and that would have been the egress route for those rigs so you'd be clear of West Street debris.

Along the same time frame, I called Pinkus on the radio and I tell him I don't like the looks of things coming off the building. I said recon the lobby of 3 World Financial Center, see if we can set up triage and treatment in the lobby there for a casualty collection point. So Pinkus reports back to me that, yes, we're able to do that. I tell him okay, get everybody inside the building under cover, everybody in the lobby, let me know when they're starting to establish accountability for the people. So he goes ahead and does that.

So now basically I'm on this corner and my recollection is that the street was kind of -- it wasn't like hugely packed with people. It was kind of empty, some cops and some firemen and us, and a cop comes over wearing heavy tactical gear and starts shouting at us, this is tactical area, clear the area.

What I found out days later was that the sergeant on 6 Truck, his name is Sullivan, I think, he was on TV, had at some point made a determination that this was a terrorist attack and began to think what if there's ground troops also, I don't know, if this is supported by some kind of a ground attack and here are all these cops in heavy vests clearing the streets.

So anyway, he starts shouting at us this is a tactical area, clear the area, and not just at us but everyone that was there. So we had actually moved onto Vesey. We were really right at the corner of Vesey and West. Pinkus calls me back and tells me everybody is under cover, they have no patients, all the people are accounted for, there's plenty of space in the lobby, they're back from the windows. So I felt comfortable with that. So at that point I have accountability for what's going on. They have no patient contact. I'm really starting to wonder where the patients are.

We're standing on the corner and I'm standing here and Mary is here, the MERV is here, there was a line of ambulances here that are staged pointing west and we're about a car length apart from each other and I was looking up Vesey Street and she was looking at the building watching people coming out of the building, and all of a sudden I hear her say, oh, my God, chief, it's coming down. I turn and I look up and the building was coming down, and all you saw was this huge cloud. I mean, I didn't see the building coming down. I just saw a cloud of (inaudible) coming down, just a big black cloud. So I was like, let's go. I knew the people in my area were clear, but we were just near enough. So I'm like, let's go, and she was just transfixed. She's like, oh, my God. I'm like, Mary, let's go.

So we start running west on Vesey Street and she outdistances me, and as we were running, I saw -- remember I told you this was a beautiful day and it's like suddenly dark, like a thunderstorm brews, you know, suddenly it's like big, gray clouds, and it's almost a feeling that something is overtaking me is I guess the way I would describe it. Mary runs past me, but I guess we're kind of running together, and all of a sudden I look up and I see an ambulance in front of me, back doors open, no stretcher, kind of saying hop in here. So I did. And I'm calling to Mary, come on, thinking there's some shelter there. She had already come around the side of the ambulance, so she was already past me when she heard me. She just decided she was going to keep on going. But now I'm committed to the ambulance.

So I jump in, slammed the doors. It seemed reasonable at the time. I have no idea actually how I got from the street into the ambulance because obviously I made it inside, but my legs were hurting for two days after or three days. So I must have projected myself somehow. I don't know.

So now I'm in the ambulance and I hear stuff, you know, debris hitting the roof and stuff coming down on the truck and you look out the window and there's just swirling clouds of gray and it's getting darker. I'm like this is pretty cool, I've got a little shelter here, and then I realize there's stuff starting to come into the truck. So I'm like why? I closed the door. This is kind of just going through my mind. I was very calm about this whole thing. So I look up in the cab, and it was a voluntary ambulance and I know it was because you could walk through into the cab, which is probably a good thing. So I look in the cab and I see that both windows were rolled down, power windows. Hey, the truck is running. So I powered both windows up and that stopped it somewhat, but it was coming in through the vents and I realized the AC was on. So I shut the AC off. So now the windows are up, the AC is off, doors closed, and it was better. But I'm coughing already, you know, there's stuff coming up. So I'm like this is not good.

A good question might be why didn't I think to just drive the ambulance away? I never thought of it. But what I did think of was, hey, I'm in an ambulance. If there's oxygen, I'll put a mask on, then I'll be able to breathe no matter what comes around the ambulance. So I got an oxygen mask out, I started looking for the valve to turn on the oxygen, and I'm looking for something thinking, if something comes crashing through the roof, I know it's only a sheet of aluminum, maybe this wasn't such a bright place to be after all, I'm looking for a back board or something to get under, but there was nothing in there.

I look out the window and I'm thinking should I try and make a run for it or run further? But there's all this stuff going on outside like a nuclear snowstorm. It was unbelievable. Unbelievable. Stuff like da-da-da-da-da pounding on the roof of the truck. So I just kind of scrunched up on the floor with my oxygen mask under that arch between the cab and the walk-through thinking that might be the strongest roof point, and I just kind of scrunched up there and I had protective gear on and I said, you know, I hope I'm able to get out of this. I remember it was really quiet. There was no screaming on the radio. There was really nothing going on on the radios. It was just -- it was quiet.

So after some period of time, I don't know, minutes, seconds, I have no idea, after some period of time it sort of lightened up outside. So I said, hmmm, it looks like I can get out. So I got out of the truck. There was a lot of stuff floating around, but I could see and get out. So my next thought was -- well, you know, before I even got out of the truck I was thinking of Mary and she was contacting me, she was calling me on the radio, and I called her. I said I'm okay. Are you okay? She said, yeah, I'm okay. I said where are you? She tells me she's up the block. I said okay, good. I said I'm going to regroup, try and get our treatment area back up, if it isn't up, in the lobby of 3. So then she tells me or we discover that one of the buildings we think had collapsed. You really couldn't tell because there was just clouds and smoke, but it was like it wasn't there. I can't begin to tell you how weird this thing was and what a strange feeling this was.

So I go into 3 and I find Pinkus. I think I talked to him on the radio first and then I find him and he tells me everybody is okay, we're all accounted for, no problem with that, and I'm saying, my God, if I hadn't taken these guys off the street, they would have all been under this thing. That still freaks me out. That still freaks me out. It would have been an awful lot of guys. So thank God they're all okay.

Q. Good command decision.

A. Lucky command decision.

In fact, he did tell me, when I saw Jace a couple weeks afterwards, he told me that -- I can't remember. I think he told me Quinn had been with our group at one point and then afterwards wasn't there anymore. Quinn's wife was the one who worked in Tower 1, I think? Maybe I'm confused. But he had apparently left the group to go strike out after -- to try to find his wife at some point, and that was the one member that we didn't have accountability for after.

So anyway, the lobby of 3 World Financial Center kind of wraps around the building here. So originally they were operating here. Now everything is full of -- there's windows broken and there's debris on the east side. The structure seemed like it was stable. So we decide to pull everything over to the west side of the lobby around the corner.

The strangest thing, because they must have been having been some kind of reception in the lobby of this building, they had tables lined up with bottled water. Go figure. There were cases of bottled water, and it was just what we needed was bottled water and here they are, cases of bottled water. So people were coming in and there was plenty of bottled water to wash your eyes or get them a drink and people are coughing and choking.

So I tell Pinkus get his people and start moving them to the west side of that lobby. Am I talking too much?

Q. No. You're doing great.

A. The next thing I remember is Mark Stone comes in completely covered with debris, completely freaked out, coughing. He's like, he said, Kowalczyk's trapped under there. I said what do you mean? He said Kowalczyk was with me, he said, and when the thing came down, we started running and I looked back and he was gone. He's trapped under there. I was like, you know, on the one hand I was like I really don't need you to tell me this right now. On the other hand, it's like, okay, so here we are at the doors to hell and you're going to tell me Kowalczyk is trapped there. What are we going to do about it? So he was like, let me take a couple of guys and we'll go back and dig him out. I said listen. If he's trapped under here, you're not going to dig him out with a couple guys. We need to get to the command post and get a team and go after him. I said are you okay? because he was coughing, and he was like I'm okay, I'm okay. I said okay. I said can you make your way to the command post?

I have to tell you that I'm not sure what happened or where the command post was at this point. I didn't know -- see, this situation was like war in that, you know, you've heard the expression the five of war? Too much stuff happened sometimes too quickly for you to sort it all out and make logical decisions based on what's real, so you just sort of -- you don't have all the information. You try and make the best decisions with the information that you have, which is flawed, and you kind of go from there because you have no alternative. You don't have enough information and the information that you do have, including stuff that your own senses bring you, you can't process it.

So my thinking is the command post is still where we left it. I don't really know at this moment, this is like two minutes post-collapse or five minutes post-collapse, I don't know what's collapsed. In fact, I mean, it was clear that something made a big mess, but I don't know what it is or how bad it is. I was not able to get around to recon it. My first priority was to make sure my men were okay, my people were okay, which they were. My second priority, as I understood it, was to carry out my mission, which was to have a casualty collection point there, and so we were doing that.

So when Mark presents with the idea that Chief Kowalczyk is lost, my direction to him was to go to the Fire command post, take another man with him, go to the Fire command post and get help for Chief Kowalczyk, lead them to where he is. So I gave him that direction. Fortunately, as we later found out, Chief Kowalczyk wasn't trapped at all. But, again, sometimes you don't have all the information.

So I had Pinkus trying to get things organized and something is nagging at me. It's clearing up outside, it's clearing a little bit, you know, you start to see a little sun. I talked to Mary. She was up on the corner helping them with some transports and some patients, some resources. Something tells me I want to find another exit out of this building.

So someone was with me. I can't remember who it is at the moment. Someone was with me. I said let's go recon another way out of this building. Let's see if we can get out toward the water in case we have to retreat from where we are. So we go out through the back warrens or through the back lobby of 3 World Financial Center and we find like an exit corridor that leads us to an exit door which actually takes us out, I guess, right onto this promenade here. So that's pretty swift. The time sequence is just kind of jumbled. I'm not sure how -- the sequence that you gave me, what time did the south tower collapse?

9:55. Okay. And the north tower collapsed at 10:20.

Q. 10:20.

A. Yes. So figure 9:55 that collapses, figure at 10:05, 10:10, something like that, we're in the lobby, we're looking for this exit pathway. In fact, my strong sense is that it was Stone with me again, like maybe he had reported to the command post, come back, maybe we had found Kowalczyk by that point, something like that. I think Stone was back with me again, and I remember Chief Carrasquillo came through here and we gave him, because he was coughing and choking, we gave him some water. We were starting to get a few patients, not a lot. It wasn't like 100 patients.

There was a lot of trouble getting through to the command post on the radio. Previously there had been a couple of frequencies in use. When we got on the scene, we were on command. Then we were trying to use tact 2. I was using tact 2. When I set up Vesey and West, I had Pinkus go to tact 2. We were using tact 2 to communicate so it would be clear, and we do that, Mary and I do that all the time, so we know how that works. We routinely at events do that. So I was on tact 2 with Pinkus and she was on Citywide command talking to the MERV.

At some point a decision was made, actually before I left the command post, to start switching this whole incident onto Manhattan south so it would have its own frequency and that was underway, and that was a great decision. In fact, that should be standardized. We should just do that. That was a great decision because it gives us a complete clear from everything frequency to use. But anyway, that was underway.

So here I am -- I know I'm jumping around a little bit, but I'm just trying to give you the pieces.

Q. You're doing great.

A. So I come out and I see there is this promenade over here, you know, it looks so beautiful down by the water, it's sunny and bright and clear, and I see some people over there and I see the ambulances over here and the street is just covered with stuff, and something tells me -- I call Pinkus on the radio and I said listen, get everybody together and get all the equipment, I said, and proceed -- I said I'm going to send someone back to show you the back way out. Use the back way out, get everybody out here, we're going to relocate on North End Avenue, the whole triage area.

Q. That would be North End and Vesey?

A. North End and Vesey. We're going to move to North End and Vesey. And you know, I can't tell you why I gave that order other than maybe it didn't feel safe being in that building. I don't know. I can't tell you why I gave that order. Something made me do that. So he acknowledges the order and I move down to North End and Vesey.

Here's the corner of North End and Vesey, and right here on the northeast corner I encounter Chief Gombo was there, Basile, Pascale, Kowalczyk, my aide, their aides, a bunch of people, and we were just trying to get a handle on whatever it was the hell happened because we're not sure. Pinkus is pulling these people out of here. They pull out and we take over the -- we move the treatment area into the lobby...

Q. ... interview with Chief Goldfarb.

A. So we're on the corner. We moved the treatment area into the Embassy Suites Hotel.

Q. Do you want to take a break or go on?

A. You know, I've told this story 10,000 times, but to tell it with the level of detail that you want, you have to walk through it, and when you walk through it, sometimes you remember things you'd rather not remember. But I'll deal with it.

Q. If you need a break, just let me know.

A. Thank you.

So what was interesting about the Embassy Suites is that, when you come in, there's a huge atrium area here, high, very high, lofty ceiling with glass, plexi, whatever. So we go in there and then off to the North End of that lobby is a covered area. I remember seeing a covered area because the building was above. So we go in there and we have to be sure that we're clear of that atrium. So the team moves in there and they start setting up a treatment area in there, and we're out on the street. Now we're getting patients. Patients are coming in to us.

Suddenly, my hero, my heroine, and I say that just out of total respect for her, says chief, the other building is coming down. I hear it. I'm like, Mary, try to stay calm. The other building is not coming down. Again, in retrospect, I mean, it's funny, you know, you just weren't processing this. Who could absolutely process the idea that a tower of the World Trade Center has collapsed and when you look you don't see it? Who could process that?

I'll tell you that to this minute I have no idea, no concept whatsoever as to what the injury count or the impact on us, operationally, organizationally, peoplewise, was of just that discrete event of the one tower coming down. I know the total picture. I mean, I don't know if you have any idea what that is, but I have no idea.

Q. No, I don't.

A. But I have no idea. I don't know who was trapped, I don't know who was lost. I mean, we lost eight EMS people. I don't know if they died in the first tower, the second tower or in the middle. I have no idea. I don't know if anybody knows that.

Q. I don't believe that's known.

A. But anyway, she's like no, chief, I hear it, and she said you know I have very keen hearing. And she does. She said you know I have very keen hearing. She said that building is coming down. So we -- and we're standing with a bunch chiefs -- we say all right, you know what? Let's just move into cover. So we clear everybody off the street, we get everybody in under the sheltered area of this hotel inside, and you can't believe it. The second tower comes down. This was just a day of such mind-boggling stuff.

So the second tower comes down. Huge clouds, huge -- the same thing. It's like, hey, I've been here already, you know? Just horrible. The strangest thing is I don't remember noise associated with it. You would think that would be a very noisy kind of thing, and I just remember quiet. I don't know if like your ears disconnect or something? I don't know. I don't remember ground shaking, noise, any of that stuff, and I was right there. Much too close.

So this comes down and now we have a much larger area of debris outside and the cloud and stuff everywhere, and we're in the lobby and we're treating patients. I'm not treating patients, but the teams are in the lobby treating patient and now we're getting more patients. We had moved around a table in the lobby, the chiefs, to try and plan a little strategy here and it was just too chaotic, so we decided we're going to pull back. We go into like a back corridor here at this Embassy Suites Hotel, and it's Gombo, Terranova, myself, Kowalczyk, Basile, Pascale, and we're just trying to have a little bit of a strategy session, and I think all of us are like just kind of blown away by what was going on.

But we had a very rational brainstorming session where we reassessed, number one, we were under attack. Number two, we've probably taken a huge impact on this. Number three, we're not winning. There's no success in our staying here. We don't know what's going to collapse next, blow up next, get bombarded next, the next thing coming, whatever. We don't know if we got nuked. We just didn't know what was going on. So we acknowledged that we were shy a lot of information and we decided to take three strategic decisions, all of which I think are important.

Number one was we knew that there were other resources on the scene and okay and working because we could hear some of it on the radio, but we weren't able to get through. We were having a lot of radio trouble. We couldn't get through on the cell phones. We were just having a lot of trouble getting through. So we knew there were players on the scene doing stuff on the scene. We decided that our best immediate strategy was to pull back clear of the scene, try and regroup, not bring more resources into the scene because we didn't even know how big the scene was at this point. We didn't have a definition of where the scene began and ended.

So we decided to set up two mobilization points, one north and one south, direct any further response into those points, and try and pull back whatever forces we could to those points so we could regroup them, and basically we decided to leave the scene in the hands of the people who were there while we tried to get a little better picture. We were also mindful of the fact that we didn't know what else was going on in the city, we didn't know what else might get hit in the city, another target or something. We knew we were under attack of some kind by somebody, but we didn't know the status of any of our operating forces. We didn't know the status, we had no picture. We just -- again, no information.

So we decided to activate these two mobilization points. We chose Chelsea Piers on 23rd and West, which was my choice because I knew it was a big spot, big open space, that there's plenty of room in there to set up casualty collection, staging, really anything you want, it's huge and sort of right there. It's a little further away maybe than you would like it, but then again, that's not necessarily a bad thing, it wasn't far. The second place we chose was the ferry terminal, the Staten Island ferry terminal on the Brooklyn side -- no. The Staten Island ferry terminal on the a Manhattan side.

So we tried to get through. There were a couple times I was able to break through to Citywide dispatcher, and we tried to get that information to him that we were setting up those two points. We tried to see if there was an unaffiliated chief or someone who hadn't been committed to this thing already that we could send to each of those places to set those up. I don't think we were successful in doing that.

So Walter Kowalczyk and Frank Pascale went north to Chelsea Piers. I'm not sure who we sent to the ferry terminal. I don't think we were able to send anybody from there to the ferry terminal. I can't remember at the moment what the task was Pete Carrasquillo and Chief Gombo and myself were going to go to -- we decided we had to go to -- it was clear that we had to get a citywide command center up because we had a citywide problem. It was also clear that 7 World Trade Center, which was the OEM command post, was not going to be accessible.

So Chief Gombo suggested Police Plaza is the place to go, and he was actually on target, a totally right suggestion. So we decided that Gombo and myself would go to Police Plaza to set up the big picture and Kowalczyk and Pascale would go to Chelsea Piers and work the scene picture and the evacuation piece of it and we would try and get someone over to the ferry terminal, and that was our strategy.

So we broke up from that. I think Basile might have just stayed there on the scene working the scene. I can't remember what it was that he was supposed to do. So we broke from that and -- I'm sorry. I said Basile but I think I mean Pasquale.

Q. I believe Basile went over to the ferry terminal?

A. All right. So we leave there. As we're coming out of our little brainstorming session, the lobby is now full of patients, lots of patients, some of them our own people, our people helping other people, a couple of ESU cops came running into the lobby and they start shouting everybody out, we've got to evacuate the building, we've got a major gas leak in the building, everybody out of the building right now, right now, everybody go. And you're like what else? Are we going to get like frogs also? What else is going to happen here? So we start helping get people out of the lobby and, you know, it starts to get spooky, like you think, gee, is this building going to blow up as I'm trying to leave it or something? It became very strange.

We get out to the street. I can't find Mary. I'm calling on the radio. She's not answering. She was two blocks up helping another ambulance. But we finally hook up. So Gombo and Terranova and myself, when we catch up with Mary, start proceeding north on North End Avenue to get out of there. Like how are we going to get to Police Plaza? Well, we're going to walk. There's no other way to get there. This stretch here, this North End Avenue, this is like a wasteland. I mean, not normally, but it was like a wasteland. Everything was covered, vehicles skewed every which way, injured people, people helping other people, rigs that won't start, and I felt like a refugee fleeing some war-torn country.

As I thought about it later, it was the first time in my life that I ever felt that an incident beat us. You know, we go into an incident to control it. That's what we do. If you're a control freak, that works for you even better. You go into a scene, you take command, you assess whatever the problem is and you manage the incident. That's what we train, that's what we do, and here we are going into an incident that is beating the shit out of us and has actually pushed us back and chased us away and we're leaving behind our wounded, we were leaving behind who knows what, we're leaving equipment, we're abandoning equipment. We took all the people that were with us, but we were abandoning the equipment, some of the equipment, and we were just trudging out through the dust like just a defeated army. That's how I felt. It just felt terrible. It just felt terrible.

We get up to like Murray Street and we look back and where there used to be those two beautiful towers -- and I'm a New York born my whole life. I mean, I watched those things go up. I always lived with those there, you know? Where there used to be those two beautiful tours, and all you see is the sunshine and a huge cloud, a huge cloud, and I said to Mary, turn and look at that because you'll never want to forget that. She just looks at me with these eyes and she was (inaudible). I will never forget that.

She told me later how she was watching those people falling out the building, which makes me think, I read this thing in the Times a few days later about a class that was evacuating from one of the schools and how one of the students turned to a teacher and said look, teacher, the buildings are on fire.

So we proceed up North End Avenue, met up with some crews with some patients and we're just all kind of walking in this direction, and we turn back and there's huge clouds of smoke and dust and everything and we had stuff, our masks on, I popped my hood out, covered my face. We had surgical masks, stuff like that, just to keep all of the stuff out. It was so surreal.

We go up I guess to Chambers. We walk up to Chambers Street and then over Chambers by the school and then we start walking north on West Street and we still have -- Mary still has these two guys in tow that have been with us all along, Darnowski, and Darnowski is convinced that his wife is dead. In fact, at one point Darnowski and Mary were standing there watching these people falling out the building and a woman jumps and whatever she was wearing, maybe all white, and he turns to Mary and just like blank and said my wife is dressed in those clothes today. So Darnowski is just in shock. He's just catatonic. He was just tagging along with us, he and this other guy. When we get to West Street, I tell Mary we've got to leave Darnowski with somebody else because we have another mission, find somebody that will take care of him and we need to move on.

Some of this decision making really feels like combat decision making, and I don't have war fighting experience, but a lot of these were like decisions you make in combat, you know, cut off the foot to save the life, stuff like that, leave this behind, abandon equipment. It was just stuff that we don't do and train for. It's just unusual decision making.

Our plan is we're going to go north on West Street to like North Murray -- is it North Murray Street? I think it was North Street and try and work our way around and get to Police Plaza. So we're walking and all of a sudden I notice Mary is not beside me and I look and she's like 40 steps back and she's like hang on, chief, and somehow, I don't know where she conjures this stuff up, but a good aide does this kind of thing and she is absolutely the best. But she find a cop an a golf cart in the midst of all this insanity and tells the cop you need to take the chiefs to Police Plaza right now, and this cop just sort of says okay and all of a sudden pulls up next to us, there's Mary with a golf cart saying everybody pile on.

So Gombo and Terranova and myself, Mary, got onto this golf cart and this cop takes off, and there we are driving a golf cart with dust swirling around us and everybody just kind of -- there was not enough seats for all of these people, so everybody was just kind of holding on for dear life and this guy just drives us through the streets. I will never forget.

Everything was covered with this schmutz, ash, dust, and everybody is in shock, just all of the people, everybody was just freaking aghast. I swear to God, this was the most unbelievable experience. I can tell you what time that was. This was right around 11:15. So when did that second tower come down? 10:30 the second tower came down? So the time fits very nicely.

So right around 11:15 we finally pull up at Police Plaza, give or take, I'd say give or take 15 minutes, we pull up at Police Plaza, and as we -- the guy drives us right to the front door and with cops all over apparently there were M-16s out, I mean, MP-5s. They were ready for war over there. We just pulled right to the door, get off, brush our stuff off, you know, and walk in. As we get off the golf cart, Jerry Gombo said something that I will remember forever because it showed really true leadership on his part. He turned to us all and said, okay, first order of business, find phones and call your families and let them know you're okay, and that was just -- you know, Jerry spends a lot of time inside and I think he did a good job under fire. So I think he earned some respect on the part of some people.

Q. It says a lot about the man.

A. So we go upstairs trailing our cloud of dust like Linus in the Snoopy cartoon and we get there and Police Plaza is busy and -- well, how far do you want to take the story?

Q. Roughly noon, somewhere around then.

A. We walk in. We were the first Fire or EMS representation there. We were probably among the first people to actually come in from the scene covered with dust and everybody was looking at us like, oh, my God. They were watching on monitors and stuff. It used to be the old OEM command center. That's now the police operations command center.

So we report in, tell them we're here, they make some space for us, then we all get to the phones and call significant people, let them know at least we're alive, and then we set about big picture coordination, and what we did for the next eight hours was large-scale disaster stuff. A lot of it centered around ordering federal resources, USAR teams, EMAT teams, planning how we were going to deploy them. We planned to set out three casualty collection points. All the strategy came from us when we were in that command center. We planned to set up three casualty collection points one at Javitz Center, one in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, one in the Staten Island ferry terminal, at the Yankee Stadium, at the new Staten Island Yankee Stadium, and we pulled down some extra resources for the casualty collection points, not using EMS assets because we didn't have any.

We had a tremendous problem communicating. The phones there weren't working. They were intermittent. The cells weren't working. The radios weren't working. Very, very hard communicating out from there. There were some resources that were up, but we didn't know about them, like Verizon phones and stuff like that, not Verizon, Nextel phones, but we didn't have a Nextel phone. So we just really had a lot of challenge in terms of getting that up and running, but here you have a huge disaster, an improvised command center and a lot of infrastructure stuff like phone lines and switching stations damaged. It was probably surprising that we could accomplish what we did.

We set up a separate emergency operational center for ESFA, Emergency Support Function Aid, which is from the federal response plan, health and medical assets, I'm pretty well versed in all this stuff and I've been doing this kind of planning, you know me,

I've been doing this kind of planning for 20 years, so I knew what needed to be done. Bill Connelly was there, the State Health Department's regional disaster planning guy, and I knew him personally, and when he showed up, I told him exactly what I wanted him to do. We got space from PD and set up the ESFA operations center. We briefed them on the information that we had and on what we anticipated, which at that point, early in the day, was thousands of patients, and we made out a concept of operations for them and told him what kind of resources we were looking for, helped them get organized. We got reps in from Health and Hospitals, Greater New York Hospital Association, Nassau, Suffolk Hospital Council, Nassau Health Department, City Health Department. We tried to get Nassau Health Department. I don't know if they came. City Health Department, State Health Department, later on in the day a FEMA rep joined us and started planning for deploying EMAT teams.

So we got all of this up and running. We coordinated a zillion bizarre requests, and I have a log that goes from 1130 until when we stopped writing about 1900, just things that were going on. I see my first entry at 1130. New Jersey had sent Bob Resitar from the University Hospital, he's one of their assistant directors over at University Hospital System, they had sent him, in fact, they were there before us, and Frank Goodstein from the New Jersey mutual aid, and they were there before us. So they greeted us and I have a log entry at 1130 and they tell me they had 4,000 patients between Ellis Island and the Hoboken PATH station and various shore points on New Jersey that all these people were coming over by boat and landing.

So here we are coordinating mutual aid and we told them don't send us any mutual aid from Jersey. You guys work your thousands of patients and we'll get the mutual aid elsewhere because obviously you're stretched. I'm not sure what they ultimately ended up with. I think that number crunched to like 2,000 or 1,500. But it's still huge numbers.

The SEMA rep was there. The State Department of Health rep was there. We told the SEMA rep we wanted to activate the regional mutual aid plan, and we ordered five task forces of ten ambulances and an officer at each point from the east, Nassau and Suffolk, and one from the north, Westchester and points north, and we had a plan for this. I mean, I don't know how many people really knew that this plan existed, but I knew the plan existed because I was working on the task force. Gombo didn't know it existed.

So we ordered that would have been 100 ambulances, 50 into a staging area on Randalls Island, 50 to a staging area at Shea Stadium. Again, we weren't sure what we were doing with them. We didn't want to commit anything more to the city until I had a sense of what was going on and you really couldn't get any good (inaudible) at the scene. We didn't really know what was going on there. So we figured, okay, let's order 100 trucks, at least that will give us a jump and we'll see what we need to do from there. So we were able to communicate to the point where we had highway patrol and an EMS supervisor at each of those sites waiting to catch this mobilization as it came in. Then we started fielding buffers and supplies, shipments of stuff coming in. So my decision was to send all that stuff to Randalls Island where I figured it could at least be secured, checked and secured with some accountability before it gets deployed someplace. We spent basically the next eight hours running the command center, fielding decisions. At the outset we were doing the Fire side of it, too, because we were the only reps there, and then a couple of chiefs arrived in a little bit of time. Tom Galvin got there and Ed Kilduff from the Fire end of it.

What's funny is that a few months ago Tom Galvin and I were in a course together on weapons of mass destruction, incident management, and during one of the breaks in the course he and I were having a conversation about the World Trade Center bombing because in the course, among the course material was the FEMA U.S. Fire Administration report on the first World Trade Center bombing, which included a section written by Steve Kerr and myself. So we were talking about that in class, that I had written that.

So Galvin and I were talking about it and now it's after the merger and how would we respond, and I told him that, for reasons I won't go into now, that the response would be very different if we had to relive this thing, different not necessarily in a positive way. So here we are four weeks later and we were actually living it. It was just sort of one of those strange ironies in the world, and the Fire guys, I mean, there were Fire deputy chiefs, but they weren't emergency management experts, they weren't prepared to really look at the big picture emergency management issues, so we were helping with that as well.

We stayed there and -- mind you, we had been out since 10:00 o'clock the night before. So we were with that until about -- my log logs off -- I mean, you can see how may handwriting deteriorates. I guess I was getting tired. My log logs off at 1900, and we went to try and find a place to sleep. I remember that. So we couldn't find a place to sleep. We ended up taking some blankets and laying out on -- there was a little strip of grass like two feet wide alongside the stairs that went up to St. Andrew's Plaza. So we laid these blankets out and then we just laid down. We didn't know if we were going to go to sleep. Every noise I would just like jump. It was so weird. It was so weird.

So after about an hour of tossing and turning, Jerry and Ross come by and they said that we were relieved upstairs by Captain Connelly and that we could go. They said they were going back to the scene. So we said, oh, okay. So we went upstairs to get our personal equipment and come back down. So we set off for the scene Mary, myself, this guy Bob Resitar from University Hospital, and along the way we pick up nine or ten off-duty members who were on their way in to the scene to be of help.

So we take this little procession and march up to Chambers and West and do what we can at the command post at the back of the Suburban, and Chief McCracken and Chief Kowalczyk and a bunch of other people were trying to get a handle on things and we ended up -- we tried to sort out the leadership manpower so that some people could go home and be fresh in the morning. So then we decided, Kowalczyk and myself decided we would stay the overnight shift. So at 6:00 a.m., I think, while some people went back and got some sleep so that we could get a fresh relief in in the morning and then start another 12-hour cycle. So we stayed there.

During the course of the night we got in two field communications trucks from New Jersey, our mutual aid brought them in and set them up, so we had like a real working command center because we don't have any assets like that for EMS operations. So we got those trucks from Jersey and we put the full ICS structure into place with a planning section, logistics section and a coroner operations section, a finance administration section that was contemplating how we were going to structure that. So we developed an incident action plan for the morning, which I actually have a copy of here somewhere. (inaudible) an incident action plan so that they could get started in the morning.

Do you want me go on?

Q. Just go on until you feel you don't want to go any further.

A. I guess the story is close to the end of this day.

Q. Okay.

A. So we work through until like -- I'll just keep going. So we work until about 6:00 in the morning. This is now Wednesday morning. We started relieving. So now we get relieved at 6:00 or at 7:00, we get something to eat, and we decide we're going to go find our car. So we get a Gator. Whoever ordered the Gators, that was just an absolutely wonderful decision. I mean, those were so needed there and it was just the perfect tool for this job and still is to this minute. So we catch a ride on a Gator and we ride over to south of where we had parked the car, as close as we could come, and then we continued on foot through this just unbelievable devastation, and when you go on foot, you couldn't even recognize the street to know which block face it was. I was like a block north of where we were and Mary was like, no, chief, we weren't that far north, and I'm like, yeah, I think we were. But we weren't. She was right.

So we're finally just kind of peering around the rubble pile and we see the car, and the only way we recognized it was that it looked like it had some molten light bar on the top, not that it was recognizable as a light bar, just a little heap of molten something that maybe, you know, you could say that once was a light bar. We look inside and actually the car is not crushed or anything, it's just burnt. The only thing that was left in that car that was recognizable at all was the metal piece of a stethoscope and some melted chips from my Palm Pilot and that was it.

We lost, aside from the vehicle, which had 93 miles on it when we pulled up at the Trade Center, we lost the vehicle, we lost thousands and thousands of dollars worth of Department equipment. Mary lost her pocketbook, all her personal effects and her license and ID and badge and everything a person carries in their pocketbook. Of course, when you work like we work, your car is like your locker and everything is in it, and we certainly had everything in that car and it was all gone. Laptop computer, my Palm Pilot, everything, personal clothes, everything. So we brushed ourselves off. Our ride had left us. It was like what else is going to happen?

So we walk over to the Staten Island ferry terminal figuring we'd catch a ride from there, and we catch a ride from there on a supply truck that was dropping off supplies. He gives us a ride to Maspeth, and I was hoping to get back our old car, the '95 car, which we had just turned in the day before to get the new car, but they had already given that out to someone else. So they give us an old Suburban, which was fine. So now it's like 10:30 in the morning on Wednesday. Drive home. We were due back there on Thursday morning. We were the 6:00 a.m. relief on Thursday morning.

So you'd think you would be able to go to sleep after this, right? A long long time before sleep. I guess that's the end of the story.

Q. Is there anything else you'd like to add?

A. I think a lot of people did an incredible job that day and in the days since. I think that this isn't over. I think that the people that are looking at this event as, you know, horrible tragedy, World Trade Center, kind of like it was an earthquake or a hurricane or something and now we're recovering and we're having concerts and we're burying our dead and we're trying to pick up the pieces, number one, are forgetting that we're at war, and I think that this was only act one, and I think that we're dealing with a very evil adversary who has a completely different value set than ours. I think there will be more acts of war like this. I hope they're not in my town. But I think that, if we fail to prepare for them, we're foolish and naive, and I think that we've got a lot of work in front of us.

I think there's a tremendous amount of resources in this organization to be applied to that stuff if it's used appropriately. I think there are a lot of good lessons to be learned from this that we should try and learn. I think we did a lot of things right and I think there were a lot of other things that we could do better or opportunities for improvement, as they say. I think we'd better fasten our seat belts because I don't think this is over. No thinking person could think that this is over.

The other thing is that we keep talking about the losses on this job from an EMS standpoint and we say there were two, Carlos Lillo and Ricardo Quinn. There were six other EMS professionals that died in this incident on our mission, and it's not their fault or anybody else's fault how we let this EMS system, it would be a hodgepodge of voluntary hospitals and voluntary ambulances and commercial ambulances. But you know what? They all came in to do our mission and I think that they need to be recognized as such and I think it's a disgrace to us that we're not counting the names of these six dead people who were just as heroic and just as dead as Quinn and Lillo on the same mission. I think that's a real shame. That really bothers me. It really bothers me. End of report.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT IMMACULADA GATTAS

Interview Date: October 17, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

I. GATTAS

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today is October 17, 2001. The time is 1229 hours. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck. I work for the New York City Fire Department on the World Trade Center Task Force. I'm at Division 6 to conduct an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank and assignment?

A. EMT-D Immaculada Gattas, shield number 1443.

Q. Your assigned --

A. Assigned to Division 6.

Q. Today we would just like you to recount the events to the best of your ability on September 11, 2001.

A. Okay. That day started with a beautiful day and we were just talking about that, how beautiful, sunny and warm it was, until someone from next door from the Division came running toward us, told us to turn on the TV. We turned on the TV and we started watching the news, saying that an airplane had just crashed against one of the World Trade Center towers. We were like oh, my god, what a horrific accident and we were just watching on and off until we found out there was another one on its way and it crashed against the second -- it crashed against the second tower.

That's when the Chief, Chief Pascale, told us to stand by, because we couldn't just rush into the scene. We needed to be requested first. So then she was called in, she told us to get our gear and radios and stuff and just get ready and go on to the vehicle. That's exactly what we did.

It took us a few, 15, 20 minutes to get downtown. We took the West Side Highway. It was packed with cars and a lot of roads were blocked by NYPD and maybe that's what saved our lives, because we were supposed -- we were riding with Chief Pascale. It was, in fact, Chief Pascale, Lieutenant Michael Cahill, Steve Pilla, which is a paramedic, ALS coordinator, Neil Sweeting, ALS coordinator and myself. I'm an emergency medical technician.

We were supposed to go with Chief Pascale to the command center, but because we were stuck in traffic, we got there a little bit later than we were supposed to be, and as soon as we start parking we start seeing people running our way and we were about -- we were very close to West and Vesey and we saw people running and running and telling us to get out of the way, that -- to run for our lives. We were like -- we would try to drive away from that area until we could no more. It was close to 20 feet, those 20 feet, then we just parked and hid until everything subsided.

Q. Where did you hide?

A. I guess buildings and vehicles and stuff like that.

Q. You got out of the car and you just ran?

A. Yes. We just ran.

Q. You got separated?

A. No, not at this time. We were not running together, but we were running toward the same area and at the end we just managed to find each other. We went around the corner where we were, I'm not sure exactly where that was, we were running along Vesey Street after the first building collapsed. I think that it was West Street heading south from West Street. That's where we finally -- we got together, Chief Pascale, other staff members, and then we went out inside one of the buildings.

Q. Do you know which building that was?

A. No, I don't know the name of that building, but we were doing patient care there. I was also doing patient tracking, just writing down their names, where the patients were taken, writing down the name of the unit numbers, and they were coming from private ambulances or EMS ambulances or municipal ambulances, you know, stuff like that, so I was tracking all that information, and I remember going inside this building again and as I was tracking this patient information, they told us run away, you have to evacuate immediately, because the second building is going to collapse.

We were like oh, my god, it can't be possible. Patients were already hooked into their oxygen lines and their masks. They were strapped into long boards and all that kind of stuff and there was too many of them, so we had to unstrap them, removed their face masks and just assist them as good as we could, because there was too many for us. We are doing this or just let them die there. Believe me they run. As soon as we let them go they just disappeared, as we did. We started running and running and running and I just remember, I think Lieutenant Cahill running next to me. He was just -- it just -- we were just running as fast as we could and I remember one second or moment looking back and seeing the cloud.

First listening to this sound, this thundering sound and then silence after that, like eerie silence, until the cloud caught up to us and surrounded us and you could see no more. Then it was silence and it was thousands and thousands of millions of particles hitting our skin. It felt like something was hitting my skin like glass and I couldn't see anything, nothing.

I remember feeling a sharp pain on my left arm, but I didn't see blood or anything like that. I just kept running. Could hardly see, you could hardly breathe. I put my face inside my shirt. I had my helmet on. I didn't have any protective breathing devices on. I didn't have my turnout coat with me at that time. I only had my helmet, so I pulled the shield, the eye shield down to protect my eyes a little bit, but not that much, and covered my face with my shirt and just kept running and the only thing I was able to listen was to my breathing. I mean it was -- oh, my god, it was such a weird feeling. It was just like hu, hu, hu. Slow motion like in a tunnel. You are just running, running, running, followed by firefighters and EMTs and police officers and members of the media.

I saw this member of the media falling on the ground, picking up his equipment, running again, crashing against the fence. All of us running at like,

I don't know, like a stampede of animals and just looking behind and running and running until we could see no more. Suddenly this crowd of people split. One went to the right and one went to the left. I went towards the left. I followed this group of people. I couldn't see where I was running or where I was going. I just followed this group of people until I saw an opening.

I didn't know where I was getting, where I was going, but I saw this opening, and I said these people are going inside that place, that's where I'm going. We all went inside. We squeezed inside this area, big guys, short people. I mean it was incredible, and as soon as everybody got in we closed the door. Total darkness, everybody, some people were crying, some people were coughing, some people were just completely -- in complete silence. It was like the end of the world, my god.

At that second when I was running I just couldn't think of anything. Just running, something in my mind -- my brain was saying run, run, run or you are going to die. This building is going to fall on you. I didn't have any idea of how far or how fast I run, I knew I had run.

I. GATTAS

I went inside this building or this thing that happened to be a construction trailer. After our eyes got adjusted, adapted to the darkness, that's when we were able to see each other and we start -- people from the construction trailer handed out paper towels with water and we used it to clean other peoples' arms and faces and noses and it was spitting out dust and that's all we were doing for a long, long time. We were just spitting out and this lady said oh, my back was hurting and we just helped her sit on the floor against the wall.

Just for a while, I don't know for how long, we stayed in that trailer in darkness, until one of us said okay, let's open the door. We have to open the door. We were scared to death to open the door. We didn't know what we were going to find. So we opened the door and we saw this oh, my god, everything covered by dust. Everything, a cloud, everything was surrounded by dust. People walking like zombies, covered in dust. Just like we were, but walking like zombies.

We tried to pull some of them inside, cleaned them, and we helped them as best we could until it was safe for us, for everybody to go out again. It's like this trailer, this is where I managed to go inside the trailer with one of my Lieutenants, Lieutenant Cahill, and after he got out and I got out, we got separated again. I think we met one more time, because we were just walking in circles, met again and another place where someone, another EMT helped me irrigate my eyes, because I had contact lenses, so you imagine me running in this cloud of dust and who knows what, couldn't hardly see, hardly breathe, hardly do anything, just run for your life.

So this guy held me. I took off my contact lenses, irrigate them, put them back, check my arm, which was okay, and then just go back again until someone said that we had to run again because there was going to be a manhole explosion. We had to run again.

Without thinking of anything -- really my only thought was during the -- before the second collapse, after they said the building was tilting, just take care of the patients, get them out of the building so they could run at least and save their lives. I see some of them just run because everybody got separated, all the members of the Division got separated. The patients disappeared in the darkness. We disappeared in the darkness.

After they told about the manhole explosion, then everybody got separated, and I went a separate way, I don't know, I was completely disoriented. I encountered patients or people just running scared to death, people that were disoriented as I was, trying to find a way out of that area.

I kept on walking, running and walking, and running and walking, until someone saw me and picked me up. It was an ambulance that was picking up emergency personnel. They were picking up paramedics and EMTs and police officers and firefighters. They took us to the -- drop us at the bus terminal, somewhere on the West Side Highway.

From there, we were taken to the Chelsea Piers. EMS people were taken to the Chelsea Piers because they didn't want to us stay in that area. It was too unsafe for us. We were told that at Chelsea Piers were going to be used as hospital -- different sections were divided. One was getting ready as an operating room, the other one as a critical area, the other one like for first aid and stuff like that.

We started getting busses with hundreds of doctors and hundreds of nurses and members of the clergy from different denominations and medical equipment and all these areas were completely staffed and completely ready for what we were expecting we were going to get, which was patients, which we never got.

We got approximately 150 patients, but this was after 7 o'clock p.m., 7 p.m., but before that we were expecting hundreds and hundreds, which never showed up, because almost nobody made it out of that collapse of the buildings, which was so horrific, because you go there thinking you are going to be able to help, thinking you are going to be able to, you know, assist someone, and after the first collapse we were able to help people, we were able at least, you know, people that had chest pains, had difficulty breathing and broken bones and things like that. We were able to help them, but after the second collapse, the only ones that survived were the ones that were able to run, and the ones that were able to run that made it out of there were disoriented and went back. I got disoriented. I didn't -- no idea, the slightest idea where I was, which was very scary. You couldn't see. You didn't know where you were, you didn't know if you were heading back because at the end you were just kind of walking in circles. I guess God was with me and I made it out of there and had to, you know, deal with frustration and guilt because I had to go through that because you are trained to save lives, not to just witness a horrific destruction and no bodies found, nothing found, just dust. Just dust.

That dust, I'm telling you Christine, it was so freaking itchy. I was itching for hours and hours and hours. It was like glass stuck in my skin. I went -- I don't know how many times I went to the bathroom to wash. It was like, like I had to get this thing out of my body and I cleaned my nose and my face and my arms and that thing, that dust, that stuff and when I went home, I took two baths and I still couldn't get that stuff out of my skin and I was coughing and spitting up stuff for days after that.

When we went to the Chelsea Piers, we just got ready and we were like working at a frantic pace, just trying to get (inaudible) and equipment and oxygen tanks and face masks and non-rebreathers and all this stuff to set the tables, because we had tons of tables lined up with all the basic equipment in the critical area and the other one, the operating room had lights and surgeons and everything. We had pediatricians and surgeons and we had-- anyhow, it was incredible, and also we had in the ice ring, we had an area that was already set up as a temporary morgue, thinking that we were going to be able to locate bodies and send them at least to the Chelsea Piers.

So everything was actually set up and ready, so as time passed, we became so -- oh, my goodness, so upset and so frustrated because we were not getting anybody and the doctors that were there were more and more worried and upset and wanted to go to the Ground Zero area. They wanted to help and I think some of them managed to get authorization from EMS command to go to the Ground Zero area. That's what -- a group of them went with equipment.

I stayed there until probably not that late, until probably 7, 7:30 after that. The Chief told us that we had to go because we had to come back early the following day. And we left.

Q. Anything else you want to add to the events that happened prior to 11 o'clock in the morning?

A. 11 o'clock. I just couldn't believe when I saw the first -- I heard about the airplane crash and I said oh, my god, what a stupid mistake this pilot made, how could he miss the tower. After the second one I knew it was terrorism. I knew. My husband, he works at One Police Plaza and he called me and he said I'm on my way. Did you hear about the news. I said yes I heard it. I said I'm on my way to work. That was the last that I heard of him until I was able to call him again earlier after 2 or 3 p.m. that afternoon. He was also stuck underground for a couple of hours and so I was worried about him. He was worried about me. My son was in school and he was very worried about us.

Q. How old is your son?

A. He is 12. He was very worried. I just still today -- I can't believe this, I can't believe this happened, but I think that we as a team proved. We got together, we got closer, we were afraid, but we were not afraid. We never thought about dying, we only thought about helping other people. Just got really frustrated because we were unable to do that. We tried to do our best. We just couldn't do much. We just, you know, it was horrific and I can't -- I know I said this many times, and I cried a lot since then.

I cried with my husband, I cried with my son. [redacted]

When I saw -- after I got home and I saw those pictures and I saw the people falling, oh, my god, that was when I realized how bad it got.

I was there, but I really didn't realize what was going on, but after the second collapse I didn't really knew how close we were, but after we saw the map and we realized that we were just a block away, we were around the corner and that we were supposed to be there and just fate kept us away. Just fate that we are here telling our stories because God was looking after us and I still remember this and I know I will never forget that day.

I don't know what else to say. I don't think a lot of people have a lot to say about this. Just about the pain and the sorrow and the guilt. I felt guilt so many times, regrets. I believe we should talk to a lot of people. [redacted] It really showed the extent of the destruction, the full blast, what the collapse made of [redacted] [redacted]. I think that we were just as affected as everybody else, as any other members of any agencies involved and we should be given the same treatment and the same attention in terms of psychological stress and medical treatments, because we were very concerned after that.

The fact that I felt all that itching and all that pain and I was so -- I'm telling you I was so exhausted for days and my legs hurt so much from running and coughing for a couple of days and I got a huge hematoma on my arm, which I don't know how I got it. I know it happened after the second collapse, something hit me. It went away eventually, but (inaudible).

I was very happy that I made it out and that all members of my Division made it out. That's all I have to say.

Q. Thank you very much.

A. Thanks to you for coming and for listening to my story.

A. Tom McDonald.

Q. Your title?

A. Assistant Commissioner of Fleet and Tech Services.

Q. Can you tell us on September 11, 2001, on that particular day, the events that took place?

A. I started my day at headquarters at 6:15 a.m., with a meeting, a weekly meeting with Commissioner Thomas Fitzpatrick. At the conclusion of the meeting, I then subsequently had a meeting with Steve Rush and Robert Scott, in Steve Rush's office. We were conducting the meeting. We heard a lot of running in the hallways. I then got beeped with a notice of a third alarm at the Trade Center. I came out of Steve's office, saw Bill Feehan and found out the events. We went into Ray Goldbach's office and we visually inspected. We could see how one had been hit and the size of the hole in the building. Realizing that it wasn't a small aircraft, that it was a larger aircraft.

They prepared themselves to respond. I responded with Pete Guidetti, who was the driver. Commissioner Feehan, Commissioner Fitzpatrick, Captain Ray Goldbach and myself, all in Commissioner Feehan's car. We crossed over the Brooklyn Bridge, came off the bridge, went our way on to Broadway, pulled over on Broadway, approximately between Liberty and I believe Cortlandt Street. As we were getting out of the car, the second plane hit. Would have been 2 World Trade Center. Literally had to duck behind the car because metal had flown from the building to Broadway.

Guidetti, Tom Fitzpatrick and Commissioner Feehan donned helmets and their turn out gear. Ray Goldbach and myself went with them. I believe we went down Dey Street to Church. We visually inspected and sized up the buildings. We needed to stay close to the side line of the building, due to debris falling. We saw numerous people coming up out of the subway at the corner of Broadway and Dey and running up the block. Everybody was running away from the building. We crossed over Church Street, went down Vesey, went up the side escalators, and saw what I believe to be a Port Authority police officer, who told us we were unauthorized to come in there. He wanted us to have helmets and turn out gear. We identified ourselves from the Commissioner's office. We couldn't enter the building.

We came back down the escalators, and for the life of me I can't remember how we entered the building, but we entered what, I believe 8 World Trade Center. We came up, tried to find our way into the courtyard area and we hugged the side of the buildings and it was an overhang that we stayed under. There were several body parts. We noticed metal that looked like it came from the plane, in retrospect.

Q. Was debris still falling down at that time?

A. Yes, sporadically there was debris falling down and there were people jumping from the building.

Q. You made it into the lobby?

A. We made it into the lobby of 1 World Trade Center. I believe we came off the courtyard and the windows were blown out nearest the West Street side and inside the lobby there was a reception area or a control panel area for the Port Authority. I remember seeing Chief Hayden there trying to get a handle and set up a command post.

We met Commissioner Von Essen there. He spoke to Commissioner Von Essen. He informed Commissioner Von Essen that his first priority was to evacuate the building, that he was not going to attempt to extinguish the fire at this point. That his main priority was to get the people out of the building. I borrowed Commissioner Feehan's phone, tried to call my office. I tried to call NAT service, so that I could get them to respond and to get my supervisors in the area and get some road side assistance into the areas. You knew it was going to be a prolonged operation. I felt the need to have back up from Fleet and NAT service there.

At some point Commissioner Feehan, Commissioner Fitzpatrick and myself crossed over West Street, went over to, I guess in front of the Merrill Lynch building where the ramp was, where the two garages were, to a staging area. I remember seeing Bill Feehan, who was with us, Commissioner Fitzpatrick, Commissioner Von Essen, Peter Ganci, Chief of the Department, Chief Nigro, Al Fuentes, Ray Downey.

Q. Father Judge?

A. Father Judge, I don't recall visually seeing him myself. I remember seeing a good friend, Timmy Stackpole. He was with Dennis Cross and Bob Ingram, Chief Ingram. At one point Commissioner Von Essen turned to me and asked me to clear West Street, to move apparatus out of the middle of West Street so that we could have an open lane to move emergency vehicles in and out. Commissioner Drury was with me, along with firefighter Ken Wagner. I deployed them to the north side of West Street, asked them -- we took some immediate apparatus right in front of the staging area and packed them closer to the median so that we could open up the middle of West Street and they started to work their way up West Street.

I got to the corner of Vesey and West, where I was looking for a Mask Service Unit that I had seen earlier. I wanted to get that closer to the staging area to deploy bottles as needed. I found them a little bit further up Vesey towards the water. I had gotten help from a Sergeant Sullivan from ESU. I backed him out of the street. He then informed me that the Pentagon had been hit. I backed the MSU truck out with their driver. I rode on the running board of the truck.

We headed then back down West Street in front of the staging area. I got off the running board, I was running across West Street, was just about where the red Field Communications Truck was when tower two collapsed.

Most people were running into the garage area of the Merrill Lynch building. Standing next to me was a Fire Department mechanic, Pat Murphy. I pushed Pat forwards and we ran towards, I believe the Winter Garden or it may have been the Merrill Lynch building, but we wound up in the Winter Garden. There was a canopy overhead. There was debris coming down before we entered the building. We got into the building, maybe 50 feet, got behind a pillar and then got on the floor. A cloud of dust ensued around us. We couldn't see anything. All the normal stuff, we were choking and filled with debris.

Q. This is you and the mechanic?

A. Right, there were other people in the lobby area. I couldn't identify them by name or by unit. After that, a firefighter came in turn out gear and said that we could go out the other side. I sent Murphy out the other side to go through the Winter Garden. I went back out the way I came with the firefighter who informed us of another way out. He and I found three firefighters laying in the rubble outside. They seemed to be dazed, didn't know where to go or what to do. We told them to get up and come into the lobby and go out towards Vesey Street, which they did.

I then realized that I had an injury to my leg. I had a lot of pain in my left leg. My right ankle. I then left the area and went back out through the Winter Garden to Vesey Street. I didn't try to go back out on to West Street.

I walked out through the Winter Garden to Vesey Street. Working my way through that lobby, I ran into Commissioner Fitzpatrick. We both exchanged a hearty hug and glad to see you to one another. Fitzpatrick helped me get a bottle of water and I came out on to Vesey. He stayed with me until we got on to Vesey and then I don't know what direction he went.

There was an EMT on Vesey Street, he washed my eyes out, it might have been a lady. I sat down in a chair. I felt a lot of pain in my leg. I hobbled up to Vesey and West. I met Father John Delendick. We exchanged some hearty greetings and some prayers, then I don't know where Father John went after that. I worked my way north on West, went about a block. I sat on the front bumper of a rear mount to rest my leg. And the next thing I know is I heard that roar again. I looked up and tower one was on its way down.

Q. How far were you from tower one at this point?

A. I believe I was somewhere around Barclay and West. I ran as much as I could and I dove under a Police Department tow truck.

Q. Was the debris going up that far?

A. Yes, we had a lot of debris coming by us, crashing around us.

Q. Who were you with at this point, were you by yourself?

A. Yes, I was by myself. There was someone else with me. I couldn't identify the person. We got under the tow truck and stayed there. The bottle of water Fitzpatrick gave me helped me get through it because I was choking and I was so glad to have that with me because I was able to keep rinsing my throat out. I got out from under it. It was still - it was like midnight. Pitch dark. I just continued to try and find my way, walking north and everybody else was running or walking north on West Street. I remember it started to then lighten up a little bit as far as visibility. I continued to walk north. Some people were helping me walk because my leg was in a lot of pain. That's about it.

Q. Anything else you want to add?

A. No, I can't think of anything else.

MR. CASTORINA: Time now is 8:25. That concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT MICHAEL D'ANGELO

Interview Date: October 24, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 24, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York. Time is now 0845 hours.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with --

A. Michael D'Angelo, EMT, badge 5645, assigned to Division 1, Battalion 4 of the EMS command, New York City Fire Department.

Q. We are conducting the interview in the Division 1 conference room. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Michael, would you?

A. I work tour one. I was working tour one, 1 Adam that day, which actually sits at the Trade Center. I got off at 8 o'clock in the morning. I returned to Battalion 4, changed into my civilian clothes, hung around for a few minutes and left approximately, little after 8:20. I proceeded over the Brooklyn Bridge towards home. I wasn't paying attention to the skyline on the BQE, but I'm sure if I was I would have seen the first plane hit. I was wondering why there was so much traffic.

Making my way through traffic, I got into the area of the trench in Carroll Gardens between the Brooklyn Bridge and the Battery Tunnel when I received a phone call from a family member saying that a plane hit the Trade Center. I then noticed numerous papers flying about in the air. First thing I did was I called up Battalion 4, I notified them I was returning to work. I then called my family and notified them what I was doing.

Then as I made it through traffic and I was going over the BQE extension to get back on to the Battery Tunnel, I looked and I saw the second plane hit the building. I then made a round, I made my way into a line of fire trucks using my identification and went into the Battery Tunnel. I followed Ladder Company 132 through the tunnel. It took a few minutes to get through to the other side. When I got through to the other side I parked my car on West Street, right around near, right about, right at the -- almost to the exit of where the Battery Tunnel empties out.

I proceeded to run down West Street until I found an EMS Chief, Chief Goldfarb. He informed me, he says -- I told him I was off duty. He said okay, stay with me and my aide and you are going to assist us in setting up a command post. At first we were right next to where the Mayor had set up his command post and the original command post of where the Mayor was standing.

I was actually standing next to Chief Ganci before he ran in the building. I remember that distinctly.

Then we moved it down. We moved down into the front of the American Express building. He wanted me to go inside and check out the inside of the American Express building to see if we could set up a triage area there, see if there was enough room. There was enough room, but we still weren't sure of where we were going to set up. I had a little bit of a table and everything set up outside with the command board and everything and we were just going through the steps of taking in units and we just weren't really sure if we were going to stay there right that second or -- so that went on for numerous times.

As I watched the building burn, people jump out of the building, I can't tell you how long that was. Then I began to hear a rumble, I turned around and saw debris flying everywhere, the building came down. I ran up West Street, across Vesey and the whole street was blocked with emergency -- there was all trucks, but luckily there was a small Sedan command car, which I jumped over the hood and then ran up the block, up Vesey Street, then I got engulfed in a large cloud of --

Q. So, on Vesey you were going towards the water?

A. I ran in front of here. I ran across the street here and I ran west down Vesey Street. Then that big cloud of smoke hit you. At first I was -- at that point I didn't see Chief Goldfarb. I thought he was gone because he was standing on West Street at the time. I thought he was gone so I just -- I began by directing ambulances around, up North End Street, North End Avenue, because then they had set up, I believe they were about to set up a triage area in the back of the theaters, the Embassy Suites, I believe is what it was.

I remember going back outside and I began pulling -- bringing firemen that were walking around covered and blind. I was just breaking out the water, cleaning out their eyes, cleaning out as many guys, seeing if anybody was hurt. I would just grab them, give them a quick pat down on their bodies to see if anything was broken or anything. A lot of them were just in shock, not sure where they were.

I made my way down towards the water, where they were -- where those New York Waterway ferries were bringing over water and such. I was leaning over and bringing that up. Again I kept cleaning eyes out. Something I noticed from when I was standing in front of the Embassy Suites at the time, I saw that the US Secret Service were bringing somebody, an Arab man in a suit, covered in soot, walking away in handcuffs. I remember that distinctly, because the guy looked right in my eyes.

From there I remember just -- I don't remember treating, exactly treating guys, I was more like just seeing how severe people were. I mean I helped put guys in stair chairs, but in this time I'm not in my uniform. I had a T-shirt on and jogging pants. So I am just -- I remember assisting -- I moved Chief Cassano from one backboard -- one stretcher to another and I helped them put the collar on him, but around at that time it was a little bit fuzzy.

Then we decided, me and somebody else -- I at this point, thought most of my Battalion was wiped out, until I started seeing a few faces. I only saw like 5 or 6 faces and at least I knew they were okay. But then I decided to throw an extra -- I threw a few, I threw a few oxygen bags over my shoulder. I began running up Vesey Street again, not knowing that the second tower was going to come down as soon as I reached the corner again.

So I had to rip the stuff off my shoulders and run back up Vesey Street. I believe I dove into either the back of the American Express building or I dove into the 4 World Financial Center. Just dove into the doors and in the corner and then I realized this isn't exactly smart. I don't know how this building is coming down. So I ran out again. Ran down towards the water. Then I stayed upwards around the area, like I said, just continuing to grab people to see if they were okay, how bad people were, treated. I just remember I had one guy with just a laceration on his elbow. I just said to him, just go, go somewhere else. You will be okay, you can walk, leave the area. That's what I told any civilian, I said -- that wasn't hurt, run north, go north. I remember also after maybe the first tower fell, I skip around --

Q. That's okay.

A. I remember hearing the F 15s flying overhead and that was scary because we thought they were flying more planes. I didn't know what was going on. I thought the guy brought 15 planes and were just going to fly them into the area, so I remember the F 15s flying overhead. I remember the big, big cloud of ash that just -- it didn't make it towards the water really. For some reason it stayed away from the water, I remember that.

But -- that's basically what I kept doing. I was directing traffic and I didn't really like sit down and bandage anybody or nothing like that, but I was really just giving people on site triage. I found firemen that I knew and asked if they were okay. That's basically what I was doing. I was just checking them. I mean I was just taking bottles of water and cleaning their face and cleaning the soot out. I made them lie down on the ground and irrigate their eyes. I did that for, like I said, an unknown amount of time. That's what I did there until about probably 11 o'clock.

Q. Okay. Do you remember where on West Side Highway you met up with Chief Goldfarb?

A. Right about the pedestrian bridge.

Q. South one?

A. Yes, right before the south pedestrian bridge.

Q. Between Cedar --

A. Right around there I saw him and I got his attention.

Q. Okay. And --

A. My car was like really at the exit to where the Battery Tunnel. That was my car.

Q. From when you met up with Chief Goldfarb, you came up here to --

A. No, first we went here. We were going to set up a command post at where the Mayor was. That garage there at first we were setting up. Then we were told to move down to here and set up a triage area inside the American Express building. That's where we started massing units, like I remember numerous ambulances just parked in the street here. Fire trucks lined the block. ESU trucks up the block here. The MERV, I remember the MERV almost hitting me in the back with its ramp. As I was running away they had the ramp still down.

Q. Okay. Do you remember aside from Chief Goldfarb any other people from EMS that you encountered that morning?

A. Let's see, who were the guys I found? I had one guy that worked with me. He was off duty too. He met with me. Brian Cirillo. He was with me until the second -- he was with me almost, like in and out until we ran back up the block for the second collapse. Then we ran back and then I lost him for the day. I didn't see him for the rest of the day. I saw the unit of 2 Boy on North End Street. That was Mike Mejias.

Q. An EMS unit?

A. Yes, EMS unit. EMS. Another guy, Garfield Gray, he was driving -- he was running back in and bringing whatever undamaged vehicles, ambulances back down around the street, because they had lined up on North End to do their jobs. I remember that.

I remember -- actually I remember one guy. He is a paramedic. I don't remember his name. I remember it distinctly because he met up with us at the first command post. And he had like maybe a -- something with wolski I think. He was a paramedic off duty, but his wife was, he said his wife was up on -- I don't know, I don't know the name. His wife was I believe at work at one of like the hundred and something floor in one of the buildings. I think it was the north tower. I remember that distinctly because he just -- he really was just very emotionally broken up. He wasn't able to work.

Q. Right.

A. I didn't see him after that either. I don't know what happened to him. Obviously he is alive, because I'd hear about it. Like I said I don't remember the last name.

I saw who I thought were gone -- was my -- 1 Adam, the unit I work with, tour two guys. You see that 89 is Church and Fulton Street. So I thought they were the first ones gone. They managed to get out because they took the first people out. They pulled the first people out of there and I managed to meet one of them, one of the partners down here, down in front of the Embassy Suites.

I remember too, the cars started to explode inside the parking lot. I mean, the cars started cooking off, they started going off, boom, boom, boom, boom. I remember that.

Q. Do you remember the partner's name from 1 Adam that you met on --

A. Yes. Frank Puma.

Q. Puma?

A. Yes. So that's -- like I said, I remember seeing a Chief running across the street. I remember that distinctly. I remember seeing the Mayor distinctly. I remember seeing the Commissioner arrive and make his way to the command post.

Q. Commissioner Von Essen?

A. Yes. I don't remember seeing any deputy -- Commissioner Feehan. I remember seeing numerous people jump from the windows. I remember that distinctly. I saw numerous people jump. Then actually when I found my car, I found my car like later, later on in the day, but I left it there, because it was not able to be moved because it was covered. There was an airplane tire about 10 feet away from it. I remember that.

Q. Right.

A. So yes, basically I just stayed and I did as much as I could as long as I could, you know. The one thing I don't know -- I just didn't have my uniform on me. I would have liked to have my uniform and a helmet on my head because that was -- but then again maybe I'm lucky I didn't have a helmet on my head. Like I said, I just didn't have my equipment on me. Now I keep it with me at all times. I keep everything in my trunk.

I was running around in a pair of jogging pants and a white T-shirt until I finally actually picked up an EMS turnout coat I found. That's what I did. Actually the only thing I did have -- no, yes, that's about it. That's about it. Yes.

Q. Any thoughts or comments or opinions you would like to add about the morning?

A. About this? It was -- at the time I just -- adrenaline was so high. I just -- I just did what I -- like I was -- like I'm not sure what guided me to do what I did. I don't know what kept me from -- maybe seeing that Chief is what kept me from going into the building, maybe not having my equipment on. I don't know. Maybe I wouldn't have done it even then. But like I said, I was there at quarter to eight in the morning on Fulton Street. So who knows. I don't know. But I did the best I could. That's all I could say. I wish I could have done more but I did what I could do at the time.

Q. Okay, thank you.

A. No problem.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT MICHAEL MEJIAS

Interview Date: October 24, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 24, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The time is now 0917 hours.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with --

A. Specialist Michael Mejias, badge 5737. Battalion 4, Station 11.

Q. We are conducting the interview in the office of the Division 1 conference room, and this interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Michael, if you would --

A. All right. My partner and I were driving along South Street getting pretty close to the station. It was around maybe 8:45 to 8:50, when I noticed that a wave of ambulances and EMS crews and ESU and PD and Fire Department are racing down South Street to go to the downtown area. Said to my partner that that has got to be an awesome job, downtown somewhere, big job.

Then as we continue on, we were only like a block away from the station, I see people looking up in the sky. Finally my curiosity gets to me. I told my partner stop the car, because we drove in together. Stop the car, stop the car. I got to look. I get out and I see the World Trade Center with a gigantic black hole in the building, on fire. So I go to my partner, Jody, Joe, let's run. We run into the Battalion 4 station. I said Jody, this is a big job. We got to go, go, go, go. We got an the adrenaline rush and by that time, Battalion 4, my supervisor, Bill Melarango, says get changed, get changed, grab a radio, go sign a radio, grab a bus, go, go, go, go.

We go upstairs to change. My partner, he was already in uniform because he was driving in with his uniform. He already grabbed his bags. He went downstairs from the locker room. I was getting changed, I grabbed my stuff and I ran down there. I grabbed vehicle 240 and a radio. I proceeded down there. My partner had already left because they sent him with another extra person that was standing by. He got changed before I did.

I got into vehicle 240. I raced down there behind, with my supervisor, he was in the command car behind me and I stopped on Broadway and Fulton was my first stop. I had -- there were people coming on to me in hysteria, and I remember there was one lady who was hysterical and I just grabbed her and I told her listen ma'am, you got to be calm for me, you got to be strong for me. What is happening here is a really horrendous thing, I don't got time to deal with you right now. We got a lot of seriously hurt patients. She was with her girlfriend. She goes yes, I understand that. She said just go save somebody. I told her and her girlfriend to walk towards north. Get out of the way.

Then there was a crowd of people there on Fulton and Broadway, and I was screaming at them, listen, get out of the way, go to north, go north. A lot of shrapnel and a lot of stuff going on there. Things falling off the building, I didn't want anybody to get hurt. Then this other lady comes up to me and she just looks at me and she said I have dust in my eye. Could you look at my eye. I told her listen, can you see me. She says yes. I said listen, your eyes are fine. I put a green tag on her, triage tag, and I told her Beekman Hospital is two blocks away. Just walk straight down Fulton Street and seek help there. I gave her a little 4 by 4. She had a little cut on her finger.

Then this kid comes up to me. He is around 20 something years old. He said he is an Army medic and that he wants to help and I didn't have a partner at the time so I took off my hat and I said you are my partner now. I gave him my EMS hat. We both got into the ambulance together. We road up Fulton to Vesey and as we are driving up Vesey past the Trade Center we see a severed leg. We run over that severed leg and I stopped at West Street.

When I stop at West Street and Vesey, there was a Lieutenant there who was setting up the staging I guess for the ambulances. He said let's move the ambulance towards the water. He just probably saved me. I don't even know his name, but I would recognize his face. He said move the ambulance towards the water and I parked it in between West Street on Vesey and North End.

My partner had already set up a triage, triage center by the World Financial Center there, on the side, by Vesey. So we had like three or four or 5, maybe 5 patients. Two of them were walking wounded. I think 2 or 3 of them were burned, second degree burns.

As we are working up the patients and we are trying to get organized, there is rumors that there is a second plane coming. I thought nothing of it because you go on jobs, sometimes you get hysteria, people thinking there's more than what is going on. Shortly after that, the second plane came. I hear a big rush, like a low flying jet and I see a massive explosion.

Now I'm getting a little nervous because now I know it's not an accident. Now I know that the first plane was deliberate and the second plane is deliberate. Now we got a problem.

So I'm thinking to get these patients out of there. The nurses in the triage area by the World Financial Center, there was nurses over there. I didn't even know where they came from. They must have came from the buildings that have nursing clinics. Some of these buildings downtown, they have nursing clinics in the centers there.

Q. Excuse me, this was in front of the American Express building?

A. Yes. Right on the side of Vesey, North End, World Financial, whatever it is, in the middle of the block. There was ambulances parked and we had no officer to give direction at the time, because it was like we were trying to organize. So I was the senior guy there at the time. My partner was there with me and another guy from station 13. I forget his name. He told me that you guys interviewed him already. He was there.

There was an ambulance crew in an ambulance and I grabbed the crew and I said listen, we got to get these people out of here. It's dangerous. So we put the lady who was burned in the stretcher, put her in the ambulance. Then I had the guy that was burned on his back, put him in the stair chair, wheeled him over to the ambulance and told him listen, I know it's going -- you are going to have to sit, sir. I know it's going to be painful for you but I got to get you out of here. It's not safe. He goes no, that's all right, guy. Get me out of here, get me out of here.

So I put him in the ambulance. The lady was in the stretcher. Her husband was a walking wounded, I sent him and then there was another two, I don't -- can't remember. All of them had triage tags. I told the crew listen, don't even worry about an ACR. They got triage tags, get them out of here. Take them to Cornell. That's what I was thinking, ship them to Cornell, but they didn't listen to me. They took them to somewhere like St. Vinny's or somewhere, because with a thing like that, forget about the burn. You have to get as many patients as you can out.

Then as we are trying to get this other lady, who was HYS, you know, she was in the stair chair, I'm trying to calm her down. I was waiting to get another ambulance to get her out of here, but she was on delayed status because she was just HYS, there was nothing really wrong with her. She was hysterical like the rest of us, you know.

The building started collapsing, the north tower started collapsing. It tipped down first and then the thing fell within itself. It was an amazing sight to see. It was really unbelievable. I thought I was watching a movie with special effects.

Then from there people were rushing towards us. We ran all the way towards the water, as far to the water as we could go, on Vesey past North End towards the water where the park is. It was like a mushroom cloud of dust and debris coming towards us and everything. But it didn't really -- we were safe because we were surrounded by other buildings. If the tower would have fell towards West Street instead of imploding on itself, we would have had a problem, but, you know, it just came within itself, just tipped.

We waited there till things calmed down. There were a lot of firemen coming towards us with eye problems, like irritating of their eyes, irritation of their eyes. We were throwing water all over them, trying to irrigate their eyes. Trying to clean them up best we could. Nobody really seriously -- serious trauma, but there was one guy, he had a real bloody nose. We cleaned him up best we could.

There was equipment strewn all over the place because everybody was running. EMS equipment. So we had a stretcher, I don't know whose stretcher it was. We grabbed the stretcher, told my partner, listen, we got to get back in the game, man. So we loaded the stretcher with all the equipment that we could find. My bus, 240, was parked on North End, right behind the logistics truck, Alan Cruz, our supply truck, and I was heading back to my ambulance because I was going to put the stuff back, but they told us to go to the hotel on North End, I forget, Embassy Suites, I think it is?

Q. Yes.

A. They already set up a triage there. So we brought all the equipment that we had, that we found, over there. Shortly after we get there, they want to evacuate us out of there, because they are worried about gas leaks, they are worried about integrity of buildings, you know, because the front of the building by the movie theater, that little space there was on fire. So now they were worried about gas leaks and all the other stuff.

We evacuate, we go to Stuyvesant, Stuyvesant

High School from there. I don't know even know what street that's on. Chambers, it's a little side street, but it's not Chambers, it's a different name. Anyway, where Stuyvesant High School is. I don't know where that is.

Q. Okay.

A. So we go over there. We evacuate all the patients that we have there, we have like walking woundeds in the area. Only a few. We got them out of there, out of that hotel. We grabbed as much equipment as we could. We evacuated and walked down to Stuyvesant. We loaded as much as we could on ambulances and walked down. They were setting up triage there. I didn't even go in. I stayed right there outside. Then they started saying there is a gas leak over there and they are worried about something happening over there.

Finally they make a decision to evacuate all the emergency personnel to Chelsea, but my ambulance is still on North End and Vesey. So I give my keys to the equipment truck guy, Allan Cruz, because he was gathering up all the ambulances, because we had all the equipment now in front of Stuyvesant High School. So I gave him the wrong set of keys. He didn't have the ignition key.

So he came back and said Mike, you gave me the wrong set. I said okay, I will get the bus. So I ran back in. It was like inches of soot, it looked like snow. It was incredible. I went back there and I grabbed the ambulance. It was still in good shape. Didn't get hit with any debris. I went back and I carted as much stuff as I could. I still have this kid with me now. He was with me, me and my partner, then we put all the stuff in the -- Chief Carrasquillo told us to go to Chelsea.

Put as much equipment as we had in there and as we are driving up West Street to go to Chelsea, we are picking up all kinds of medical personnel who were walking, because everybody got evacuated to there, so we could set up a staging and a triage and a MASH unit, which they did an awesome job. It was incredible. I don't know if you were there.

Q. No.

A. It was awesome. I was in the military as an Army combat medic, not war time, but I had training in that. It reminded me, everything was perfect man. It was like a MASH unit set up in there, in like a warehouse. We had ambulances lined up in rows and we were all waiting for that call to go down there to save some lives and that call never came.

That was the most saddest thing about it, that with a job this size, this magnitude, I was saying to myself there is going to be numerous injured and we are going to have to really depend on our skills. Not a call. So that was the biggest thing. So I waited and waited and waited, me and my partner and this kid.

Finally I told the kid, I said listen, there is nothing you can do here. It's already done. Me and my partner go thanks, guy, thanks for coming in. He left and we brought the equipment that we had in the ambulance, we brought it in to the triage, the MASH unit that they had, because they might need equipment. So we just kept our base equipment for the bus.

That was it. I ran out of gas so what I did was I told the Lieutenant, listen, I'm going to be going to -- I'm going to get gas. He said when you get gas, go to 911, go back to the 911 system, because there was no patients. Then, you know, I will admit I cheated a little bit.

When I went out getting gas, I went down to Whitehall Street, because I knew they were setting up a MASH unit there and I wanted to be where the patients were. We waited there. The Lieutenant said I need you, come in here. We went there. We stayed there another eight hours, waiting and waiting and waiting for patients. No show. It was like -- I think that was the toughest thing, is that a job that magnitude you would expect thousands and thousands of patients. After the first wave, nothing. There were no survivors.

That's about it. I probably missed a few things. There was a package, when I -- this is like a funny story about this job too. There was a package that when I came back to the ambulance with all the equipment, it was open, my ambulance. I had both keys. I said, what's this package here doing in my ambulance? After all the building collapses and everything else, I didn't even think about it again.

I put the equipment in there. We went to the hotel and then we went to Stuyvesant, then we went up to Chelsea is when I realized. I said there is a package, I don't know how it got there. So I took it out. Now I'm getting a little nervous. That's what I was just -- relax. It's not an ordinary Tuesday any more, so paranoia set in. Because at the time I really didn't think about it because there was such chaos.

So I go to my partner and I go Jody man, there is a box, I had both keys and this box was found in my ambulance. What should I do with it. He goes get that out of here. What are you, crazy man. So I was going to throw it in the garbage can, but I said that's unsafe because what if somebody came and left another device.

So what I did I put it in the island on West Street at Chelsea, and I flagged down a PD and the FBI and I told them and they had the bomb squad check it out. It wound up being a wedding present or something. It was addressed to Norway, but there was nothing we could have done about that, you know. It was chaotic there. You started thinking about things that might possibly happen. (inaudible) just waited.

Q. Okay. When you got to Broadway and Fulton, who was the supervisor? You said that he moved you over?

A. On Broadway and Fulton, my supervisor was behind me. He left, he went towards the building somewhere. I don't know even know where he went to be honest with you.

Q. Who was it?

A. Bill Melarango. He was behind me in the command car. He did his administrative stuff. I don't know where he went. I was there with me and this kid after. When I got to West Street, West Street and Vesey is when the supervisor, I don't know who he was. I seen him before. I don't know his name, but he might have saved my life, because I was parked at West Street and he told me listen, I want you to move that ambulance towards the water.

Q. Right, right.

A. So that's when I went from West Street and Vesey to North End where the supply truck was. I parked behind there and I walked to the triage area in the middle of the block. There was already ambulances set up on Vesey between North End and West Street, right in front of the movie theater, you know the movie theater.

Q. Yes.

A. Right over there by the -- in the middle of the block. So I grabbed an EMS crew and we got rid of the patients that were happening over --

Q. The crew that you helped with the burn patients --

A. I see them before, but I don't know their names, but when I see them I'm going to give them a good hug tight, because they got those people out of there.

Q. Do you remember their vehicle number or anything like that?

A. You know, I seen them before, I don't know if they were from Queens or Brooklyn or 15. One of them had a -- the older guy, he is a veteran because I have seen him before. He wears glasses and he has like a lazy eye that goes with (inaudible). His partner is a short guy, an Italian guy. I seen them, I know that they are both veterans. But I don't really know their names. They are not really from my station. But when I see them I'm going to congratulate them. They did an awesome -- they got those patients out of there and that's the main objective.

Q. Okay. Any thoughts or comments on the day that --

A. I remember, this is where I -- as you notice that nobody from our station, Battalion 4, got killed. Seriously, we should have lost half our people, because we are taught, when the job, when the World Trade Center job comes over, it gives you a whole bunch of pages on where to set up, what to do, have you ever seen --

Q. Yes. Pre-plans.

A. The pre-plans. The pre-plans always say go to the concourse to the triage. Because we were the first wave and we got so many patients, that technically you are supposed to do triage and the patients had to wait until you get them out of there. But we got such a big wave of patients, we were taking them to the hospital, weren't really doing what we were supposed to be doing, triage, and setting up. That's what saved our lives believe it or not, in my opinion.

Because technically we were supposed to set up triage, no patients get transported until we triage them out. Then we go to the concourse and set up triage there and then we would go to various levels, after we get organized, go to various levels of triage on various floors. Because we didn't have a chance to organize because of the attack, because it turned out to be an attack instead of an accident, you know, that's what saved us. By the grace of God, I think that's what saved us, that we didn't really have a chance to organize.

It was so chaotic and debris all over the place. Because I know -- my own set-up would probably be in the building too. You know, so I think that's what happened. It was a fuck up, but it really was -- it saved our lives, this little miscue. We didn't really go procedure wise. That's why we were saved. Some rules are meant to be bent, broken, right.

Q. Yes.

A. That's about it. I'm just glad everybody survived. I get a little teary-eyed when I see all these funerals, all these people, they have young kids. It's amazing, but that was about it.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. I will first thank you for your time. The time is now 0936 hours. The interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN RAY GOLDBACH

Interview Date: October 24, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today's date is October 24, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg, Fire Department City of New York. The time is now 1047 hours. Also present is Assistant Commissioner James Drury. We are conducting an interview with Captain Ray Goldbach, executive assistant to Commissioner Von Essen. This interview is being conducted at Fire Department headquarters in relation to the events of the morning of September 11, 2001.

Q. Captain, for the record, would you identify yourself?

A. Captain Ray Goldbach, executive assistant to the Fire Commissioner.

Q. Captain, directing your attention back to September 11, 2001, can you tell me what time you became aware of a problem in Manhattan and where you were when you became aware of it?

A. I believe it was sometime between 8:30 and 9 o'clock. And I was in my office. I received a phone call from Joe Higgins in communications, who told me that a plane just went into the World Trade Center. And they dumped the 1060, which is a radio signal for a major emergency. [redacted]

[redacted] But I walked back into my office, looked out my window and I could see a plane had gone into the north tower of the building. With that I got Bill Feehan. He came into the office and took a look. We went and got Tom Fitzpatrick. Tom Fitzpatrick came over, came into my office, looked over and I had said to him I believe a small plane went into the Trade Center. He said it's not a small plane. It's a commercial airline, look at the size of the hole. I couldn't see that far so I didn't know.

[redacted] The girls in our office were all starting to cry already. Tom McDonald, Assistant Commissioner Tom McDonald, who was I believe in a meeting with Tom Fitzpatrick, was there at the same time. I went down and got Peter Guidetti, the office manager out of his office. And the five of us went down to the garage. We all got into Bill's car. We went up out of the building, we went down Jay to Tillary, up Tillary and over the bridge. The police already had the bridge shut down. We got over the bridge pretty rapidly. We went down around City Hall. We got behind the police ESU truck that was on, I believe it was Broadway, going downtown. We followed that truck all the way down to, I don't know whether it was Broadway and Dey or Broadway and Cortlandt Street, where I remember telling Peter pull over, let us out. Thousands of people running up Broadway at that time. We got out of the car. Feehan went to the back and got his coat, his helmet. Fitzpatrick had his helmet. I didn't have any gear, nor did Tom McDonald.

The four of us got out of the car, we started to cross Broadway, and the second plane went into the other tower. I don't know what time it was, but Tom McDonald yelled something like holy shit, oh, fuck. He hit the ground out on the street. We all got up. We kept walking. I believe we went down - I don't know whether it was Dey or Cortlandt Street. We walked down that block. It was littered with airplane parts, pieces of the building.

We went down and I don't know whether it was 5 or 7 World Trade Center. We tried to go around to get up into a building. There was a federal cop there who wouldn't let us up the stairs. We went up the stairs any way. We told them who we were. He let us up. We tried to go across the plaza. There were a lot of people jumping at that time, on to the plaza.

We initially went back into the building, then we came back out again because we were trying to get into the command post, which was at 1 World Trade Center. We walked across the plaza back into whatever - I think it was, might have been 5 World Trade Center. I'm not sure.

Q. When you say the plaza, are you referring to the concourse?

A. The concourse, yes, where the big fountain was there. We saw a lot of people jumping at that plaza. Went back in, worked our way down around to the front of 1 World Trade Center and went into the lobby, where at that point the command post was established. The Fire Commissioner was there when we got there. It was chaos. A lot of units reporting in and trying to organize units and give them different assignments and send them up there, but there was hundreds of people running around inside of the lobby. The Port Authority was completely overwhelmed, I believe, in their ability to cope with this at that time.

A lot of their phones were out, some of their systems were down, I remember seeing them trying to get their vests on so they could identify themselves and get in their positions.

At that point, Commissioner Feehan and Tom were talking to Chief Hayden, and Chief Callan, about what we were doing, where we were setting up our units. I don't recall seeing Chief Ganci in 1 World Trade Center, nor Chief Nigro for that matter. But Tom told me, the Fire Commissioner told me to try to get some people from headquarters to get some radios and to come over to see to try to beef up our end of the command post once we got it set up.

I had a very tough time trying to make telephone calls to the office here from the phones there as well as using the cell phone. Eventually I got ahold of my wife, who was in her office on 55th Street and asked her to call the EOC down here and tell her to send some people over there if they could find them. That would help us man the command post.

At that time, somebody had come into 1 World Trade Center and told us that the Mayor was looking for the Fire Commissioner. I left with Tom, went out through one of the windows that had broken in 1 World Trade Center. We crossed all the way across West Street. We are now where Ganci and Nigro had set up the command post on West Street in front of the Winter Garden. I believe we were probably over there for at least 20 minutes at some point. Saw a lot of members of the Department over there that are dead. Lot of companies reporting in. We moved as many apparatus as we could. The Commissioner wanted the apparatus removed off of West Street to the sides of West Street so we could establish a path to start running ambulances from the south to the north to the victims.

So I remember talking with Tom McDonald and working with Tom McDonald and several other people, including company officers that came in, telling them to move the apparatus that was blocking West Street to the curb so that we could establish a lane. Like I said, what we were going to try to do is start - we were going to start bringing the ambulances in, turning them around down past the south tower, loading in the people, shooting them back out up north.

Then Manny Pepea from the Mayor's office came over to us again and told us that the Mayor was looking for the Commissioner and they were on Barclay Street. I walked with him and I believe it was a fire marshall, I think it was Mike Owney. We walked over towards Barclay Street. I didn't even know where Barclay Street was. We were walking towards that direction. We went over there, we couldn't find the Mayor or his group. I said to the Commissioner let's go back to the command post on West Street, I will find out exactly where we have to go, then we will make our way there.

Before we got back to the command post, somebody told us that the Mayor's group had now gone to 7 World Trade Center to the OEM command post. We went from where we were at that point, it was somewhere around Vesey or Vesey or something like that. We got into 7 World Trade Center, we took the escalator up to the second floor, then we were going to take the elevator. I think it was John Peruggia from operations, but I'm not sure, at that point told us we had to get out of that building. Everybody was evacuated in that building [redacted]

We walked out of 7 World Trade Center, now following the whole group of people from City Hall who were somewhere ahead of us. I think we were on Washington Street near Greenwich Street, when the north tower started to collapse. I remember running and I think it was down Greenwich Street with John McLaughlin. We lost the Commissioner and the guy that he was with, the marshall. We got caught like in a white out, like a blizzard, and like dust, felt like insulation. Myself and John stayed together. We were trying to get down next to - we got down on the street and on our hands and knees crawled to the curb. I remember thinking to myself I thought we were going to get run over by a car. We didn't know whether - I thought I saw the building collapsing, but I didn't believe it. I saw it disappearing into a cloud, but I thought maybe a couple of floors had fallen off.

At that point we made our way about half a block up till we could eventually see. We got ourselves together. I said to him we got to make sure we find the boss. We went back into the cloud again, myself and John, and we walked around in this dust cloud. You couldn't see your hand in front of your face. Probably a couple of minutes, just calling the Commissioner. Eventually he and the marshall he was with called us. They had got across the street from where we were and into a doorway.

At that point I think we walked further up Greenwich Street and somebody brought us into another building where the Mayor's whole staff was. Everybody was tremendously in panic at that point. They decided that they were going to try to stabilize the situation in some way. They had to get away from this. We started working our way, I think it was up Broadway, I believe. Stopping at several places where the Mayor was looking for a place where we might be able to set up some type of - I don't know whether it was a command post or a place just to talk, and he was giving news reports as we were walking on the street. Every couple of minutes he would stop and give an update on whatever he had. Just what was going on as we were walking uptown.

We walked all the way up to 5 truck in a panic and haste situation. We just about forced our way into the fire house and we set up the - I guess the initial operations point from the Mayor's office at 5 truck. We were there for -- prior to getting to 5 truck, the other tower fell down. I remember telling Tom the other tower fell down. I saw it disappear into a cloud again and he didn't believe me, because he was continuing to walk, but I remember telling him that, at some point during the walk while we were going uptown.

Q. You were referring to Commissioner Von Essen?

A. Yes, Commissioner Von Essen. We were in 5 truck for what seemed like a long time.

Q. Where is 5 truck?

A. I think it's in the village, so it was a long walk. I don't know exactly where it is, but it was quite a long walk. I bet it was a mile walk. We were probably there for what seemed like at least an hour while we were trying to coordinate resources from the state, from the federal government, Fire Departments. There was a lot going on at that point. John McLaughlin had left us before we started to walk uptown. I remember telling him to try to get the car, so after the first building collapsed and before the second building collapsed, I told him we were going to be -- I didn't know where we were going. Try to get the car, get around the battery on the other side and then call me and tell him where we were going so he could meet up with the Commissioner.

Q. Tell us for the record who John McLaughlin is.

A. John McLaughlin was the Commissioner's driver that day.

Q. He is a firefighter?

A. A lieutenant, he was driving the Fire Commissioner that day. We stayed up at 5 truck for, I don't know, an hour or couple of hours. At that point, I talked to John once or twice, getting tremendous amounts of phone calls and pages. Everybody wanted to know who was dead, who did you see, who we didn't see. Tom was alive. We left. John eventually got the car, got all the way back up to 5 truck, met us up there with Danny Lynch, who is a firefighter and another one of the Commissioner's drivers, who had secured another vehicle, and met us at the fire house there.

At that point, I guess the Mayor had made the decision to move the City Hall group, the operations command to the Police Academy. We left from there. We went to the Police Academy for again, I guess several hours, trying to set up some type of Fire Department command post at the Police Academy. We had the phones. We were looking for phones, we were looking for people, we fielded a whole bunch of phone calls up there. The police officers - we got set up - I believe it was in the library at police headquarters. We were there until sometime late in the afternoon.

At that point I had told Tom I was going to go back down to the site to try to see what was going on and I would call him back. I went down there with - I believe Danny Lynch drove me back down there. I went to the Fire Department operations post, which was at that time all the way up by Stuyvesant High School on West Street. I spoke to Chief Carruthers about what resources we needed. He gave me some instructions about trying to get us - I don't even remember what it was, whether it was more units, more ambulances or whatever it was, but I passed that information back on to our people at the Police Academy at that point.

[redacted] At that point, this was now late in the afternoon. I'm going to guess it was after 3:00.

Q. At that point in time had you heard anything about First Deputy Commissioner William Feehan or Chief of Department Peter Ganci?

A. No, we knew they were both missing because I had inquired six or seven times throughout the day as to their whereabouts. Everybody had said we couldn't find them, but at that point they had not been found. I was probably down at the operations post there by Stuyvesant High School for about 20 minutes when - it might have been Steve Mosiello, it might have been somebody else, came over to me and said we think we found Bill and Pete, Commissioner Feehan and Pete Ganci. I then walked down a couple of blocks back to the site. We were north of the Winter Garden at that point. It might have been - it was Vesey Street. We walked all the way back down to Vesey Street. There was a big discussion going on at that point about pulling all of our units out of 7 World Trade Center. Chief Nigro didn't feel it was worth taking the slightest chance of somebody else getting injured.

So at that point we made a decision to take all of our units out of 7 World Trade Center because there was a potential for collapse.

Q. It was on fire, correct, Captain?

A. Yes, it was on fire at that time. Then they said it suffered some form of structural damage. These things were going on at the same time. The fact that we thought we found Ganci and Feehan and his place at 7 World Trade Center. Made the decision to back everybody away, took all the units and moved them all the way back toward North End Avenue, which is as far I guess west as you could get on Vesey Street, to keep them out of the way.

At that point --

Q. Vesey or West?

A. It was as far west as we could go.

Q. I see. Okay. Near the water?

A. Near the water. At that point we are still hearing information that we found Ganci, we found Bill and we thought we had them and there was a lot of discussion going on. They thought they had Ray Downey. I remember talking to the Commissioner on the phone and him telling me make sure we know what we are talking about. I called him back a little while later after I had spoken to Chief Nick Visconti, who told me he went back. He did have Chief Ganci and Commissioner Feehan. Next half an hour or so, we were sitting down and sent him around, how we were going to bring their bodies out, where we were going to put them. I think the Commissioner had requested that the two of them go to the morgue in the same ambulance. We were tying to set that up.

Apparently they had taken Ganci's body out towards the north side of the World Financial Center and Feehan's body out through the south side of the World Financial Center. So I was with Henry McDonald at that point on Vesey Street and they had brought Ganci's body out and put him in the ambulance. Then we were waiting quite sometime for them to find out what was going on with Bill's body. Henry had taken a walk down to the other side of the World Financial Center, went through the World Financial Center, through the Winter Garden, out past Moran's Restaurant, around the back there to find out what the story was with Bill's body, if they were going to transport it by itself, they were going to bring him over to us. That was probably another 20 minutes.

At that point I had met Michael Regan, who is now our First Deputy, and a good friend of Bill Feehan's too. We decided we would take a walk over there, try to find out what was going on to try and get this straightened out. While we walked through the 1 World Financial Center, or 2, whichever one, I don't know which one. We went into the World Financial Center. We went through the Winter Garden, back outside again.

At that point somebody had passed by quickly there with a body. I remember saying something like I think that's Bill. He said no, Bill is in an ambulance. [redacted] He says everything is screwed up over here. No one knows what's going on. That was Bill's body. They were bringing him back. 15 minutes, 10 minutes later, absolutely no conception of what time it was, 7 World Trade Center collapsed. I remember hearing the building collapse and seeing the dust go up into the air. Myself and Michael Regan walked back over to Vesey Street. At that point we had Ganci, Feehan in the same ambulance. Chief Nick Visconti had given me possession of Feehan's helmet. He had a front piece from Chief Ganci's helmet. He gave that to Steve Mosiello, and [redacted].

Q. For the record, describe what a front piece is.

A. The front piece is the identifying marker on the front of your helmet. Has your assignment on there, or in case of the staff, it has -- Ganci's helmet says Chief of the Department. Bill Feehan's helmet said First Deputy Fire Commissioner on it. Commissioner Feehan's helmet was pretty much completely intact. Once I got the two of them into the ambulance, Henry McDonald went to the morgue in the ambulance with Commissioner Feehan and Chief Ganci. I then went to the morgue with Michael Regan. We had gotten up there actually before the ambulance arrived there. Pretty much had a horrible scene up there too, it was - they didn't really have any people yet, but it was chaos already up there too. I guess they were trying to get set up, because they had a refrigerator truck set up outside. There were hundreds of people on the street and inside. I remember them asking everybody to leave, that they didn't want this to be a circus.

Q. Was it now nighttime or still the afternoon?

A. It's about dusk now.

Q. Do you know where they found Commissioner Feehan's and Chief Ganci's bodies in relation to West Street and the World Financial Center?

A. I believe anecdotally from people that pulled them out that they were found outside of the Winter Garden, which is where I know Commissioner Feehan was and Chief Ganci was. They were both on the driveway where they had set up the command post on West Street and Tom Fitzpatrick was with them when the second tower collapsed. I think he ran a different way than they did.

When we went back there, the next day, the day after, there were markings on some of the walls down there marked with orange paint and arrows that said body and body. I don't know if that was them or not, for like a week, that's where they found the two of them. After we stayed there until they brought in Chief Ganci and Commissioner Feehan and made sure that the marshalls were going to be there with them to make positive identifications on them and at that point, we got back into the car and came back to headquarters.

We spent the rest of the night trying to plan for the rest of this catastrophe.

Q. Okay. I just have a few follow up clarification questions. When you said you looked out your window, just to clarify, your office is on what floor?

A. My office is on the 8th floor.

Q. Of headquarters?

A. Of headquarters.

Q. You said you drove over the bridge in Commissioner Feehan's car?

A. Yes.

Q. As you were going over the Brooklyn Bridge could you see the towers?

A. Yes.

Q. At that point only one tower had been hit, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. When you were in the lobby of the 1 World Trade Center tower, did you see any other Chiefs in that lobby, like Chief Burns or Chief Downey?

A. I didn't see Chief Burns. I didn't see Chief

Downey. I saw Chief McGovern, who was the Battalion Chief down there, who is dead. [redacted]

Q. Who was that, Chief McGovern?

A. No, Battalion Chief Pfeifer.

Q. Did you notice any damage to the lobby of the building?

A. Lot of broken glass in the lobby. There was a lot of stuff crashing down inside the lobby. Several of the windows, had to be 20 feet tall, were already broken out. There was stuff knocked over in the lobby at that point. Some of the trees. It was just - you could look up and see literally hundreds and hundreds of people running back and forth on the next level up from where we were. We were at street level. There was escalators. People were actually much more orderly than we expected at that time.

Q. But there weren't many civilians down there where you were in the lobby on West Street, near West Street?

A. There was some. The ones that were down there were not looking to hang around. They were coming down and trying to find a way to get out. We were trying to not let anybody out of the doors on to West Street because there was quite a few jumpers at that point. Jumping on to West Street. People jumping from tower one.

Q. Did you happen to see Father Judge there in that vicinity at that time?

A. I believe I saw Father Judge in the lobby of 1 World Trade Center at some point. I don't know when it was. I don't remember having a conversation with him. I just have a recollection of seeing him. There were several people there. I have a recollection of seeing him, but I did not have a conversation with him or recall that I was speaking to him.

Q. Just a couple more questions. Obviously you at some point had to cross West Street to get to the other side, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. You were obviously very wary of jumpers, cautious leaving 1 World Trade Center?

A. Tell you the truth, I stepped outside through the glass window, I looked up and I made it as hastily as I could away from the building without trying to fall on the glass. The street was just littered with glass at that point.

Q. There was a firefighter who was hit by a jumper in that vicinity named Suhr. Did you happen to see him when you were leaving the building?

A. No.

Q. 5 truck, when you arrived up there, were there any firefighters there or had they all left to go down to the site?

A. There was nobody in the fire house when we got there, because cops were panicking at that point to get into the fire house. They were trying to jimmy the lock with a knife. I just said give me a minute. I will get you a combination for the door. They tried to break the window with an oxygen bottle. I called EOC and I got the combination of the building at the fire house. Then after 15 minutes of being there, a guy showed up.

Q. EOC is what?

A. Fire emergency operations downstairs on the 7th floor of the headquarters. They have all the combinations there of the fire house.

Q. When you were walking from the vicinity of City Hall up to 5 truck, did anybody inform you of any updates regarding planes hitting any other facilities such as the Pentagon?

A. No, but I remember while we were on West Street, I remember hearing Chief Callan, I believe it was him, on the handy talky, saying to evacuate the building. That was 1 World Trade Center. Get everybody out of the building and then the piece after that was something to the extent that there was a third unidentified aircraft coming towards New York City. The plane did not identify themselves. That was when he called for that Mayday to evacuate the building, get everybody out of the building.

Q. How long after that Mayday did the tower collapse?

A. Approximately, I would say probably between 15 and 20 minutes. Because I remember hearing somebody on the radio saying they were on the 41st floor. They were working their way down.

Q. You mean a firefighter?

A. It was a company officer, yes.

Q. At some point did you lose radio communication, either before or after the first collapse?

A. There was a dead silence after the first building collapsed, for a period of time. Then the radio traffic even after that was somewhat subdued. I believe that's because most of the people on the radios were probably dead at that point.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: I have nothing further Captain. Thank you very much. The time is now 11:17 and we will conclude this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT ALEXANDER LOUTSKY

Interview Date: October 24, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 24, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The time is now 0632 hours.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with --

A. EMT Alexander Loutsky of Battalion 4.

Q. This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 4 regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Alex, begin with when you were assigned to the job or --

A. Okay, well, what happened was I had just exchanged vehicles at Battalion 4 around, a little after 8:30 and I was in vehicle -- I was reassigned to vehicle 219. As I was going back to my area, which is a few blocks from the World Trade Center, I was talking with my partner, Hank Ramos, and saw in front of me while we were about, I would say around Pearl Street, we had a view of the World Trade Center, which was only a few blocks away and I stopped him and I said to look at that plane, that it was flying extremely low and that it looked like it was about to hit. A few seconds later it did hit.

After that, we were both kind of shooken up. I picked up the radio and I transmitted a priority signal to let them know that it was an EMS confirmation that a plane had in fact hit the World Trade Center. After that, the dispatcher acknowledged it, but the radio then became flooded with so many different signals that we weren't able to really let him know we were headed there.

We were just a couple of blocks from there, so we did, we headed there and we were -- we went to Church and Fulton Street, which was right by the Millennium Hotel. We actually were right by -- actually, originally I should say we were more close to the St. Pauls cemetery, we were parked right there.

When we got there, we noticed that there was a great number of people that were streaming out of the World Trade Center. They looked terrified. They were panicked. Some of them had various degrees of injuries. Many of them were just running wounded, as it were, but they had varying degrees of injuries, but they were running, so forth and so on. We were basically inundated.

We couldn't radio -- I was operating the vehicle that day, so I was supposed to be making the radio transmissions and I just found it impossible to do it because it was just -- inundated, just jammed with so many signals that I wasn't able to. We had so many victims that came up to us that -- some of them my partner was attending to, others I tried to make an attempt; however, it was a vain attempt at having a triage and trying to line them up and tag them.

There were just too many of them and many of them were asking questions and some of them were in such shock that their questions seemed, you know, just a waste of time. Like should I go back in and get my wife or something like that. We tried our best that way.

Then what happened is the second unit came behind us, I believe it was 2 Boy. It was David Timothy and I can't recall offhand who he was working with, oh, Jai Zion. I believe he resigned. They then came and together we tried to do the same thing. Then at that point, a fire truck came through and we started -- then we started to realize that with the amount of people swelling, that the area was going to become difficult for further emergency resources to get through. So we tried to make room and so forth and so on.

Then I guess just about that time, if my memory serves me, it was Lieutenant D'Avila, he came on the scene and we were able to at least have some semblance of a command. When that occurred, he had ordered us to go -- to proceed with him to West Street, really in between Vesey and Liberty, more like where 1 World Trade Center was. We had a number of victims who became our patients, and we were successfully tagging them and I would say less than 10 at the time, you know. Many people were just running with their injuries. The ones that were willing to receive help, you know, probably had, for whatever reason, they took our help.

At any rate, what happened at this time was we were trying -- Lieutenant D'Avila said that our -- 01 Charlie, which was our unit, that my partner and myself were staging officers and that we were to focus solely on that and not to get sidetracked by other things. So we did that.

Our duties separately were to try to help get the people in ambulances and out of there and to try to get the ones that were -- had injuries that were not so life threatening, to get them out of the borough so that they don't inundate hospitals and to do the best we can in terms of getting names or what ambulances went where and so forth and so on.

Around that time, I didn't at the time realize it, but from where we were at, which was right in front of the World Trade Center on the West Side Highway area, there was an explosion and a lot of debris started coming down. Apparently that was the second plane that hit. We lost all of our patients in terms of them running away. They -- the noise and the debris scared them all away and they ran off. We didn't have any left.

We went into our vehicle and Lieutenant D'Avila went into the command vehicle and we started proceeding towards the direction of Liberty in our ambulance and there was a tremendous amount of debris coming down in that area. We just took a turn up Liberty this way to do a U turn, because this was like destroyed.

Q. Okay. Towards the Hudson.

A. Right, so a lot of things were raining down. We knew we had to get out of there. We turned around and we went back on the West Side Highway, made a right turn on Vesey and then made a right turn on Fulton and Church and we were at the Millennium Hotel area once again.

There we were under -- we had more resources, more emergency medical command resources arrived and we were still functioning as staging officers as Lieutenant D'Avila directed us to be and it seemed like that was going very successfully in terms of evacuating people out of there. In front of the Millennium Hotel, that became a triage area. It was effective. It was -- people were tagged, it seemed very organized. It was good because there was so many people, so many people coming out of there, and some of them weren't able to ambulate, so they were being carried out, so forth and so on, so we were able to assist in that way. So I assisted numerous times, helping people, like taking them from civilians, so forth and so on.

I did what I was instructed to do in terms of trying to get people that were at least the least amount of injuries out of the borough. We had a number of ambulances and we tried as best we could to put as many people as we can, as possible, without causing any kind of danger to them or anyone else. So we were successful in trying to get a maximum of 6 patients per ambulance. The more severe cases, you know, like the burns, the third degree burns and so forth that went to Cornell, we tried to keep patients of that kind, of that condition, together, or if they weren't burns, at least something that was -- that needed a trauma center or something like that.

We did that. I only had a little confusing time when I had certain -- you know, I had my instructions given to me from Lieutenant D'Avila, but there were at times, I was sidetracked by various Captains that were trying to give me different orders that were -- a few things that kind of sidetracked me and I didn't think it made entirely enough sense, but I tried the best I could to obey it.

But it was very crazy there at the time. Like one of them wanted me to get every single patient's name and it just was not possible. There was so much screaming and it just seemed like the worst question to ask in the middle of an ambulance while people are suffering and screaming. It just didn't work out that way.

I did my best you know, in terms of that. But I, you know, I just continued to do and keep my focus as Lieutenant D'Avila told me to do, just to focus on what I was doing, because I know that if I started getting sidetracked, then nothing was going to get accomplished, so that's why I just stayed stuck with what I was doing.

So then actually, right around that time when I had that little confusion in my mind because I was told to do something that just didn't seem to -- it just seemed like certain brass in my mind was like -- maybe they just had, like they really didn't have much street time or something. If you don't mind me saying that. They were like in an office so much and then they are asking me with their authority to do something that's not going to be productive, but I can't question it, but do you know what I mean?

Q. Yes.

A. So I was in that little quandary at the time, because I'm saying well how -- I'm trying to get the names, but the person is screaming in agony and they want to get them out of there. Then another person is screaming. I can't even hear them, you know. I'm trying to comply with this, you know, but what was mostly more important was evacuating them, getting them treated and transported out of there. Because even though I didn't, and I didn't think that anybody thought that the buildings were going to collapse, we knew it was not a safe scene. There was debris. There was all kinds of things that could possibly happen.

We knew we weren't necessarily in the hot zone, but we were in the wrong zone. So the risks increase. So we just wanted to, you know, rather than deliberate too much on one thing like that, but anyway, at any rate, I -- at that time, I heard a rumble, you know, and then it was, you know, really like, almost like an earthquake.

Then what happened was I heard people screaming and running and then it seemed like they were going to -- it was like going to be a trampling. It was just like bedlam. Of the patients that we had that had any ability to ambulate or maybe didn't think they did, had, then had the ability to.

Q. Found it.

A. Then I started to run for safety too, because I looked up and I saw that the building was going to come down. We were right across the street from it, you know, so I -- at first I -- there was so many people, I thought they were going to trample me, that I went by the Millennium Hotel, there is like a driveway with one of those automatic lifting gates, steel gates that roll up.

I went there. There was a cop there, he was kneeling down, looking, trying to get cover and I was above him and I said there is no security here. There is no place to go, you know. I was under a truck for a second or two, because, well, I ducked down, you know, because there was so many people and there was -- they were just going to roll, you know, trod me.

So what happened was I -- suddenly, I was near that garage area, the sky as it blacks out, and then all of a sudden, it just came down. There was no place to go. There was nothing you could do. You were just thoroughly overcome by the particulate matter. It just went totally black. You no longer heard anything. It was like your fingers were in your ear, everything was just numbed out. There was so much particulate matter that it covered every orifice. You couldn't take a breath in. You couldn't see. You couldn't anything.

I was just kind of like putting my hand out and I didn't even know where -- I didn't know exactly which direction I was facing any more. I didn't know if I was -- I knew that I was on -- I knew that I was on Fulton Street, just off of Church, because I ran up to like here, right on the side of the Millennium Hotel, across the street from St. Pauls cemetery. But I didn't know if I was facing the cemetery. I didn't know if I was facing the Millennium Hotel. I didn't know if I was facing Church. I didn't know if I was facing Broadway. I was totally blind and discoordinated in that and I couldn't hear anything.

More importantly, I couldn't breathe at all. I was kind of panicky about that. Then I thought maybe if I dug a hole in the cemetery and put my head in it or something. Or if I -- I didn't know what to do. I was very scared, because I knew I was going to die at that point. There was nothing, you know, I thought and I had some thoughts like I thought well, what if this is biological now or rather chemical. What if this is a bomb actually that went off after the plane crashed and now maybe there is something chemical. Then I said well, maybe the heat would have destroyed it.

But that was real quick thoughts but it never really stayed with me because I was panicking, I was starting to panic and I didn't want to panic because I figured then I wouldn't have a chance, but then I thought I didn't have a chance anyway, because there was -- this particulate matter that was just causing total blackness and you couldn't even use any of your senses or breathe, wasn't going to settle, wasn't going to settle quick enough for me to catch a breath, so I kind of like realized that that was the situation, but it was hard for me to accept it entirely.

So I kind of like was feeling around me and I was using my radio and I was banging around, and I was banging around. I knew when I touched a solid material, but because the particulate matter was so thick I didn't know what the matter was. I didn't know if it was concrete, wood or what, but what I did do and I hit it with my radio, was I heard glass crack, so I put my hand inside and then I put my head in and it turned out to be a van, which I didn't know fully at the time, but I figured it was a vehicle of some kind, because I felt a chair and stuff like that.

So I put my head and half my body and I kind of went in and my head was down at the bottom and I was -- I had it covered with my jacket, but still the particulate matter was so dense and the pressure, as soon as the window was open it pushed it in, but it gave me enough where I just calmed myself and just told myself to just don't be greedy and take short breaths. I was under there and I was just taking short breaths, short breaths, and calm down so you don't require so much. It was hard to do that though, but I tried my best, you know.

It worked. The particulate matter was settling a little bit. I mean it was like a fog and I started getting out of there. I came out, I was half in the vehicle. I came out of it and I could see now that it was a van and I could see Broadway, but everything was like a dense fog but I could know that that's where I was. I knew the hospital was down, a couple blocks down from there. So I started in that direction.

I still couldn't breathe well, you know, because the particulate matter was still there, but I could see and I could take short breaths and I would cough a lot and stuff like that, but I tried my best and it did work and I got to the hospital, they gave me oxygen where I was standing and then they cleaned me up in the sink. They put my head in there and they took a pulse-ox of me while I was standing and stuff and you know, cleaned my face because it all caked and stuff like that.

Then after that it was just -- a few minutes went by and I told them I'm done and I have to go back. They told me to stay and I said no, I told them I was fine, but I wanted to go back because I felt like I might have abandoned my post. I got my partner there and that was where I belonged. So I started going back, you know, and I was coughing and hacking a lot, but it didn't matter because I felt a lot better. I was just, you know, getting it out.

So I went back and when I got back, I saw on Broadway, some of us were there. I saw men with Lieutenant D'Avila. He was getting -- jumped on me and hugging me and crying and everything. So I asked him where my partner was, where Eric is and they didn't know, you know.

So I went back and that was on -- where I met them was on Fulton Street and Broadway, right here, so I just went back here where I was and I saw that it was -- it had collapsed, the north tower had collapsed. My ambulance was right over there.

It was in flames and I met a firefighter there, Alex Santoro, and this police officer, I don't remember his name, and the three of us were, you know, we had gone through it. I didn't know they did. They didn't know I did. We wanted to try to find our people. I said where is my partner and the cop said I don't know where my partner is and stuff like that.

So we decided to stick together rather than separate and try to see who could find anybody, you know, in this mess -- especially our people. So that's what we did. Then we were like right around here on

Q. Dey and Church?

A. Right, right across the street from the south tower and then the south tower, we heard a rumble and we didn't even look. We ran, okay. We ran. I tell you my legs were sore for three days after that, just that jog that I took. We ran from here, which is on Church Street and Dey. Okay. Right across the street was where the south tower was.

So we were on, on Church and Dey Street, right here, right across the street, again, from the World Trade and when we heard that rumble, we didn't even look. It was like instinct, the three of us, without even looking at each other, just the beginnings of that rumble, we just sprinted out of there and we actually made it up Dey Street. We crossed Broadway and there was right in here a little chocolate candy store, okay. Now there is no way you can beat that thing when it collapses. There is no way at all. That I can tell you. So when we heard that rumble, that thing came down and the whole thing went black the second we went into that candy store.

We slammed the door and as we slammed the door all of the particulate matter with the pressure that it had was billowing inside that chocolate store, but not enough to overcome us, you know and we were in there.

We didn't know -- at this point there was a radio going on at this time. I remember it saying the Palestinians are taking responsibility for this. I don't know how accurate at that time that was, but it came off of that AM radio so we were kind of like looking at each other and -- I mean we didn't know what to make of it. We thought that maybe we were at war. Definitely we were at war, you know. I thought we were at war, because I didn't think that the plane to my knowledge, from what I understood, that the plane was enough to do that, you know.

I thought we were at war. I didn't know if there was going to be any chemical stuff being used. I didn't have any -- I felt ill equipped in that respect. I didn't feel that I had anything to protect me with respect to that.

We just decided that what we were going to do was -- we reaffirmed the fact that we were going to stick together, the three of us. We didn't know what was going on. We didn't know if we were going to get out of there. We didn't know that necessarily the World Trade Center was fully collapsed or if it was going to collapse in the fashion that we now know it did, because there was an (inaudible) open. Might have fallen over.

Q. Toppled.

A. It was tall enough to crush where we were at without a doubt. So we were safe from the particulate matter, but we didn't feel safe in terms of us going to get crushed.

We put that aside and Alex Santoro, the firefighter, he said well, Alex, let's just start saving up water, because the water main is going to go probably, more than likely. Because of the situation, they may shut them down.

So I started to -- because it was a candy store, the old chocolate, big chocolate, you know, and it had these big glass jars, I started emptying them out, the chocolates put in a pile because we might use that as food too. I take the canister and clean it out and start filling it with water and then the other Alex, the firefighter, he would seal it with plastic, so he sealed the tops. That's what we were doing, because we didn't know how long we would be there, la-la-la, so that's what we did.

We did that for a while. Seemed like a while. I got this -- I had a cellphone then that I had just got like two days before. I thought well, let me see if I can call somebody and see if anybody is around. If it's more extensive than we think, if I could give a message to my mother or my family or something like that. I couldn't get through. I tried a few numbers. One of them actually went through. It was an answering machine and I left a message on the answering machine, you know. It was a friend's friend that I really didn't know too well, but I left a message, you know, the last will and testament kind of thing, as if in fact they weren't going to be affected by it. So I did that.

Then afterwards -- the cop was saying stay away from the doors, because if there is any frantic police officers out there they'll use their guns, so I remember that. Then I think there was also some civilians that we were able to get inside that were, you know, straggling, one or two of them. Couldn't breathe out there, and we wanted to get them in, but we had to do it quick, because the minute you opened that door, the whole thing would get filled, flooded.

So anyway, we did that for a while and then as the thing started to settle, outside looked foggier instead of black. So we all decided let's go out and let's go find survivors. You know, so that's what we did. We started on -- let's see -- where did we go? I don't think -- yes, we were on John, but did we go down John. Yes, we went down John Street and every building side to side, we would go to. We tried to get in and see if there were any survivors and we found that there were quite a few buildings where people were hiding in the basements. We asked them if they had water or access to water.

Me and Alex, we got big pipes that we had used, that if we needed to break into storage to get water, or food or at least have access to so they could get to it. Because at this point where we are at, it was such destruction and what we experienced was so horrific, we didn't know that we were at war and it was more prolific. We certainly were acting in a way that I think was sound and Alex led us in that respect, because we wanted to make sure that the survivors, you know, had water and so forth and so on.

That's what we did. We went from building to building, going all the way down John Street. As we went down John Street, at some point we reached Water Street. At Water Street, things started to look less horrific and there was more people, you know, emergency personnel, and there was Chief Vlicharz. He is a Battalion Chief at Engine 4 on Duane and Broadway, our area, where 1 Charley is from.

He said to me -- he knew me and he said to me that I should go right away to Engine 7, which is on South Street and Old Slip. That's about 5 or 7 blocks from where I met him and to go register there, because I'm missing and presumed dead. He said go over there and register there so they know that you are all right. Okay.

Then he -- after that, I was supposed to go with a firefighter and we were supposed to go back to the World Trade Center and help get people out of there, you know. So I went to the fire house, my radio wasn't working all this time, by the way. So I went to the fire house, I registered over there in the logbook and the Captain is there and he asked my name verbally again and so forth. Okay, don't worry about it. He says, okay now. Go back to the World Trade Center and go help out over there.

So I wasn't entirely sure what I was supposed to do, because I didn't know -- I didn't see anybody from my unit. I didn't see anybody that was -- I saw Chief Vlicharz. I didn't know where everybody else was. It just seemed a natural thing was to just follow direction from the Fire Department personnel, you know, and I -- they couldn't tell me where EMS was at the time. It was too crazy at the time and everybody was absorbed in their duties, which is understandable.

So I started signing in and talking to the Captain as I say. Then my radio was working. I heard a command center at the ferry terminal was talking to someone else. I'm touching the radio you know, trying to hear better and putting it louder and stuff like that. So I told the Captain listen, it sounds like they have a command center at South Street ferry terminal, which is not far. The Chief directed me to go to the World Trade Center with him.

Is it all right if I'm relieved of that so I can go and seek out, you know, my command. He says yes, go ahead. So I went and I went to the ferry terminal. I met up -- there was a couple of Chiefs out there. They just told me to direct, to help direct civilians that were being evacuated at this point. I believe the city was -- Mayor had made a directive to that effect I believe.

What I was supposed to do is direct them to -- so I was directing them into various ferries. They had ferries going to Brooklyn, they had ferries going to Staten Island, ferries going to New Jersey and so forth and I was helping direct them. I did that for a number of hours, just getting them you know, where they are supposed to be going, so I assisted in that.

After hours of doing that, it became night fall and I was upstairs helping them in the triage area. Then I guess after -- I was almost there for 16 hours. Then there really wasn't anybody left in terms of victims. It just seemed like at that point we were saying that well, it looks like you are either dead or you are a walking wounded kind of thing. So I was told by a supervisor that since I live in Staten Island, just a boat ride away, just go home, refresh yourself and come back in the morning.

That's what I did. I went home after 16 hours. I tried to sleep, I couldn't sleep. I actually came back 3 hours later because I was very hypersensitive to sounds [redacted] They dissipated over time.

Basically that's the story.

Q. Do you remember where -- when you saw the first plane go in, do you remember what streets you were on when you saw?

A. Yes, I saw exactly where I was in my mind, but I'm trying to tell you the name of it. It is --

Q. Off the map?

A. Yes, it's right in this white area. But I will tell you, it was City Hall park, like right around -- I would call it -- right by the Brooklyn Bridge and Pearl Street.

Q. Okay.

A. Right around the Brooklyn Bridge and Pearl Street. You got a view of it. It's like right in front of you. I'm sitting at the light and he is talking to me and I'm saying right, right, wo, look at that. It's going to hit. It's going to hit and that's when it hit.

Q. When you first came into Fulton and Church, coming down Fulton, from down Church --

A. No, I came -- what I did was -- let's see,

Pearl, went down -- sorry, went down by the Brooklyn -- where is the Brooklyn Bridge here?

Q. Brooklyn Bridge would be up about here.

A. Really. Let's see.

Q. This is the top edge.

A. At any rate, I will just say this. I came from Fulton Street. I went from Fulton Street, from where the Brooklyn Bridge would be here. I went down like this and went down like that. That's how I did it.

Q. That's westbound on Fulton.

A. Right.

Q. All right.

A. Is this westbound? Yes, you are right. Forgive me. Yes, this is westbound.

Q. Put a number there. This is your first stop?

A. Right. I was actually parked right inside here.

Q. Inside of Fulton Street?

A. Right over here we were parked, right here. Then we moved it over here.

Q. Right. When you got around to -- in front of 1 World Trade Center, it was you -- 2 Boy, I think it was, you said, 2 Adam?

A. No, 2 Boy came here.

Q. Did they follow you around to --

A. I don't recall, I don't recall, I suspect, but I can't say for sure. I kind of was like -- we were very close to the Lieutenant at that point and I think most of the -- I don't recall seeing them, but I don't recall, sorry.

Q. No problem. When you came around to West Side Highway, do you recall aside from the Lieutenant, any other EMS units there?

A. Well yes, there was a couple of paramedic units that came from hospital vollies. I recall a couple of Fire Department units there. I don't remember their designations. There was Lieutenant D'Avila and there was a Chief that came and there was some Lieutenants, Chief or something like that there, you know, that came, that were in that area with us. We had our patients right over here. Here.

Q. Right.

A. We were sitting down -- like over here, you don't see it in this picture, but over here, there is like a big wall that separates from World Trade Center, you know.

Q. Right.

A. Like that.

Q. Yes.

A. It was very protected because it was like an overhang, so nothing could affect anybody from that -- from that -- you know, from that. No one thought the building was going to come down, that's the whole thing. That's when it caught everybody in a surprise. I've heard people argue all different things, like what we could have done.

Like -- I think we did very well, in terms of what we were trained to do. I think it worked very well with what our expectations were, because if we knew the building was going to collapse, you would have to be a quarter mile away from that place, because that building was going about a quarter mile high, so how far could you have been. You still would have been in danger, you know. So -- and it's part of our job. We don't want to be injured or killed because we want to be able to assist people, but we are in the warm zone and there is a certain risk involved. That's part of the job.

But I think that we acted with due regard in a sober fashion. I'm very happy. There is a lot to learn I'm sure, and you guys are probably going to bring that out. But I think that everything -- I'm glad that Lieutenant D'Avila was there and the others that led us in the right direction, you know. So. That's it.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay, thank you very much. Time is now 0711 hours. The interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS CHIEF RANDALL HIRTH

Interview Date: October 24, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 24th, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The time is now 0820 hours and I am conducting an interview with Chief Hirth, Commander, Division 1, EMS, Borough of Manhattan. This interview is being conducted at the Division 1 office.

Q. Chief?

A. All right. We were at the Academy in refresher and the page came over that there was a problem at the World Trade Center. Lieutenant Cacciola was with me and I told her that we really need to respond. We got into the car. Lieutenant Roger Moore came out and requested transportation to go with us, so he jumped in the car with us and we proceeded to respond. We notified Citywide and proceeded to respond to the World Trade Center.

En route there we could see that -- while we were en route a second plane hit the building, but we didn't see that, but we heard it over the radio. But we saw both towers burning. We came down through the Midtown Tunnel down to the FDR Drive and around to the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. When I got to the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel, I decided that we should leave the car there and walk in the rest of the way. I didn't want to block other emergency vehicles, particular fire trucks and everything else. So I left my car at Brooklyn Battery Tunnel and proceeded to walk to the World Trade Center down the West Side Highway.

As soon as we got out of the car and we took our first few steps, we noticed the body parts in the street and I believe that's what we realized that this was going to be ugly. We proceeded to walk down the West Side Highway and we were trying to locate the command post, which was opposite the Trade Centers and in front of the World Financial Center.

We walked up to the command post. That's where we left Lieutenant Roger Moore, at the command post, and Chief Kowalczyk requested that I respond to the north side of the second tower because they were having a lot of problems there and he asked if I could take command of that area over there. I agreed to do that and Lieutenant Cacciola was going with me and she suggested that we make our way, instead of down the West Side Highway, over to the Trade 7 tower because there was stuff coming off the building, debris and some people were still jumping at that point. So we decided to go through the World Financial building, down the corridor, come out the other side and be on the north side of the tower.

En route through there, she also suggested that we call our family members, make a quick phone call so they knew that we were safe, and I thought that was a good idea being that this was going to be an extended operation. So halfway through the corridor we stopped where there was a phone there and I called my wife and told her that she was going to see this on the news but not to worry, that I was safe, and I got off the phone. It was a quick conversation. I didn't have time to talk to her. Then she proceeded to call her mother and her sister.

While she was telling her sister that she was safe, what I perceived to be the building started rumbling, the one we were in, and it was my impression that a third plane hit the building we were in. I had no idea that the first tower was collapsing, which we couldn't see at that point. But we looked down the hall from where we came and we saw the building starting to come down, and it was actually the roof of that building, but we thought the whole building was coming down.

She dropped the phone and we proceeded to run to go out through the corridor into the Winter Garden and try and run out the back way that way, out through the Winter Garden, but when we got down at the end of the hall and into the beginning of the Winter Garden, we saw the whole roof of the Winter Garden coming down and we knew that we couldn't make that an escape route. So we turned around and headed back into the corridor, and that's when it looked like a tidal wave of smoke was coming down the hall and it was just about to engulf us.

So it was my impression at that point that the whole building was going down, that a third plane hit the building, and that we were probably going to be dead at that point. So I just yelled to her to dive into the corner of the hall, that possibly we could have some protection, and she dove into one area and I dove into another area. The rumbling, the building was rumbling, and we thought the whole building was coming down, people were screaming in the hall, the smoke engulfed us, we couldn't see, and there was just a loud rumble, a jet rumbling, alarms started going off and we actually thought we were going to die at that point.

I don't know the time frame, how long that was going on for, but at one point everything went silent except for the alarm, a very, very loud alarm in that building. Then we realized that the part we were in didn't collapse and then I got up and I had no idea where Lieutenant Cacciola was and I started to head back into the collapse here a little bit to see if I could find her, and that's when she yelled that she was behind me and she kept yelling and then I went back and through her voice I found her.

Then I knew we had to get out of there because either it was going to collapse some more or the smoke was going to kill us. So we started to try and figure out a way to get out back this way somehow, through the Winter Garden again, and people were coming by us, they were running hysterical, and someone came by with a flashlight and pointed to go in some direction, and we just kept going in that direction until we saw an opening and then we just climbed through some rubble and wound up outside.

At the point we got outside, I met up with a bunch of EMTs and a lot of people were injured outside, and it was still my impression at that point we were still under attack and a third plane hit our building. I still wasn't aware because when we got outside the whole area was covered with white smoke, thick white smoke that you couldn't see more than five feet in front of you, if that much. I directed a bunch of EMTs to help whoever they could and leave the area and go where it's safe, and I had no idea where that was at that point because I was turned upside-down. I told them, I said, wherever they thought was safe, that's where they needed to go, and try and get these people out of here and that was it. I said they couldn't help anyone else at that point, they had to save themselves and just get whoever could out of there and that was all we could do at that point.

So they started to go and we started to get a few of the injured people up that were laying there. We were telling them they had to get up, even though they're injured, they couldn't stay, that we would have people to help move them and they had to just help themselves and, if they laid there, they probably were going to get killed. So most of them got up and started walking even though they were bleeding and whatever their injuries were, and we pointed the direction which way they should go. There was too many of them for us to treat by ourselves, plus we didn't have equipment at that point. So they left and kept going.

Q. You were sending them north on the West Side Highway?

A. North. We were telling them to go north because we knew we were on this side, the north side of the tower and you couldn't go south. So we were sending them north and figured somewhere they would meet up with responding units coming in and they would receive aid and help. We were going the same way because we had to get out of the smoke because we still couldn't breathe, and I guess we turned, and I'm not positive of this, but maybe on Vesey Street and made our way down to North Avenue. Somewhere in that vicinity we saw a trailer, a parks restoration trailer, that's what I remember reading on the sign, and we saw people in there.

So we knocked on that door and they opened the door and let us in, and there was no smoke in there, so we were able to breathe a little again and they let us wash up, they gave us some water, they let us use the facilities, and then we tried to make some phone calls from there to see if we could get Citywide or whoever, but none of those calls were going through. Then we were able to get through to -- I was able to call my wife again, but for whatever reason, it wasn't letting calls go into Brooklyn. So on those calls, I don't know why, but I was able to call my wife and no one else.

Then someone knocked on that door of the trailer and said the second building was going to collapse and it was probably going to collapse onto this trailer and you had to get out of here or you were going to die. So we came back out and there were scores of people still running north and we just got in with them and we started running with them. I guess we were going north on North Avenue and probably on Murray Street, instead of following the crowd north on North Avenue -- and I'm not positive but I think we turned on Murray and we went down to the driving path or whatever, the walkway on River Terrace, and that's where we watched that whole building collapse and we realized at that point that both towers were down and we thought we were still under attack at that point.

There was a large group of people with us and we started going north again on River Avenue until we came up to the school, and after the school is the West Side Highway to turn and go north again. But what happened at the school was there was a major gas leak coming out of there and PD came to us and said that this building was going to blow up and we had to get everybody out of here, and at that point the school itself started filing out. So you had the large crowd from the North Terrace and then you had all the school emptying out.

So rather than keep going, we decided to help PD, because there was only a few of them, to try and get the school and these people out. At some point across the street there was some gunfire and the people started running back towards us and we knew they couldn't go back that way, so we formed a wall on North Terrace and we were getting almost stampeded but trying to turn these people around to make them go back to West Street, West Side Highway, and go that way. When we finally accomplished that, myself, Grace and the police officers doing this, we were pretty confident that that building was going to blow and we probably were going to get killed at that point again, and it was hard to rationalize that we were going to stand there and wait to get blown up because people didn't want to listen.

But we did that and we finally got everybody turned around and the building didn't blow, and then we went out to West Street and then we made our way up to a little further up West Street, and that's where we turned out of the crowd and went into a golf course where there was a -- next to the golf course there was a ferry dock.

Do you want me to continue on that?

Q. Sure.

A. We were at the golf course. We tried to get our bearings together. I'm pretty sure both of us were pretty much in shock at that point and we tried to figure out what was going on. Then we left the golf course and we worked our way a little bit further west to where the ferry was and we directed people in how to get on the ferry or where the one ferry was docking, to get on and just go wherever it's going and get out of here because some people were a little hesitant. One woman wanted to go back to the Trade Center because she left something in the building and we tried to tell her it wasn't a good idea. We watched people get on the ferry, helped them on the ferries, and then we went into the shop where the guy that supposedly runs the ferry was there and he let us wash up and have a drink. I don't know how long we stayed in there, and that's when we decided do we keep going north or do we go back? We finally decided that we had to go back.

We came out of that shack, we went back to the towers, as close as we could get, and at that point we realized that there was no one there, that anybody that was there was probably dead. There was no one. No one injured, there was no injuries, there was just devastation. There was nobody to help at that point. So we then left the Trade Center again.

This whole time we were out of radio contact with anybody. The radios didn't work, the phones didn't work. So we had no communications. We had no idea what plans were being made. So we decided to head north again on the West Side Highway, and at some point we met up with Captain Stone and Richie Zarrillo. Once we met with them, they had a little more information than we had, that there was a staging area set up at Chelsea Piers, which I guess was another two miles down the road, but at that point, I don't know how many hours we were there at that point, but we were in no shape to walk to the Chelsea Piers.

So we got a police van to turn around and take us. We lucked out because they were under a different direction, but I kind of like commandeered them and they took us to the Chelsea Piers. Again we refreshed ourselves, tried to get our thoughts together and tried to find out exactly what happened.

Do you want me to continue with the whole thing?

Q. That's good.

A. Cut off there?

Q. Yes. That covers the period that we're looking at.

A. That's it.

Q. Okay. Any thoughts or opinions?

A. Thoughts or opinions. Well, my thoughts are that, which has been since this happened, that both myself and Lieutenant Cacciola along with probably a lot of other people will have a lot of trouble sleeping and stuff, but my thoughts and opinions are that we felt that we were very helpless back at the scene, a building the size of the World Trade Center falling down and you can't do nothing at that point but run, and it was very frustrating that there was no one else after the buildings went down that needed help. Everybody was gone and that was very frustrating.

I don't know. That's it. We were convinced three different occasions inside of probably a two-hour period that we were going to die, once from the first building that we were in, then when the second collapse, then the gas leak. So it's a hard thing to try and do your job and kind of be pretty sure that you were not going to survive. I guess that really messed us up and knowing that we lost everybody that we lost in the Trade Center that we know that didn't come out and we know that they were in there and it was very frustrating that they were in there and there was nothing we could do about it.

I guess there's nothing else to say. It's just that we were very frustrated that we couldn't do more than we did. I guess we were just happy to be alive, but it was a very frustrating experience.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. Thank you, chief. The time is now 0836. The interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT GRACE CACCIOLA

Interview Date: October 24, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 24, 2001. The time is now 0727 hours. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with?

A. Grace Cacciola, Lieutenant, Division 1.

Q. This interview is being conducted at the Division 1 office and is regarding the events of the morning of September 11, 2001.

A. I was at the bureau training. I was in refresher. We were on a break when Chief Hirth came in to me at approximately 8:50, between 8:50 and 8:55. He said he was just paged that a plane had hit the towers or one of the towers. We assumed it was a small plane; however, we did think there were going to be numerous patients, only because of the time of the morning and the usual rush hour traffic. He said he was going to call RCC and Citywide to get details, because we may be leaving, being that he was that Division commander. We may be leaving to go help out in Manhattan, to get my stuff ready.

We went and made the phone calls. I went to the car, put everything in the car. PD SOD was chaotic. Citywide was starting with get very busy with air traffic. We got in the car, we called Citywide and said they didn't need his response as of yet, but to stand by. Two seconds later, he said you know what, it's my borough, we will go in.

As we are driving out the second tower was hit. We realized at that point this was no little accident. Got into Manhattan. I would say -- actually I didn't look at the history, 15 minutes. We parked by -- actually Roger Moore was in the car with us also. He came with us. He was in refresher with us. It was so it was Chief Hirth and myself and Lieutenant Roger Moore. We parked by the mouth of the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. We got out of the car, first thing we saw was a severed torso, like 10 feet in front of us. There was a cop guarding the torso.

As we were walking up to the command post, people were still jumping out of the towers. There were body parts and fragments and blood all over the place. Mass chaos. Both towers were still standing at this point. We went over to the command post and at the command post we saw Chief Gombo, Chief Kowalczyk, EMT Richie Zarrillo, Lieutenant Ross Terranova, Chief Ganci, Chief Sal Cassano, and then all aides, chauffeurs and what have you from the fire side.

Chief Gombo asked Chief Hirth to respond to the north side of the north tower. They were getting numerous calls for numerous patients on that side. We said okay, we were going. We told them we would leave Roger Moore with them at the command post because Roger has problems walking, with his knees. So we left Roger Moore at the command post.

As we are walking, debris and people were still coming out of the towers so we were hugging the wall on West Street, but across the street from the towers, so we got -- I believe it was 2 Financial Plaza. I was very confused. It has to be 2 Financial Plaza when I look at this. I said to Chief Hirth, my cell phone had gone off, my family was frantic whether we were all right. He said how about we cut through the building. I said really fast just let me call home and tell them I'm all right, because my cell phone wasn't working. He said all right. That's a good idea. This way we were away from the debris. We can come out of 2 Financial Plaza up by Vesey Street. He says it will actually be safer so we aren't in any debris' way.

We walk in. Chief Hirth called his wife really quickly, told her we are here. It's chaos but we are safe. Don't worry about it. Then he handed me the phone and I called my sister. As I was on the phone with my sister we heard the rumble. I screamed oh, my god and my sister thought I was dead, because she heard the rumble and the white cloud as the building came down, collapsed into -- again 2 Financial Plaza. We were chased with the white cloud.

We started running and we had to stop at one point because now the whole area filled with black smoke and the Winter Garden atrium collapsed in front of us, because we were going to go into the Winter Garden to cut outside but we couldn't do it, because we had the collapse of the front of 2 Financial Plaza into us and then the atrium coming at us from the other side.

We hit the ground, we just waited. In fact, I'm not sure -- we had a couple of cops with us, we had a couple of firemen. There was a female security guard from the building, and someone from maintenance, a male, from maintenance in the building. Somebody screamed we are just going to die here. Everybody just get on the floor. We got on the floor and it was pitch black and I believe it was Chief Hirth said we can't stay here. Then one of the firefighters screamed we are going to suffocate. We need to move now.

So we all held hands and we were climbing over the debris and I'm not sure, I think one of them had to have a little flashlight, because we really couldn't see where we were walking. Then the janitor had said I think the back is this way. If we walk this way we will find the back somewhere.

So we walked, and again, time line is so hard. You don't know if it was 2 minutes, because when we got up you actually didn't know what was up, what was down, if you were actually on the floor, on the wall. We finally saw light that led us outside. Once outside, we started treating people because there were people hurt all over the place, covered in the white dust, coughing, cuts, so we started helping out people there.

PD started screaming at us we need to move from here. We need to move. So we started funneling people with us that were hurt. There was a little trailer that they were using to fix the park, you know, they are fixing that whole area, that park.

Q. Right.

A. This was one of their facilities where -- their administrative trailer. So first they locked the door on us and PD ordered them to open the door. We got inside. The people in there started cleaning us off and helping us. One of their workers came in totally covered in white soot. We took care of him, when, again, I think it was PD came screaming, we need to move from here. There is a threat of a gas line leak, I think they said at that point.

So we started moving from there. We started funneling people with us that were hurt. We still had all the injured with us. Tower two collapsed.

Everyone started running again. We started having people go toward Battery Park, you know, the pier, right down there by the ferry. We told everybody to start going there. So we are funneling people to run in that direction.

When we got to Stuyvesant High School, PD is now screaming confirmed gas leak. They were letting the kids out of school, kids were all frantic. We helped them evacuate the school. Again we were funneling them on to West Street going north. Then there was a gun shot across the street and supposedly, this is just what we were hearing over the PD radio, somebody had shot out one of the windows and I think it was Manhattan Borough Community -- is that what is directly across the street? I'm so bad. Another school across -- directly across the street. They had shot out one of the windows to open the door, to put people into there. So when the kids heard the gun shot, everybody started stampeding back towards us, so we had to calm them down and get them to start going north again.

We got them going north. Once they were evacuated, we went back to the pier and started putting people on private ferries. Ferries were coming in and in fact, there was a little shed there with one of the ferry people and we asked him to start calling whoever he could on the phone to get more ferries here. He said he has been trying to do that but no one is answering the phone up north. We said you have to do whatever you can. Get on the radio. We need more ferries.

Ferries started coming in. Again we started funneling people on to the ferries, telling them to go into Jersey City. We met a lot of resistance. A lot of people didn't want to leave Manhattan. That's like where are they going to take us. We were like, does it matter? You really need to get out of here right now.

Everyone left on ferries, then we finally started to hear radio communications again, because we had no radio communications that whole time. We met up, while we were walking, we met up with Richie Zarrillo again, and he says they want everybody to go to the Chelsea Piers. So we started walking towards the Chelsea Piers and then we met up with Captain Stone and EMT Gregg Brady and I think at one point it was Commissioner Gribbon.

Q. Gribbon?

A. Commissioner Gribbon, yes. We started walking towards the Chelsea Piers. Captain Stone was complaining he had trouble breathing at this time and shoulder pain, so when we made it up to the pier we had asked that he be transported to the hospital, so they gave us a command car. We actually took him to the hospital, dropped him off at Bellevue and went back to the site.

When we went back to the site, we actually went back to Ground Zero. Chief McCracken was there and I saw Chief Peruggia and they were trying to formulate a plan for the on going events of that night into the following morning.

They had asked us -- now it was like maybe 5 p.m. at this point. 4 or 5 p.m. He had said he needed us to probably go home so this way we can be back by 4, 5 a.m. the following morning. We said okay. Now in order to walk back, we had to go around to -- what's that street in Battery Park City, the first street.

Q. South End?

A. South End, yes. We had to go around to South End Avenue. While we were walking, they were removing Chief Ganci's body. Lieutenant Scullion was there. And we stood with him as they were removing Chief Ganci's body. They had just put him on the bus and now they were going to go remove Commissioner Feehan's body. They wanted him on the same bus.

We walked with -- the bus drove around the corner and we followed the bus around the corner. When we got around the corner they said it was going to take a few minutes because he was still stuck in the hole. So they were trying to get him out. Father Delendic was there. Chief McFarland and I believe Captain Pineda.

So while we were standing there, one of the firefighters from SOC came over and I thought he had said he had a bag and he said [redacted]

[redacted]

Then I think he sort of got a little upset by it and then John McFarland took it from him and then he placed it in the bus. It was going to be prolonged to get Commissioner Feehan out, so Chief Hirth said you know what, they told us to leave. Why don't we go back to the Battalion to make sure the rest of Manhattan is running and all the units are in place, because we have to come back early in the morning.

We came back here. Chief Hirth spoke to the units downstairs and spoke to the units at Bellevue. Made sure everybody was all right and accounted for at that point. Then we came back the following morning and were assigned to the ferry terminal.

Q. Okay. When you parked at the mouth of the Battery that was the Manhattan side?

A. The Manhattan side.

Q. How did you come up to the command post, do you remember? I know you said you walked, but do you remember what route you came?

A. We were on -- are you considering this north and south or vice versa?

Q. This is north.

A. East and west.

Q. South. West.

A. Okay. We were on the east side of West Street, where -- up until -- we were by -- we passed the torso. That was like 10 feet in front of us. Debris was still falling and actually debris was actually reaching that far down. That's when Chief Hirth said let's get away from that side of the street and we crossed over and then we were on West Street, on the west side the whole time up.

Q. Okay. Where was the command post?

A. The command post was set up in the driveway, again, I believe, of 2 World Financial Plaza. Wasn't it somewhere along here? I'm really bad with maps and directions. That's why they don't let me drive.

Q. Okay.

A. There was a little ramp and that's where they had set up, right in front.

Q. Then after the collapses you continued up?

A. We stopped here at the command post. We got where we needed to go. We cut through here so we wouldn't have to walk on West Street. That's why we walked from here. We were going to come right out here to go to Vesey Street. While we were in here is when the first collapse occurred.

Q. Okay.

A. Then we cut out this way around the back.

Q. Around the back.

A. Then we went through the Winter Garden after it had collapsed, because we had to wait for all the glass to finish coming through. That was the only way out for us. We ended up outside on Vesey Street and West, but actually on Vesey.

Q. Here?

A. Right. Then we walked, I believe it had to be North End to Stuyvesant, because then we came up and around.

Q. Where were you when the second building came down?

A. When the second building came down we were, I believe on North and Vesey. Then we went back to -- that's when we walked to Stuyvesant. We were still funneling the people northbound, but we actually stopped them at Stuyvesant High School, then we went back into Battery Park by the piers.

Q. Any opinions or comments?

A. No. There was no way -- there is no way to ever critique or Monday morning quarterback what happened. There is no way, I feel, I personally feel, any of us could have been prepared for what happened. All the training in the world. I mean we could be going to the academy every single day. Nothing could have prepared us for what happened.

Q. Right. Okay. I have two quick questions on names you gave. Richard Zarillo?

A. Yes.

Q. He is an EMT. Do you know where he is assigned?

A. Operations.

Q. Gregg Brady?

A. September 11 he was assigned to Division 1. He was a Chief's aide. Currently he is at Battalion 4.

Q. Okay.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. Thanks again. Have a good day. The time is now 0744. The interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF OF THE DEPARTMENT DANIEL NIGRO

Interview Date: October 24, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: I'm Assistant Commissioner James Drury. I'm present in Chief of the Department Daniel Nigro's office on October 24, 2001. It is 3:54 p.m.

As I said, we are in the Chief of the Department's office on the 7th floor in headquarters. I'm here to conduct an interview as part of the World Trade Center task force.

Q. Just for the record, would you identify yourself?

A. Daniel Nigro, Chief of Department.

Q. Chief, at this time I'm going to direct your attention to September 11 of the year 2001, and direct your attention to the incident at the World Trade Center and ask you when you first became aware that there might be a problem at that location?

A. I was in my office at somewhere between 8:45 and 8:50 on Tuesday. I heard Pete Ganci yell from his office, which we are sitting in right now, look out your window, a plane just hit the World Trade Center, because the north tower is clearly visible from the Chief of Operations office. That's how it began for me.

At that point, Chief Ganci and I, along with his executive officer Steve Mosiello, took the elevator down to the C-1 level. My aide for the day, Adam Vilagos, took my car with two officers from Engine 91 to assist at the command post.

Q. Is he a fire fighter?

A. Fire fighter. We responded there. Our car was right behind a car in which Donald Burns was traveling. He was the off going city wide tour commander, and the Trade Center was clearly visible for the whole ride, especially from the Brooklyn Bridge. We took the Brooklyn Bridge. At some point as we approached Manhattan, Chief Ganci got on the radio as we discussed what we were going to do when we got there and transmitted a fifth alarm.

Q. For the record Chief, what does a fifth alarm mean?

A. It was already a third alarm assignment, which would be approximately 14 engines and maybe 8 ladder companies. The fifth alarm would give us a couple of additional chiefs, 8 additional engines and 6 additional truck companies. We continued over the Brooklyn Bridge, past City Hall, across Barclay Street. We could clearly see that people were actually running forth from the scene and both Church and West streets as we continued west and we parked our car somewhere on approximately West and Vesey. I believe field com was in the process of setting up a command post in the middle of West Street, where there was an island that runs up the street, which we felt to be too close to the building because of debris that was already falling and had fallen in the street and we moved the exterior command post across West Street to the garage entrance in front of, I believe the address would be 2 World Financial Center.

At that point, also, on the scene, to my knowledge, were Assistant Chief Burns, Assistant Chief Barbara, Assistant Chief Cassano and Assistant Chief Callan. Chief Callan was placed in command of the lobby command post of the north tower where the plane had hit, and he left the exterior command post to go into the lobby to join the first division that was already there.

At some point after our arrival and after we had moved to the west side of West Street, I heard a loud roar of a jet, looked up and saw the second plane impact the south tower. At that point it was clear to me it was a terrorist attack. Earlier I didn't know what it was. I assumed it was an accident. I turned around and saw the Mayor, with his large group, including the Commissioner and I went back to speak with him for a moment, regarding the fact that I believe this to be a terrorist attack. When I got back to business at the command post, I noticed the Mayor had left that area and that was the last I saw of him until that night I suppose.

Chief Ganci and myself directed Chief Burns and Chief Barbara to the south tower, along with Chief Ray Downey. Ray took, I think all of the companies that were assembled behind us at the command post to the south tower to assist in the evacuation of that building. At that point, I told Chief Ganci I was going to quickly walk around the perimeter of the Trade Center to assess the degree of damage to the two towers, because our vantage point on West Street only allowed us a view of the west side of the building. I took my aide with me. We walked east on Vesey Street, stopped in front of 7 World Trade Center to speak to EMS Chief Peruggia, who gave me a quick update about victims on that side of the building.

Q. What was that update if you recall?

A. He told me how many jumpers he felt had hit the plaza, which we knew we couldn't help and that the people that were already injured were being removed to where the ambulances were staging, which was north of the Trade Center on West Street. I don't recall him giving me any number of people injured.

We stepped over small airplane aviation parts, on Vesey, continued west, continued looking at the building. I looked up at the south tower and could see that it was more heavily damaged than we could tell from our west vantage point. That the second plane had - although it hit from the south, it also did a great deal of damage to the north part of the building. As I got on to Church Street, I walked south on Church towards Liberty, where I was going to turn right. I looked up at the east side of the south tower and found that to be also very heavily damaged, which we couldn't see. I was going to report that information back to Chief Ganci.

I was stopped briefly by a person who used to work here in headquarters, whose name escapes me, Gabe Delapena, who used to work here until a few months ago, who was very very - I wouldn't have stopped, but he was very very concerned that his wife worked on the 92 floor of the south tower. I just recall telling him that hopefully she came down when the first plane hit and that maybe she was in the area. That's the last I saw of him. He survived and she didn't. After I spoke to him we proceeded south, heard a loud noise, knew it to be the building coming down, looked up, saw the building coming down on us. I grabbed my aide as he was going to go south and I took him east on Dey Street, and we got as far as we could until materials started crashing down and took refuge in a doorway of a building just east of the Millennium Hotel and survived in the doorway.

When all the noise stopped and all the dust stopped, and we were able to get out of our position, we started walking east. We couldn't see if anything was left standing because of the dusk and the darkness that was created. You couldn't see at all from that vantage point anything maybe above the second story level, or more than 50 or 100 feet ahead of you.

So I decided to go east and then south and come back around on to West Street to get to the command post that way, which proved to be a good decision because at some point, east and south of - I don't know what street we were on, we heard the noise again and knew that it was now the north tower coming down. Same huge dust cloud enveloped everybody. We waited out the dust cloud for a few minutes. We had handy talkies turned to a few different channels and we heard a few messages, but very little, especially after the second collapse. More people calling in car 3, which is Chief Ganci, or other people that would be at the command post and not getting an answer.

At that point we didn't know -- I knew a very very large number of people were killed, but I didn't know about the command post. I was worried but there was no way of telling yet. As we continued around to get back to West Street, we got over just south of - I guess it would be south of Rector on West and found the large communications tractor trailer vehicle with two dispatchers that were set up there and they had Dr. Prezant and Dr. Kelly with them and two members of engine or ladder 10 and that was it.

I asked them, we wanted to get back to the command post, where was the command post now set up, because they were communicating with both a dispatcher and whoever was at the scene and I was told that the command center was now at Barclay and Broadway at the tip of City Hall Park and Chief Haring was in charge, Deputy Chief Haring, division 6, which was the first mention of his name, that message. I felt that everyone else was killed, everyone else that was a ranking member of the Department, if that was the case.

We walked up to that location. Dr. Kelly, Prezant and two members of engine 10 and my aide and myself walked up amidst the dust and the paper, got there and found out that -- the first semi-good news, that another command post was indeed operating at West and Chambers and that Assistant Chief Carruthers was in charge up there. I left Chief Haring in charge of his operation. They were putting out fires in the Trinity Church area and in the area around 5 World Trade Center, Fulton Street. I went up to the other command center, found Chief Carruthers, Deputy Assistant Chief Michael Butler, and started to find out who was missing and who had survived. So Chief Callan was there and alive. I was told Chief Cassano was taken to the hospital. Chief Burns and Barbara were missing, as was Chief Ganci, Commissioner Feehan and numerous other people.

At some point after I was briefed, I took command of the operation from the Chambers Street post and was told that Chief Fellini was at the forward operations post at West and Vesey, from which the search, rescue and extinguishment was being directed of what was left of the complex.

Steve Mosiello and Chief Turi told me they had been looking for Chief Ganci. They thought they knew where he was, unsuccessfully, and they were going back to - I walked back down to the area where he was and sometime after that they found Chief Ganci. He was like the first person that I knew of that they found in the rubble. He was somewhere across West Street from the Trade Center. The most important operational decision to be made that afternoon was the collapse had damaged 7 World Trade Center, which is about a 50 story building, at Vesey between West Broadway and Washington Street. It had very heavy fire on many floors and I ordered the evacuation of an area sufficient around to protect our members, so we had to give up some rescue operations that were going on at the time and back the people away far enough so that if 7 World Trade did collapse, we wouldn't lose any more people.

We continued to operate on what we could from that distance and approximately an hour and a half after that order was given, at 5:30 in the afternoon, 7 World Trade Center collapsed completely. I continued to operate at the scene until probably somewhere around 8 o'clock, at which time I borrowed Chief Meyers' car, because mine was destroyed and went home to say hello, shower, change my clothes and came back to work at approximately between 11 and midnight with Chief Turi.

That does it for September 11.

Q. Just a few questions, Chief. Were you actually on Liberty when the south tower started to come down?

A. I was on Church.

Q. Near Liberty?

A. Probably between Dey and Cortlandt and I went back a few paces and then ran east on Dey and that's where we ended up. I think if I look at this map, the building we took refuge was the Dey Street side of 195 Broadway.

Q. As you were doing the tour, did you have any further communication with Chief Ganci over the radio as you observed the --

A. No.

Q. Did you notice civilians evacuating through the concourse on Church Street which I guess had an exit from the north tower?

A. They were exiting everywhere, but I don't recall if I could see where they were coming out of.

Q. Did you happen to see any triage centers set up by EMS on Church or Vesey?

A. I thought Chief Peruggia told me they were triaging at 7 World Trade Center, where he was. I didn't see any other that I can recall.

Q. So there was no radio communications between you and any of the command posts as you were coming around doing the tour?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. After the first tower collapsed, I think you mentioned you might have heard some calls over the handy talkies?

A. Yes. I heard someone trying to contact car 3 with no answer. Maybe I thought someone was trying to contact car 2 or one of the 4s, and again no answer. Not much else.

Q. Did you ever make it into the FDNY command center that was inside the lobby of the north tower?

A. No.

Q. What about the command center that I believe you said Burns and Barbara left to set up?

A. No, Chief Burns and Chief Barbara were going to 2 World Trade and I didn't make it into any of the buildings.

Q. Can you tell us if, as you started your tour, if you noticed rigs and ambulances down West Street or on Vesey or anything like that?

A. We were set up on every street. I know before I started, before I started, I directed a couple of officers, I think one of them, was it, was the Captain of 290 engine, Sudnik, he is a Chief now, to insure that the rigs didn't block West Street so that ambulances could get in and out. Because we have a tendency to, when we have that many rigs coming in for a fifth alarm, close the streets. If we needed to take away many injured people, which we were hoping we would be doing that day, we would need a clear path up and down West Street. So I know I directed him and possibly another officer to make sure the rigs on West Street parked to the curbs so that ambulances could get between them. I took off east on Vesey.

Q. Stepping back for a moment to when you were coming over the Brooklyn Bridge, could you make a determination based on a visual from that distance how involved or fully involved the fire was and how many floors?

A. It looked to me like it was involving about 10 floors of the building, and the way it was burning,

I stated to Chief Ganci on the way there that I didn't believe we could extinguish the fire.

Q. That was based on what?

A. The number of floors I think. The volume of fire on the number of floors. To my recollection, we had never put out a fire that involved that many floors in a high rise building in this city before. I think more or less the direction of - in both towers ended up, evacuation was the main, the initial concern. Get as many people out of the building as we could.

Q. Did you ever hear any communications over the radio before the first collapse that OEM thought the buildings could collapse and to get out of the area?

A. No, I heard later from an individual that somebody came over from OEM to the command post after I left and told Chief Ganci the building was unstable and that was moments before it came down. The only thing I do remember and I didn't hear it over the radio, I don't think, was that a third plane was heading in the direction, I assumed was heading in the direction of the Trade Center, that there was a third plane, then a little later on somebody told me about the plane that hit the Pentagon. I don't know who told me that. The third plane was -- I don't think it came over the handy talky. I think somebody walked up to me and told me, somebody of some credibility, that it wasn't just a person on the sidewalk, but someone either with us or the police or EMS that I knew, because I recall taking it as a serious issue.

Q. The last point where you saw Chief Downey was at the command center on West Street?

A. Yes, after the second plane hit, he told me I want to take all these units and start evacuating the stairwells in the south tower. I said okay, good. Take them. And Ray gathered all those units up, however many there were, and marched them across the street. I don't know exactly how he got there, because we were concerned with the jumpers that were coming down out of the north tower at the time.

My assumption was he was going to take them south and go across through to the hotel to get into the tower.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: We are going to end this now Chief. The time is 4:20. I thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

ROBERT BROWNE

Interview Date: October 24, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 24, 2001. The time is 2140. I'm Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade Center Task Force. I am conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, title and assigned command area.

A. ROBERT BROWNE, deputy chief, Division 4.

MR. ECCLESTON: Also present.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Christine Bastedenbeck of the New York City Fire Department World Trade Center Task Force.

MR. ECCLESTON: Also present?

MR. KIMBALL: Robert Kimball, EMT, chief's aide, Fire Department.

Q. Chief Browne, were you working on the morning of September 11, 2001?

A. Yes, I was working that morning.

Q. Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Could you please in your own words tell me about the events of the day?

A. I had logged on at eight o'clock in the morning, and I was enroute to the division office, and I got to approximately about 164th Street and the Grand Central Parkway when I heard the first radio reports there was possibly an incident going on at the World Trade Center.

I made a quick phone call to the Division 4 office and spoke to Sal Sangeniti and asked him what did it look like, you know, did he have anything more on it, and he said, "You better go. It sounds like it's a big one."

So I said all right, and I started heading into the job, and as I was -- naturally, as I was heading down the Grand Central Parkway, more and more information was coming in, and it sounded like it was very serious, and the reports from citywide radio were pretty chilling, and I knew that we would be going to work and having a busy day, so just trying to put my thoughts together, thinking back to '93 of what went on in '93 when I was there, and trying to get as much information as I could.

I actually put on 1010 WINS on the radio in the car, trying to get more information, because a lot of the information was being drowned out on citywide with all the numerous units coming up and stuff, and I guess I made it down onto the FDR. I went over the Triborough, down the FDR Drive. The FDR Drive in spots was partially closed by police officers, and I started to make some good time, and I guess as I got around down by the U.N., they were reporting over the radio that a second plane had hit the second tower.

Swung around west -- I swung around the battery, and I came up on West Street out of the tunnel from the east side, and there was an officer standing blocking my way, and he was -- he was trying to direct me over out of the way because there was bodies scattered along West Street all the way back as far as the tunnel at that location, and I was in amazement. I couldn't believe it.

I pulled up a little bit further onto -- by the Downtown Athletic Club on West Street there, and I pulled over, and I parked my car at that spot.

Q. Can you indicate on the map where you parked your vehicle?

A. Yeah. Probably -- let's see. Probably somewhere in this vicinity right here, down here.

Q. Do you know what vehicle number that was?

A. 792.

Q. 792?

A. Yeah.

Q. Also chief, on that day, were you working with somebody?

A. No, I was by myself. As a matter of fact, it was my first official tour as a deputy chief with the department, and I did not have an aide at that time.

As I pulled up, I parked my car, grabbed my gear out of the car, and at that point, Chief Carasquillo and Sal Sangeniti had pulled up alongside of me with, I believe, Jason Katz, who was Billy Day's aide, and Billy was out, so I yelled over to Pete, would it be all right if I take Jason and keep Jason with me, and he said yeah, sure, no problem.

And I reported to the command post at that point.

Q. Where was the command post?

A. The command post was located on West Street, basically almost right in between Tower 1 and Tower 2 on the west side of the street over by the Winter Garden. That's where I -- when I got into the command post, Chief Gombo, and Chief Kowalczyk -- and Chief Kowalczyk appeared that he had just pulled up there himself, because he was just putting his coat.

I reported in and I asked them what they needed of me, what assignment they had for me, and they told me they wanted me to go to Liberty and West Street and run the operation at the corner of Liberty and West Street.

So with that I grabbed my aide, Jason, and we started heading back towards Liberty and West Street. We were walking back. We just left the command post. There was a lot of debris coming down off the building, and I turned around to Jason and I told Jason, "Make sure you have your chin strap on you your helmet. Don't just have it sitting on your head. Make sure you secure it to your head," and with, that a large piece of debris was coming down, sailing off the building. I remember looking up watching, because I was afraid that we were going to get hit with something, and it had to be almost the size of a Volkswagen car, a sheet of metal almost the size of a Volkswagen car, and it was -- it was burned. It was glowing red, and it just landed in the street in front of us, maybe 20 feet in front of us.

I turned around to Jason and I said, "Look, man, you got to be real careful. This is bad." I said, something -- you know, so he said, "All right," and we headed off to West Street down to West and Liberty. I got to the corner of West and Liberty, and on the east side -- on the east corner of West and Liberty, just underneath the foot bridge that crosses over, there were probably about three or four ambulances parked there, and all the personnel were out of their rigs with their equipment, but they were standing more towards the corner of -- they were more towards the Liberty Street side, just off of West, and they seemed to be like all in amazement. They were all standing there, staring up, looking at what was going on, and none of them had helmets on.

A couple of them were Metro Care units. There was a voluntary unit there, one of our units, and we had units on the west side of Liberty, as well, standing there. Some of them had some gear on. Some of them had some helmets on, and I remember saying to Jason, "Jason, do me a favor. Let's take a piece of paper out, go over there, and identify who those people are. If they have helmets, make sure they get them on. If they don't have helmets, let me know." I said, "We need to get them out of here, you know, put them into an area that's back a way and little bit further."

Timewise, I'm not real good with the time frame, but I might have been there maybe ten minutes, and I don't know if I heard it over the radio, or if I heard it over somebody else's radio, or if somebody else just yelled, and they said, "Watch out! The building's coming down."

And with that, I can remember turning around, and I was standing right on the corner of West and Liberty, on the east corner of West and Liberty, and I can remember turning around and looking up at the building and seeing a very, very large section of the building just coming -- coming straight down at us with a sound like I have never heard before in my entire life, that it -- I had thought for a moment that another plane had come, that had hit the building. That's how loud the sound was.

I remember turning to everybody and looking and just telling them to run. I told them all just run, run, and that's pretty much what happened. I mean, I got -- it was basically a free-for-all, I think, at that point for everybody.

I ran, and I could feel the -- I could feel the air changing behind me, and I just said to myself that I was going to -- that I was going to run as far as I could until I felt something either hit me and knock me down or until -- until it knocked me down.

I probably got about 20 feet or so, because I thought I was going to be able to get pretty far, but I only managed to get from the corner of West and Liberty to underneath the foot bridge, which was probably maybe only about 20 or 30 feet. I don't even know if it's that far, and I got hit in the back of the head with a small object, which startled me a little bit, and then I got struck across my back with a larger object, which knocked me to the ground, and at that point, I said, "Well, I guess I'm just going to stay right here," and I can remember grabbing my chin strap and holding onto my chin strap on my helmet, and just hoping that it didn't come off. I was afraid I was going to have a head trauma or something. I didn't want to wind up a vegetable after this thing, and I can remember praying, asking Him not to take me, and if He was going to take me, please make it fast.

At that point, it was like -- it got totally pitch black. I couldn't see anything. I couldn't breathe. There was a wave that was -- I don't know if you're a beach person, but if you're a beach person and you ever been in the ocean, and you have a large wave come over you, and you can just feel it keep coming and coming. It's like the debris just kept coming and piling up and piling up, and when it finally did stop, I wasn't sure if I was alive or if I was dead.

It was pitch black. I had something very heavy across my back. I had something across my legs, because I remember trying to move my legs, because I was stuck under whatever, this debris, and I wasn't able to move.

I can remember reaching for my radio and calling out a Mayday for the corner of Liberty and West, and nobody answered. There was no answer. It was just dead quiet, and I just assumed at that point that everybody was gone, and I wasn't -- I couldn't -- you know, I didn't call out any more.

Then as the thick black, black smoke and blackness around me started to clear a little bit, and it started to get a little bit grayer, kind of like got to a dark gray, and then it got like a lighter gray, I could hear -- as it started to get lighter, I could hear people from the distance yelling for help. I could hear people saying, "Help me, I'm over here," or "Help me, I'm over there," and I started doing the same thing.

I started calling out for help because I was unable to free myself from where I was, and I called out several times, and then finally I heard somebody answer, and they said, "Relax. We can see you. We're going to get you. Just take it easy. Just stay where you are."

And probably a couple of minutes later they got some of this debris off me, and they managed to get whatever it was that was on my back -- I believe it was a chunk of concrete or -- I don't know what exactly, a piece of metal. I'm not sure even sure exactly what it was that was on my back, and I had a large piece of metal across my legs. That's why I couldn't move my legs, but these two guys that got me out were like amazing. I couldn't believe it.

It was a guy from a react team and a Hatzolah paramedic, and when I got up from the pile, I guess I kind of just dusted myself off a little bit and tried to regain my composure, and I started looking for Jason, who had been with me, my aide, and I couldn't find him, and I assisted this paramedic from Hatzolah and the react guy in removing a couple of other people that were trapped in some debris out of that, and then all of a sudden Jason appeared, and he was hurt. His hand was hurt. He was a mess, and we sat him down.

I was trying to find Chief Wells. I had just prior to -- two minutes before the building going down, I had had a conversation with Chief Wells, and he had told me that he was going into the building with 18 Charlie, and he was much closer towards the tower than I was, and I was unable to find him.

Q. You need to take a break?

A. No, I'm all right.

Q. If you do, it's fine.

A. No, I'm okay.

So we tried to gather up as many people from that area as I possibly could, tried to put some sort of semblance of a team back together to see what we could do at that point, and I can remember Chief Wells coming up out of the middle of the pile over on -- over close towards the tower, and it was like I was just so relieved to see him at that point, you know, a special place in my heart. Charlie and I are good friends. It was devastating to think that he was gone at that point.

So we gathered up, started to take care of some of the people that were injured. We collected the people, and we kept them underneath that foot bridge there on the very west section by the World Financial Center there, and we bandaged up a few people, tried to get them together. There was no radio contact.

I didn't know where anybody else was, and then I don't know how much time actually transpired between the time that we took care of some of our members that were injured, and the next thing I know, the north tower collapsed, and again, that horrible sound, and we all just ran. We all ran again.

I didn't want to take my chance out on the street again that time. The financial center was there. A large window on the ground floor had been blown out from the first collapse. I was able to jump through that window with Jason and Chief Wells, and I didn't know if I should go completely through the building or if I should stay in there and whatever. Like I said, it was a coin toss.

I went in the building. I ran to the left as I entered the building. I found a bakery that was there. At that point, I lost Jason, because I think Jason went straight through. He ran straight through the building. I lost Chief Wells.

I ran into the bakery, and when I got into the bakery, there was a back room. I ran behind the counter and went to the back room, and there were two large freezers in there, and I went in there and I knelt -- I knelt in the corner facing the freezer as the debris was hitting the building, and the windows blew out in the place, and all that -- all over again. Relived the whole thing over again, with all that black, thick, choking smoke, unable to see, the fear that -- whether or not that building was going to hold up, and, again, I don't know how long I was in there, but I was in there with -- there were three other gentlemen in the room with me when it started to clear. One guy was a photographer for the Daily News. The other guy was a transit worker or something, and I think the other guy was just a regular Joe, just a civilian who followed us, you know.

I hope he didn't follow me because I thought I knew where I was going, because he'd be shit out of luck if he did, but we all stayed in there.

I can remember it starting to clear a little bit once again, checked with them to make sure that -- checked with them to make sure that they were all all right, and I remember telling them, "Come on guys. We got to get out of here. I don't know if this building is going to hold up," because so much debris hit the building, I didn't know what kind of shape it was in, and I certainly didn't want to get caught in there, because nobody would have known we were ever in there. We could have been in there forever.

So we tried to make it out on the -- tried to exit out of the West side of the building to South End Avenue, and there was a whole bunch of debris blocking the doorway for our exit out, so the four of us stood there and grappled through the debris enough so we could climb up over some of the stuff and exit out onto the avenue.

When I got out onto south end avenue, there was an ambulance sitting right there, perfect shape, no problem. It was running. I said, oh, troops. Somebody else is here. That's so good, and I went running up to the truck, and naturally it was locked, just running, sitting there, but I was -- I was pretty stunned at that point, and I think that's the first time when I heard what appeared to be or what I thought in my mind was that we were going to be bombed, because I heard a fighter jet overhead, and when I heard the fighter jet overhead, Jason had come out of a store across the street on South End Avenue, and we looked at each other, and I said, "You all right?" He said, "Yeah, I'm okay. I can keep going."

I said, "Okay, good. Come on, we got to get away from here." I said, "I don't know what's going on yet." I said, "We got to get away from here. I have no communication with anybody." I said, "Let's just move away from here."

So I gathered anybody that was on the street there at that point, because people were starting to straggle out of the stores and stuff, and I told them, "Come on. You got to keep moving, keep moving." And I made it to the -- again, I heard that jet and I thought we were going to be bombed, and I started to run, and there was a cop that appeared on the corner, and he says, "Don't run. It's one every ours." He says, "It's one of ours. Don't worry."

And that was quite a -- quite a moment of relief, knowing that it wasn't, you know, whoever had done this horrible thing to us, that they weren't now going to just be bombing us.

I got to the corner of Albany and South End, and I encountered four firefighters carrying a firefighter with Commissioner Gregory and Dr. Kelly, and they needed an ambulance, and I looked down -- I looked down the block at the river promenade that runs along the Hudson River on Albany Street, and there were four ambulances down there, so Jason ran down there, got one of the ambulances, brought it back up.

We loaded the firefighter in the ambulance, and they took him off to the hospital. So with those three ambulances that were down there, I said, "Come on, let's go down to the water." And Commissioner Gregory had mentioned that the fire boat was going to be coming up to that location, so I went down there, and there were probably five or six, seven EMS personnel. I couldn't tell you who they are, what the names were, who they worked for, but they were there, and I think one crew was from Flushing Hospital, and there were hundreds and hundreds of people just running down that promenade.

All kinds of boats were pulling up. The fire boat had pulled up and docked. Several other boats -- a police boat. There was a tug boat there. There were civilian boats pulling up, willing just to take people, hand them off over onto the boat, and they were going to take them off on over to Jersey for us.

I got together the crews there, and we kind of put a little makeshift triage area together, and we would evaluate people before we put them on the boat to see which ones -- because we wanted to put all the noninjured people on one boat, and we wanted to put the injured people on another boat, and, again, I can't tell you how long I operated at that location. It must have been an hour and a half, maybe two hours. I'm not even sure. But we loaded hundreds and hundreds of people onto those boats that were there.

At one point Charlie Wells just appeared again out of the blue, and it was a great moment. I was so happy to see him, because I had lost him in the second collapse again. I remember we hugged each other, and we said, you know, to each other, "You all right? You all right?" And he said "Yeah," and he says, "I'm going back. I'm going to do some stuff. You stay here, do what you got to do," and he took off.

Probably about 15 or 20 minutes later, Chief Villani walked up the promenade and told me that they were setting up a major area down at the Staten Island Ferry Terminal, and that I should make my way down there with whatever resources that I had, so that's what we did.

We gathered up the people that I could gather. We confiscated one of these little golf carts that somebody was using up and down the promenade. We took that from them, and I loaded all these people on that, and we started heading down towards the Staten Island Ferry Terminal.

I got probably about two blocks away, and I encountered a paramedic from Battalion 57 -- I don't know the kid's name -- running in the opposite direction that we were going, towards us, and he was screaming at the top of his lungs. He was in a panic, and he was yelling, "There's a gas leak! There's a gas leak! There's going to be an explosion. You have to get out of here. You have to get out of here."

And he was really -- he was wild. He was real wild, and I jumped off the cart, because he ran right by me, and I jumped off the cart, and I chased him down, and I grabbed him, and I put him against the wall, and I kind of shook him, and I told him, "Look, relax. You're going to be okay. Everything is fine."

I told him who I was. I said, "Come on, you're coming with me," and he was like in this panic, and I told him again, "You're going to be fine. You're coming with us. You're going to be okay," and I convinced him. He calmed down a little bit. He was shaken. He started crying.

I put him on the cart, and we headed down. We got around the vicinity of the North Cove Marina, and they were doing major evacuations into Jersey out of the North Cove Marina, and there was a police lieutenant and a police sergeant standing in the middle of the roadway, not allowing anybody to proceed past there, because he said there is a gas leak or there is a report of a gas leak. He says everybody has to evacuate lower Manhattan.

So at that point, we got on a police launch and went to Jersey. As I hopped on the police launch, this buddy of mine that I fish with all the time, who works for harbor, he said, "Are you all right? Is Chief McCracken okay? You know, what's the deal? Did everybody make it from Rockaway?" I said, "Look, I don't know." I said, "I couldn't tell you anything," and we made it over to the dock in Jersey in a matter of minutes, maybe five minutes or so. Scooted us right over there.

I got off the launch. One of the EMTs that was rushing with us from Flushing Hospital, she started having like an asthma attack or something. She was having some sort of reaction. I don't know what it was, and I made sure that all of them stayed there and went up to the medical treatment area up there to get seen.

At that point, I turned around with Jason. I said, "Jason, I got to go back. I can't stay here." I said, "I can't stay here and just receive victims here." I said "I need to go back."

Jason said, "Okay, I'm going with you." He says, "I'm still all right," and I yelled to my buddy, and he told me -- he says, "I'll be back in five minutes." He said, "I'll take you back with me next trip."

And in the interim, another police boat pulled in, and when the police boat was getting ready to pull out, I just hopped on that boat and got back, and I made it down to -- I got back into the North Cove Marina, and I made it down into the spot in Battery Park where the Indian Museum is. It's right by the launch for the Liberty Island thing, and there was probably maybe five or six ambulances parked there, and Chief Mark Stefans was there in charge of that operation. He was told to go there, and that's where he was, and he had several EMTs there.

They weren't seeing any patients. It was that same frustration that I think that everybody felt that whole time after the first initial patients prior to the building going down. Everybody was just kind of just standing around in wonderment, wondering where are all the victims, and he was there, and they took care of me there.

I was having a lot of trouble with my eyes. I couldn't see really well. I could hardly open my eyes at that point from all the stuff that was in my eyes, and I don't really think that I was feeling anything yet as far as injuries or anything like that, because I was kind of just running on adrenaline, and all I could remember was that I wanted to call home to let them know I was alive. I was unable to get out. I couldn't reach anybody.

I probably stayed there with Mark Stefans probably about 25 or 30 minutes. Again, I don't know. It could have been and hour and a half, it could have been two hours. My time line is horrible. I'm sorry, but we were there for awhile, and I turned around to Mark and I said, "Mark, we're not doing anything here." I said, "Everybody is just, you know, maybe a half a mile away at the Staten Island Ferry Terminal. Maybe that is where we should take all these resources. Let's pack them up. Let's go down there, and we'll shut this thing down and go down here. We are not seeing anybody here."

So that was what we did. We talked about it and he decided yeah, okay, we'll do that, and we got everybody together, packed up all our stuff, got the ambulances and all, and sent them down there, and Chief Stefans and I walked from that location down to the Staten Island Ferry Terminal, and as I walked into the Staten Island Ferry Terminal, I guess I had reached my point where I could probably no longer function, and I walked in, and I can remember seeing Dr. Richman's face, and Dr. Richman took one look at me, and he says, "Bobby," he says, "You got to lie down." So I said, "I'm all right. I'm all right."

He says, "No, you're done. You are not working any more." He said, "Lie down. Let us take care of your eyes." He says -- you know, and that's when I tried to lay down, I couldn't lay down. I realized that my back was injured, that I had something wrong with my back, and I couldn't lay down at that point, and they flushed my eyes. They took some vital signs, and the next thing I know, I was getting in the back of an ambulance and going off to the hospital, and I believe I went to the hospital sometime in the vicinity around three o'clock or 3:30 in the afternoon, so, again, my time -- what areas where I thought I was only for like 15, 20 minutes, it could have been a lot longer, and so somewhere along there all that time transpired, but that's pretty much my story of that day.

Q. Is there anything else you'd like to add to this interview? Anything at all?

A. No.

MR. ECCLESTON: This interview is concluded at 2212 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT DAVID TIMOTHY

Interview Date: October 25, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 25th, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. The time is now 0648 hours. I am conducting an interview with --

EMT TIMOTHY: EMT David Timothy.

MR. RADENBERG: Of EMS Battalion 4. This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 4 regarding the events of the morning of September 11th, 2001.

Q. David?

A. Well, I guess at approximately 8:48 when everything started my partner and I were sitting on I believe that was Madison and Henry Street, if I'm not mistaken. No, Catherine and Henry, which is about a block away from our 89, our unit's 04 Boy.

What happened was a civilian had approached -- in fact, let me just start that over. A transmission came over the air about something hitting or some sort of explosion in the World Trade Center. Secondly, a civilian walked up to our ambulance and said, "I don't know if you guys heard about I, but they're bombing the World Trade Center."

Okay. We decided, all right, let's just take a slow ride over there and see what's going on. As soon as we started moving off and we had the Trade Center in view, my partner of course made some expletives and he got on the air and said he saw what happened right now, put us on the assignment.

I guess after that it probably took us a few minutes to get over there from our location. Basically it's quick to get around Manhattan from where we were.

We got there and we were -- we took a route down Fulton Street and ended up behind at one point 01 Charlie, directly behind them. Not to block the street because there were other engine companies coming in, we pulled up in front of them. I would say we were between Fulton and Dey on Church.

Of course at this time the south tower was engulfed in flames. There was debris everywhere. People were running out of the buildings. I guess people started coming towards us asking for help. A lot of people were directing them to just get away from the buildings if they can.

There was one individual, he had glass all over him. He said he just got thrown through some glass. We put him on our ambulance, and we continued to try to get like a few people as well in the ambulance.

The next thing I heard was a loud like an engine roar. I looked up, and the next thing I knew I just saw -- I don't know if it was the tail end of the plane or what, but I saw something. When I looked up, I heard "boom." I'm sorry, the north tower was the first one. The south tower then got hit when we were right there.

My partner was actually trying to put someone in the ambulance at the time. I grabbed him and kind of like pushed him in and closed the doors, and I like ran back up Fulton into a little bit of like I guess a cul-de-sac. It was a big garage door. There was a bunch of people in there. I ran back towards the ambulance, and I moved the ambulance around to Fulton and Broadway.

My partner instructed me, he said, "Listen, let's just get these people to the hospital, you know, Beekman." We went to Beekman Hospital. Actually we went up to Dey and back onto Fulton and Broadway and went to Beekman Hospital.

There was probably about five or six people. We dropped them off. There was one guy with a broken ankle. This one guy was having an asthma attack right then and there. The guy -- we actually long-boarded him. There were like two other civilians. Really I can't remember what was the extent of the injuries. So we took them to the hospital. We left.

Now, when the explosion hit I don't know if -- it actually took me off my feet, because I fell. I actually got cuts and stuff like that all over my hands and whatnot. My partner, he wanted to take me off service. I was like, "No, no, no, I've got to help someone. Let's just do what we've got to do and get back and try to give them some assistance."

We took him back and for some reason I kept hearing on the radio something about a staging area at Vesey and West. It was so blocked up, you couldn't really travel around it. So we ended being back at the same location that we were before, which was Fulton and Church, of course once again still parked in front of 01 Charlie's unit.

Lieutenant Melarango, he came up to me and he basically said don't move the bus. Leave the bus where it is. Just before that actually Lieutenant Medjuck had instructed the same thing. He said don't move the bus whatever.

The next instructions from him were whatever you do don't leave. What we're going to do is give you -- I can't remember if he said six or eight, whatever, like six patients. The next instructions were to take these people to Brooklyn, take them as far into Brooklyn as you can, go as far as into Kings County. I said, "All right. Not a problem."

So more or less now it was more like a stand and really wait kind of a show. At this time both towers of course are engulfed in flames. This is when to me the worst of it really started beginning. Now you see the people jumping out of the buildings. There are body parts everywhere. It just was a mess.

So my partner and I were just waiting there. I think we just started to get the first of the few people, and now I'm like wondering, all right, what am I supposed to do? I'm driving, so I guess I'm going to have to wait.

So my partner now -- I think he's just getting one person on board and just started hearing I guess like -- to me it sounded like the 8:45 from Jamaica station going to Atlantic -- to Flatbush Avenue, the Long Island Railroad, just some big train just right over your head, like a whole bunch of locomotives just running right over your head.

I looked up, and the building just tilted and started coming down. All I could say was run. That's the only thing I could remember from them is just saying run. I could have sworn my partner was behind me, and I'm running.

I'm running actually down north on Church and made like a quick right on Vesey where the Stage Deli is I guess right here. To me it looked like it was open. I ran straight to it, and it was locked.

At this time it just got totally black. All I could do is think of right then and there was just to crouch and just try to get shelter, because things are hitting me. Something started hitting me in my back.

There was a whole bunch of people in front of me, and everybody's like -- I don't know. I guess the last person they saw was me, and people are like, "What are we going to do? What are we going to do?"

Out of nowhere this person grabs my shoulder and happened to be a cop. I said, "Have you got anything heavy on you like your night stick or something?" I grabbed him and threw him right in front of me. I said, "There is glass right in front of you. Start breaking it, because that's the only way we can get shelter."

So he started breaking the glass, and we went in. I instructed everybody to get in there. People were coughing, respiratory problems, whatever the case may be. I started telling everybody, "Listen, there's water. I'm sorry, but just start cleaning your face off, wash your mouth off." Guys were coming in with irritated eyes. I said, "Wash your eyes out." It's a deli, so there are sinks and everything. I said, "Wash your face off, whatever."

The cop was like, "Where do we go from here?" I said, "If anybody comes in here that can walk, let them get as far away as possible." It was so weird.

A woman actually came up to me and asked me how to get uptown. I mean, basically she wanted to know if that train station, the A train, which was I guess Fulton Street train station, if she should take it to go uptown. I didn't even know -- I said, "Ma'am, I don't even know what to tell you, to be honest with you. I don't know what to tell you." I said, "I don't even know if they're running."

After that we probably stayed -- time, don't even ask me time. I don't even know what time it is by this time. If I had to make an estimate, we probably stayed there probably a half hour, if that much, after the first building collapsed.

Let's see, the first building collapsed -- the first one collapsed, oh, 9:55? Wow. We probably stayed there like not even a half hour, probably like 15, 20 minutes, until all the smoke cleared a little bit.

Then I walked back outside and I started looking for my partner. At this time the deli is cleared out. I started looking for my partner and couldn't find him. The first person I bumped into was Alex Lousky. I always remember that. He said he couldn't even find his partner. I told him I saw James right behind me. I said, "Have you seen him?" He's like, "No." All right.

Now, the thing was I didn't even know where my ambulance was at this point. Even though they said it was still there, I didn't even think about checking.

Now, at this time I started walking back on Church going south, and I got back to Fulton Street. There was a bunch of rubble and stuff right around here. This building was -- I don't even want to talk about that building. You couldn't really see much down this way anyway. But I walked here and I walked back up Fulton Street. This is where I saw Alex, right around in the middle of Fulton.

Q. Okay, between Church and Broadway.

A. Right.

I walked back up Fulton Street, and I saw Jay right in front of -- I guess this is The Chase Manhattan Bank right here on the corner. Of course I gave him the biggest hug I could ever think of. I just asked him, "Are you okay?" He said, "Yeah, I'm --" He asked me the same thing.

He said, "Listen, the bank told us we could come inside and we could start bringing people in. We were in there, and of course everybody else was like just in a daze. There were people in the bank, there were people crying. The one thing that was kind of great is that people actually had access to phones.

I think what happened is at this time I lost -- I couldn't even find my radio. Jay had his. So I got on the radio and said, "04 Boy, all present and accounted for. Where is staging?" He gave us two locations. The one that was closest was the South Ferry.

Jay said, "Look, let's just stick around here for a while, see what we can do. Let's just not leave just yet. Probably more people can come in." At this time I think I walked back out. If I'm not mistaken, I walked back out of the bank and I saw one or two lieutenants and one other guy. I think they were walking in the direction of Fulton Street.

The next thing I knew, I'm standing outside and this woman asked me, "Where do I go? Where do I go?" I said, "Usually you get as far away as possible from here or you go inside the bank and just try to compose yourself, because I don't know what to tell you right about now. It's not like -- I'm not saying I don't want to tell you something. It's like if I tell you go north and something happens up north, I don't want to tell you --"

Q. Right.

A. So I just told her, "Listen, get as far away from the area right now." The next thing I knew, you started hearing more explosions. I guess this is when the second tower started coming down.

This time I was like, you know what, what else? What else? I almost thought I had died the first time. I thought, what else is there? I walked back in the building and said, "Jay, the second tower is coming down." He said, "What?" He said, "Everybody just get down on the floor and just get behind something."

The same thing happened to the second tower. I'm looking from the window, just coming down. It was like, well, oh, well. I'm like, why am I standing in front of this glass, because there's glass right in front of me. I'm like, am I nuts? So I just walked away I crouched down behind a desk.

The one thing I did is a looked behind me, and the revolving door was spinning. From the force of the wind it just started turning. Of course it just got pitch-black again. What can you do? You sit there and wait it out.

It says here I guess the north tower collapsed at 10:29. So we started off -- we had an elderly Jewish man. From the time he got there, he was on a stair chair. We had water and stuff like that, so we were giving him water to drink and telling him to try to relax. People were calling loved ones.

We got an ambulance, and we took the old man to the ambulance. We asked if anyone else wanted to go to the hospital. We told them, "Listen, if you're not going to the hospital, you can't stay in the bank. Get as far away from here as possible. Start heading towards the bridge. Do whatever you've got to do just to get away from the area."

All right. So I said, "Jay, listen, of course the other location is up by Chelsea Piers. We can't go up there." We're on foot. For some reason I think one of the guys had found a ESU tech bag, a really big one, and they brought that in. We started trying to see the inventory to see what we had. Let's just grab it and let's just start heading out to the South Ferry.

We grabbed the stuff. I took the bag on my back, started heading down Broadway, and walked to the South Ferry. And that was it, at least for us.

Q. What's your partner's last name?

A. Zion.

Q. Zion?

A. Yeah. He actually quit.

Q. Yeah, I heard that.

The ambulance that took the man from the bank, was that a fire ambulance? Do you know who it was?

A. No. I have a feeling it was a Brooklyn ambulance, because the unit that drove it, I don't know if they're from Manhattan it could have been Brooklyn or whatever else. I don't know. Then again, it could be all the way uptown. I don't know. I only know the guys from Queens and this Batallion, 4.

Q. After you lost your partner with the first collapse, were you with any other ambulance people?

A. Yeah. I was standing with one of the lieutenants, I think it was Medjuck, at one point. You know what, I really can't truly remember, but I knew I saw someone with a blue shirt, a light blue shirt, that is.

We didn't really lose each other because, you know what, because I knew exactly where he was when the first tower collapsed. Oh, I'm sorry, no. I'm thinking about the first plane crash -- or the second plane crash.

When the first building collapsed, no, I wasn't with any lieutenants at all. I didn't see any lieutenants. I only saw lieutenants after I found him.

Q. After you found Jay?

A. Yeah.

Q. At the bank?

A. Yeah. I think there was Melarango and someone else. I knew it was one and one. Then one EMT was with him. It was a group of people, and they were heading down Fulton Street, if I'm not mistaken, back towards the Battery.

That's all I can remember. A lot of that day is just like a big blur, believe it or not. I mean, I did what I had to do. I tried to keep that much composure. But when you try to formulate a time line, the only thing you can remember is like the events. You don't remember like at 9:56 --

Q. Right, yeah.

A. As far as I'm concerned, time just stood still for a long while. It was interesting.

Q. Any thoughts or comments on the day?

A. Let's just hope it doesn't happen again.

Q. I agree with you on that one.

A. I can't think of anything else.

5:25, I didn't know that was the time it fell, Seven World Trade.

Q. Yeah, it was later in the afternoon.

A. Like I said, that's as much as I remember. It was bad.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. The time is now 0708 hours, and the interview is concluded

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT RICHARD BRODERICK

Interview Date: October 25, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 25th. The time is 6:52 a.m. my name is Mike Tambasco with the World Trade Center Task Force. We're conducting an interview into the events of September 11th at the World Trade Center. Our interview today is with --

EMT BRODERICK: Richard Broderick, emergency medical technician, Battalion 10, Manhattan.

A. I responded to the World Trade Center. We were at St. Luke's Hospital when we heard it go down. The police officers were with us. We heard it go over their radio as a level 3, which I didn't understand what a level 3 was, but they said that it was a plane into the towers but they didn't know what type of plane.

So we took our patient to St. Luke's Hospital, and my partner came out and said we were going to the World Trade. I said, okay, fine. So we started to head down the West Side Highway, and the more we approached the scene, the scenario, we saw the towers and we saw the smoke bellowing out of the first tower. It was pretty scary.

When we pulled in, we pulled in to West Street and Vesey, which is supposedly the staging area for EMS units and other emergency vehicles. I saw Mayor Giuliani walk in front of us, and I assumed that was before he got trapped in the Trade Center himself in the bunker.

So they told us to go up the street, which I think is Vesey. I pulled into the spot, and the next thing I know, there was a third emergency medical technician who came running over to us and said he was from Queens General. He took the train up. He said he worked -- his name was Santiago. I don't know his first name. Spanish kid, young kid, very nice kid.

The next thing you know, they were handing us five burn victims. I don't know what they looked like because I was still in the driver's seat. I didn't even put the thing in park. My partner said, "We've got five burn victims. We're going to Bellevue Hospital." I said, "Okay, fine."

We pulled out, and I swung around -- I don't know the street, but I swung around the block. The next thing, I was back on West Street. When I was coming my partner yelled -- can I curse?

Q. Do whatever you want.

A. He said, "Oh, shit." I said, "What's the matter?" I looked in the mirror and all I saw was clouds, dust. I put my foot down on the pedal. When you're driving, you're like with your foot all the way down and you're still trying to push the vehicle to get it going because you think you're not moving.

I just took off. I flew up West Street all the way up to 34th. From then on -- we got to Bellevue, and we disembarked the patients. I didn't even get out of the vehicle again either. The doctors and the nurses were all there.

Q. They were grabbing them out of the bus?

A. They were just grabbing them out of the vehicle with my partner and the young guy that was with us. They told me to get out of the emergency room bay. As I swung out of the bay, the next thing I know my partner is coming running back with a stretcher and everything and he's telling me, "We're going back down. We're going back down."

We flew down to the FDR Drive, and I got off at Pearl Street. We came up the ramp right by One Police Plaza. I couldn't believe the scenery. It was like -- I don't know how to explain it. People were just full of dust. It was like snow. It was all over the place.

People were in a daze. They were just -- they looked like zombies. The word was zombies. They were walking. They were confused. I had to go really slow through the streets or I would hit them. You couldn't see anything anyway it was so full of dust.

We wound up going down -- I don't know what the streets were, to be honest with you. I remember passing the Federal Reserve Bank.

Q. Maiden Lane is the Federal Reserve.

A. Because I happened to see the marshals and everybody out with the shot guns and machine guns. I noticed the area right away. The next thing, we saw an ambulance flying. So my partner said, "Follow them." It was a private ambulance. It wasn't an EMS unit. It looked like a New York Hospital unit. I said, okay.

So we started following them. I don't know what the street was, but we got to Greenwich. He made the left and was moving to the devastation. My partner is saying, "Follow him. Follow him." I said, "I'm not following him. I'm going to go away from the scene."

So I made a right onto Greenwich. Don't get me wrong, I'm not knocking my partner. He wanted to help. I understand that. You know what it is? I've been a lieutenant. I've been through the staging courses that they give you and the management courses. So in my head I'm clicking as a lieutenant actually or whatever that you get a safe area, because your no good to nobody unless you're safe.

I pulled in. We found a spot on Harrison and Greenwich, clear as a bell. Nothing was going on. I said, "We're stopping here." So we parked the vehicle, put it on an angle. The next thing you know, an elderly woman came up to me and said she was having chest pain. So my partner and the young guy, Santiago, took her in the ambulance.

Meanwhile I'm trying to notify the dispatcher exactly where we were, in case something did happen they would know where we were. Next thing you know, here comes another lady walking up saying she's having an asthma attack.

Meanwhile a paramedic unit pulls in, an EMS paramedic unit. One guy I know -- I don't know his last name. His name is Joe. But I know he's out of Bellevue. And Eddie was his partner, a bald-headed gentleman. They took care of the asthma patient.

Meanwhile I had -- no exaggeration, I had 25 people come up to me and volunteer. I didn't know what to do with them. I gave them all little stupid things to do just to keep them occupied. I'd say, all right, take this gentleman's name, take this gentleman's name, take this one's name, you know, just to keep them -- you can feel they wanted to do something, and there wasn't much they could do.

Next thing you know, I see a man walking up the street, dragging up the street. So I run down to him. I grabbed him, and I look at his collar, his suit, and it was a WTC employee, World Trade Center. I don't know if he was a security person or -- I remember his face, I just don't remember -- I remember looking at his ID. I remember his face, but I don't remember his name. This guy looked like a tiger got at him. His shirt was all ripped up, pale, sweaty. I sat him down.

Meanwhile at this time St. Vincent's medics pull in. The medic from St. Vincent used to be my partner, Phil. So Phil comes running over. I said, "Phil, I've got a World Trade Center guy here." Okay. He starts listening to his signs, started giving him oxygen, put him in the truck, put him in St. Vinnie's truck.

The next thing you know, the police are running up the street. It wasn't 10, 15 minutes; we were there for a good hour. You figure by the time we dropped the patients off at Bellevue and went back to the scene, when I got to Pearl Street it had to be around 11 a.m., quarter to 11, 11 a.m.

So the next thing you know, cops were coming up and we were giving them respirator masks. Then they gave us things because we didn't have things. We were treating the patients. The next thing you know, the police officers started running up the street and they said, "We've got to get out of here. We've got to get out of here. It's going to blow." There was supposed to be a gas leak.

We just threw everybody in the ambulance, just threw everybody in the bus. The volunteers, the people that were so willing -- I had a gentleman come up to me and say, "I have a gentleman stuck in the elevator on the fifth floor right across the street." I said, "Sir, I can't do anything. I'm busy. Tell a police officer."

Q. Right.

A. I'm really busy. I can't do it. He said, "Okay, no problem." I don't know where he went. We just threw everybody in the ambulance and just raced up about three blocks. There was a staging area there. I don't know whether it was -- again, everything was going so fast, I don't remember the streets.

Lieutenant Remz was there, Lieutenant Maria Santaromita. I know these people from working at Woodhall Hospital many years ago. They are lieutenants now. I told them what we had, and they said no problem. Then I said we had numerous back boards because we found a vehicle unmanned, so we took their equipment so we could be prepared. We didn't know what else was going to happen.

I think what happened was when we left West Street and Vesey, I assume that is when the second plane hit the tower. I was told that later on, the second plane hit the tower, and I saw it on TV for the people with cameras.

From there on, then we went to Chelsea Pier and we sat there for two hours. I was getting bored. I'm here to do what I'm supposed to do. I don't want to get hurt, but I'm here to help.

Then from there we left and we wound up at North Moore and Greenwich, where we assisted Lieutenant Dave --

Q. Restuccio?

A. Restuccio? My partner Mike was his assistant getting the paperwork. Again, what we're taught in EMS is when you're the driver of the vehicle you're to maintain your vehicle so no one will steal it. So I stayed with my vehicle.

When we were there, some kids -- we didn't know they were kids at the time -- started throwing something from the roof of the building off of -- and it was hitting the ground hard. Everybody started running, started panicking. The police went running in with their guns out. The next thing you know, they had tons -- I'm exaggerating, but we had like a dozen cops in riot gear standing in front of us.

Then a gentleman was trying to get by with a bike, and the police officer started getting -- you could tell he was there. He had dust all over him. He was drained. The guy was pushing. The cop was getting annoyed.

Anyway, from there on we just sat at North Moore and Greenwich. I saw building seven go down. I saw it actually go down. It was a couple blocks away from us. From there on we just sat there till -- I just sat there until 10:30 at night and didn't do anything. I just watched everybody else going into what they call ground zero now. I was like, what are we doing here? I want to go. I want to get in there. I want to at least help, do something. That's what I'm trained for.

From there on, again, from 2:00 in the afternoon to 10:30 at night, we just sat at North Moore and Greenwich. Of course at 1:00 in the afternoon I finally got a chance to phone my folks to let them know I was fine. Of course my house phone was busy.

I called my father at work, who is now a security officer in the Marriott on 48th and Lexington, so he was very happy to hear my voice. He said, "I figured you'd be there." I said, "I just want to let you know I'm alive. I'm okay." I said it was really bad. It was the worst I've seen, and I've seen a lot in 22 years, going on 22 years. This is the worst of my career that I've ever seen. It blew me away.

I only went down there twice. I went down there the day it happened, and just about two weeks ago I was down at ground zero. We did family escorts. So I had to go back. There really was nothing I could do after that. The next day all I did was come to the station and clean the vehicles to get them all ready that were down there.

So again, we got assigned to go down there. I was saying I don't want to go down there no more. It took me two weeks just to get over what I saw the first day. So all right. We go to ground zero. No problem. We go to staging. They told us we're going to be going on the boat. I said, "Oh, great. I'm a real boat lover." I am.

They were very nice. I couldn't believe the politeness. They were so nice,the state troopers there, which was scary when they're wearing their dark sunglasses.

Okay. We did our first family escort on the boat, which wasn't too bad. That was my first time down since that day, and I could not believe the devastation that I saw, the hole.

So we did one trip. One woman got nervous. She was crying, a British woman. A family member, I think her husband was in there, so I escorted her and another gentleman. We took her back to the boat and stayed with her, with the police officers guarding us like we were the president of the United States. Really, unbelievable.

The guy, the correction officer, he was excellent. He helped us out great with taking our equipment and putting it on the car for us, following us wherever we went. He said, "We are here for you." I said, "Great. Thank you."

Second trip, no problem. People were upset as usual but very nice. They were thanking us.

The third trip, we went to ground zero. My partner says to me, "Look, I see a picture of a paramedic on her blouse." I said, "Let me go look." I'm curious. I go look. When somebody says something to you at the same time the name, I said Carlos. She said at the same time, it was his mother. She said, "You know Carlos?" I said, "Carlos, I used to work with him in Woodhull."

It was funny, I ran into him August 5th. I know the date well because I ran my sister into the emergency room for emergency surgery, and he knew my sister. They were talking. Actually the last time I saw Carlos was August 5th.

Anyway, I met his wife, very nice girl. I heard the story that he went there to get her out and she was out already and there was no way they could reach each other. It blew me away. It blew me away again. I was dealing with it, but when it comes close to home, like everybody else that's involved in the situation.

I stayed with them. I stayed with them through the whole tour. I even told the lieutenant, the police officer that was involved with the job of escorting the families, I said I'm staying with them. She said no problem. I stayed with her crying on me. That's what blew me away, I think. The only thing I kept thinking of is that could have been me that day, and I was hoping that somebody would be doing that for my mother.

Then when we were up on the podium, [redacted]

Then they started showing pictures two minutes before he was missing. It just blew me away. It tore me apart, it really did. [redacted]

[redacted]

We escorted them back to the boat. We even escorted them back to the staging area. The police officer that was involved with the family escort thing said they couldn't believe how great we were.

So we got back to the station, and I heard the phone ring and Lieutenant Giblin was on the phone and he said, "They're standing in front of us." I said, "Oh, what do we do now?" I thought we were in trouble. He said, "No, that was the Mayor's office called OEM, OEM called EMS, and they want you guys back tomorrow because they said you did an excellent job." I said, "Well, I'm not going back. I can't."

It blew me away. As a matter of fact, I didn't come to work the next day. I took the day off. No, I did come to work, I'm sorry. I worked with somebody else. I couldn't take it. It just blew me -- I'm strong, but it caught home.

That's about it. I don't know what else to tell you. Again, it was the worst thing

I ever seen in my whole career.

Q. And hopefully ever will.

A. Again, I've seen people decapitated. I've seen people dragged by tractor-trailers, and it never bothered me. Now I guess maybe because I'm getting older or it's just that I've seen so much that it's enough.

But I still love my job. I still like taking care of people; I really do. I love taking care of the elderly. I go the nine yards. I don't care how long I'm on the scene, I go nine yards. That's the way I am.

I don't know what else to tell you. That's about it, Mike. I don't know what else to really -- unless you have questions.

Q. No, nothing else. It's just anything else you might want to say; if not, Rich --

A. I just feel real bad about the people that died. It's sad. It's unfortunate. I really think that's what caused the firemen and cops -- did I tell you I knew eight people. I knew four emergency service cops, three firemen, and that's really about it, the only seven people I knew.

The emergency service cops were from here, Truck 2. Truck 2 in Manhattan, ESU 2, I knew the three guys very well, because my friend is an ESU sergeant, which thank God he was on vacation at his new home in New Winster. I know him; he would have been in. It took him two and a half hours.

When I saw him three weeks -- I just saw him last week for the first time, and we're like buddy-buddy. He said, "Rich, I was worried about you. I thought you were there." I said, "I was." I said, "You know what? I'm glad you weren't there." It was like, I know him.

But anyway, the officers that died, I knew them. I knew them. Pappageorge, I knew him from here. I didn't know him that well, but I knew him from here. I didn't know he was a firefighter. I didn't know he graduated and went to firefighter.

Who else? Oh, a buddy of mine, my other friend, his brother's missing. I just ran into him last Saturday and he gave me a big hug and he said he was going to get in touch with me for the memorial service. I knew his brother Carl. He was a firefighter. He's been missing. He just got married seven months ago.

So all these poor people that died. It's just sad. I was hoping somebody would talk to me about this, because it really has been eating me up. I'm pretty strong, but this has hit me hard.

Q. This is something that nobody's ever seen before. That's what it is.

A. I'm glad they're doing what they're doing right now. I hate to say it like that, but I'm glad they're doing what they're doing. We have to, because we're going to live in terror for the rest of our lives.

I feel like I'm a prisoner now. Not too much, but just being stopped just to look at my ID to see if I'm getting on the bridge all right and letting the taxicabs get on for nothing. That's wrong. But that's how I feel.

That's really all I have to say, Mike. I don't know what else to tell you, again, unless you have something else to ask me.

Q. That's about it, Rich.

A. I can't think of anything. All I can remember -- I met some nice people out of it from the volunteers that were helping. They were very nice. I couldn't believe the people that wanted to help. They were unbelievable. Actually 25 people came up -- I didn't know what to do with them. I was lost. I'm trying to say, okay, you do this, you do that.

One was a volunteer fireman. "I'm a volunteer fireman." "Take care of that World Trade Center guy." That was before the St. Vinnie medic came, like two minutes before they pulled in. I said, "Take care." I'm running around doing this, doing this, helping the cops, giving them masks.

I mean, it's part of our job. I understand that. I felt good that I did something. I felt bad that I couldn't do more. I sat at that staging area all night. I really got bored. I was getting tired just standing there. I really wish I could have done more, but I did what I had to do and I feel good about it. Unfortunately it happened when it did.

That's about it.

Q. All right, Rich. I thank you so much for your interview and your feelings.

A. I hope it works out.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JONATHAN MORITZ

Interview Date: October 25, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 25th, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. The time is now 0715 hours. I am conducting an interview with...

EMT MORTIZ: Jonathan Moritz, M-o-r-i-t-z, EMT, Battalion 4, Unit 04 Henry, Tour 2, Shield No. 2698.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 4 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Jonathan, if you'd begin.

A. We had just signed on to the unit, we were heading to our 89 status, and my partner realized he had forgot a piece of his personal equipment back at the station. We immediately turned back around, came back to the station, retrieved the equipment. On our way back to our 89 status, we reported to the corner of Clinton Street and Madison Street. We were approached by about upwards of 75 to 100 people pointing and just extremely hysterical, and when we looked down Madison Street, it was a straight shot into the World Trade Center complex and there was a crater taken out of the upper floors, there was a heavy smoke and fire condition, debris was still coming down, and with that the radio transmissions started to come in from other units with the priority message. Being the HAZTAC unit, we felt we needed to respond in on the scene. So we immediately went to the 63 status, tried to advise the dispatcher as best as possible. There was a lot of radio traffic.

We proceeded down Madison Street to where it comes into Pearl and then Pearl Street comes down and around the back side of the World Trade Center on the east side and turns into I believe it's Water Street. It runs into Water Street, if I'm not mistaken. We were coming across Water Street and I remember there was a Fire patrol vehicle No. 3 in front of us that we followed in to the scene.

When we got down around the ferry terminal, because we were trying to get into the staging area set up by the conditions boss, it became apparent that it was impossible. Traffic conditions were extremely tight, there were people everywhere, and we proceeded north, I believe, the wrong way, if I'm not mistaken, on Broadway, got up to about -- I want to say Dey Street or one of the side streets, very small street, ducked down to Trinity Place and proceeded north on Trinity Place to Church, and we parked somewhere between Dey Street and Fulton Street. It seemed like the safest area at the time considering where the building was, where we had the most amount of patients. They were all exiting heading away from the Trade Center complex. We tried to get in touch with our conditions boss to let him know where we were, but radio traffic and patient care was making that relatively impossible.

I remember there were many units on the scene. I don't remember who exactly was there. I remember we were treating several patients immediately. There was a burn patient, a jumper patient, a lot of trauma. I had gone back to my unit to get, I believe, the second oxygen tank or another piece of my personal protective equipment when we heard a second explosion, and when we looked up, the second Trade Center had been hit. With that, my partner, I believe, took off running away from the debris north on Church Street and I took off running down Dey Street and I was assisting people because it was quite chaotic.

We were picking up people who were getting trampled on Dey Street, or least I was and I believe a police officer was, and we got halfway in, we stopped, and my partner, I believe, was with the unit and he was down Fulton Street somewhere. We both -- I think it was a police officer and I. I don't remember his name or his shield -- ran back down the street and with that the patient count had tripled, if not more. There were more people coming up to us, more people injured.

With that we received a police officer with a very serious arm injury. He was almost amputated by a piece of shrapnel. With that we also received a burn patient, a lady who had walked down from the 78th floor, believe it or not, with third-degree burns head to toe. I don't know if I could stand as badly as she was burned and she was walking. We had a lady who was complaining of chest pain and chest discomfort. Some vital signs indicated she had some sort of cardiac event transpiring, and I believe we had one more soft tissue injury patient. We proceeded in loading them up, transporting them, providing the best care possible.

I made the decision to go to Cornell Hospital. There was a burn center as well as a trauma center. It was also not as close to the hospitals that would have been overrun. So to try to space out patients, I took them uptown. I remember when we got to the hospital everybody was on standby and waiting. We off-loaded our patients. I transferred care to the best of my ability.

I was monitoring the radio and they said that the No. 2 tower had collapsed. With that I expedited my ER time tenfold. I started heading back down the FDR towards the scene when I heard the second tower had collapsed.

Q. Do you remember how far down you made it on the FDR?

A. I remember we had just gotten off by the 59th Street bridge, if I'm not mistaken. We got onto 59th Street, right there by the Queensborough Bridge, went southbound on the FDR. We were coming down underneath the underpass right there where you get on the FDR and you have I believe there's the Hospital for Special Surgery, if I'm not mistaken, over the top of you at that particular part.

When we came up the FDR, all we saw was the smoke, of course. We proceeded down the FDR to South Street. We got off on South Street and tried to make it into the -- one staging area we had heard was in Battery Park and that's where we were heading for.

We got to the Brooklyn Bridge. It was myself and two other units. I think they were just skeleton units thrown together when this all transpired from our station. We got as far as the Brooklyn Bridge and we were enveloped in the cloud of settling debris.

With that they transmitted the message that everybody was going to report to Chelsea Piers. We turned our vehicles around and we proceeded back northbound on the FDR to 34th or 42nd Street, crossed town and staged until later that evening, when we were (inaudible).

Q. When you got up to Fulton and Church, do you recall who else was there?

A. I don't. I don't recall. There were so many units there that, in so short amount of time that, you know, you were seeing people. As far as people who are missing? Everybody that I saw at the scene I've seen later on. I saw a Cabrini crew that I've worked with later in days transpiring after this. We really weren't on scene as long as we should have been. We got overwhelmed with patients immediately and we transported before we could really get into the operation of the MCI.

Q. Any thoughts or comments that you'd like to add, like odd event that stands out in your mind?

A. No.

Q. Opinions?

A. You run very fast when buildings have airplanes crashing into them.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. The time is now 0724 and the interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT PETER HAYDEN

Interview Date: October 25, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 25th, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The time is now 0541 hours. I'm conducting an interview with...

EMT HAYDEN: Peter Hayden, EMT, Battalion 4.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 4 regarding the events of the morning of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Peter, if you'd begin with when you found out about the assignment.

A. I had a day off and my brother had woke me up to show me the news, and I had saw the news and what had happened and right away I grabbed my equipment, got dressed and went in to work. I got into Manhattan about 9:30 and I was looking for the EMS command post, which I was told was on West and Chambers. While I was walking over there, World Trade 2 began to come down, and I ran away from the scene and got caught in the dust cloud that put a darkness over us and it was hard to breathe. We helped people into buildings, after that onto buses down to Battery Park, and there was nothing really to do for the patient except get them water. So we were just retrieving water for them.

A half hour later, a couple of EMTs and I decided to go back and help some more people back into the buildings of the New York Downtown Athletic Club, and people started running again because 1 World Trade began to come down. So we ran again and the same thing happened, darkness, cloud of smoke, people were having trouble breathing, get them inside, onto buses, putting them down to Battery Park. From there we just kept getting water.

From there I walked up Albany and I ran into another off-duty EMT from this battalion. I'm not sure of his name. What we did was we heard over the radio that there was staging down at Battery Park, so we had emptied a couple of ambulances of the equipment and put them into one ambulance and drove it over to Battery Park. I stayed there for a few hours and just waited and we were giving water to firefighters and police officers that had ventured over, and that was basically my role for the day.

Q. How did you get into Manhattan?

A. I had driven to the tunnel, the Battery Park Tunnel. A lot of us left personal cars and I pulled over and I hopped into a Suburban, a Fire Department vehicle, and they had transported me through.

Q. Do you remember the number of the vehicle or anything like that?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Did it have a battalion number on the side?

A. No, I don't remember.

Q. But it wasn't an EMS Suburban?

A. No, it was Fire Department.

Q. You came through the Battery. How far up towards the Trade Center, if you remember, did you get when you got out of the Suburban?

A. I think they let us off at West Street and Albany.

Q. West Street and Albany. Okay.

You said you'd heard command was up on West and Chambers?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you coming straight up the West Side Highway?

A. Yes.

Q. While you were on the West Side Highway, do you remember approximately where you were when the first tower came down?

A. I was in between Albany and Cedar. I hadn't gone very far because I was asking around where the staging area was.

Q. Right.

A. I didn't see any other EMS personnel around.

Q. When the first tower came down, do you remember where you went?

A. I ran straight south on West Street, and I guess I had reached about a block, I guess around Carlisle Street, whatever this is, and I had jumped next to a divider. I made it to the Downtown Athletic Club, where there were dozens upon dozens of people with several problems just trying to breathe. The most we could do for them, because nobody really had tech bags with them, was just get them water and we were just handing out bottles of water and that was the most we could do for these people.

Q. When you came back up towards the site, you said you had basically stripped down a couple of ambulances to get one stocked?

A. Right.

Q. Do you remember where that was?

A. No, I'm not exactly sure where that was, but it was maybe between Washington and Greenwich. It was outside of a Chase Manhattan Bank. There were a few abandoned ambulances and they were locked. So I saw somebody breaking into the ambulance. He happened to be an EMS personnel from this battalion. He said, help me, we'll get all the equipment onto this bus, there's keys in it, and we'll take it over to Battery Park because we heard over the radio that there was staging down there. So that's what we did.

Q. Do you remember what vehicle number it was, by chance?

A. I don't remember, no.

Q. With those vehicles, it was just you and the other EMT?

A. And there was a guy from New Jersey who said he was an EMT from over there and he helped us.

Q. Do you remember who the other EMT was from the battalion?

A. His first name is Walter.

Q. Walter. Do you know his last name?

A. No.

Q. When you came back, you got that ambulance down there, and was it while you were down at Battery Park that the second tower came down?

A. No. I had taken the ambulance after the second tower came down.

Q. After the second tower came down. Do you remember where you were when the second tower came down?

A. I was around the same area.

Q. Still in the same area? Okay. Do you recall seeing any other EMS officers?

A. Not officers.

Q. Or EMS personnel --

A. Yes.

Q. -- that you know the names of?

A. No, I don't know their names. They weren't from this battalion, I know that. We all started helping. There was a bus and we were helping civilians get onto the bus.

Q. An ambulance or a city bus?

A. It was a city bus.

Q. Okay.

A. We were getting people on there so they could transport them down to the ferries.

Q. All at that point minor injuries?

A. Yes. I didn't see any injuries.

Q. Nothing?

A. Just people complaining, you know, thirsty from dust that they were breathing in.

Q. Does anything anything stand out in your mind as just an odd event or something like that that sticks in your head from that day or any comments or opinions you'd like to add about it?

A. No. I mean, I didn't even actually get to look at the towers collapsing because I pretty much heard them, looked up, saw it and turned around and ran, and it was just get people water and get them on the bus and get them out of there.

Q. Okay. That's pretty much it, unless there's something else you'd like to add.

A. I spent the rest of the day looking for my father, who is a fireman.

Q. Did you find him?

A. Yes.

MR. RADENBERG: Thank you, Peter.

EMT HAYDEN: Thank you.

MR. RADENBERG: The time is now 0549 hours and the interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS DIVISION CHIEF JOHN PERUGGIA

Interview Date: October 25, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. CASTORINA: Today is October 25, 2001. I'm Ron Castorina conducting an interview. The time now is 0835 hours. Your name?

MR. McCOURT: Tom McCourt.

MR. CASTORINA: Also sitting here on the interview.

Q. Your name sir?

A. John PERUGGIA.

Q. What is your rank and title?

A. EMS Division Chief, in charge of planning for the Chief of Department's office.

Q. Can you tell me on September 11, 2001 what took place that day?

A. At approximately 8:50 in the morning I was on my way in to work in my assigned Department vehicle. At that point in time I was on the Staten Island Expressway, just before the Verrazano Bridge. I received a telephone call from one of my staff people, EMT Richard Zarrillo, on the Department cell phone. He indicated to me that a plane had just crashed into the World Trade Center. The Chief was leaving the building. Chief Nigro, my immediate boss, was leaving the building, along with Chief Ganci and he asked me for some direction. I told him and told him to tell the rest of the staff that was in headquarters, just to stand fast. My ETA was approximately 10 to 15 minutes and that we would just wait a little bit and see.

Shortly thereafter, maybe a few minutes, I was on the Verrazano Bridge approaching mid span. I was able to see visually the World Trade Center and the extent of the damage and fire coming from the tower, which was struck. At that point I realized that it wasn't maybe just a small private aircraft that may have struck the building, but something much more significant and this had the potential to be a catastrophic type incident.

Being familiar with the World Trade Center complex and the extent of chaos that could occur during a tragedy, as I was present shortly after the bombing in 1993, I called EMT Zarrillo back on his cell phone. I directed him to round up the rest of the staff, which consisted of a Captain and two Lieutenants, Captain Abdo Nahmod, Lieutenant John Nevins and Lieutenant Brad Mann and tell them to start making their way over to the World Trade Center. Whatever it was that hit the building from what I was seeing at my location, I knew that their assistance would be needed.

At that point I hung up the phone, put my emergency lights on the vehicle, got behind an ambulance or between an ambulance and a police car and our entire little package was now en route to the incident.

Moments later I got a notification on my Department pager to call the fire operations center. I immediately called them. They advised me that the Office of Emergency Management had been activated. I am the person in operations who is responsible for staffing OEM or the Police Department's command and control center. I told them that I would respond in. I gave them directions to notify the fire First Division to have them start out a fire rep. I also asked them to page Captain Nahmod and EMT Zarrillo and have them redirect themselves to OEM.

I pulled my car over to the side, when I got off the Verrazano Bridge. I grabbed my Department radio from the trunk, turned it on to the frequency and advised the dispatcher that I was responding. I continued then in on my response. As I was passing through the Battery Tunnel, probably around midway through the Battery Tunnel, I heard the report come over the radio that a second plane had struck the second tower. At that point I realized to myself that this wasn't just an accident, but more than likely some sort of terrorist event.

I came out of the Battery Tunnel and as soon as I came out, I parked my car immediately on the western side of northbound West Street between Rector and West. I'm going to mark that on the map with a number one. I put my boots on. I put my EMS safety coat on, my helmet, grabbed the radio and a pad and began to walk my way up West Street. My initial intent was to pass through the site, make contact with the Chief at the command post and advise them that I was en route to 7 World Trade Center, the Office of Emergency Management, to provide staffing, as it was now activated.

Q. As you were walking into the scene, the second plane had just hit --

A. Just moments.

Q. What were you observing?

A. It was very chaotic on the street. There were lots of people running around. There was heavy fire and smoke emanating from both towers in the World Trade Center, the upper floors. As I walked up the street, I was being passed by police and firefighters heading in both directions, some towards the site and some away from the site. I passed over some pieces of what appeared to be aircraft wreckage, fuselage, whatever, some body parts and bodies in various states, either people from the building or the airplanes. You couldn't tell. They weren't intact.

As I approached Albany Street, I crossed over to the southbound side of West Street because there was debris coming down from the building, people were running from the building and also it was very dangerous. So for my own safety I crossed on to that side and proceeded to walk northbound on West Street. As I made it to in front of what would be 1 World Trade Center, I'm going to mark that number 2 on the map, maybe just south of the north bridge, there was the inter-agency command post or at least the Fire Department command post. I saw Chief Ganci, I saw --

Q. Inside the lobby?

A. No, this was on the southbound side of West Street, you know, in front of like the World Financial Center, across the street from the building. I saw Chief Ganci, I saw Chief Nigro. There were a number of other people. I really wasn't paying attention. I made a verbal contact with Chief Ganci and Chief Nigro. I advised them that I was en route to 7 World Trade. OEM was active. I had already given directions to two of the staff to respond there, as well as a representative from the fire First Division.

I told them that if any of them had appropriate protective gear with them, once we got settled, I would release as many people from there as necessary to maybe help support the operations. We didn't need lots of stuff up there.

At that point I made contact with Captain James Yakimovich. He's a fire Captain who was detailed to headquarters with us for a little while. He was on a special assignment. He was in personnel on Washington Street. He was writing the fire Lieutenant's exam or whatever. He was in civilian clothes. He came out to the site when he heard what happened. He has experience at staffing OEM. I have used him on a number of occasions. I said Jimmy, you don't have gear with you. Why don't you come with me to OEM and if the First Division rep has gear we will release them.

So both of us were preparing then to leave the command post and make our way northbound on West Street to Vesey and then we would go to OEM. At that point Chief Ganci placed his hand on my shoulder and told me that I should be careful walking over there because there was stuff falling off the building. I told him not to worry about it. I was a big boy.

I reached 7 World Trade Center. We walked into the lobby and we were going up the escalators to the main level. I checked in at the security desk. As we reached the top of the escalators, there were lots of people running down the escalator on the promenade. I spoke to one of the Deputy Directors and as I was speaking with him, I believe it was Deputy Director Rotanz, who is a Fire Department Captain on detail over there, Captain Nahmod and EMT Zarrillo approached as well. They had indicated that the building was being evacuated.

I questioned as to what the nature of the evacuation was. I was told that it was not because of what was occurring across the street. No one feared that the building was in any danger as a result of two airplane attacks and subsequent fires, but that there were reports of a third plane that had been hijacked. It was unidentified, the location, and they thought it may be coming in for an additional strike. Therefore, they were evacuating the building.

We proceeded down to the lobby where the various agency representatives were present. We collectively started to set up in the lobby and try to think of strategies to where we could move the inter-agency cooperation effort.

At that point, I also had a face to face discussion with Battalion Chief Mike Maggio from the First Battalion. He was the person who was sent up to be the rep at OEM. Mike is someone who assists us on lots of our event planning. He was detailed there. He didn't have any gear with him. He was a light duty Chief on administrative assignment there. So I told Captain Yakimovich that we are not going to send a Chief back. At that point he indicated that he was going to run over to 10 and 10 and secure gear and then report back to the command post and assist the Chief there. I told him that would be fine. I didn't need a lot of people inside. They needed more help outside.

As we were having discussions in the lobby as to what to do with OEM, a number of people came in the lobby as patients. Captain Nahmod and EMT Zarrillo started to look at them, put them off to the side and talk to them. At that point I stepped outside. I was going to request some EMS resources and I had face to face contact with Captain Mark Stone of the EMS 8 Battalion.

Q. What kind of patients were you seeing?

A. There was two or three people who had smoke inhalation. There was another person who was bleeding significantly from his lower leg and unable to stand. He was trying to limp and crawl.

Q. They came from outside?

A. Yes. Later it was determined that he had a fracture of his leg, so we put him on a chair and the other people, we put them off to the side. I ran into Captain Stone. He had, I believe it was two EMTs with him. I told him that -- he was in his full gear and radio. I directed him to respond over, report into the EMS command post and I told him that I put Captain Nahmod in charge of whatever little treatment sector that we would establish here in the lobby.

Q. Where was the EMS command post?

A. I don't know where the EMS command post was at that time. Again I didn't hear much. There was lots of stuff going on the radio. My mission at that time was not that of an EMS Chief responding to the operation. My mission was, as the Chief of Planning for the Fire Department, to respond in to handle the agency liaison stuff.

I told Captain Stone he could respond over to the EMS command post so he could take a field assignment or whatever, since he was appropriately dressed. EMT Zarrillo and Captain Nahmod responded from headquarters without turnout gear, helmets or -- EMT Zarrillo had his helmet with him. So Captain Abdo Nahmod established a treatment center. I requested over the Citywide radio for two BLS units to respond to my location at 7 World Trade Center where we established treatment.

At that point I continued to liaison with my counterparts over at OEM. A short while later, just maybe a few moments, Dr. Asaeda, Office of Medical Affairs, and the EMT or paramedic that was with him, showed up. I told him we were seeing a number of people. In other words, more than 3 at that point in time, but again I wasn't directly involved, so I couldn't tell you the number. He said fine. He said he would stay over at our location and work with us there. We were in close proximity to the building. If you are familiar, I'll mark it with number 3 on the map, in front of 7 World Trade Center.

Directly across the street there are some escalators that come down from the promenade. There is also an overhead pedestrian walkway that connects the World Trade Center plaza to the lobby of number 7. There was people coming down both exits. So it was a good position for us to find people who may require medical attention and get them into a secured area of the lobby. I didn't have any EMS people working out on Vesey Street proper, because it was not a safe location. There was people jumping out of the windows of the World Trade Center. We were witnessing that. There was debris falling down from the north tower and making its way on to the street and promenade where we were located.

A few moments after Dr. Asaeda arrived and started talking to Captain Nahmod about the patients, a gentleman from the building identified himself as a security person or a security director. He asked me if there is anything that we needed or he could provide me with regard to the EMS. We questioned him as to the ability to open up the loading bays which are associated to number 7 World Trade Center. The entrances are located directly under the pedestrian foot bridge. I figured it was protected there, so debris wouldn't fall down. He said he would do that. I directed Captain Nahmod to move the patients into that area. Again, the lobby of number 7 is all glass facade. I was concerned that if something should come off the building, go through the glass or hit the glass, we would have an extraordinary amount of patients in addition to what was already being seen.

Further we took everyone from OEM and moved them to what would be the most southeasterly corner inside that first floor entrance of the 7 World Trade. There is a big granite or marble security desk and we started to establish around that as we were trying to figure out what we were going to do.

At that point again, I went out front to see what was going on and where the ambulances I had requested were. I had a face to face with Fire Commissioner Thomas Von Essen. He was there with his driver. He was wearing his protective gear and his helmet. He questioned me as to -- I told him I was there for OEM, operating in the lobby, that the building was being evacuated and the nature of that. He indicated if I knew the whereabouts of the Mayor. I told him that as I was approaching OEM and coming up Vesey Street, I saw a large contingency of gentlemen in suits exiting down Vesey Street proceeding north on West toward Barclay. I recognized some of the people in that group as staff and TAs for the Mayor. I told him more than likely that was probably the direction the Mayor went.

He asked me what was going on. I told him what was going on. I told him where the command post was and that Chief Ganci, Chief Nigro and I had just spoken a few minutes earlier at that location. He said okay and he proceeded then westbound on Vesey towards West.

Q. Who was he with, was he with some of his aides?

A. He was with his driver or somebody again, I don't remember exactly who he was with. Time proceeded. We were listening to the radio for updates of what was going on. Our patient count was probably a half dozen to a dozen at that point. We had maybe three or four EMTs working under Captain Nahmod with Dr. Asaeda. We had a whole treatment center set up inside those bays. They got folding chairs from the building security.

They had back boards, they had oxygen. It was working out real nice. Everyone was stable so there was no rush to start screaming for additional ambulances. I felt at that point we were in a fairly secure location in those bays. That was one less concern that I needed to be worried about at that point.

Several minutes passed by. I then encountered Chief Nigro in front of the building.

Q. What building was he in front of?

A. In front of 7 World Trade Center. He indicated he was in the process of doing a perimeter survey of the complex to get a good grip on the extent of damage in the fire. I guess he would then bring that back and he and Chief Ganci were going to discuss strategy. We spoke for several minutes. I briefed him on everything that was going on, where the Fire Commissioner had gone, that the Mayor was out and the building was evacuated. Told him about treatment. Told him that I was the liaison. Told him that I would keep Chief Ganci abreast of any significant information that was provided.

He thanked me and told me to be careful. He continued westbound on Vesey Street towards Church. He continued his perimeter search. Shortly thereafter, I noticed three firefighters operating on the southbound side of Vesey directly underneath the pedestrian promenade, between the pedestrian bridge and the escalators. One of them signaled over to me. I went over to talk with them. I noticed they were without an officer. They told me they got separated from their officer when they were operating up on the plaza. I don't recall what company they were from. I do remember that at least one, if not two of them, were probies, by the orange plates on the helmet.

They indicated that there was lots of people on the plaza, that they thought were dead and people were jumping out and said you know, what should we do. I indicated to them that if people were jumping out, more than likely they were correct, the patients were dead. There was nothing that anybody could do for them and that in light of what was going on, operating on the plaza wasn't safe for them.

I further went on to tell them that since they were separated from their officer it was probably a good idea if they were to proceed eastbound on Vesey towards Church. There were some several companies, I noticed, operating up on Church and Vesey. I told them they could hook up with one of those companies or officer. At least this way they would be with a group, they would be accounted for.

They were in the process of securing a hydrant and then they said they would move on. At that point I went back into the building. I was in a discussion with Mr. Rotanz and I believe it was a representative from the Department of Buildings, but I'm not sure. Some engineer type person, and several of us were huddled talking in the lobby and it was brought to my attention, it was believed that the structural damage that was suffered to the towers was quite significant and they were very confident that the building's stability was compromised and they felt that the north tower was in danger of a near imminent collapse.

I grabbed EMT Zarrillo, I advised him of that information. I told him he was to proceed immediately to the command post where Chief Ganci was located. Told him where it was across the street from number 1 World Trade Center. I told him "You see Chief Ganci and Chief Ganci only. Provide him with the information that the building integrity is severely compromised and they believe the building is in danger of imminent collapse." So, he left off in that direction.

Q. They felt that just the one building or both of them?

A. The information we got at that time was that they felt both buildings were significantly damaged, but they felt that the north tower, which was the first one to be struck, was going to be in imminent danger of collapse. Looking up at it, you could see that, you could see through the smoke or whatever, that there was significant structural damage to the exterior of the building. Very noticeable. Now you know, again, this is not a scene where the thought of both buildings collapsing ever entered into my mind.

I was there in 1993, 14 minutes after the bomb went off. I operated some 16 hours at the building and with all the post-incident critiques and debriefings with various agencies. We were always told by everyone, the experts, that these buildings could withstand direct hits from airplanes. That's the way they were designed. They went through all of this architectural stuff, way beyond the scope of my knowledge.

It was hit by an airplane. That's okay. It's made to be hit by an airplane. I mean I think everyone may have believed that. We were all told years ago it was made to be hit by an airplane.

Some amount of time passed by, probably not long, again, I wasn't checking my watch. Actually we were just really disgusted, maybe we were going to move what we were going to do and how we were going to try to coordinate. Things were hectic. We didn't have the tools that we normally have to communicate with our agency, you know, cellular phones were not working properly, radio was very difficult to get through. I work for the Chief of the Department, I don't have a fire ground radio, so I had no direct communications with my boss at that time, which is one of the reasons I needed to send EMT Zarrillo with that message, which I felt was very significant, to the command post.

Just moments before the south tower collapsed and, you know, when it happened we didn't know it was the south tower. We thought it was the north tower. There was a reporter of some sort, female with blond hair and her cameraman, an oriental fellow. They were setting up outside 7 World Trade Center, just east of the pedestrian bridge. I told them it would probably be better off to be set up under the bridge. At least it was protected. I was just about to enter a dialogue with her when I heard a sound I never heard before. I looked up and saw this huge cloud. I told him run. I grabbed the female, I threw her through the revolving doors of number 7. We were proceeding inside. She fell to the ground. I helped her out, I pushed her towards the direction of where we were all in the south corner and there was a little doorway behind that desk which led into the loading bays.

Everybody started to run through that. Never made it to that door. The next thing that I remember was that I was covered in some glass and some debris. Everything came crashing through the front of number 7. It was totally pitch black.

Q. Were you injured?

A. Yes, I saw some stuff had fallen on me. I didn't believe that I was injured at that time. I discovered later on I was injured. I had some shards of glass impaled in my head, but once I was able to get all this debris and rubble off of me and cover my face with my jacket so that I could breathe, it was very thick dust, you couldn't see. We heard some sounds. We reached out and felt our way around. I managed to find some other people in this lower lobby. We crawled over towards the direction where we thought the door was and as we approached it the door cracked open a little, so we had the lights from the loading bay. We made our way over there. The loading bay doors were 3 fourths of the way shut when this happened, so they took a lot of dust in there, but everyone in those bays was safe and secure. We had face to face contact with Chief Maggio and Captain Nahmod. They told me -- I said do whatever you need to do, get these people out of here. Go, go towards the water.

They proceeded to evacuate that group along with some secret service people.

Q. How did they get out, did they go out the loading bay?

A. I believe what happened was they opened the bay and they went out and they proceeded south on Vesey. The phone building is the next building adjacent to the east on Vesey and that had an exterior scaffolding set up on it and overhead protection. And I believe that's the way, speaking to Captain Nahmod later, that they moved the people. Again I didn't go with them. Myself and Phil Parr, the Battalion Chief detailed here to headquarters, I don't know how he ended up.

Q. At this point the south tower is down?

A. We didn't know that, but it was the south tower that was down. Phil Parr, Battalion Chief, again he had no protective equipment whatever. I'm not sure how he ended up there. I think he was detailed here to headquarters and he made his way over there. He used to be a Deputy Director of OEM. So he made his way there. I didn't initially see him, but when it was all over, me and Phil found one another. We grabbed some hand lights from some Port Authority guys.

Q. What did you think had happened?

A. I thought that part of the building or the facade of the building had collapsed. You know, it was too dusty to see outside, so we didn't know what happened, but I knew something real bad happened. I knew that everyone that we had in the lobby, or we thought everyone was accounted for. Again, there was a lot of rubble in the lobby, probably a few feet. The facade was all broken. Me and Phil grabbed some hand lights and the people who were still there at ground level, we directed them to the door where there were guys who were going to lead them out. Some Port Authority and some secret service, you know, they were housed at number 7. Captain Nahmod and Battalion Chief Maggio, they were going to lead that group of people. Probably in excess of 30 or 40 people out of the building.

Me and Phil then proceeded up the escalators. We walked up the escalators with our lights, even though we couldn't see anything with the lights that we had acquired. We reached the top of the escalators. We ran into another Port Authority officer who had a light. We told him to stand fast at the top of the escalators and just keep waving his light, you know, back and forth in a side to side motion, and that we were going to perform some search of that mezzanine level, I guess would be best to call it, or concourse level, whatever.

You know the level where the foot bridge connects, whatever. We found maybe a half dozen or so people out there. We told them to cover their heads and their faces with, you know, their shirts or clothes or whatever to help them breathe and to walk towards the Port Authority light. A few minutes after we were unable to see --

Q. Was that building already evacuated for the most part?

A. When we got there it was in the process of evacuation, so for the most part, with the exception of some rescuers that were still upstairs doing evacuation, it was fairly empty. We didn't see anybody else or hear anybody else on that level. We told the Port Authority cop that he could make his way down.

Just make sure that everyone else had got out. He being most familiar with the building, you know, the Port Authority complex.

We made our way to the doors which led to the pedestrian bridge, both myself and Chief Parr, as I said, I'm talking about both of us. We were able to force the door open and kick some debris out of the way. We made it to the overhead walkway and we started to walk south towards the Trade Center plaza. It became a little easier to breathe. There was still a tremendous amount of dust cloud in the air. But, at least it was open air, you know.

We looked left and right, could see the devastation on the street. We saw a couple of rigs collapsed and cars and again still not realizing what the nature was. We reached the plaza. We were underneath.

Q. You still couldn't see up if it was the building?

A. Correct, correct. We were walking underneath number 6 World Trade Center. If you have seen the pictures or are familiar with the way those buildings come, they come up and then they angle out so there is like a covered walkway path. We were there. We ran into a few firefighters. We told them that we were going to try to make a chain of people and if we found anybody we would get them out. There were lots of bodies on the plaza. A couple of firefighters and police officers that we saw in the rubble that we were able to get to and get out of the rubble and direct towards the people, they got out. There were a few people in the rubble that were dead, both firefighters and police officers and civilians that we knew we couldn't do anything for.

Q. You had some alive, also?

A. Yes, we assisted them out. There were pockets of fire everywhere. At that point I noticed it was unusually lit in the plaza, considering the event that happened. I looked up and saw this big gaping hole where the south tower used to be. That's the first point that I realized that the south tower had collapsed. Maybe ten or 15 stories high left of it. Probably most of it being a pile of rubble.

The fire was still engaged, lots of smoke coming out of the north tower. I was like holy shit, I can't believe that this happened. Maybe if I would have known that I wouldn't have went up on the plaza. I don't know.

At that point I was up there with Phil. We were just searching for people. As we reached the corner of the 6 World Trade Center, the customs building, like in the plaza area when you walk in and then the building, the corner of it, we turned the corner and we saw this large mass of people. We called out to them. Phil ran to them. I rallied some ESU officers and firefighters who were down near the Vesey Street side. Told them we had a bunch of people. Some guys should come down. The rest should be able to direct them. We proceeded to evacuate several hundred civilians.

Q. Where were they coming from?

A. Most of them were coming -- it appeared they were coming out of like number 6 onto the plaza, but some were also coming from number 1 World Trade Center on the plaza area. Again, we directed them to cover their mouths with their clothing. Some people were just walking in a daze. We had to grab them and push them on their way or rip their shirt and give them something to cover. Told them not to look at the bodies that were there, not to worry about the fires or people. Just tried to focus them on getting them to the corner. I'm going to mark that number 4 on the map, so then they could proceed northbound along the edge of number 6 and then go down the escalators. We had some guys posted. Get them on the escalators and head them towards City Hall. Get them out of the scene.

We got several hundred people out. A few people were obviously injured. We told them they would get help when they got downstairs. Even though I knew I didn't have anyone down there, I figured at some point they would run into somebody. Their injuries weren't significant enough that they required treatment nor were we able to provide treatment. My Department radio was not working at that time. It was clogged with dirt and dust. I couldn't get it to work so I couldn't talk to anyone. I was not able to get through on my cell phone to anybody either. So we were sort of operating independently and our point at that time we were just to try to evacuate these terrified individuals.

There were one or two people who couldn't walk. We were able to get some police and firefighters and take pieces of building debris and make like little makeshift carry things and they carried some people off.

I ran into a former Fire Department employee who used to work with me, Nick Cagliuso, who used to work in the Office of Medical Affairs. He was one of the people we evacuated. I didn't have an opportunity to talk to him. I think he worked in number 1 World Trade. I'm not sure.

There were some people we saw more towards the center of the courtyard that appeared to be trapped. One of them looked like it may have been an Emergency Service officer. We directed two firefighters and an ESU cop to go and help them. The last I saw of them they were in the process of removing that person from the rubble. I then ran into James Basile, EMS 2 Division Chief. He was at the end of this group of people.

He indicated that he was in the lobby of number one and that there were some people still in the lobby, that there was a number of fire Chiefs in there. His aide was in there and that they were making their way out another way. He had made his way out from this location. He said you know we should not be here. We have to get out of here. I said there is no one else here. Let's do that, but on the way out, I said we are going through number 7 again. That's right on the way there. I explained to him the story. I said I'm sure the dust has settled somewhat. I just want to do another visual to make sure everyone that was with me and that was in that area downstairs was truly out.

So we went through the foot bridge again. At that point, I got separated from Phil Parr. Me and Jim proceeded over the pedestrian bridge back into number 7.

Q. How did you get separated?

A. I didn't -- I was talking to Jimmy and I saw Phil head off one direction. I think he headed down the escalators more toward Church Street. I said I'm going back into number 7. I was going to head back towards the command post, knowing that it was on Vesey Street. We went into the lobby. I was upstairs in the mezzanine lobby and there was no one there. We even checked the little snack store there. Everyone was out. No one was hidden behind the security counters.

We made our way down the escalators, I looked around the lobby, everyone was out. Then we went into the loading bays, which were relatively clear now and dust free. We saw all the EMS equipment scattered all over the place, but there were no signs of any people in there. There was no debris in there so I knew that everyone in there was okay and had safely been evacuated.

We walked on out to Vesey Street under the foot bridge and we continued westbound on Vesey towards West Street, walking underneath the scaffolding of the Verizon building. When we reached the end of the scaffolding, Jimmy started to continue on to the command post. I was talking to a fire officer and I asked him if he saw a group of people with some EMS officers. I was concerned about the location of Captain Nahmod and that group of people he was treating. He said he saw a bunch of people. He saw them come out and headed north on West Street.

At that point, I believe it might have been Pete Hayden from the First Division that was operating on that corner with a number of companies. We had people hurt, we had people in the rubble. There were some ambulance crews that I saw staged on Vesey and West on the westbound side adjacent to number 3 World Financial. I guess I could mark that on your map number 5. I saw a Hatzolah ambulance and voluntary hospital ambulances. I found two or three ambulance crews scattered. We began to grab some of those people and move them towards the water on Vesey Street.

I said let's get them and move them with the help of some firefighters, those injured people we had moved. All of their vehicles that were right there on the corner were rendered useless, as were a number of fire apparatus. I know I saw a collapsed unit on the corner over there that was crushed and dilapidated. There were some other vehicles over there.

Again, I couldn't get through on the radio. I was standing on the corner of Vesey and West. I was about to make my way towards the command post. I noticed that the north bridge, I believe the north bridge, was still intact at that point. Again, you know, at this point things get a little cloudy. I was on Vesey and West. I looked up, I saw the north tower fully involved. I saw number 6 World Trade Center fully involved with fire. I started to make my way to the command post when I heard that horrible sound again, you know, that whining screeching jet engine.

I looked up and at that point I knew the north tower was coming down. I made an immediate about face and I started to run as quick as I can.

Q. Where were you standing exactly?

A. West and Vesey, just south of Vesey Street on West. Maybe north of the pedestrian bridge, a couple of hundred feet north of the pedestrian bridge, right at the corner.

I turned around and started to run north on West Street. My focus was run as quick as you can.

Q. Were you there by yourself at that time?

A. I was by myself at this point. I said this is it. Run for your life.

Q. Couple of minutes earlier you saw Chief Hayden. Was anybody else there when you saw him?

A. Couple of fire officers.

Q. No other high ranking people?

A. No, because everyone else, when I last saw them was still down at the command post, that's the direction I was headed. I was concerned about Zarrillo, Ganci and all those people, but at this point I turned off and I ran. My focus was that area two feet wide in front of me and 6 feet down. Nothing in my way. Nothing I'm going to trip over and run as fast as I can.

I made it maybe a couple of hundred feet and I heard someone scream out, Chief, Chief. I turned my head to the left, I saw a firefighter, he was signaling me over. There was an engine and a ladder parked on the southbound lanes of West Street adjacent to the curb; maybe midway, probably around Barclay Street, midway between Vesey and Murray on that side. Probably around Barclay Street. So I ran in his direction. There was an opening maybe a foot and a half wide between the two apparatus. He pushed me in. He was behind me. He said, "We got to get under, we got to get under. Quick, we don't have time." He threw me to the floor, began to crawl under the rear, from under the rear step of the engine. I believe it was 23, but it could have been 22, the apparatus.

Then I saw him dive to make his way underneath the rear of the ladder, at which point everything went black. The thunderous roar continued, for what seemed like five minutes, but it was probably just seconds. I was unable to breathe. I was unable to see. The dust was in my eyes, I had them shut. I couldn't breathe, I took my helmet, pulled it over my face to give me some confined breathing space.

Q. Were you under the engine?

A. I was up under the rear step of the engine, when I heard screaming from the direction of where the firefighter was. I heard some other muffled sounds and then everything was just still and quiet. At that point I realized I was trapped under the engine. I didn't think that I would ever get out. I thought that I was dead. I thought I was buried under a hundred stories of rubble under some fire truck.

I was able to move my right leg, but I was unable to move my left leg. I felt a lot of weight on it and I couldn't really move much. All the dirt and dust came under, debris, so I was sort of pinned like this with the helmet. I tried to control my breathing. All sorts of things go through your head at that point.

Several minutes went by. Again, I couldn't tell you how long. I felt some tugging on my leg. Next thing I know, I was pulled out from under the rig, it was a firefighter and an ESU cop. He said you all right, you all right. I said "I'm okay, I'm okay, how about you guys, are you okay? " I couldn't really see or breathe and I was choking. I walked around the side of the rig and popped the CFR compartment. It was open and I just sort of felt in there. I felt some sterile water bottles. I threw it on my face. Threw a couple of swigs to spit out all the dirt and then I realized I was okay.

I realized that, I looked down and saw the devastation, the pedestrian bridge collapsed, the north tower collapsed, people just all over the place.

Q. How about the other firefighter?

A. We looked under the truck. There was a lot of rubble under there. We didn't see him. We didn't see any sign of him. So I don't know if he was all the way under buried. I did read a report later that they found some guys under trucks that were dead. I don't know if that was him or not.

I started to walk north towards Murray Street and then I said no, let me turn around and head back to the command post.

MR. CASTORINA: Before you go any further, why don't we switch sides on the tape before it stops running. It's almost over. Why don't we just flip sides.

Time is now 9:15. This is side two. The interview continues with Chief John PERUGGIA.

A. So, I got out of there, cleaned up my face. I was able to see and breathe. I offered water to a number of firefighters and police officers that were in the area. They all took some of the water and cleaned off their face a little. I went back to the CFR compartment, grabbed some more water. I threw it to the guys, grabbed a pair of gloves for my hands and also grabbed some 6 inch cling, wrapped it around my face to give me some breathing protection.

I started to walk north towards Murray Street, maybe ten or 20 steps. I said, you know, let me go back to the command post instead of wandering around helplessly. I'm sure that things are chaotic now. I made the turn, I started to walk south towards Vesey Street and saw that --

Q. How heavy was the rubble at that point, in that location?

A. It was pretty significant. Actually it was like the more south I proceeded, the more and more rubble there was. Huge amount of fire, smoke, saw the pedestrian bridge collapse and at that point I had no idea where the command post now was. If there even was a command post. I turned around and started to walk north. I noticed, on the northbound direction of West Street, a Suburban. It was running because the lights were on, couple of hundred feet north of where I was. So, I figured let me make my way over there. Maybe there are some radios I could use and talk to somebody.

Q. At this point the whereabouts of OEM were?

A. Everyone was scattered.

Q. Last they were by 7?

A. We were all in there. I knew that they all got out. All the people that were there with us.

Q. At this point Chief Ganci, you had no idea --

A. I had no idea about Chief Ganci. No idea about him. The last time I saw Nigro he was on the other side of the complex. I didn't know where EMT Zarrillo was. I know that my last direction to him was go to Ganci. I was clearly concerned about him. Besides the fact that I directed him, he works for me. We are friends for some 15 years and I am friends with his wife longer and I was really concerned about him. I didn't know where Captain Nahmod was. Again, I had directed him and again we were friends and I had those concerns as well.

I started making my way towards this Suburban vehicle. It was an EMS Suburban, the star of life was on the rear window. I ran into Mike Butler, Chief of Fire Prevention. He was making his way south. I said Chief are you all right. He said yes, how about you. I said fine. I said where is the command post, because everything down there is destroyed now. He said the command post is wiped out; everyone is gone. He said we need to set up a command post. It's just me and you

At that point we proceeded north to Murray Street. He was on the fire radio. I ran over, grabbed the EMS Suburban, pulled up to Murray Street, was trying to get through on the radio. I finally got through when we decided that we were going to set up the command post on Warren, bring it one block north. I got through on the radio, I asked about the command post. They said they had no communications with anyone. I told them I was on the scene and proceeding to set up a command post on Warren Street.

I don't know if that message got through, because after we got on Warren Street, we ran into Joe Farrell from the New York State Health Department, EMS Bureau. He said, "Where are you headed?" I said, "Well this is the command post." Then the Chief says, "There is a gas leak, we need to go north one more to Chambers." I said, "Come on Joe, we will drive up there." We drove up to Chambers Street, right under the little Stuyvesant High School bridge. I parked the Suburban there and determined that that would be my command post. Chief Butler came up and there was a fire car that they had over there. He started setting up. I was trying to get through on Citywide. There was a lot of activity.

At some point I heard an EMS Chief officer, later to find out that was J.P. Martin and he was here on the Brooklyn side on the Brooklyn Bridge and he was assuming command of the operation, directing units staged in Brooklyn. I guess his impression was that no one was talking to them. They thought everyone in the Trade Center was wiped out. They didn't know what was going on. I was able to cut in on Citywide. I asked him to hit the alert tone. I remember asking him to hit the alert tone several times to clear the frequency.

I indicated to them that unless there was a higher ranking officer than myself that they were in contact with, I was on scene at the World Trade Center and was establishing the EMS command post adjacent to the Fire Department command post at Chambers Street. So they sent that message out several times. I told them that any officers that were operating on the scene should immediately be directed to report in to Chambers and West. Any ambulance crews that they had contact with that were operating in the vicinity, I asked them to have them respond in to West Broadway and Chambers, which was two blocks to the east of where we were located.

They sent that message out several times. Further, I tried to get them to conduct a roll call of the Chief officers so I know who was accounted for, where they may be and what types of operations. I also remember asking to them if they had contact with any officers or ambulances that were operating, to get them identified and where they were. I wanted to try to get some sense of scope on what sort of management people and/or supervisory people were on the scene, where they were and what people were doing. Again, there was tremendous disaster area down there. It was out of control and we didn't know what was going on.

Some time went by. We were trying to collect resources. Some ambulances showed up. I directed them up there. A couple of supervisors arrived and I directed one up to staging. I sent two people, I don't remember who they were, I asked them to just make their way down to Vesey Street and no further and if they saw anyone operating around there to get them up, get them out of there. I know there were people operating on Vesey Street prior to the second collapse. I said, "I want you to go down there, do a quick survey, your safety obviously first. If you find anybody get them up here. Let's get away from the site and let's regroup and we will go in there." Chief Butler I think was trying to do the same thing for fire.

I started to get some sense from Citywide. J.P. Martin had a group of people in Brooklyn. There was a group of people at South Ferry, I think it was Chief Steffens and I don't remember who else was down there. They told me that there was a group of people up at Chelsea Piers with Kowalczyk and Pat Scaringello. This was are time progressed.

I ran into Pete Carrasquillo, maybe after about 20, 30 minutes. He was down near the water on Chambers Street. He heard me on the radio and he said he made his way down towards Vesey Street. I said, "Pete, maybe you can make your way down there, get a forward seat and see what's going on." J.P. Martin eventually made his way to me. I made him then become the communications person for the operation post. I got in touch with Kowalczyk, maybe an hour or two later, to see if I could get him down.

I knew I was hurt. There was blood dripping down the side of my face. I was a little dazed and confused and I hadn't spoken to my family since when I first started responding in. I was concerned about the two guys who worked for me that were my friends as well as other people and I said I have a task in front of me, but I just needed some help. I reached out to Walter to get him down. It was a while before Walter got down. We continued the operation. We started to set up some sectors and started sometime shortly about maybe one o'clock or two o'clock or whatever. Both of us said, "You look like you are shot." He said, "Do you want me to do command and you do operations? " We then switched roles.

At some point after that we found out that McCracken was okay. He made his way back up towards, we started to regroup and implement some sort of operational plans about how we were going to do the operation.

Q. This whole time, did you see Chief McCracken?

A. I didn't see Chief McCracken until much later, maybe one or two o'clock. It was evening, and it was dark so I don't know what time, as time progressed we set up sectors. I had John McFarland go down to Vesey and West Street, with a team of guys to do forward triage. I got a communication from John. He called me on his cell phone, indicating that they found Ganci and Feehan's bodies.

I relayed that information to Chief McCracken. We got out of our command post and I walked over and relayed that to, I believe it was Chief Nigro and the Fire Commissioner, who were at the fire command post at that point in time. At that point, you know, I was really concerned about Rich Zarrillo. I hadn't heard --

Q. Still you hadn't heard?

A. Right, and I knew he was there. I ran into Abdo at some point. He didn't know where Rich was.

Q. When did you finally find Rich Zarrillo?

A. Probably around 6:00. I didn't see Richie till after. Chief Hirth and Lieutenant Cacciola made their way down or way up from South Street at some point in time. They said that they saw Richie and he was at Chelsea Piers. At that point I knew that he was okay.

We continued the operation. I was there until 8:30 the next morning.

Q. Did you see Father Judge at any point?

A. I never saw Father Judge. The only ranking people I saw were Ganci and Nigro at the command post, the Fire Commissioner, who I briefed early on and obviously saw later on.

Q. Okay. Anything else you want to add?

A. I just marked the map number 6, the location where I guess I was underneath the fire truck. Somewhere between Vesey and Murray around Barclay.

Q. On the second collapse?

A. Right, it was either 22 or 23 engine, I don't remember exactly, and some truck company.

MR. CASTORINA: Okay. This concludes the interview. The time now is 0926 hours. Thank you, Chief PERUGGIA.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT RICHARD ZARRILLO

Interview Date: October 25, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. CASTORINA: Today's date is October 25th, 2001. I'm Ron Castorina conducting an interview in the office of BITS. Your name --

MR. McCOURT: Tom McCourt.

MR. CASTORINA: -- is also accompanied with me conducting this interview.

Q. Your name, sir?

A. Richard Zarrillo.

Q. And your rank and title?

A. I'm an EMT working in fire operations as the special event coordinator.

Q. Can you tell me, on September 11th, 2001, the events that took place that day, whatever you can remember?

A. Sure. While sitting at my desk, probably just after the first plane had hit the tower, Chief Ganci had come running across the hall yelling something about a plane hitting the twin towers. Most of us thought he was joking until we looked out the window and saw one of the towers had flames coming out of it. I placed a call to Chief Peruggia to ask him his location. He told me he was just coming over the Verrazano Bridge about to get in the HOV lane. I told him maybe you want to start heading to Manhattan, I'll meet you in the city, this way we could hook up and do whatever we needed to do. At that point he thought I was joking. He cursed at me and hung up. Captain Nahmod was sitting next to me and he said we need to get some equipment, find out who's going, who's not going, try and make our way there.

I spoke with Chief Peruggia. He called me back and said maybe you and Abdo, Captain Nahmod, need to head into the city to be part of the command, runners or administratively, whatever we can do to help out. I was able to locate a helmet from one of the people in RCC. Captain Nahmod and I tried to find a car to get into the city. Chief Ramos was bringing us downstairs to get a pool car, so I think Commissioner Drury happened to be walking in at the wrong time and we asked him to drive us into the city.

I'm not sure of the exact time, but I believe as we were coming over the Brooklyn Bridge was when the second plane hit the second tower. We parked -- I want to say it's on like Broadway right off of Vesey Street, between Vesey and Barclay. Captain Nahmod and I started heading down Vesey Street towards where we thought the command post would be. At that time we had received a page per Chief Peruggia to go into OEM at

No. 7 World Trade and activate our post in OEM. Captain Nahmod and I were running down Vesey Street stepping over airplane pieces, several bodies and whatnot.

Q. Can you describe how much debris was around?

A. There was what looked like the front wheel assembly of an airplane. Unknown the size of the plane that had hit, it just looked like it was one pair of wheels on an assembly, pieces of metal with rivets in them, a few body parts scattered around.

Q. Was debris still falling?

A. Debris was falling. It looked like birds. There were people falling from the towers or jumping, whatever it was they were doing. Abdo and I went into No. 7, activated OEM, placed calls to EMS Citywide, RCC, to tell them we were there and we were activated.

Maybe five, ten minutes, not even ten minutes later, a rep from OEM came into the main room and said we need to evacuate the building; there's a third plane inbound. That was the only thing I really heard because I said, Abdo, we've got to go, and we made it down to the lobby of the building, street level, met up with Chief Peruggia in the lobby of the building. He said that there was no third plane but we needed to re-establish OEM right there so we can coordinate what was going on. He had already been to the command post, so he told us, and he was trying to release people back to be operational. He was looking for the Fire guy to go back in. He was there with Captain Yakimovich. In OEM with Captain Nahmod and I was Chief Maggio, who is now retired, and another firefighter from the 1st Division. We were really trying to establish OEM and a treatment sector in the lobby of the building because there were people coming around us.

Again, times are a little fuzzy initially for me. A few minutes later, John came to me and said you need to go find Chief Ganci and relay the following message: that the buildings have been compromised, we need to evacuate, they're going to collapse. I said okay. I went down Vesey Street towards West.

Q. You were by yourself?

A. I was by myself, me and my helmet and my radio. I got to the corner of Vesey and West. I found some EMS vehicles. I think I saw Chief Gombo there. I'm not really sure. I mentioned to the EMS people there, again, not knowing who they were, I said you need to get away from here, the building might collapse, we need to leave this spot.

As I was walking towards the Fire command post, I found Steve Mosiello. I said, Steve, where's the boss? I have to give him a message. He said, well, what's the message? I said the buildings are going to collapse; we need to evac everybody out. With a very confused look he said who told you that? I said I was just with John at OEM. OEM says the buildings are going to collapse; we need to get out.

He escorted me over to Chief Ganci. He said, hey, Pete, we got a message that the buildings are going to collapse. His reply was who the fuck told you that? Then Steve brought me in and with Chief Ganci, Commissioner Feehan, Steve, I believe Chief Turi was initially there, I said, listen, I was just at OEM. The message I was given was that the buildings are going to collapse; we need to get our people out. At that moment, this thunderous, rolling roar came down and that's when the building came down, the first tower came down.

The command post was situated right in front of 3 World Financial, the American Express Building. The garage was open and as that rumble started and we saw it was coming down, the firemen that were in the command area, I believe most of the chiefs, we all ran into the garage of that building. It became dark, hard to breathe. Nobody had any equipment because most of the firemen dropped everything as they were running. It became an obstacle course to get into the garage.

Again, it's sketchy with time, but it may have been anywhere from ten to 20 minutes by the time we found an emergency exit to get out of the building. It was dark. There was no light.

Q. Who were you with at this point? Were you by yourself?

A. I had two firemen. What I did was I took about ten or 15 running steps into the garage and hugged into a corner of a wall, an indentation, and I felt like two or three guys get in behind me and actually made it a tighter huddle. The dust, the cloud came rolling in. It got dark. As the dust and the noise started to settle, we were all tapping up to see where each other were.

I met up with Chief Cassano at the stairwell, and I believe Chief Carrasquillo was around there. I know I met up with him outside on the lobby of Vesey Street from that building, when we got out. Lots of firemen, you know, faces, no names I could really identify, except for Sal.

We made it up the staircase into the lobby, I believe it was 3, it may have been one of those little cross lobbies that were there, and got out onto Vesey Street. I met up with EMT Mike Ober, who had been driving Chief Kowalczyk. He was his driver for a while. I met up with him. I found Chief Carrasquillo, who was with Chief Cassano, a few others, you know, faces, again, that I found, and we were walking around trying to make -- what happened? It was still cloudy, that very fine but heavy dust that was in the air.

Once I got out of the building, maybe ten minutes from there, that unforgettable rolling started.

Q. The same sound you heard earlier?

A. The same sound I heard earlier.

Q. Where were you at this point?

A. I was on West and Vesey, probably in the middle of the intersection, trying to find people that I knew. At this point I didn't know where John was, where Abdo was. I don't know what happened to No. 7. I knew the building was coming down. I watched it come down on us, but I don't know where anybody else is.

As that roar was happening on the second time around, I was running down Vesey Street towards the water with a few thoughts in my head. One, if I hit the water, I was swimming home, or just getting into the water for cover, if necessary. The marina was right there. I ended up making a right on North End Avenue and there was a building -- EMS, again, I know Chief Villani was there. I saw Chief Pascale later on. I believe Chief Kowalczyk was in there also. The MERV was stationed on North End Avenue for a while and I remember emergency service was on the southbound side of North End near Vesey for a while also. We made it into that building as the second one came down. Again, the clouds and all the other debris.

Q. You were protected in that building?

A. In the building.

Q. Which building was that?

A. There was a building right there on the corner. Maybe 15, 20 feet off the corner, there was an entrance into a building, and that's where -- it was mostly glass windows and we were concerned that the glass was going to implode.

Q. Did that face the river?

A. It faced the river and that was protection in my view.

Q. About a three-block distance?

A. It's actually one city block, but still that cloud came over and passed and --

Q. Did it get black there, too?

A. It got really dark. Most of us were looking for cover, trying to avoid anything else that was coming down. While we were in that building, we were told -- again, I don't know where anybody is.

Q. You had no radio, right?

A. I had a 400 radio. I couldn't get through to anybody.

Q. Were you hearing anything, Mayday, anything on the radio?

A. No. The 400 -- I was on EMS Citywide and I don't know if my radio was clogged or the batteries. It could have been a hundred different things.

Q. Can you just mark on the map where you were? Just roughly.

A. We were right about here.

Q. Okay.

A. I didn't know where John was. Outside of the job, John, Abdo and I are old friends and that was my concern, you know, how am I going to tell these guys' wives, we all live near each other, that I followed his direction and now I can't find either of them.

While we were in this building, we were told that there was a gas main rupture or a gas leak and we needed to evacuate that building.

Q. Who told you this?

A. It was just somebody, a security guard or somebody. But then Chief Villani and all the other chiefs that were in there said we need to gather all of our equipment because they had set up a treatment area, there were ten sets of equipment with stretchers from ambulances, and we all took all that stuff out and started heading down North End hoping to find -- or maybe it was down toward -- no. Down North End Avenue to try and find another place we could go into.

Again, at this point there was a lot of disorientation. Nobody really was fully aware as to what was going on. The radios had gone silent, you know, guessing, because the repeater tower went down. Nobody knew what was going on. I thought I heard a helicopter. There were a lot of people running, lots of patients or would-be patients running past us.

Q. Where were they headed?

A. Anywhere they could get away from. The water.

Q. Heading away from the buildings?

A. Running north on West Street. I went into -- there was a school not too far down from here. I meet up with Mike Cahill from Division 6 and Gerald Garcia. They were down there. The MERV had already tried to find another place to set up and was moving down North End Avenue. I think it was Garcia. We went into a school. I wanted to just wash my face off, use a bathroom, and as we were in that school building, we were told we had to evacuate that building because, again, a gas rupture. That came from one of the school officials, a name I couldn't tell you. Face? Probably not now recognize.

We made it back on to West Street, I don't remember what the cross was, and we started heading -- I heard people saying we're going to Chelsea. I heard Chief Pascale say she was going up to Chelsea Piers, we were going to try and re-establish up there, you know, do a count and try to run the operation.

When I went to that other building, I lost most of those people, except for Cahill, and then when they told us to evacuate that building, I just had to get out of there. My thoughts were that I needed to get home, get my wife from midtown and just get home for my daughter.

I got onto West Street and met up with Captain Stone, Greg Brady from Division 1. I found Chief Hirth and Grace Cacciola and they said we're all going up to Chelsea, let's go re-establish our command up there, again, not knowing where anybody else was. You see the plumes of smoke, the dust cloud that was coming down, but we just really wanted to find a safe place for that. Probably about ten blocks up West Street you heard the jets flying overhead, so lots of thoughts running through people's heads, what's happening to us here?

Q. What kind of jets?

A. Military jets.

Q. Military jets?

A. Yes.

Q. This is --

A. This is right after the second collapse.

Q. After the second collapse?

A. Well, if I say 15 minutes from the time we got to that school building and started walking towards Chelsea, maybe ten, 15 minutes had passed by the time that --

Q. Half an hour?

A. Again, I do apologize for that.

Q. No, everybody has that problem.

A. Time wasn't --

Q. There's no perception of time.

A. It's still very surreal. There I was talking to Chief Ganci and relaying that the building is going to come down and then it came down on us. It's very bothersome.

We hitched a ride with a police van up to the Chelsea Piers. Chief Kowalczyk was there, Chief Pascale, a slew of ambulances. There had to be 50 non city ambulances up there from everywhere. I saw Captain Boyle there. I met up with Captain Pinkus. Captain Stone, myself, Brady, Chief Hirth and Grace went into the -- there was some restaurant on the edge of the Chelsea Pier area, you know, to try and clean up a little bit, use the rest room, which I needed to do a while ago. I met up with a lot of my counterparts from the Secret Service because that's where their fallback was becoming. All their agents from the building were in there.

Mark Stone said he felt his shoulder was hurt and Chief Hirth was looking to get out of there to go someplace else. He wanted to check -- I honestly don't know what was going through his head. He said I need to go away from here, I need to go get a car, I need to go to the division or a hospital. Whatever the case may have been, they took Captain Stone to Bellevue to be treated. He was treated and released.

Chief Pascale and Chief Kowalczyk were establishing their command, and doing this for -- you know, between chiefs and what I do now, I fell into that command structure to say, okay, I'm here, let me help you with this, and I handled staging and some other logistical issues with them for about two or three hours, and then I made my way back down to the command post. Probably within an hour of us getting up to Chelsea, Chief Kowalczyk said to me that John is okay, he heard him on the radio, and that he was going down to the command post that's been re-established to either help out or take over from him.

Then, like I said, a few hours later, Lieutenant Nevins and I made our way down south back to Chambers Street where the other command post had been established. That's really about it.

MR. CASTORINA: I think you've covered virtually everything. The time now is 1202. The concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JULIO MARRERO

Interview Date: October 25, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today is October 25th, 2001. The time now is 1849 hours. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck. I work with the New York City Fire Department, assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. I'm at Battalion 14 to conduct an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank, assignment and shield number.

EMT MARRERO: My name is Julio Marrero with the New York City Fire Department, Battalion 14. I was assigned to 14 Charlie that day, tour 2, and my shield number is 5376.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Also present for the interview is --

MR. ECCLESTON: Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade Center Task Force.

Q. Mr. Marrero, on the morning of September 11th can you recount the events that took place that day?

A. Sure. I was sitting on 161 and Grand Concourse approximately about 9:30 in the morning when a call came over on my KDT to respond over to Barclay and Church for a cardiac, most probably related to the World Trade Center incident.

As I was heading down to the World Trade Center, I saw a massive amount of people walking away from the building, and I saw smoke coming from both towers. I knew that one tower was hit, never knew that the second tower was hit.

I responded over to Barclay and Church where I came around and I couldn't actually get around to Barclay street because the roads were so closed off because of the amount of people walking in the streets. We couldn't actually make our turn on Barclay to get over to Church, so I went down a few blocks. I can't remember exact blocks that I went down; I would say two to three blocks, because everything was blocked off.

I finally got over to Church. When I saw Church Street, I looked up, and both towers were in flames. At this point we realized that something was terribly wrong. I looked down the block and saw that there must have been more than three dozen ambulances, fire trucks and police cars on the street and a massive amount of rescue workers, firefighters, EMS, police officers, trying to get these people away from the buildings.

Also I was told to pull my ambulance over by one of the lieutenants so I could help to start triaging with the casualties and stuff. I was trying to explain to the lieutenant on the scene that I was trying to get to a call, an actual call that was on Barclay and Church, and he told me I can mark that a 93 because there was too many amount of buses, ambulances, to even worry about me trying to get over that way. Actually all the street was closed because of so many rescue ambulances and stuff. So it was kind of hard.

In that process of him trying to explain to me to pull my ambulance over, I heard a loud bang. We looked up, and we just saw the building starting to collapse. I looked over and started to scream at my partner, which he was inside the vehicle.

Q. Who was your partner that day?

A. My partner was Naomi Nacional.

I was screaming from the top of my lungs, and I must have been about ten feet away from her and she couldn't even hear me, because the building was so loud, the explosion, that she couldn't even hear me. I just saw everybody running; and she saw us running, and she took off behind us.

Q. You left your vehicle right there?

A. The vehicle was left there.

Q. Do you know approximately where it was?

A. The vehicle was approximately between I believe -- I would say between Liberty -- I'm not sure. Between Liberty and Dey, somewhere in that vicinity. We're talking about two blocks. I can't remember exactly because I was trying to actually make my way up to Barclay and Church.

Q. Would you just indicate on the map with the number 1 approximately where you remember leaving the vehicle when you got out to run.

A. I believe it was maybe over here. I think I ran down Dey. I think I ran down Dey. I'm not sure if I ran down Dey because, like I said, I couldn't move my vehicle anyway because there was so many vehicles in the way that we couldn't move our vehicle. This happened in such a split second that the only thing we had to do to react was run for our dear lives.

I saw fire trucks. I saw firemen. I saw firemen walking in the building as this horrific --

Q. You want to pause?

(Pause.)

MS. BASTEDENBECK: The interview will be continuing the time now is 1856 hours.

Q. You left off you left the vehicle and started to run.

A. We started to run. I remember running either down Dey or Cortlandt. I'm not sure which street it was. It happened too fast. I can't remember.

In the event that the building was coming down, I also saw a massive amount of people running. The dark cloud hit us. I thought I was going to be dead. I thought I was going to die when that smoke hit us. I could see debris flying, and I started choking from the smoke because I couldn't breathe.

I fell down some subway stairs. Somewhere I had just started walking towards -- I knew that there was a building on my right as I was running, and I knew that I had to find a void in the building so I wouldn't be hit over the head with any debris as I was running.

I was crawling on the side of the building, and I felt a void. That's when I took a step into the void, and there was actually steps. Because you couldn't see your hand in front of you, it was so dark. A thick cloud of concrete, debris, smoke, airplane fuel. It was just massive thickness.

I remember there was a void, and I stumbled down the stairs of this void. That's when I broke my foot. I broke my foot, and I did feel some pressure on my foot. My boots were kind of tight on me, and I felt them getting tighter.

All I was thinking at that moment is how am I going to get out of this situation. That was my first concern. I had to worry about myself because of my safety. This is one of the things that they taught us at the academy is try to worry about yourself first so then you can help other people. So I was really worried about trying to get out of the situation I was in so I could get out and start helping people.

I didn't really feel my foot as much as I felt my back, because as I fell down the stairs I sprained my lower back, mostly, and that was even more. At the bottom of the stairs, I just waited a little while. I could hear people screaming inside the subway station from a distance. It was horrifying. It was really horrifying. The screams I still hear at night.

I ran out of the subway station to get help. As I ran out of the subway station, I ran down to about -- I believe the street that I ran down was to Broadway. I'm not sure -- I believe I was on Dey, but I'm not sure if it was Dey or Cortlandt, because a lot of the signs were also full of dust. So I really couldn't see that well.

I had contacts on that day, and my eyes were full of dust and they were irritated and I was completely head to toe in this dust and concrete and God knows what else we were exposed to. I was really worried about my breathing, because I had choked up a lot of that dust and stuff.

Miraculously I saw my partner walking towards me. We embraced for a moment, we were just so glad to see each other. Once I turned around -- I was on the corner I think of Dey or Cortlandt on Broadway. I remember Broadway. I looked, and it was just an amount of overwhelming people that needed help, and I didn't have an ambulance. The ambulance was left back on Church Street, I believe, or Trinity, Church and Trinity turns into that, I'm sure.

This is where I then started to help people to the best that I could. And I felt that I needed to go back and try to get my ambulance. So my partner and I started to work towards the collapsed buildings, and this is when I saw the chaplain. I believe it's Father Judge. I believe he was there. There was another chief with him. I can't remember who the chief was. But I remember looking at the chaplain because he had his coat on, and on the bottom of the coat it said "chaplain." That's how I remember it was the chaplain.

I saw them walking towards the collapsed building, and that's when me and my partner decided to walk behind them to see if we can go get our ambulance so we can start transporting people to the hospital.

When I really got this really deep sick feeling inside of my stomach, and I said, "Look, I don't think we can go back and get the ambulance. I think that ambulance is destroyed." As we were walking towards there, we just saw so much fire and smoke. It was a horrifying scene, and I really felt that the scene was not safe for me to go back towards that way.

So we turned around and headed back to help people. So we were making a triage right in the middle of -- we made a triage right on the street of Broadway and I believe it was Dey. Broadway and Dey, we started helping people right there on the corner. We started setting up a triage area right there.

There were no bosses. There was no one. There was just me. Then a couple of ambulances pulled up, and we just started loading people into the ambulances. It was mayhem. From that moment on, it was just mayhem, everybody walking up to us and they were hurt some way or another.

Then we were helping these people, loading them up to the ambulance, when I heard over citywide -- I had my radio on. I heard over citywide that the second tower was leaning south, to start heading people north, it was about to go.

So as soon as I heard that over the radio, my partner was inside an ambulance trying to help people with the other EMTs, and I was trying to work with the people outside the ambulance.

When I heard that, I had told my partner to get out of the ambulance, to start heading people north, and you could tell north from south by looking at the tower that was still standing and you knew more or less where you were. Because if you were on Broadway and you looked at the tower, the north tower, you wanted to run behind it.

I started telling her to start telling people to start moving north, and we both started -- and I realized that the ambulance, they were still in there trying to work on people. So I ran towards the ambulance, and my partner ran away from the ambulance, telling people to run north, because they were all walking toward the ambulance, because there was only one ambulance in the area and everybody was needing so much desperate help that they were all working towards the ambulance.

We started telling them to move north. She ran to tell them to move north, and I ran towards the ambulance to get them out of there, because they had no idea what was going on.

When I got to the ambulance, I told them to leave because they just said over citywide that the building was about to collapse, the second collapse. They just got out and moved. They moved that bus. I have no idea which way they went.

At that moment I just heard the second building coming down. When the second building started to come down, I started to run. Approximately I'm not sure what street. I must have ran down Fulton Street about a block, and then I know I cut down another street. I made a left. And I just started cutting between streets like a snake in order to avoid any kind of debris or anything trying to hit me. I ran into one of the buildings that was open about two blocks down.

At this point I was in extreme pain from my lower back. My heart rate was over 200. My adrenaline was very high. My blood pressure, I have no idea how high it was, but it was extremely high. I was very nervous. I felt that I might have had -- was going to experience a heart attack.

As I opened the building door, I just saw inside the building there must have been about 30 or 40 people inside that building hiding. There was just a lot of fear. And when they saw me in uniform, everybody was like "Help me." I was like, I'm trying to help myself right now.

There was another police officer in the building also. I believe he was a bike cop, because he had his little bike uniform on and I could tell the police officers that have the little bike uniform on. It was just me and him trying to calm the people down inside the building and trying to get them away from the collapse.

We just waited for the smoke to clear some. We got them out. That building had an exit on the other side from where I came in. We opened that exit. We got them out of the building, and we all ran to safety.

I ran over to Beekman Hospital, where I practically collapsed. I needed oxygen treatment at Beekman. I can tell you that at Beekman I saw police officers and firemen coming in, and they were -- some people were beyond recognition.

I was in Beekman Hospital on a stretcher for some oxygen treatment when I saw a cop friend of mine from the 44 Precinct come in, and he had his head busted wide open. I realized that this cop needed a stretcher more than I did. There were no stretchers. So I jumped off and I said, "Put that police officer on my stretcher."

I jumped onto another ambulance going to Bellevue Hospital, from Beekman, because they needed to transport a patient who was in severe head trauma, severe head trauma, intubated, going from Beekman to Bellevue. I took the opportunity to help those EMTs transport this patient from Beekman Hospital over to Bellevue Hospital.

This man must have weighed about a good 450 pounds. He had massive head trauma. I don't think -- this patient was pretty much close to death when we transported him. I helped them load this patient, with a bad back, with a broken foot. My adrenaline is still going.

I never even thought about going back towards the building. I didn't want to go back towards that way, because I knew I was injured and I needed to get out of the area.

We got that patient over to Bellevue Hospital, and they treated him. The EMTs, they told me that they didn't want me going back to look for my partner because I was injured, and they wanted me in. As soon as I got to Bellevue Hospital, they grabbed a lieutenant and told them what was going on with me.

That's when I just broke down and cried at Bellevue Hospital, because it was just so overwhelming. I just knew that what happened was horrific. It was a bombing. It wasn't an accident. I didn't know what was going on. I had no idea, no clue that two airplanes had hit the building.

I was responding right after like -- I would say after one plane hit the building. I wasn't even listening to a radio, but I was only listening to my EMS radio, not listening to 1010 Wins or anything like that, you know, where you can get information. I had no idea what was going on downtown. I was responding to a call.

That's basically my story.

Q. Is there anything else you'd like to add?

A. No.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHARLES WELLS

Interview Date: October 25, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. DUN: Today is October 26, 2001. The time is 1118 hours. I'm Richard Dun of the New York City Fire Department, working with Marisa Abbriano, also from the New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with Deputy Chief CHARLES WELLS.

Q. Sir, would you give us the story of what happened on September 11, 2001.

A. I logged on, I guess, approximately 8:30 in the morning. I was proceeding westbound on the Southern State Parkway in the vicinity of the state troopers barracks in Valley Stream when the citywide radio started becoming extremely busy with radio traffic, Brooklyn and Manhattan units coming up into the citywide radio, saying 1063, but after a few minutes I realized they were going to the World Trade Center.

Immediately got on the radio and requested permission to respond, and I was -- I received permission to respond and proceeded north on the Cross Island Parkway to the westbound LIE, where I approached what used to be the Elmhurst gas tanks area. I was able to view the Manhattan skyline to see a tower involved in fire on the upper floors.

Went through the Midtown Tunnel. When I exited the Midtown Tunnel, at that time a radio message came over that a second tower had been struck by an airplane.

I proceeded through midtown traffic, got over to the west side, and parked my car on the southbound side of West Street at Barclay. There were numerous ambulances parked nearby there, numerous marked fire sedans, and I got out, I put on my gear and started walking toward where I believe the command post was, at Vesey and West.

As I was walking down the street, there was numerous apparatus. I did see Ladder 118 parked at that -- on West at Vesey. I then proceeded south of Vesey on West toward the command post, where I reported in to Chief Kowalczyk and Chief Basile, at which point they directed me to go to the southwest sector of the complex at Liberty and West Street and establish some medical treatment triage center.

As I was walking down, numerous people on the upper floors were jumping, jumping in pairs, holding hands, jumping, and they were landing -- they were landing on the ground, and then on -- also on top of the Vista International Hotel.

I got down to Liberty and West. When I arrived there, there were approximately 15 EMS units -- excuse me. Approximately two to three department EMS units, numerous fire apparatus and approximately 10 or 12 Metro Care ambulances, all right up against the southwest corner of Liberty and West.

I immediately told them to re-establish on the west side of West Street, not under the pedestrian bridge, but north of the pedestrian bridge as close to Liberty Street as possible. They immediately responded to that.

Debris was falling. I immediately told them to don hard hats. Only the department EMS personnel had hard hats at that point. Metro Care, they didn't have any hard hats. I then interacted with Deputy Chief Robert Browne of the EMS command, who was directed to the same site. He directed the units over to the west side of West Street on -- on West Street by Liberty for these units to re-establish themselves in a more safe location.

As the units were driving around, they did it in a pretty quick fashion. As they were exiting their vehicles, a firefighter, assigned to OEM, a Firefighter Tim Brown, I see him exiting the Liberty Street area of the complex running towards us. He came up, and he said, he said, "Chief, I have ten people on the ground floor of the 2 World Trade Center, the south tower in the lobby. They somehow managed to get themselves into the elevator and got down to the lobby, and they all have fractured legs. We can't get them out. Could you come in and get them?"

So I said, "Okay, fine." I turned around and I said, "Let me have six personnel and bring the stretchers and the back boards, and we are just going to put them on the back boards, and we will do fracture management when we get back to treatment."

Of the six that came forward -- I asked for volunteers. I said whoever wants to come in with me. Six people immediately came up, but only two had helmets, and that was the crew of 18 Charlie 2, EMT Conzo and EMT Truoccolo. I may be pronouncing his name wrong. The other four were Metro Care personnel. They had no turnout jackets. They didn't have helmets, and I said, "No, you guys stay back here and just when you see us come out with these people, you immediately take them and give us your empty stretcher, and we'll do a round robin, swapping out the equipment to get the patients out."

I told Bobby Browne what I was doing. He said, "Okay, fine." He was going to remain there and wait for us to come back out and see what we have. We took the crew of 18 Charlie, and they had Firefighter Brown direct us to where he wanted us to go.

We entered Liberty Street from West Street, and we started walking down the sidewalk. We got to the point of being in between the Vista Hotel and the World Trade Center, at which point we heard a -- we felt a loud -- a very strong vibration, shaking, and a loud noise like a subway train coming through a station at speed, like a jet engine at full throttle. It was a roaring sound, and he wanted to continue down Liberty Street, and I grabbed him.

I said, "Tim, we can't go down there," and then things started to get dark, and we just ran, and there is some doorway around here, some doorway, and we ran into this doorway. We got in about, I don't know, a number of feet, and the wind velocity took us off our feet and just threw us, and then we started getting buried with debris.

Q. It threw you further into the building or --

A. Right, into the building. Actually, it actually threw us. The wind was coming from the east, from the east to the west, so we got into this doorway, got into something, and it just pushed us and just knocked you off your feet, like a wave hitting you at the beach, and you get stuck in the wave itself.

So we are trapped up in there now. We are separated. I'm yelling to the other guys, but you're buried in this.

Q. I know you are Haz-Mat trained. Did you have a Scott pack or no?

A. No, and then I don't have my Scott pack any more. When they disbanded ERS, the ERS unit relinquished all their equipment back to Haz-Mat operations.

Q. Okay.

A. I had my helmet on. For some reason I had my strap on, and thank God that was on, as I'll tell you later on, and I had the EMS bunker pants, and my jacket on, so it took like about 10 minutes, and I was able to dig myself to the point where I was falling down, because it turns out I was suspended off the ground. It has debris and dig, dig, dig, and you drop, drop, drop, and you dig, dig, dig, and finally I was able to burrow out of -- like about a couple of minutes like moving ahead. Couldn't breathe. Choking.

There was oxygen, but you were breathing the dirt right in, you were eating it, so you had to keep moving around. Finally just pulled your jacket up over your face and tried to breathe inside your jacket, and then I hit a wall, and then I started to -- and I was able to stand up at that point, and the debris is now about waist level at that point, and then -- now the smoke and debris is clearing, and the whole -- you can see right out to West Street at this point or Liberty and West. You can see in that whole area, and it was, like, I don't know, about a hundred people.

Everybody's heads were all popping up now. Everybody is digging out, so I ran into a couple of firefighters and I said, "Well, you know, what the hell happened?" Some kind of an explosion, he goes, and that's what I thought it was, because it was like coming at you sideways, so we looked out, and we're getting the people out, and as we are getting people out through this debris onto West Street, I'm looking at the medical treatment area, and all the fire apparatus, and all the ambulances were on fire, and nobody is around. You know, where is everybody?

So I got back out into the street and got everybody out, and we directed them. They wanted to know where to go. We said just go to the water. Just go to the -- get on the boat, get the hell out of the city. And as I crossed West Street, I'm looking north, and I'm looking south, and nobody is around. Nobody is around, and I walked over to where the ambulances were burning, and one by one all of a sudden people started to appear. You know, the Metro Care personnel, other EMS personnel.

After about a few minutes, Bobby Browne's aid, Jay Katz, he shows up, and then Bobby shows up, so I said, "Let's get all the -- move the equipment out of the back of the ambulances that are in bags before they burn up and the oxygen and let's re-establish over by this building."

This building turns out to be the World Financial Center directly across the street from Liberty, you know, on the corner of Liberty and West so we got -- there is like a knoll there, a grassy knoll, whatever, concrete knoll. Vehicles have flipped over, on fire, and we get a lot of stuff, and we put it right in front of this building, and now we were going to figure out -- we'll move down towards the water or move north to West Street, and we were trying to figure out where we should go. The radios weren't working, and we hear this noise again.

This is 15, 20 minutes later. I don't know the exact time frame, and we hear this noise again, and I turned, and I could see Bobby Browne and Jason Katz. They were like about 20, 30 feet ahead of me, and they disappeared into the world -- they ran into the World Financial Center, so we start running, and we get to within, I don't know, five feet of it, and we get blown through the plate glass window with the wind velocity, so then we get trapped up in here, and we get buried again, and I'm on, I guess, like the left side of where -- I got pushed in and slipped to the left, and you got pushed into, you know -- got crashed into a wall, so when -- then that noise went on like a minute, minute and a half, and then it stopped, and we got buried again, but now there is somebody under me, and it's a fireman, there's a Scott pack, and we're wiggling around, and this turns out to be Lieutenant Stan Rybak of Haz-Mat operations, and we started buddy breathing with the Scott pack. I was able to get some air.

So we started moving around, and moving around, and then we ran into Firefighter Jeff Borkowski of Haz-Mat operations, and then we ran in to firefighter Phil McArdle of Haz-Mat Company No. 1, and the four of us just moved around the room trying to find a way out, and we couldn't find our way out, but we knew we were in the lobby floor, at least we thought we were.

After -- I don't know seemed like forever, but all of a sudden I could hear Phil McArdle yelling, "Over here, over here," and we crawled over, and we end up in this -- back here somewhere around here, and we come outside, and it's like a morning fog, a morning heavy fog. There's light, but you can't see very far, and I couldn't breathe very well at that point.

I was wheezing a lot, and everybody else was too, and our eyes -- we couldn't see. Our eyes were on fire with this debris, so we were able to see a deli across the way, so we run into this deli, and the window had been broken out, and we go up to the refrigerator, and we started just powering shit, you know, soda, club soda, whatever we could find, just trying to clear our eyes, and they leave.

For whatever reason, they left, and I'm there by myself, and I hear this voice behind me, "Buddy, can you please help me?" So I turned around. There is a guy on the floor, you know, covered in this dust, and he's got an angulated tib fib fracture, so I said, "Yeah, sure, brother, I'll help you out," and I threw him some water. I said, "Take some of this, start washing your eyes out."

So he goes, "Are you CHARLIE WELLS?" I turned around, I said, "Yeah, I am." I'm looking. It turns out to be a friend of mine, Dave Hanchu, who's a Daily News photographer. I'm sure you guys have seen him over the years, and I go, "Dave Hanchu?" He says, "Yeah, Charlie." I said, I go, "Your leg's broken," and he goes, "I can't get up." I said, "Okay, fine, I'll get you out of here, but we will be moving fast. I don't know what the hell happened."

Still, I don't know what's happening. So he starts moving with me, and he says to me -- he goes, "You know that one of the towers has collapsed." So I go, "No, no I wasn't aware of that." He says, "Because I took a picture of it as it was happening. That's how I got caught up and then got blown around."

So I go, "All right." So then I began to understand the enormity of what was going on, and I dragged him out of the deli and got him onto the side to the sidewalk, and now we went west, which was a right turn, and we go right to this North Cove Marina, and there between where I was dragging him and the North Cove Marina, another fireman and a police officer come up to me and said, "Can we help you?" And we picked him up, and we carried him to this Fire Department marine unit, and we get him out.

So then I walked back now toward North End Avenue, and now I'm trying to figure out -- no, I'm sorry. We -- I then leave the marina, and this esplanade is a walkway. I start walking down here and trying to, you know, re-establish where the personnel are. Nobody is around now, but people are walking this way. You know, civilians. I'm all telling them go down here, because word had it that there was a ferry over here, so I walked down here, and I ran into Commissioner Gregory, and a couple of seconds after that Jason Katz, a couple of seconds after that, half the crew of 18 Charlie, who was Joe Conzo -- Truoccolo ended up getting hurt. He got trapped up under a car, and he got numerous avulsions and lacerations, and they took him to the hospital, so now I know that they're alive, and then I ran into Bobby Browne, who I hadn't seen in about an hour, and he's alive, so -- but he was -- we were all banged up.

So I said, "You go down to the ferry and establish a triage point over there. If you need transport, we will see what we can get. I'm going to look around for ambulances and personnel and see what we can find." The radio wasn't working. The transmit button on the speaker mike was jammed.

So I turned the radio off, and you can clear it. Turn the radio on, and I tried to transmit, and I reversed direction and went the other way, and over here I ran into about 12 -- about 6 or 8 ambulances, about 10 personnel, and we were able to start to -- one of the things I learned about this is that the face shield of the helmet is absolutely useless. You need goggles. And we can't lock the ambulances any more.

In fact, once you got a confirmed MCI, you've got to leave them open, because they were running and locked, and the voluntary units, not only were they running and locked, when you broke into them, no, the ignition, somehow they were able to override, when you turn the ignition off, they can turn it. They can either take the key out and then lock the steering wheel, but the vehicle is still running, so you couldn't use the vehicles.

On all the department ones, we broke the driver's side window, the butterfly window, and then we could get in, and then we got about eight ambulances running and personnel, so we get over here, and over here there is like a little deli -- I'm sorry, it's a restaurant. We got into the restaurant, and when we got into the restaurant, you know, behind the bar, we were taking the bar spigot, you know, the soda spigot, and we were pouring the water and the club soda in our eyes to clear our eyes, and the phone is ringing.

Pick up the phone, "I can't talk right now," hang up, and then I picked up the phone again, and I tried to get through to citywide, and I couldn't get through to citywide, so I quick tried my house, and my wife picked up the phone, and I said, "You know, it's me. I'm all right, I'm okay, but it's going to be a long time before I get home, but I'm okay, love you," boom, I hang up the phone.

Come back out here, get up to West Street, and now there is a lot of personnel. Everybody is starting to come -- it's starting to all come together. Got back all the way over here to -- excuse me, over here to Vesey, and there is like a big parking lot over here, and all the cars were on fire, and I get back over here, and there is more EMS personnel, so I said all right.

We started to set up a medical triage center over here now, Vesey and West, and then I was able to get on the radio at that point, and I got through to citywide saying that Car 631, Deputy Chief Wells reporting in, and with that they said go up to Broadway and 85 at the command post.

So now I had to walk -- I think I came down here, and I came down West through, you know, the gateway over here, and I came back up through here and took Albany Street, Thames, Trinity, and got up to Broadway, and I don't know what the intersection was, but it was 225 Broadway, a corner building, and there is a huge contingent of firefighters, about 15, 20 EMS personnel, and Dr. Kelly and Dr. Prezant, and they come up to me and they go, "Chief," he goes, "We are trying to set up" -- they wanted to set up a medical triage sector, treatment sector outside.

I said, "No, no, no. Let's go into this." There was a corner building, which is 225 Broadway, and inside there is huge hallways that had side elevator banks, and I said, "No, let's go in here."

The custodians of the building said, "Do you want us to bring desks down? You can use them as treatment tables." That's what they did, and then within about 15, 20 minutes, we had a well-established medical treatment center there with physicians from area hospitals, who they just showed up.

There was a drugstore nearby that was accessed, broken into, and we started bringing out all the wound care stuff, and within about 15 minutes started receiving patients, most of them respiratory, a lot of them eye injuries, and they had pulmonologists there, they had ophthalmologists there, they had emergency physicians there, Dr. Prezant, Dr. Kelly, and in fairly quick fashion we were able to get this thing ramped up and operating.

At that point, I was there for about an hour, you know, leading that, and what I could see, nobody wanted to be transported. They just wanted to be patched up to go back to work, so we had like four ambulances there, four department ambulances.

Lieutenant Kevin Haugh, Captain Jeff Race, Lieutenant Roy David, Lieutenant Steve Lincke, I believe Lieutenant Jack Sullivan, and there were a few others, all operating this area, quickly making sure that the patients are getting in, getting treated and getting moved back out.

After about an hour, I get a message from the command post from Chief Kowalczyk to report to the command post. Now they had established a command post back up here at West and Vesey, so Lieutenant David said, "I'll get you over there," because I couldn't see at that point now, very, very blurred vision, and I was having trouble breathing, and even with the eye treatments and them washing my eyes out, I couldn't see very well, and I wasn't breathing -- you know, just, you can hear yourself wheezing, but everybody was having this problem.

So we moved -- Roy gets me all the way over to -- at that point a couple of blocks away from the command post, and Dr. Al Cherson and somebody's driving him, and his car is -- all the windows are blown out, and, you know, like, five, six inches of dust. It was like, wild, and the things moving, and I just jumped on -- Roy and I just jumped on the trunk of the car, and we leaned in, and I said, "Could you just get us over to West and Vesey." That's where I'm going, Chief, no problem.

And we went over there and reported in, and at that point Chief McCracken was there, Chief Goldfarb, Chief Kowalczyk, Chief Basile, Chief Tramontana. There was a huge EMS contingent there with an operating medical sector, and immediately Chief McCracken, and Chief Kowalczyk and Chief Basile brought me over and, you know, said, you know, "You are going to the hospital." And I go, "No, I'm fine." They go, "Well, you are going to the hospital, but we want you to brief us on what you did," you know, so I gave them a briefing just as I described to you, and fairly, you know, quick order, and I got put on the M.E.R.V., and at that point I got more eye treatments and got brought over to St. Vincent's, spent about an hour and half at St. Vincent's, felt a lot better, and they released me, and I got dressed and hitched a ride back to the command post, and now that's 5:30, six o'clock in the evening, and at that point, I never re-entered any building, and I was never -- I was never above street level in any building.

Q. So basically after St. Vincent's you went back down there. Did you do any more ops?

A. No, they wouldn't let me do any more ops.

Q. Okay.

A. I just, you know, basically sat there and -- oh, what I did do operationally, was -- they were able to access and have response to that medical sector, the EMS operations post, the use of things like three, or four or five U.S.A.R. paramedics, and I started giving them a briefing on what I would expect them to do over the next few days, start ramping up, in the event they activated or accessed the U.S.A.R. equipment, that I wanted them to be with search teams, and I gave that report to, you know, Chief Tramontana, Chief McCracken, Chief Kowalczyk, who was standing there, and after about an hour of that briefing, that was basically the conclusion of my operational role at that site, so, you know, for a day, got a few people out, you know, was able to establish a couple of medical sectors, and miraculously, never had a fracture, you know.

That was it, and they said, you know, "Try and find your car," which I knew was on West Street, and they said you know, "You may not find it, you know, or severely damaged."

So I walked up, and there it is. Nothing is wrong with it, except it's covered in about six inches of, you know, soot, and that was it. I got into the car and somehow, you know, made my way home, and then I was out on medical for two days, which was Wednesday, the 12th, Thursday, the 13th, cleared back to work by the ophthalmologist and my primary physician on the 13th and then reported back to the site on the 14th.

MR. DUN: This concludes the interview with Chief Wells. The time is 1146 hours. Thank you very much, sir.

Continuation with Chief Wells, for clarification.

THE WITNESS: The latter medical treatment on West Street with the- EMS operations command post where I reported back to after being released from St. Vincent's was located on Murray and West, on Murray and West, I believe, not Vesey and West.

It would have been too close into the site, because I was able to visualize the collapse of 7 World Trade Center as I was looking south on West Street, looking slightly east, and you could see the tower just disappear behind the other buildings, which would have been Barclay.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT SEAN CUNNIFFE

Interview Date: October 26, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. DUN: Today's date is October 26th, 2001. The time now is 8:17 a.m. I'm Richard Dun of the New York City Fire Department, City of New York. I'm working with Marissa Abbriano, also with the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

EMT CUNNIFFE: Sean Cunniffe, EMT specialist, Battalion 31.

MR. DUN: This is in regards to the date of September 11th.

Q. What do you recall?

A. It started off like any other day. I went in, got our truck ready, went to stop for breakfast on DeKalb and Flatbush, 99 cents bacon, egg and cheese, can't pass that up.

While we were ordering, we heard a lot of commotion on the radio. We turned up the radio a little bit louder to see what was going on. Heard what was going on, ran out to the truck, got in. 48 David put us on it, 48 David go.

We went. While going we were a little bit excited, it was going to be the job of the century.

Q. When you got the call were you able to see the twin towers?

A. No, no, not from there. But en route as soon as we hit like Tillary Street, the Brooklyn Bridge is when we could see it. We could see the damage. It didn't look like much. We said -- we were thinking to ourselves, me and my partner, it's like, ah, some knucklehead with a private jet got too close or one of those little fighter planes.

Q. Who was your partner that day?

A. Jarjeam Felton, 5148.

We were a little bit excited. We were like, this is gonna be the job of the century, the job of a career. We were going there, lights and sirens blasting along with I don't know how many other emergency vehicles over the same bridge as us. We went over the Brooklyn Bridge.

We got off the Brooklyn Bridge at Park Row, went up Church Street, I believe -- not Church Street, Chambers Street. We heard there was two staging points: One was on Church; the other was West Street. My partner said to go to Church Street, and I said, "No, we always go to West Street." So we went to West Street.

We got there. I don't know the supervisor's name, but we pulled up in front of Six World Trade, West and Vesey, and we parked our truck pretty much under the pedestrian bridge and waited for further instructions.

We grabbed our equipment and got out and this and that. We were waiting there. That's when the scope of the whole incident unfolded before us, because as we were waiting there, we started seeing people falling from the building.

Q. When you were driving to Chambers Street, did you see debris flying around?

A. Yeah, yeah, not much but all that glass falling and papers and smoke.

Q. Was there a lot of people running, chaos?

A. I really didn't pay too much attention to it because I was too busy trying to get to the staging point at West Street. When we got there, when we got set up and we actually had a minute to actually stop and look and see, we were like, oh, shoot.

Q. That was just the one tower that was hit at that point?

A. Yeah. The second plane hadn't come in yet.

We were lined up on West Street, west side, right by the pedestrian bridge, between six and one, over here somewhere. I don't remember the supervisor's name, but they had us line up, put our stretchers and equipment on it. We were just waiting for further instruction.

As we were waiting there, counting the people jumping, that's when we saw the scope of it. We counted 39 people. It was sad. That's when it stopped being exciting and reality kicked in and we were hanging out.

The second plane came in. It was the biggest noise I ever heard in my life.

Q. Did you see the plane?

A. Yeah. We saw it, we heard it, we felt the heat from it, the debris. We ducked under a truck, Fire Patrol 3, I believe it was, parked right over here. Just before -- because we started running. It was just before the pedestrian bridge at West and Vesey. It was parked over here. Debris was falling and people were running and panicking.

We came out. A supervisor on the scene I believe said get all the vehicles around onto Vesey between North End and West in between here. So I went, got the vehicle, brought it around. My partner stayed there with the staging people.

Q. The officer, was he a male? Female?

A. Male, EMS lieutenant.

As we were standing there, we saw Von Essen, Judge, run by us. We saw the Mayor come out. Just a lot of people were there: 31 Victor, 31 Young and 31 Adam and 40 Charlie was there. A whole bunch of people from the neighborhood we know that work over here in Brooklyn.

I went, parked the vehicle over here. As I was returning, I had just turned this corner and everybody was running into American Express.

Q. American Express building?

A. American Express building. That was our next staging point, in the lobby there. We set up (inaudible). Everybody was bringing stretchers, all the equipment in there, supervisor were in there. Everybody was waiting. That's when I got separated from my partner, because he went to try to find a phone to call his family.

We were waiting there. We really didn't know what was going on outside because we were inside. We couldn't really see from this point that far over. That's when everybody just started running. The rumbling started and a big cloud of smoke came by the windows and started breaking the windows.

Q. Now we're talking about the south tower collapsing?

A. Yeah, it collapsed. I'm sure it was some significant time in between. It seemed like ten minutes, the whole job.

Q. You lose time.

A. Yeah. I guess it's almost an hour later, 9:55.

From that, the building started collapsing. I just remember looking up at it and it was like, ah, that's not supposed to collapse. It's supposed to stay up. People were just running, and someone kicked me and said, "Run, you stupid ass, run."

So we started running. We were running through the hallway, like the lobby is a big lobby, the hallway on the north side of the American Express building with the emergency exit, and we were packed in there like sardines trying to get away.

Stupid things you remember, like I remember telling people just run, get the hell out of the building. It's coming down right on top of us. The windows were already breaking in the front.

I remember seeing this woman. She was about maybe 5-5, close to 250. She was hobbling. I looked at her. She had a broken leg. I wound up grabbing her, putting her arm around me and just dragging her out of the building, because she was slowing too many people up.

As soon as we got I'd say in between these two -- the Merrill Lynch, that's when I decided to start going back, because I heard the maydays on the radios and all of our friends screaming. I heard 31 David screaming, 31 Mary screaming, Chief Brown I believe was screaming on the radio.

I just stopped and tried to go back. I made it right back to the corner, and that's as far as I got. I couldn't see anything and couldn't do anything. So I decided to come back around here. The MERV truck was here. We were saying we'll stay with the MERV. We'll set up over here.

I don't know how long we were there, but we were trying to set up the MERV. We were getting vehicles pulled off this street.

Q. North End Avenue?

A. Yeah, because --

Q. Vesey?

A. Vesey. That's where they had us park. 31 Adam was dead. We were trying to boost it. It was like forget it, just leave it. This all happened approximately the same time of the collapse also. It was like forget it, just leave it.

There was a whole bunch of us standing over here by the MERV truck on North End Drive, River Terrace, I'm not sure. It was either here or here. I'm not sure.

Q. This is still with the first collapse?

A. Yeah, still the first.

Q. Did you see the fireball come yet?

A. No, I didn't even look up. I just remember hearing like the helicopters. Everybody was just running wild, and I pretty much couldn't see.

We were setting up, and we said, okay, let's go back. We were on our way back, and we made it again to pretty much the same corner of West End and Vesey. I guess we were standing right in the middle of West Street when we heard over the radio that tower one is leaning, everybody evacuate, evacuate, evacuate.

We were just trying to get as many people out of there as possible just telling them to run. As soon as one started coming down, that's when we started running. I didn't stop until I got to the water.

Q. River's edge?

A. Yeah. I jumped over the wall and just kept going and kept going. I didn't know which way it was going to come. You don't know if it's coming straight down, if it's going to tilt all the way down. There's too many things going on in your head at the same time.

I got to pretty much the water's edge and started running up this way.

Q. That would be north?

A. Yeah, started running north. The cloud came over. It wasn't too bad over here, the dust cloud. So we started -- we stayed pretty much between River, by the park between -- I think we made it as far as Murray maybe in between these two blocks here and the water.

That was pretty much it. We hung out there. There were a lot of police officers around. We saw a friend of ours from -- Officer Torres from the 76th Precinct. He was crying on the steps behind Stuyvesant. We stayed with him because he said he just lost his partner. (Inaudible) and caught up in that. We consoled him a little bit.

We were trying to figure out what kind of instructions we were going to get. They started saying go to Chelsea Piers up on the west side. We stayed there for, I don't know, maybe a half hour.

There was a pay phone there, and the line for the pay phone was like 12, 15 people long. So I said I've got to call my wife just to let her know I'm okay. I waited on the line. I met up with Felton again -- from the lobby, which is when I got separated from him. But as I was running, I saw him pass me by. At least I was relieved.

I had a lot of things going on. My sister works in two. I didn't know if she was still in there, if she got out.

Q. Did you ever make that phone call?

A. Yeah, yeah. I waited on that line, and I waited. As soon as I get up there, I asked somebody for a quarter, because I didn't even have a quarter. Trying to get a line, it took eight or nine times just to get a phone line and dial tone. Go figure, as soon as I dial the number and waste the quarter the line is busy, because she is calling here, probably. So it took me a while to get through, but I finally got through.

I asked her, "Did you hear from my sister?" Her uncle works there also. She didn't know anything, and I didn't know anything. It was just "I'm okay and I'm going to come home."

At the time I was on the phone, Felton was in front of me on the phone. He made his phone call already. He started walking back. I kept yelling at him, "Don't go back there. Stay with me." Because he's only here a year.

It was kind of funny. I was nervous for him, because he wasn't even listening to me. I said, "Stay here with me. We'll go back together. I don't want to be separated from you again. I can't get a frigging line out on this phone." But he kept walking and walking. I was like, where the hell is this kid going?

So about 15, 20 minutes later, I finished my phone call and I start heading back towards Vesey, towards North End. I guess it was like up here. That's when I saw him with this big cloud of dust turn the corner, with his head sticking out of the vehicle saying, "I've got the vehicle. I saved the vehicle." It was like" Yeah, yeah, yeah. It was a piece of crap. It dies on us twice a week. You should have let it be buried. Maybe we'll get a new one."

We got in the vehicle. We started collecting -- there were a couple firefighters down there. We were helping them collect some equipment. There were a lot of firefighters that just dropped their packs. They were going around in a little golf cart. Some civilians had Scott packs and said, "Somebody left this." We were throwing them in the back.

We were heading back towards west side, and I guess we made it -- I don't even know where, to tell you the truth. We had to make a U-turn in an empty lot. I guess it was like Vesey and North End again to this corner, and we saw -- do you know Abdo?

Q. Yeah, Abdo.

A. What is he, a lieutenant?

Q. Yeah. He's a captain. He's a captain.

A. Is his last name Abdo or his first name?

Q. His first name. Captain Abdo Nahmod.

A. I know him from Lutheran, but I didn't really know what his rank was. I saw him a couple times over here on Myrtle. But Abdo was there, and he was telling us to make a U-turn because there was a main, gas main, leaking or something. We just tried to circle, find a way. We circled back to the west side.

We picked up some people on the West Side Highway, and we went up to Chelsea. That's it. Chelsea, we stayed there for a while, just doing circles when the troops came in. We got a little bit bored and said, screw this, we're not wasting our time. There's people down there that need help and we're sitting here.

So we went back down and picked up an officer and a construction worker, went with them to staging, went back down, picked up more police officers and firefighters, brought them back up. We were doing transport between, say, Vesey and Chelsea, back and forth. We got somebody with an MI, a construction worker with an MI.

Q. Did you transport him to the hospital?

A. Yeah. There was a staging point somewhere on the west side. It wasn't as far down as Vesey.

Q. Canal.

A. No, it was below -- it was between the tunnel and Vesey Street. There's a staging.

Q. Chambers.

A. Yeah. I don't know who the supervisor was. There was an EMS supervisor. Any vehicle pretty much that passed him he stopped and he commandeered everybody's equipment, like throw it here. He had a curb full of tech bags, oxygen bags, de-fibs, software. So he pretty much stripped the bus.

We had the patient with the MI. He gave me a paramedic; I forget his name too. He took my partner, Felton, off the vehicle. So Felton got off, me and the paramedic, we transported one to hospital 02.

From there there was a place to restock your vehicles. We dropped him off and restocked the vehicle as much as we could. We went back and got held up at the staging at Chelsea Piers again. That was pretty much -- from one staging point to the other. From there they said, "Okay, we need two vehicles to go down to South Street staging." So we go down there. "We don't need you here." We ended up going to the Greenwich area staging, the command post staging. We pretty much stayed there the whole night with Chief Wells.

That was it.

Q. Thank you.

A. Time-wise.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT ROBERT COOK

Interview Date: October 25, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. DUN: Today's date is October 25, 2001. The time is 0848 hours. I am Richard Dun with the New York City Fire Department working with Marisa Abbriano, also with the New York City Fire Department. We're conducting an interview with...

THE WITNESS: Robert Cook.

MR. DUN: Shield?

THE WITNESS: Shield 3719.

MR. DUN: Of Battalion 31.

Q. Robert, in your own words, just please describe the events leading up to and after September 11th.

A. Up to it? Well, we were getting fuel at Ladder 118 when people were coming up to the firehouse, it's right over on Midagh Street and Henry, telling us that a plane hit the World Trade Center. We took ourselves off the pumps, drew up to the corner. A bunch of firemen came out of the firehouse, went to the corner. You could see the first tower on fire. So then we were available, they assigned us to the call, they said to switch over to Citywide.

We proceeded over the bridge. Once we got over the bridge, the second plane hit. There was an explosion. We didn't know it was a second plane. We thought it was just exploding from the first plane. Then over Citywide we heard people saying it was a second plane and it was deliberate.

We proceeded down west on Chambers Street, made a left on West Broadway. Coming down on West Broadway, we were flagged on the corner by a state correction officer. There we observed a female laying on the corner and several other patients standing around stating that they were injured. We had a private ambulance also there on the scene. They assisted us with long boarding this female and splinting her leg with a tib/fib fracture.

Q. At this point, what part were you there? Were you there for the first collision or the second collision?

A. The second collision.

Q. The second plane went into the building?

A. As we were on Chambers Street.

Q. But the buildings were still standing?

A. Still standing, yes. They were still standing. The whole time we were in Manhattan, they were still standing and you could feel the heat coming all the way over to there.

We proceeded to get about five patients into the ambulance. We notified the supervisor that we had five patients. He said he'll check to see where we could transport the patients. He told us that he was ordered to have us, if they were not in extremis, to be transported out of the borough. So we proceeded to go to Long Island College with five patients.

On the way to Long Island College, going in to Long Island College is when the first building collapsed, and then the second building came down also while we were still there getting the patients out. We were tied up a little bit at Long Island College because we had police cars coming in and transit cars coming with patients, so we had to assist them to unblock us, get all the patients out.

Out of Long Island College, we got the stretcher back into the back of the truck and we were going to proceed back over the bridge. We had hit traffic all over the place in downtown Brooklyn trying to get back to the bridge. By the time we made it back to the Brooklyn Bridge, there was a chief there, an EMS chief, I don't know who she was, and I met up with Lieutenant Lugo and we were starting a triage post there. There was another unit, 32 Charlie, I believe, was also there. So we had about, I believe, four EMS units and we commandeered about, I'd say, seven to eight private ambulances and we had a triage system going on there, and I was designated to be transport officer, which means that anybody coming in, anybody needs to be transported, I would tell which ambulance they would go in.

We were held there for about I'd say maybe two hours before they released us back to 911 and they left the private ambulances there. So then we proceeded back to the station, BBP'd the ambulance and went back out as a 911 unit.

Q. So both towers were still up the whole time that you were there? One tower went down --

A. When we were going to Long Island College. When we were at the College, the second plane came in.

Q. The second tower?

A. Yes. So that's basically it. We never made it in to the forward command post. Then we went back and we couldn't make it over the Brooklyn Bridge because of all the pedestrian traffic coming across, and that's when we all set up the triage there and we triaged patients. Then Victory Memorial had a big MERV set up there and also they said they had a triage system set up at the Marriott Hotel.

That's about it. That's all. I know it's nothing spectacular.

MR. DUN: Okay. Well, this will help because now we know some patients and things like that.

This concludes the interview with Robert Cook. The time is 0852 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

BATTALION CHIEF BRIAN DIXON

Interview Date: October 25, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CAMPBELL: Today's date is October 25th. The time is 12:41 p.m. This is Patrick Campbell, fire marshal of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview regarding the events of September 11th. I'm here with Battalion Chief Brian Dixon in his office. Also present is --

MR. STEPONAITIS: Fire Marshal Stephen Steponaitis, Fire Department.

MR. CAMPBELL: You can identify yourself too.

CHIEF DIXON: Battalion Chief Brian Dixon.

Q. Chief, we're conducting an interview, just like I said, regarding the events of September 11th. What we're looking for is from the time that you became aware of the incident up until any time during the day. We're looking for people you'd seen, just what you noticed around you. You can just go on on your own.

A. I was in the office that morning. If I refer to the time line now I received, it was right after -- I guess as soon as the plane hit.

Someone came into the office and just told me that a plane had hit the World Trade tower. I assumed it was a small plane, an aviation accident, and I thought he was kidding also.

I went out to the main press office to look at it. I think by then the TV was on and it showed it and I could see the tower. I grabbed the car. Mine was in the shop, so I borrowed one of our spare vehicles and just responded out. I grabbed a vehicle and went downstairs and responded out to it, figuring it was a press event, obviously, of magnitude.

I started over the Brooklyn Bridge. I kind of got into a -- I'm not sure who it was. It could very well have been 207 and 110, because I came across and picked them up partway going across the Brooklyn Bridge. I think by that time -- I can't remember whether the bridge was shut down yet or not. The police were waving me on.

I came across the bridge and could see the north tower, thick black smoke billowing up from the upper floors. It's hard to tell what floor, but it was way up high. So it looked like it had hit ten floors below maybe the top. I'm gauging ten to twenty floors below.

I see the smoke and I hear the radio reports that it penetrated the skin. At some point coming across also I hear the radio reports also that they had confirmed they had jumpers. That's early on, before I even get off the bridge.

I sort of wound up in a convoy with the battalion. I'm guessing I think it was 207 or 110. I wound up with the 31. They responded over also. I got in with them. I went down Broadway and parked facing southbound, on Broadway southbound. I parked on Broadway and Liberty.

One of the engines pulled in right behind me, because there's a hydrant right there. So I pulled past that engine. I think it was 110. I think the truck turned up the street. Rather than drive down Liberty, I think they turned up it to come down.

I just pulled up to the street there, just put the car in gear, in park, and hear this horrendous boom. It shook the car. I figured somebody in the north tower exploded. Then like a Godzilla movie, everybody that had been standing in that little park there across from One Liberty Plaza and had been just looking up and watching the north tower burn just started running eastbound like they were being chased by someone.

I jumped out of the car. I looked up and the south tower -- that must have been the time that the plane had just struck the south tower. Now I see the south tower also. Somebody was saying there's another plane.

At that point I assumed you can't have two -- it can't be an accident to have two planes. So, I don't know if there's planes or missiles or what but something was hitting this thing. You saw debris was falling down.

Since I didn't have my vehicle, I had no gear. So, I started down the block. Then the 31 Battalion actually pulled into the -- I'll look at the map -- they were on -- where was I? I was on Liberty. They were probably on Cortlandt. They were parked on Cortlandt and Broadway.

I asked him if he had any gear. He said no. I started halfway down, and he caught me and yelled back he did have some extra gear in the car. So I grabbed a coat and a helmet.

I continued down Liberty. There's stuff I'm stepping over. 10 and 10, I just looked in. They looked like they were triaging, a few people sitting -- everybody was out of quarters already, but there was somebody in there sitting on a seat. Someone was being treated at this time. There were police in the street waving people the other way. Most of the people had already fled. As I walked down, there's nobody there but the PD, and they were running people out of there.

Debris was falling down but not at any great point. By the time I started to pass by in front of 10 and 10. As I got down a little farther, there was what looked to be a piece of the cabin of the airplane, I guess. It looked like a piece of it about maybe six foot long. It looked like the windows.

Q. This is on Liberty?

A. This is on Liberty and just west of 10 and 10, whatever that next building is there. Now that I think back, I guess it could have been -- I don't know if it was the windows. It actually looked like the rounded cutout of the windows of the cabin of a plane.

I continued heading down Liberty towards West Street. When I passed by the Marriott, I see the aide from the 31 Battalion was in the lobby of the Marriott. He came running out yelling to me: You have about 40 or 50 people in there in the lobby. I said let's get them out and we'll go run them across the street.

He took them out. I think there was a police officer helping him too. That guy, he came out and he just started moving them south on West Street.

Q. The Marriott Vista?

A. I call it the Marriott. It's the one on the corner of Liberty and West. So that would be --

Q. Vista International. It is the Marriott.

A. Yeah, the Vista International.

On that side door, that side door on Liberty, the entrance to the hotel there, he was in the lobby there. Everybody in the lobby just came out. I saw him as I was going past, so I started ushering them out. There were police and people on the other side by the south bridge, so they ran them down there and across the street, because there was a parking lot on the corner opposite there also. There were cars burning in there as we passed by. There were a couple of cars burning in that parking lot already from the debris that had fallen down. He ran them out.

I continued across West Street. I can't tell you why I continued to cross, if you go sort of to the front of the building. I made my way down West Street. I'm not sure at what point I saw Gribbon. He might have been walking down the street. I'm trying to remember now.

The command post must have been set up because in my mind I'm looking for the 8 command post. I remember I didn't look in either one of the towers for it. So they must have been there because I just walked on West Street across and over to the command post.

What vehicles I passed on the way I can't really tell you. I mean, the people were in already in the one tower.

Q. Were there any rigs along --

A. I don't remember any being in front of the Vista or anything yet in front of -- that would be tower two. Tower two is set back. On West Street in that area. That's the south area towards Liberty, and in front of the Vista, I don't remember any rigs there. But there's a lot I don't remember.

I got over to the command post. I got hooked up with Frank and went over to the command post. I'm trying to think of who was there. I'm at the command post in front of -- it was already set up, so it's not like -- they had been there. They were set up on that ramp leading down to the underground garage by what looks like the booth. There's a booth out there too, I think, on that ramp.

Q. Right, we saw it on the video, that videotape.

A. Yeah, they're set up out there.

Who was there at that point? I'm guessing Pete Hayden was there. I'm trying to remember exactly who I was standing next to. I looked around. I was just looking at the time for cameras. I see rigs in front. I couldn't tell you who. Obviously there were rigs all over in front of one, the north tower, in front of that.

At some point the decision is made we should clear a lane, because everybody's parked in all the traffic lanes on West Street. They're parked in a circle. The rigs are parked in that circle, but I don't know -- I just assumed it was 10 and 10. That's just based on the fact that they are right there. They would have come out of quarters. Their normal routine is for them to go into that circle. There were definitely rigs in a circle close to the entrance of One World Trade. There were other rigs in the street, police vehicles all over.

At one point we wanted to move some vehicles, so we started looking for chauffeurs. I know Tommy McDonald took a rescue rig or a hazmat rig, one of the rigs, and drove it right up on the lawn next to the Financial Center on the grass there, which is either One or Two, I'm not sure. It's the American Express Building, over there.

Q. That's Two World Financial Center?

A. It's probably American Express. It would be just south of that north bridge, the northernmost bridge. You had a lawn area there, and he just drove it straight up in there to get out of the way. They were looking for other people to move things.

Ganci was at the command post. I'm pretty sure Feehan was at the command post with us. I was there when the Mayor came over with his people, his security people. He stood out front and was watching. There were other companies too kind of staged there.

The Mayor came over, and we were trying to find Von Essen for him. I'm guessing now at that point that, I think we heard someone say they thought he was in the tower, he was in one. Somebody went to get him so he could hook up with the Mayor.

Ganci briefed the Mayor, I believe, because Ganci was at the command post. So he went over and briefed the Mayor. Then the Mayor and his group walked away.

There was a reporter there from ABC, I know, and a guy with a camera. I was somewhat concerned, but then I figured there's not much you can do to stop the guy in the street. Where are you going to push him to? He was back just photographing. It wasn't too bad.

But then at some point we're standing there and then we started to see a number of people jumping. There had to be a dozen at least, jumping and just thumping. There were a couple companies standing there.

I guess there was some debris falling down from the other one, nothing that seemed to hit our side of the street. At one point one of the chiefs said why doesn't everyone move back off the board here and stand in the watch way of the garage there. Some did. Some still stayed up on the ramp.

It was a frustrating and helpless feeling. You could see the guys -- every time a body jumped, you just heard this thump, thump. So a lot of them were turning away. There wasn't much you could do.

At that point still from that vantage point actually looking up -- I'm looking at the tower, at one, and two is set back. Obviously the south one is set back farther. I don't recall a lot of flame from that vantage point, from looking up from the west side of West Street. People were standing out there.

A lot of smoke drifting up, a lot of dark black smoke drifting up on tower one from the lowest floor of fire, obscuring the top somewhat. I didn't see a lot of flame coming out of windows or anything.

The thought crosses your mind: How are we going to put this out? You know you're sending people out. I remember Ganci asking for two fifth alarms, a fifth alarm for one tower, a fifth alarm for the other, and he wanted more for staging.

We were going to change the staging area too. I forget when that happened. I guess I was standing there for quite a while and saw -- I went in at one point to make a phone call, and that I guess was while the people were jumping.

At one point I broke off to go -- I went up the ramp and walked out to the sidewalk. There was a railing there so you couldn't just make a left and walk into the building. So I had to go out to the street and back around.

I went in the building and found a phone at a fire command station. There was a phone there, and I asked one of the people to use the phone. Just to call your office and update them on what was happening here, tell them I was there, tell them we had two planes.

They kind of told me about the Pentagon being hit at that point. They had that information too. So they told me that. I just explained to them we're here and what the operation was going on there. I knew they were getting bombarded with phone calls from the press.

I walked back out to the command post. I believe Feehan was there at that point too. We were all kind of around the board, walking back and forth. Again, time-wise I don't know when it was I came back there, I was standing there and just listening and paying attention just in a sense buffing at what they were doing at the board.

Ganci was just figuring out where they were putting people. I was watching the fire, watching the people jump and hearing a noise and looking up and seeing -- it actually looked -- the lowest floor of fire in the south tower actually looked like someone had planted explosives around it because the whole bottom I could see -- I could see two sides of it and the other side -- it just looked like that floor blew out.

I looked up and you could actually see everything blew out on the one floor. I thought, geez, this looks like an explosion up there, it blew out. Then I guess in some sense of time we looked at it and realized, no, actually it just collapsed. That's what blew out the windows, not that there was an explosion there but that windows blew out.

The realization hit that it's going to fall down, the top's coming off. I was still thinking -- there was never a thought that this whole thing is coming down. I thought that that blew out and stuff is starting to fly down. The top is going to topple off there.

Somebody yelled to run. We turned around and somebody yelled -- a guy said get back into the garage. Not that I thought that was a great idea if this thing fell on the building, but there really wasn't that much time to go back out in the street up and around again. It was one of those whoops, here it comes.

So we turned and went down the ramp. Everybody that was at the command post I believe went down the ramp, Ganci included. We turned around, went down and there were probably two companies at least there, it seemed. They went down and in.

There was a cop there who fell down in front of me. He fell down, so I stopped to pick him up and get him up there. I didn't get all the way back. As I just got in under the entrance there, I got just a little ways back and it was just like -- you hear the noise, a boom, and then a blast of air. It just kind of threw me against the wall. That's where I decided to stay. Since it blew me there, I just hung on the wall.

It just drove everything, all the dust and debris and everything down into the garage. I didn't know what the hell was happening. It just got totally black. It was not stratified like smoke, so from floor to ceiling is just totally black.

You just think, well, I guess this is how it ends, this is it, not knowing what the hell had happened and just start choking and gagging. I lost track of time. I don't know how long it was. It was very quiet. It got black, then it got a little less black and it got more brown or gray, just a little bit. I was still not seeing much. My eyes were burning and I was inhaling all kinds of shit and just coughing up everything.

It was quiet, and then you start to hear people. I realized there were two other people near me in a little cutout there or something. There was actually a mask there with no face piece on it. Then two guys said we're all right. There's nothing laying on us. We're okay. I don't know what is back up the ramp, but we're all right.

Then guys were sort of like assisting, they went past me and I said all right, all right, calm down, we're all right, nothing yet. I saw a lot of dust and everybody coughing. Then somebody said follow the lights. I sort of saw a flashlight back in the distance there.

In my mind I know, all right, there's got to be a door from the garage back up into the building. Nothing's laying on us. I'm assuming whatever fell off this building could have come down and crashed into the front. I don't know if it's blocked, the ramp, or not.

So I started back that way. These two guys had passed me and were moving slowly. For some reason I didn't follow that way. I looked back and it just seemed like a little crack of light.

I said all right, wait a minute, you can see up the ramp. It's not blocked with anything. So rather than go back through the whole thing, I just kind of made my way back up the ramp. I wasn't that far down it anyway. I could see.

Q. They were still with you, the command post guys?

A. It seemed like that was the only guy that went that way. As I say, they all seemed to go back the other way. I don't remember anyone coming back up the ramp with me. But I went back up and peered out. I'm expecting to look up and see that the top of the building fell into the street.

I look and what I see is about 20 stories left of a building and jagged edges on the south side. It was like 20 stories, maybe, or so and on the north side of that tower down to about maybe 10 or 15 stories on the south side of it.

It's like I can't believe the whole building is down. I was dumbfounded. There was paper and ash and everything out there. I look back now and I must have been in a state of shock, because the only thing that stopped me really from going back the other way with anybody else was I said I guess I should call the office and tell them what happened. So I went back up the ramp and back around because I knew there was a phone where I had made the phone call before so I went back in the building.

Two firemen came through. I don't know where they were from. They were truckies. They were looking at me saying who are you? I had on a suit and shirt and tie with the turnout coat over it holding my helmet and I'm covered with frigging dust.

As I looked afterwards, I was just covered with the shit, you know, choking and gagging. They wanted to take me somewhere, take me out the back of the building. They said, "Come out the back." I said no, I'm all right, it's okay, I'm all right. They said, "You don't look all right." I said no, I need to make a call.

I go to the phone. The phone has been knocked off the frigging wall. The lines are out. I walked back outside. I convinced them to leave me alone and walked back out of the front of the building again.

I don't see anybody at this point, even to the point of a cop saying: "Do you guys have anybody in the building?" I told him no, we don't have anybody in the building. There must have been at least a second alarm in the building. I'm realizing where the hell is everybody? This thing fell down. Did people get out of there?

I saw one other guy there. Again, faces and front pieces I don't know. I just said to the guy, "Where is everybody who was in there? What happened to the people who went to" -- he said, "Everybody who went into the garage got out. Everybody's all right." I said, "All right, that's us. But I don't see anybody."

I thought at that point that I actually saw Feehan, but I'm thinking that I'm mixed up and it might be that I just saw him in the beginning, walking down the street in the beginning. That was probably before the towers came down that we were talking and he was walking in the street. I probably didn't see him at that point. I didn't see Ganci. At some point -- again time frame I'm wondering -- I see Turi, Al Turi, coming down. He said we're going to move the command post north to Chambers Street, we're moving north to Chambers Street, let's get everybody north. So, whoever was standing around, all right, we're going north. He walked down a little more and he had a bullhorn and told people move down, we're moving the command post, we're moving the command post. He moved folks north -- it was very quiet. I don't remember seeing anybody else except him. There had to be other guys around there. But I just don't remember. I think I was in a state of shock.

Q. Do you remember hearing anything or any kind of transmissions coming over?

A. No, I wasn't wearing a radio, unfortunately, and I wasn't near anyone with a radio. There was nothing on the guys' radios, the two guys in the building that found me, the two guys that were inside the building when I went back in to use the phone, which I never got to use. I don't remember anything coming over their talkies either.

So I'm out in the street and it had to be half an hour because I'm there when the second one comes down too and I'm not far north on Vesey when I hear the same noise again and look up and realize oh, this one's coming down.

Q. Where were you when that happened?

A. Probably just on West Street north of -- north of the bridge, probably just a bit north of Vesey Street, actually, because I had stayed down there. I can't remember even seeing that many people. I was just saying okay, we're moving the command post north. I was just trying to figure out where is everybody. I'm not seeing anybody.

When that one came down, I heard the rumble on that. That started to come down. Now I know I'm not alone. All of these people I see were running up West Street, and I just started north on West Street running. I don't know how far I got. I heard a boom behind me, I looked back and I knew I had to outrun the debris. I saw like 150 feet of the cloud. I figured I didn't outrun it the last time and I don't think I'm going to outrun it this time either. So I got caught up in that again, the thick cloud.

I actually at one point jumped into a -- it was one of the parked cars. I just jumped into one of the vehicles or sedans, something, farther up. I jumped in there. The door was open. I jumped in. This car had electric windows and it was half open. That's when the black cloud came rolling down West Street. I just stayed there, caught my breath and figured I don't think I want to stay in here anyway, so I jumped out, just ran a lit farther. It cleared by the time I got to I guess Chambers probably before it cleared or the block before Chambers. So I stumbled down there by Stuyvesant, the bridge at Stuyvesant High School.

Q. Was anybody in the rigs that you passed on the way up there? There were rigs parked along there?

A. Most of them were sedans, actually. There was one truck, but that was parked pretty far up now too. I thought that was a flashlight and walked into it. But that's in the cloud, so I don't know what it was, I really don't. In that sense, I don't have any better information than that. No, who was up there? I guess it was Turi. I wandered the rest of the day. When they relocated the command post, I stayed up there, I don't know how much longer it was. I kept asking where is Feehan and Ganci, all the people that were at the command post, where are these people? Nobody knows. Where's Nigro? Does anybody know where Nigro is? He came out later after about half an hour or so, because I thought he had been caught in it too. He came around to the command post. Callan was at the command post at that point. Probably Turi. Turi was there.

Q. Did you ever see anyone, Burns or --

A. No, no, I never saw. I never did. For some reason I never got -- I was walking around in a pair of loafers, so I was useless in the rubble. No, I just walked up and after a while got a shower and cleaned my eyes out.

I didn't get back down there. At this point when the north tower comes down, walking down there, everything is kind of like -- you can't get to the other side where I think most of the people or the digging was going on initially was happening --

Q. South.

A. -- south.

Q. The bridge.

A. At this point when the bridge came down, the north bridge came down, I was stuck there. I think it took Nigro a long time just to get around to get back to where we were at Chambers and Stuyvesant, probably a block south of that, actually, initially when we were at the command post. That's where we said we were moving to, Chambers, I'm not so sure that's where we were. Maybe we were up there, because at that point they were talking about secondary devices. Stuyvesant High School, at some point later they talked about that. I stayed by the command post, really, for the rest of the day. I walked down a little bit.

I look back on it now, I think I was in a state of shock, because I'm not noticing people around me. I'm telling this guy first there's nobody in the building. As soon as he walks away, I said nobody in the building? Jesus Christ, where are they?

I was standing at the command post and trying to figure out -- that is when we started to figure we have to get some idea of who we have, who's here. There's been tons of firefighter companies. How are we going to figure out --

Q. Who's missing?

A. Yeah, we have to get the riding list for them. There was a discussion about that, how we are going to get to every fire house and get their journal for the roll call and figure out who was working, who we're looking for.

But yeah, as far as seeing rigs and things like that, like I said, I went into the command post there because they had the command post set up across the street. I wasn't looking at as I would operationally. I'm looking at it from a media perspective. That's where they all come to, so we'll chase them when they get here.

Q. So after that you were mostly north?

A. I was north, yeah. Like I say, I would guess only because -- only because I went in before to use the phone. There were so many jumpers. I had to tell them what was going on. I hadn't spoken to them since the second plane. So I told them we have two towers burning. Give New Yorkers an update so they can get some information out.

Q. You never saw anyone else from the command post?

A. After we all ran in, I didn't see them again. So they had to have made that move south maybe when I was in the building. They went deep into the garage, found the stairwell and then they might have come out farther south, come out of the World Financial Center or the Winter Garden, I don't know where they came out, but they came out a different way. I went up the ramp and into what is I guess is one, maybe the American Express -- the north side -- north of the garage. Under the bridge, actually. Under that north bridge I went in. The fact that I was in there and there were two firemen trying to make phone calls, that's probably the only thing that stopped me from heading south, because I would have headed south with them if I saw them. When I got back out, I didn't see anyone. So I didn't know where anybody was. I didn't have a radio. I didn't have my car, so I had nothing. I opened my trunk and had absolutely nothing, no bunker gear, no radio, nothing.

Q. Do you have anything further?

A. It's like my eyes weren't open.

Q. That's all right. Everybody says it.

I don't think --

A. I can compare it because that kid before, Brian Kearney, that was blown out of a window in the Astoria fire, and I responded to that from home. When I got there, everybody's walking around, we think there's three guys missing. How come everybody's out walking around? It's because the whole first line assigned was blown out of the building and they're still dazed.

I was asking myself why was I walking around. I was stunned. I can't remember rigs or -- I don't remember companies that were standing at the command post. I don't know the names. It's like I was standing there, and they were walking by but I'm not really -- I'm not too familiar really with the lower Manhattan companies to begin with. It's not like any of the officers came up there that I knew. The field com. van was there. Other than the field com., a spare motor vehicle was nearby, by the lamppost. They were there. Hayden, Ganci. As far as the companies, as I say, there were a couple companies there, people, but nobody -- I can't remember who they were that were standing there, waiting for assignments.

Q. All right. That's good. Thank you.

A. Not helpful, but that's all I have.

MR. CAMPBELL: The time is 1:15. This concludes the interview. Thank you very much. p

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

DEPUTY COMMISSIONER FRANK GRIBBON

Interview Date: October 25, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. CAMPBELL: Today's date is October 25. It's 11:30. We are in the office of Francis Gribbon. This is Patrick Campbell, Fire Marshal, of the New York City Fire Department. We are conducting an interview with the following individual, with the Fire Department, regarding the events of September 11. Present in the room also is --

MR. STEPONAITIS: Fire Marshal Stephen Steponaitis.

MR. CAMPBELL: And --

MR. GRIBBON: Frank Gribbon, Deputy Fire Commissioner, Public Information.

MR. CAMPBELL: We are trying to -- fact finding -- trying to memorialize the events as they happened on September 11.

Q. Starting from the time when you were aware of the attack at the World Trade Center, we want to know where you were, how you became aware and just tell us your story.

A. Okay. At about 8:55 a.m. actually, I simultaneously received a page and a phone call from my office that a plane had struck the Trade Center and that Brian Dixon, the Deputy Director, was responding.

David Billig from my office called me just as I got the page of a third alarm. I was on First Avenue in Manhattan. I got on the FDR Drive and I headed south. I responded obviously.

At about somewhere north of the Manhattan Bridge, I could see the smoke and as I approached the bridge, you could see several floors of fire. I had the same reaction as everybody did, I'm sure, when they saw it. It was just a certain horrific sight. Knowing that all the -- what was happening there. I got down to the end of the drive in the tunnel, which brings you around the Battery and you come up. There was some traffic. I was down there with some other emergency vehicles trying to get through. It was backed up a bit. When I came out, the two towers were now going.

So apparently that second tower was struck while I was underground there in that tunnel. When we came out, a bit more traffic. I made the first left I could, parked my Department vehicle on one of the side streets in the Battery Park City area, took out my bunker gear, helmet and responded to the incident command post that had been set up at -- on West Street, on the west side of West Street, opposite tower number one, or the north tower.

At that location were several dozen members of the Department. There was a command post being set up or had been set up by Chief Ganci. There were several other people on the scene. Chief Feehan I believe. I couldn't place the times for those people, but there were a number of Department people there. I know that Ganci was there and soon after the Mayor and his entourage arrived, with the Police Commissioner, they stopped and spoke to people at the command post, including Chief Ganci. They subsequently left. So a few minutes after that the Fire Commissioner came and was told that the Mayor was looking for him and he left that location. In the meantime more crews from the Fire Department, units, were reporting into the command post. It was first located out towards the street and was moved back I believe twice. At the direction of somebody in the safety division, somebody just said we should move it back and they moved it back.

Subsequently there is some videotape, which I showed you guys just now, which I will provide to Chief Garcia or the Marshals just to give you an idea of how many people were there. There were numerous faces and people that I can identify. But that command post was drawn back into an area that sloped down a grade into a parking garage and loading dock for 2 World Financial Center. A lot of people -- I was in there for some time, briefly with several other dozen members of the Department that were staging there, subsequently being the PIO for the Fire Department. There was a news crew that showed up, N.J. Burkett from Channel 7, was on the sidewalk close to the street. I went up and spoke to him. I told him he should get back. I took his crew as well as one or two photographers, I think one guy from the Post. I had them all stay against the facade of the building there, 1 World Financial Center, I believe it is. The entrance was near the north bridge there, what they call the north bridge connecting the Trade Center and the World Financial Center. So that entrance was underneath the bridge. They were standing just outside of that to the south.

He shot some footage, I showed you guys the footage, which shows when we're standing there -- and it is at some point -- I get there probably maybe sometime between -- around 9:12 to 9:15. So I'm there for about 45 minutes, standing at the command post inside that underground thing. Then I come out and now I'm standing on the street grade level, entrance, with the north bridge, not the sloped tunnel into the garage, when tower two collapsed. I heard shouts of run for your life. I was with a number of other people that were standing at that location, probably two dozen or more, we all fled into or ran into 1 World Financial Center. We -- because the entrance remained intact at that point, we were not whited out like everybody else was. We were not in a cloud of like choking pulverized concrete and all that. There was some of it coming into the building. We all walked through the building to the west and came out the rear of the building, on to - I don't even know the name of the street there. I went out there, there was some mustering of EMS personnel, fire personnel, who had escaped this. I remember seeing Commissioner Fitzpatrick, who must have gotten through the garage and came out that way.

After a few minutes I walked back through World Financial Center to go back to West Street. I came through those doors and walked out, you know, into the debris. There was what I would describe as a moderate amount of a smoke condition. You couldn't see across West Street. But on the west side of the street where I was, there was some visibility. It was a bright sunny day, but I recall it being overcast now. It wasn't overcast, it was just overcast from the cloud of smoke which was hovering around the whole area. It appeared that it was a cloudy day now. I remember that.

I walked out to that area, I remember seeing Chief Ingram and I remember seeing -- I went into the garage to see where everybody had been. There was Roger Moore, who was an EMS guy, on the ground. He couldn't move. His two legs were -- I thought they were broken, but I subsequently found out he ripped all the muscles or something, tendons or ligaments or something like that. He couldn't move. I spoke to him, I told him to stay right there, that I would get a crew, because I knew there were ambulances on the street, so I went back up. That garage was smoked out too. It was still -- it was still like a smoke condition in that garage. So I went the way I came.

I went back to the World Financial Center, through that building and came out of the rear side. There were people being triaged there. It may have been at this point that I saw Commissioner Fitzpatrick.

Q. Is this on West or behind --

A. Behind the building.

Q. Maybe the map would help you figure it out?

A. Yes. This is it.

Q. West is over here. Financial center?

A. North Street I guess it is. North End Avenue, it's actually.

Q. You went through two buildings?

A. I went through -- this is the pedestrian bridge. I went through 3 World Financial Center, American Express building. For the record here, I'm looking at your map, according to your map, I go through 3 World Financial Center, through this and through 4 World Financial Center and come out on North End Avenue where the Department members are sort of triaging there, if this map is correct. It was a long walk, so it's likely that that was the case, that we went through two or three, interconnected buildings.

Q. Was it like a winding hall?

A. Yes, it was like a Winter Garden type, I remember that. All glass enclosed with a restaurant or mall type area.

Q. It's between 3 --

A. That's exactly it. We go through 3, through that glass enclosed mall area and through 4 and out on to North End Avenue. At that point there are Fire Department members, there are a lot of EMS crews that are sort of staging back there. There is some injured people. I remember some secret service guys were there. Actually secret service happens later.

I go on back out to West Street. Roger Moore is injured. I come back, he can't be moved, he has got to be either carried or - I will get to that part of the story. I'm on North End Avenue. People are being triaged. I said I got a guy, I got an EMS guy, he can't move. He is on West Street. We got to go get him. Two paramedics with a stretcher, I don't know what their names are. I get them, then I said come with me, I got to get Roger Moore. They said all right, okay, all right. They come with me.

I got them, we go back through 4 World Financial Center, through the glass enclosed connection, through 3 World Financial Center. I basically traced my route back to the pedestrian bridge on West Street. We come through those doors. I don't know who I see, but now I know, because I've seen videotape. I have seen videotape from the French guys, quote/unquote the Jules and Gideon (inaudible). Et cetera et cetera. There they are filming, because I have seen this. I come through with the crew. Chief Pfeifer from the First Battalion is standing there because I catch it on the video. The two guys with the EMS, myself and then the two guys with the stretcher.

We go back to the location where Roger Moore was, Roger Moore was gone. A subsequent phone conversation with him informed me that some guys carried him. That's exactly where I went to get him. I knew it took them an awful long time to get him out. He is a large heavy set man and some firemen carried him. I think he could give you the rest of his story. He was gone.

So I told that crew, two paramedics, or EMTs with a stretcher, I said let's get out of here. Let me get you guys back. We go back the way we came through, 3 and 4 World Financial Center, back to North End Avenue. At that point, there is a group of guys in suits that start walking south on North End Avenue. I asked them who they were and they said they are secret service and they are looking for one of their guys. I called out to some firemen because they are wearing rubber gloves. They got suits on. I'm like these guys don't even have helmets and gear on. I'm geared up. I said let me try to get some firemen to go with you guys.

So a couple of firemen came with me. We start walking south and we get to - I couldn't name the street, but we walked south and then we start walking east and their guys, they either - they found their guys or they are okay. They said, all right, we are all right. So now we start walking back towards what has become sort of a staging area for fire personnel, EMS, cops and everything else.

Q. Which is --

A. North End Avenue, behind four. Sometime over the next few minutes the other tower came down.

Q. You were --

A. I was back there walking down, actually starting to head up Vesey Street to approach that way, the site, when tower one comes down. Tower one comes down. Then I head that way now and now it's just the whole corner is filled with rigs, all the rigs are destroyed, there are car fires all over the place. There are some injured guys coming out. EMS crews were helping people come out. We start working towards that area there. To say the least, it was like chaos.

There were some firemen who were trying to man hose lines. We had no water pressure. We are searching for anybody we can there. I did not have a handy talky radio. Time kind of gets a -- it's a little fuzzy right now. We were kind of numb and in shock at this point. There were people working there. I got -- I went to a rig and I took out a saw and I cut -- there were about - seemed like 40 car fires going to the left in a large lot. That smoke condition was bad. There were explosions of windows and gas tanks, whatever, and it was -- it wasn't a priority the car fires. After some time, trying to get assembled with the Chief, again I see Chief Ingram at the scene at this location now. He was trying to get a game plan together, you know, what are we going to do here.

There were various hose lines all over the place, but there was no water pressure. We tried to put out the various car fires. I took a saw out of the truck, I don't know what it was. I cut the fence so that we could open up a way to get in to put those car fires out.

I talked to the Chief about drafting water. He said yes, the boat is coming. So I walked down to the river. I sort of commandeered a running ambulance with some other - there were some other guys. We used the ambulance to stretch the five and a half inch hose from the pier. We got in the ambulance and drove it. I didn't drive. I was in the passenger seat this time, but I took the ambulance and backed it up to the site.

I got out and some other officer got in and drove it. I sat with him. Guys in the back stretched that line up to approximately a couple of hundred, two hundred yards or so from West Street to the supply water.

Then I was screaming at news crews. I had to go back to my PIO title. Now I got reporters and photographers all over the place. More fire personnel start to assemble at the corner of Vesey and West there. There are some Chiefs. I remember at some point in the day, Fellini was there and Visconti I remember seeing. There while they are talking, I saw Mike Daly from the Daily News was there. I remember talking to him. I lot of this stuff is blurry.

This went on for hours. You are there, you are doing things, you are not doing things. They are worried that number 7 is burning and they are talking about not ceasing operations. I basically for the day stayed at that location. It wasn't until later that night that I walked around, all the way back around, to see what was going on at the other site. That is really where a lot of the rescue efforts were going on on the south of that collapsed north bridge. We couldn't get past the north bridge.

Q. You are mostly on the north?

A. I'm basically -- the majority of the rest of the day I'm at Vesey and West at what I believe is the command post. I'm trying to keep the press away as much as I can. They're assembling up on like a mountain of dirt that is located in that lot where the car fires were burning.

Q. Next to the fires, right?

A. At some point we got the boats draft water and it supplied a manifold and they started getting a few hose lines going. They got a tower ladder going. I'm not engaged in firefighter operations so much any more. I started watching the press, I started talking to the Chief. I made a few trips inside to use the phones to call here and to call my wife. There was no cell phone service down there. It was difficult to get a hard wire phone.

So there was -- the thing I needed a lot was communications and I don't have any really. Other than keeping the press at bay and asking the Chiefs if there is anything that I can do for them. I think Fellini, I remember at some point later in the day sort of takes control of this. I remember seeing guys from 65 engine that were working there that I know. It was just -- you are half dazed and half numb but I tried to get back to what my job is, which is press, so I'm keeping them at bay, but I'm there until like one o'clock in the morning. I was trying to get some communications back to here to my office. Talking with the Chiefs about what -- that's essentially it, the details, the fine details of everything that happened say from the afternoon on. I remember talking to some people.

Q. Did you ever make it back to the original command post where it was set up?

A. Other than that time that I went back for Roger Moore, no, because the second collapse destroyed that whole area. I mean if you look at pictures of when I was out, we all would have been killed if that had come down. I don't know about underground, if they would have been safe. But I know, I did at some point go back to where I was because I lost my cell phone when we all fled. I went through what I remember was a revolving door and it was like you know, thinking about holy shit, trying to run for your life and you are going through a revolving door. But I lost my phone, so at some point I went back there through that building to that exact location and that whole front of that building was crushed. It was a total collapse. It was all debris. I couldn't get back to that location the way I had come originally.

Q. How far was that from the north bridge? That was the north bridge?

A. Yes. That was all collapsed, collapsed into the building, you know, the interior of that building was crushed. I don't know at what point, how much debris there was or how much from the facade was collapsed. All I know is I traced my steps right back and at some point, I guess close to the entrance, was all crushed. I couldn't get back out that way.

So as I said, I mostly stayed on West and Vesey. At some point in the night I went all the way around the site to the location, which I guess would be -- I'm going to say would be the equivalent of somewhere around Dey Street or Cortlandt Street. Opposite where the Vista Hotel was and 3 World Trade Center. That location, you know.

Q. Vista is 3 World Trade Center?

A. Vista is 3 World Trade Center, okay. So that's where -- I'm thinking about that site. I don't know if you -- you know, there were various points on the site now that we are all aware of. That's the one between -- here's where I am. At some point I came back around. I came through I guess the Winter Garden or whatever, or maybe through 2. I came back, I guess, here. I guess it would be right here, which is opposite Dey Street, if you go all the way to the east.

I'm there at night and I remember throwing an ABC crew out that had that gotten in with Pataki. I told them to get out of there. They were with the Governor and I said it doesn't matter. You've got to get out of here. There is no press here. I remember seeing Brian Dixon from my office, who was also there. The press had all been pushed back to beyond Chambers Street, north of Chambers Street, and he had been with them up there. But I stayed at the site, just to -- the lack of communications was a problem for me, communicating with my office. I told them in several conversations to give nothing out. We had no information whatsoever for any of the media that were calling about it. Basically, I stayed on the site. I remember trying to -- I came back the next day and virtually did the same thing, stayed at that site and tried to communicate with my office. At some point I went back to see where my car was. It's covered with debris but it wasn't crushed or anything like that. I don't know. I mean the days ran in. I was there for,

I think three days. The next day I was there again. I would start working, trying to get hard line phones there. I talked to Chief Pfeifer about trying to set up a tracking system for bodies, Fire Department personnel. That was sort of the original thing that we had set up just so when we had confirmed deceased, that they were coming through him. He had an office set up on like the third floor in 3 World Financial Center. A lot of it - unfortunately, the days ran in together.

I remember that night talking to Chief Fellini, who kind of had control of the site I think that first night. I got involved in a couple of logistic things. People were coming in. They wanted to deliver food. I'm telling them go see the Red Cross. Another guy has got a truck with -- this is probably day two now.

You are more concerned with day one -- okay, so the -- that that's probably it for day one. But like I said, once the two of them had come down, I'm at that location. I remained for the most part at that location. I remember talking to some of the restaurants. I made contact at some point with the guy from Ratner's Hotel there and talked to him about logistics and phones. There were no phones. It was a big problem. I spent a lot of time trying to set up some kind of communication at the site to no avail.

But Dixon had the people to the north. I sort of stayed at the scene to sort of keep the press at bay, because we were concerned about pulling our people out and having them capture it and all that. I didn't want them to get that, to let them get something like that.

Q. I know you said you didn't have a handy talky, but do you remember hearing any kind of radio transmissions or handy talky transmissions while you were there?

A. Yes, I remember the Ladder 6 stuff. I remember, as a matter of fact, I was with - I seen - I remember seeing Danny May from 43 Truck, I think. And there was a group of men. There was discussion among Chief Visconti and Ingram and other Chiefs on the job who were west of Vesey there and they were discussing people trapped and -- it was Ladder 6. Someone wanted to try to get a crew over there to help and I remember them saying that they got them, they got them, Ladder 6.

And I remember a whole bunch of guys heading from where we were around the Winter Garden to that site between the two bridges. You know, through the Winter Garden, right. Again, I went up Dey Street to approach the site from the west there.

About 20, I believe there were 20 firefighters who went on that mission to try to help with Ladder 6. But I remember them coming back and being told they got them a short time later. So I think they dispatched a whole bunch of guys but the rescue attempt, I guess it had already been in -- the operation was kind of going on at that time. They sent all these extra guys, but I believe they were getting them out, as they were sort of assigned to go help out.

Q. Anything else?

A. Other than that, I didn't really have any conversations with too many people at the command post. You know, we were all standing there watching. We saw about 20 people jump. It was horrific. The sound of them hitting was like a gun being fired or something. Their bodies exploding or whatever. It was just really horrific. I guess we weren't, a lot of guys were assembling there. Thank god there weren't more guys being sent there. We would have lost more guys, you know.

So I really don't have -- one thing I left out, for the record I guess. The one thing, I talked to Ray Goldbach and Tom Fitzpatrick when I got there and I looked up at them and I said do we have a collapse potential here. I remember them saying no, they are made to withstand a hit from planes. But I guess none of us really thought. I don't know what that originated from.

Q. I don't think they figured on jet fuel.

A. Terrorism, yeah. A plane hit the tower, which is, I guess what everybody thought when they heard a plane hit the tower. It was not what they had in mind when they talk about a plane. It was built to withstand being hit by a plane, not by a plane being driven into the towers loaded with jet fuel. But that was the one conversation I had with anybody really at the command post. It occurred to me. I thought at least we had chance of a partial collapse, after some amount of burning time you know.

Q. You mean the top falling off?

A. Something like that. Actually my car, I parked it. I pulled up on one of these streets down here, maybe like, in other words, I'm going to guess it was somewhere near West Street. It was like the first left turn I could make. I don't think it said Rector Place here. There are other streets south of here. That's where I parked my car. I remember when I pulled it over, thinking to myself, shit, these things are big buildings, you know. I parked it close to West Street, then I pulled it over up the block. Something that struck me. Was I thinking about the building coming down? I certainly knew it would be bad and I thought we would have at least debris and stuff like that coming off of it, if not some partial collapse or something like that. So I pulled the car all the way up the block, and I was right. I mean just if the vehicles were closer to West Street, the damage. Mine was covered with about 3, 4 inches of that powdery, pulverized concrete, whatever it was, but it was not destroyed. Other vehicles up the block were damaged by the debris that fell that far. You know.

Q. Did you see any, as you were walking, did you see any plane parts or anything as you were walking up West Street or anything?

A. No, I saw them on the video, that it appeared there was some, but you don't really know where they were located on that video.

Q. What the --

A. The plane parts and such. Looked like there might be some plane parts in there, but I don't know where that was. I will get you a copy of that. As a matter of fact, my video unit, I will get you everything we have. Because they have been asking for all the footage from all the stations and stuff like that, you know, whatever we can get. We will give it to you. I guess that's it. Unless you have anything else. It was not a dramatic kind of thing. I was lucky I was able to -- I wasn't that close. I was able to get away without -- unlike all the guys that had no shot. That's my guilt complex.

Q. That's what a lot of people have.

A. Yes, because I could run and guys couldn't. If you were in there -- all right?

MR. CAMPBELL: Time is now 12 o'clock. The interview is over. Thank you very much.

MR. GRIBBON: Thank you guys.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

ROSARIO TERRANOVA

Interview Date: October 26, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. TAMBASCO: We are at Battalion 4 in the lounge, and the subject of the interview is Lieutenant Rosario Terranova, assigned to EMS Battalion 4.

The time is now 1330 hours.

BY MR. TAMBASCO:

Q. If you would be good enough to just tell us what happened.

A. Okay. Well, on the day of the events, I was actually still assigned to the Chief of Department's office, so my response to the incident actually was from headquarters, and I had been at work already. We were sitting -- I was sitting in my cubicle, and I heard Chief Ganci make a statement. You know, it was kind of like a screaming thing from his office. Said, "Come on, Danny. We gotta go right away. There's a plane that hit the Trade Center," and that, of course, was referring to Chief Nigro.

So at first, to be honest with you, in the office it was kind of -- people thought maybe he was full of shit, you know, he was kidding around, because he's like -- he was a jokster kind of guy, you know, but you could tell right away from the way he was moving around and people were starting to scurry that something was happening.

So I ran to the window. From headquarters you actually can see lower Manhattan, and, sure enough, you could see in the one tower there was this huge, you know, black void and smoke coming up, so we realized there was a serious issue, but, you know, at the time to be honest with you, nobody thought what was going on. We thought it was just some kind of fluke accident and a plane had hit. People started scurrying for stuff, but I ran right away to get Chief Gombo, because even though I was assigned to the chief of the department's office, something like this I wanted to get him involved right away, so I informed him of what was going on, and I suggested that we go together to the incident.

So we gathered up our stuff, and everybody was rushing down the elevator banks. We got into our cars in the garage. Then we kind of went over in this, like, convoy, maybe four or five of us that followed. We were following Steve Mosiello, who was Chief Ganci's executive assistant, and Chief Ganci was in the car with him, Chief Nigro, Commissioner Feehan was in line with Commissioner Fitzpatrick, a couple of the other chiefs were there from upstairs. We all proceeded over the Brooklyn Bridge. On the way over, we could see a lot of debris and stuff falling from the buildings. When we got down into lower Manhattan, we swung around City Hall Park, around Park Row, and then headed across to Church Street. From there we broke off a little bit.

Most of the convoy began to head down Vesey Street. Chief Gombo and I swung south on Church Street, and we wound up parking on Fulton Street, heading east about a hundred feet east of Church Street. The reason we chose to stop there is because there was a significant ambulance presence there.

We noted several voluntary hospitals there, and we saw some treatment going on the sidewalk. We decided that we would initially stop there and see what we could assess. We really didn't have any information. It was very early on in the incident.

We came to find out afterwards, in looking at the unit histories, that we actually were on scene within six minutes of the initial call to 911. There was no reporting place or command post that had been established yet, so we opted to stop there and at least get some kind of idea of what we were looking at. After we parked the car, we initially ran into a crew from New York Downtown Hospital. I don't know who they were, but they were beginning to treat patients on the sidewalk.

There was a couple of patients who were walking wounded, a few patients that couldn't ambulate. I remember clearly the sea of people coming out of this lobby, you know, and all we could do was encourage them to just to keep going, keep moving away from the incident site. You know, people were asking us, "What's happening? What's going on?" We really just didn't have any time. Just respectfully as we could, told them keep moving, keep moving north, just get away from the incident site.

We remember saying over the radio make sure everybody was their helmets on, this is a hard hat op, because we were starting to get hit with stuff. We didn't know what it was. It was mostly just soot and paper, but, you know, it wasn't really clear what was happening. About this time we heard like a little bit of an explosion. I guess it was secondary to the crash that had occurred, and we immediately told everybody let's retreat. We tried to take patients with us, but those who couldn't ambulate, we had no choice but to leave them there. We actually retreated across the street back by the cemetery, which is right on the corner of Church and Fulton. It's part of St. Paul's Church there. We had some debris falling from the building, some larger objects and some objects with mass. Those patients that were unable to ambulate, they, unfortunately, became further victimized by the event. After that initially stopped, we made the decision to bring that treatment area back over to this side of the street, the east side of the street, and to have people as best they can use real extreme caution.

I remember running into two people from headquarters there, which was Lieutenant Medjuck and Captain Olszewski, who are both assigned to the EMS command, and Chief Gombo gave them direction to assume the responsibilities for that area, and he was going to assume command of the EMS operation. At my suggestion to him, we began to head west of the incident down Vesey Street.

We had gotten information that the fire command post was being established in the lobby of the No. 1 tower, so I expressed to him, and I thought because of the magnitude of the incident that's where he needed to be. That's where all the fire super people would be, the super chiefs would be, so that would be the best position.

Anyway, we left Captain Olszewski at that location. We left our vehicle where we had initially parked it, and we began on foot to move forward, and we started accepting radio transmissions as command for the event.

We had established a staging area on the west side of West Street at Vesey Street being the cross. We instructed additional ambulances responding in that they should take that location as their staging location. We also ran into Captain Stone from Battalion 8 at that location, and Captain Stone was going to begin to coordinate those efforts. He wasn't necessarily assigned the role of staging, but it was his job to assume that an officer was placed in charge of that, and that began to come to fruition.

Chief Gombo and I began to proceed into the lobby of No. 1 tower, which is where fire had established a command position by the side command center. It was clear on the west side of the building that the damage, physical damage, to the building wasn't as extensive as it was on the east, but still we had a lot of debris, visible flames. We -- our path was, you know, was obstructed by some bodies that were on the scene. I remember saying to Chief Gombo how horrific a scene this really was. You know, there was a couple of spots where we recognized by clothing that there were body parts, but we couldn't even recognize male or female. You know, it was just horrific.

So anyway, we decided to proceed into the lobby, which is where they had established the command post, and it was a very hazardous location to begin with. I mean, there was a lot of glass on the floor. A lot of the window panes from the lobby had been already broken. I can't tell you if they were broken intentionally by fire personnel for venting or if they were broken as a result of the incident, but we began to establish command there.

We saw many people there. We saw Father Judge there. We saw Commissioner Feehan there. We saw Chief Turi there. We saw -- who else? I'm trying to think who else was there. Anyway, if I come back to the names, I'll try to remember, but there was a significant number of people there. It was clear that that's where the initial command post was being established. We began to -- we began to speak and discuss about the long term, how we're going to attack this operation. I could see the mezzanine level -- I don't know if you are familiar with where that lobby was, but there was a mezzanine level above you, and then there was like a vestibule in there that you could go up a set of escalators to the plaza or into 6 World Trade Center. We could see at the mezzanine level there was a significant number of people being evacuated out into the plaza area from the mezzanine. I commented to Chief Gombo I thought it was so amazing how people were really moving, you know, very organized, very coordinated effort.

We remained at that location for a little while. Chief Basile came in, and he was there. They began to discuss strategies and what was going to occur. A couple of times really we were frightened by what we thought were additional explosions. We kept hearing these large boom, boom, and actually what it turned out to be -- what it said in the Times, it actually was people jumping and hitting on the glass awning that was outside the lobby there. We then decided that -- Chief Ganci had left, and he was actually establishing a fire command post across the street on West Street, south of Vesey Street. I would say the best landmark would be in front of the Winter Garden or, actually if you look at the Winter Garden dome, it would just be almost just north of that spot. There was -- the best way to explain it is there was a driveway to a loading dock to that building, and it was established there at that location.

Q. Which I guess probably was the American Express Building.

A. That's what it is, right. There was a loading dock off of West Street for 3 World Financial Center, which is the American Express Building, and that is just north of the Winter Garden, and that's exactly where it was. This pedestrian bridge that existed on the map, if you look at it as reference, just north of that is where this driveway was. We could -- so that's where we decided to proceed, we would move to that location, and we did so.

We did so, I would say, probably about ten minutes after Chief Ganci had left to go there, and still at this point the second building, the second building had yet to be affected, and there was some question about this. There was a video that I was privy to see, which is being kept confidential in nature, held by the chief of safety, and it was taken by an amateur photographer who was doing some training with the first battalion. I don't know if you are aware of the tape, but anyway it's really helped me -- seeing that helped me get this frame of reference. I'm very sure of my times on this, you know.

So anyway, Chief Gombo and I decided to proceed out of the building. We left Chief Basile at the building to coordinate resources there. Now, we moved out of the building back across West Street. We kept on staging again to see what was occurring. We had a few people that were standing south of Vesey Street. We corrected that situation, moved everybody north again on Vesey Street where we wanted to stage, and, you know, our mentality about staging is always -- especially now, since we're working with the Fire Department, to get further away, because we know that they're coming with additional resources, and we don't want to lose any assets behind them.

So again we moved them, and then we proceeded to the command post. Now, at the command post, I remember seeing Chief Ganci there, Steve Mosiello, Chief Burns. I remember speaking with Commissioner Feehan. Commissioner Fitzpatrick was there, and it's funny, because Commission Feehan asked me, you know, what about the patient count, how many patients we got? I said to him, "Listen, Commissioner, with all due respect, it's a lot." You know, and we kind of giggled. He said, "I know, I know, but I have to ask the question." It's kind of sad to me because it was almost in a jovial way. I mean, that was his personality. Anyway, we began to establish our situation now, and we heard a little -- all of a sudden we hear a huge explosion, you know, and in looking up, you could see the second tower being hit by this second plane, you know, and it was at that -- it was at that very moment that everybody there realized that we were -- you know, that this was clearly a planned act that this is --

Q. No accident?

A. This was no accident, you know, and it was a terrible feeling to say, oh, my God, you know, this is something that's really bad that's happening. You know, just on a personal note you started to think, I wish I could call somebody or do something, but there was no time for that kind of stuff. We had to put that away.

So we initially began discussing the need for resources, retreat of resources, where we could move people to, if we had to. What are going to be some of our evacuation plans? We started to discuss what further acts we could anticipate. Is there something else that's going on in other places of the city? Should we anticipate additional problems down here in the financial center?

It seems like it happened very fast. I mean, the time went actually longer than that, when you're involved in it, I'm sure you understand that, you know, it seems like these things are happening, and there's no real time frame.

While we were discussing this, I remember hearing Chief Ganci say, "Oh, shit," you know, so we all looked up, and you could hear this rumble coming. We looked up at the south tower, which is the No. 2 tower, and all of a sudden we began to see like a pancake. I mean, it's as simple as that. If you could imagine you had two cards in your hand, and you just clapped your hands, and they just closed on each other. That's what it looked like, like a toy, and we began to see the pancake, boom, boom, boom, boom, boom, boom, boom, boom, one floor after another, as quick as you can imagine it.

At the time I was standing looking at the building in front of the fire command board. To my left was Chief Gombo and to my right was -- to my right front was Chief Ganci with his aide, Steve, and right directly to my left was Roger Moore, Lieutenant Roger Moore. Directly behind him to my right was Commissioner Feehan, so I remember Chief Ganci saying, "Go, go, go, go."

Everybody decided which way they were going to go. Some people went to the left. Some people went to the right. I decided -- I looked behind me, and I saw a few people were heading into this loading dock. The loading dock bay was actually open. I thought to myself, I don't think I could -- I don't think I can out run this, you know, and maybe I got a better chance getting into safety, so I said to Gombo, "Come on let's go."

I went about three steps, maybe three or four steps running, and I turned to see and he wasn't -- Gombo wasn't there. He was still kind of standing, looking at the building, so I ran back to him. I kind of grabbed him by the neck like a -- you know, the best way I can describe it is like a kitty cat. I grabbed him by the scruff of the neck, and I pulled him with me into this building.

When we got inside the bay, we could hear it getting louder. You know, it's getting loud, and it was getting dark, so I had to him -- you know, I said to myself, maybe we should -- you know, it's an odd thing, because even though you certainly were running for your safety, there is an odd curiosity, and you want to see it. You want to see what's happening, so everybody was run to go what they thought was safe, but still not getting as far away from the door as they probably should have. I said to myself, you know what, this is not how I want to check out, so I said let's go , and I grabbed Gombo. I was going to run down further into the bay, and then -- I don't know. It's very strange, but in the loading dock, right against the wall very close to the door was a white van, and it was just parked there, and I said, "All right. We are going to grab refuge behind this van."

We went to the back of the van, and we got down on the ground, and we heard this huge, thunderous, loud sound, and then it was completely dark and completely silent. It was like the sound of death. It was so strange, because there was all this commotion, and people screaming, run, run, run, go, go, go, and then I guess at the point -- at that point the debris hit the bay, and it was just complete silence, an eerie silence. I'd be amazed that people who were in that garage don't describe it the same exact way, that eerie silence. I took a second and realized -- I mean it was dark. We had a few lights down at the end of the garage, the end of the loading bay, but it was very dark.

I took a second to realize, okay, I'm not trapped. I can move everything. I had Gombo. I wouldn't let him go. I could feel his shirt. Then I went to take a breath, and all I got was dirt. It was at that point I said to myself, did you make a bad decision not running? Because now, you know, maybe you didn't get buried in this crap, but are you going to be able to breathe? Are you going to suffocate here?

But anyway, the long and the short of it is we took a second, and within a minute or so the dust started to settle a little bit. You could breathe through your clothes. People began to scream. I remember Jerry saying, "Ross," and I said, "Jerry." We had each other. He had a little flashlight. He had the flash on, and we were trying to see did we see anybody else. Then I thought to myself -- I thought of the thing about the '93 incident when they had this Ryder truck full of explosive, and now I realized how strange it was that this white van was parked in this loading dock. I started to think to myself, God, did we step into the wrong place here? So I said to Gombo, "Look, we gotta get out of here, because we don't know --" I didn't know the integrity of the building we were in, what fell on us, how much we're under, so we tried to go back and look, but it was too dusty. I couldn't see anything.

There was a couple of firefighters in the building, so we proceeded to the back. Everybody proceeded first to the back of the garage. We saw Terry Wynter there, who was from OEM. He was in the garage with us. I saw a couple of cops and, you know, Jerry started asking me "Where's Feehan? Where is Ganci?" We didn't see them, so we believed, him and I believed, that they were buried as a result of that. Then he said, "Where's Roger?" He thought Roger was behind us, and we couldn't find Roger either. So we just assumed that these guys had been buried.

Now, it was strange, because -- I'll get right back to where I am, but we didn't realize -- we didn't find out until Friday of that week that that's not where Ganci and Feehan perished. That was mostly because we spent so much time working at the scene the next three days, we didn't have any time to talk to anybody else and find out what really occurred. Anyway, they were able to evacuate by running. Then we also found out that -- we also found out from Roger that, in fact, he had injured his leg, actually both his legs, but he actually was in that garage. He actually made it in that garage. We felt -- or I can speak for myself -- Chief Gombo may say otherwise -- but I felt profoundly upset because, you know, it was afterwards that I found this out.

I thought, man, I abandoned him, you know. I should have gone back to him and looked for him, but, like we said, we didn't have SCBAs. It was very -- breathing was very poor in there, and we asked some firefighters to go back and see if anybody had survived that had been buried or trapped. It turned out that those firefighters are the guys who helped carry him out of that garage.

Q. Right.

A. Yes, so Roger, that's correct, so in a sense, I guess -- while I may feel personally bad for not doing it myself, I guess in a sense we sent somebody to help him, so there is some resolve there.

I'm sorry. I know I'm a little long winded, but I hope it will help you.

Q. Not at all.

A. We -- so we were in this little garage office, which I guess was intended for the attendant. There was a telephone there we were trying to get out on. We couldn't get an outside line. As a matter of fact, somebody called in looking for somebody, and Chief Gombo said to them, "Look, you know, he's not here, but if you can call somebody, tell them that there are people in this place, and we don't know if we have a way out."

Anyway, one of the firefighters that was in there decided that they would take the stairway to see if there was an access point above us. While he did that, we waited. We sealed the doors and put some towels down to try to lessen the smoke situation and the dust situation in the room we were in.

I would say maybe about five, ten minutes went by, and the firefighter came back to us and said, "Look, I found an access." We have to take a stairway about maybe two floors up, and then we needed to walk towards the back of the building, and then there was a door that emptied into the courtyard of the back of the building, 3 Financial on the west side of the building or directly against -- directly north of Battery Park by the water line.

Q. Right.

A. We were able to evacuate the building in that fashion. We got out of the building. There was debris and dust everywhere. If you need an explanation, the best way to try to describe it is take a vacuum bag that you should have changed two weeks ago.

Q. Right.

A. Then open it and just throw it up in the air. That's what it looked like, the dust and shit flying everywhere. So we said okay -- now that we're out, let's try to get on the radio and make some communication. We were able to get on the radio, let them know that we were all right, and try to get a status for the operation.

It was difficult to -- it was a difficult situation to try to get back in charge of, because we were out of commission for probably about 30 minutes.

Q. Right.

A. In our absence, things had already been going in place, so it seemed senseless to take that role back over. What we opted to do is we opted to try to move back towards the incident site and see who we could get ahold of.

Q. Right.

A. So we began to -- let me find my bearings here. We began to move -- yes, we began here on North End Avenue.

Q. Right.

A. We began to head up North End Avenue and then to Vesey.

Q. And then east across Vesey?

A. Then we tried to go east across Vesey. Now, what wound up happening was we encountered a lot of ambulance crews that were operating between 3 and 4 Financial Center, on Vesey Street, which is between West and North End Avenue.

On North End Avenue, north of Vesey Street, there's a hotel there. What we started to do is we established a treatment area in the lobby of this hotel. I'm sorry. The name escapes me, but we began to establish a treatment area in the lobby of this hotel off of North End Avenue. Like I said, there were crews operating here on Vesey Street, and there was some crews operating south of Vesey on North End Avenue, as well.

We actually met up with Chief Basile there. We met up with Chief Pascal there. Chief Gombo actually called a meeting with the chief officers there because we were unable to make any contact with Chief McCracken. We were -- we knew he was there, but we were unable to contact him. We weren't sure if he had perished in the incident. There was, of course, rumors flying all over the place, this one is dead, that one is dead, so we did our best to figure things out.

Chief Goldfarb was there with us. Chief Villani was there. What we decided to do is we decided that we would continue to maintain this treatment area. I suggested to Chief Gombo that there's going to have to be a spot where the agencies are going to start to get together, and the only logical place we could think of, given the proximity at the time of OEM to the incident, we didn't think that they would be at their offices in 7 World Trade Center. We decided that we needed to make our way to One Police Plaza, which is all the way on the east side of Manhattan. We thought that -- Chief Gombo and I said we're going to proceed over to that location. That was our initial plan, and right around this time again we had some commotion. We stopped our meeting, and we went out again where we were treating patients, and we were out on the street when we heard the rumble of the second tower collapsing. I remember specifically myself going up Vesey Street again towards --

Q. Eastbound?

A. Yes, heading eastbound up Vesey Street to try to wave people down. Come on, come on, let's go, let's go. There was one guy, he didn't want to leave his patient. I said, "Come on, you have to leave her. You gotta evacuate that location."

I remember seeing the rubble, seeing the rubble fall and actually start to chase down the street, and, you know, it's strange because you wouldn't expect -- you wouldn't expect debris to do that, but it literally traveled, like, you would see these movies with like a tidal wave that flows through the streets and hits down any path it can. It literally traveled that way. I began to retreat myself, begging people to come with me back onto North End Avenue. Then I took a position against the building on North End Avenue just north of Vesey Street.

Q. With the building between you and the --

A. Right, like, I put myself up against the building. I was -- I stayed as close to the edge as I possibly could, because I wanted to try to be able to grab people or just pull them off to the side, because I was afraid people would keep running straight and put themselves still in the middle of the road.

There was some people on the south of Vesey Street that refused to come over. They were fine where they were. Then, just like I described, there is this huge puff of dust to my left through Vesey Street, and then to my right through Murray Street. The percussion of it was so much it actually pulled me off the building, you know, so I can't -- there were a couple of people who I remember seeing on Vesey Street who I couldn't find again.

Q. Right.

A. Oh, I want to mention this. I forgot to mention this. Going back to the command post.

Q. Right, the original command post?

A. Original command post in front -- on West Street. One of the people who I had lost sight of was Sam Harris. He's an EMT. He's Chief Digg's aide. He happened to have been there with Captain Pincus that day. He was working with us to start some communication, and he broke off from us to head up into the Winter Garden building to try to make some communications. It was at that point when that building collapsed.

Now, I bring it up only because I met up again with Sam Harris and accounted for him back at the hotel at North End Avenue.

Q. Right.

A. So we -- he at least was accounted for.

One of the people we couldn't account for at that time was Chief Basile's aide. His name escapes me, but I know we were looking for him. We couldn't account for him. He was later accounted for, thank goodness.

Anyway, after the second building collapsed, here we were again consumed with this debris shield, this dust shield, you know. There was some people who had taken refuge underneath ambulances. But anyway, we started to recoup things a little bit, and I said, okay, now we really have to think about what we're doing. So we were back in the lobby, and actually stepped away from the windows. Everybody started to get very paranoid of what was going to happen next. We were establishing our plans for the operation, who was going to be responsible for what sectors, and all of a sudden I noted -- I saw a lot of cops running north past the building. Even some firefighters, and I was too curious, saying, "What are these guys running from?" So I went outside I said, "What's the story?" They told us that as a result of the collapse, the building that we were in had had a gas leak breach on the opposite side of the building. So I went back in, and I said to Chief Gombo, "Look, I think we need to -- have to just abandon our operation here and move everybody north as far north as we can and get a handle on this," because we need to make sure all our people are safe. Of course he was very frustrated at the time, too, and he said to me, "How far north do you think we should go?" I remember specifically telling him I think we should walk north until you don't see any stuff any more. Just keep going north.

So anyway we decided -- we started proceeding north on North End Avenue with a convoy of personnel. It was about Murray Street that we actually encountered Chief Callan, fire Chief Callan. He was --- I don't mean any disrespect to him, but he was completely dazed and out of it. He was just in total shock from the event, just walking in circles, you know. I grabbed him, I said, "Chief Callan, are you all right? Are you okay." He just said to me, "Hi, how you doing?" I said "Chief, come on. Why don't you walk with us. We have to start walking forward. Why don't you get all your people to come with us. We have to move north."

That kind of snapped him a little bit out of it, and he started to give the order to his people, let's move north, let's move north, so we did. We moved, I would say, a couple of blocks. I can't tell you exactly where we stopped. Probably somewhere around Warren Street. We began to -- there was a police officer from the Police Department chief of department's office, who actually had a gator out. They must have had them at headquarters and used them to transport people over. We explained to them what we were doing, and he said, "Come on, chief, I'll take you over," so we went, Chief Gombo and I, Chief Goldfarb and his aide. We went to One Police Plaza.

When we got there, we went upstairs to the command center. The command center had already been completely activated. I mean, there was a flurry of activity going on, and it was there for the first time that we began to see some images on the television of what had occurred. I remember saying to Chief Gombo what a good decision it was to come there, because it was -- we now had the landline capability. We were able to call headquarters. We were able to establish some interagency communications. We still didn't have a fire rep with us, but anyway we decided this would be a good spot. We made contact with headquarters. We made contact with fire operations to say that this is where we are, and we think it would be an excellent idea to have a fire rep there.

The choice to bring Chief Goldfarb with us was a superb choice, because he had a vast knowledge of mutual aid and interagency communications. He was able to start establishing contact with FEMA and with state EMS and begin to put plans in place immediately for mutual aid.

He also had a very intricate knowledge of the Oklahoma City bombing. So he was very influential on telling us this is what we should anticipate in 24 hours. This is what we can anticipate in 48 hours. I tell you, I got to give him a lot of credit. He was a hundred percent on the money, because, sure enough, he was right. I mean, the amount of supplies that came in. Just for example, as an insight, one of the first things he said to us that we had to consider doing is find warehouse space.

At least, we both looked at him, like, how could you think about that now, and he said, "Trust me. You are going to want to think about that because in two days you are not going to be able to move." He was a hundred percent correct. I mean, this battalion here, Battalion 4, simply by nature of its proximity and the logistics of the station became an absolute warehouse. It wasn't till last week that we just got rid of almost 200 cases of food and clothing that we sent to shelters because we had no need for it. We were completely overwhelmed by generosity.

So anyway, we spent a large portion of the rest of the day, I would say realistically we were there. We got there around one o'clock, and we spent the day there until about ten o'clock. About ten o'clock we decided that we would --we wanted to head back over and see what was happening. Captain Connelly, who was on duty, he just came on duty. He was sent to the trade center, to the command post at One Police Plaza to take over for EMS liaison. We decided we would rotate. We built a schedule for continuous manpower there for staffing. Chief Gombo and I, along with Chief Goldfarb and his aide, decided to head over. We decided we'd walk over on foot, and we were able to do that.

First thing we did was we wanted to go and see what kind of condition, if at all, Chief Gombo's car was in. Because that was our mode of transportation. As it turned out, amazingly, because of the way the building fell, his car was not hit by debris, although the driver's window had been broken. Of course, the car was filthy and dusty inside, but other than the driver's window, we started the car, and it was fine. Interestingly enough, there were a lot of other cars with the windows broken like that. We thought it odd that just one window would have been broken, and we surmised later on from speaking to people that actually it was not broken as a result of the incidents. It was broken by people after the buildings fell to try to get in and get some fresh air, which I suppose it's a small price to pay for a window.

Anyway, once we realized the car was all right, we left it there. We were able to get it out. We had to come over some hose lines and stuff, but there was a path to get through. It was filthy in the streets. There was inches and inches of dust and muck. By the time we had gotten there, of course both the buildings had fallen. This one building -- I'm trying to describe exactly which one it was. I guess it was 5 World Trade Center had kind of been gutted out just like a picture out of a movie. You wouldn't even believe it.

So we started to proceed north on Church because, of course, you know, the command center -- by the time we were done with this, the EMS command post had been established at Chambers Street and West Street. That's actually across from Stuyvesant High School. Ironically, that's where we remained for several weeks after the incident, as far as the command post was concerned. We began to walk up Church Street in an attempt to make our way over to West Street. We were going to go down Vesey Street, but it was completely blocked by debris.

Then we decided we'd stay north of Chambers Street. We ran into a couple of different people we knew. I ran into this guy, we call him Yack. His name is Jimmy Yakamovich. He's a fire captain. He was a good friend of Chief Ganci's. Everybody knows Yack. Most people know him by now.

Anyway, we ran into him, and he was there. He was there in some somebody else's bunker gear and helmet, and he was telling me -- we were talking about -- he goes, you know -- you know, Ganci is dead and Feehan is dead. They can't find Burns or Barbara, or -- you know, the list just went on and on, Fanning. It was hard to believe. I mean, Fanning, and Downey. I mean, these guys who had all but made the department in the last 40 years, all of them gone in one shot. I mean, people began to think about how we going to move on from here, you know. We were glad to hear at the time we knew Nigro was okay, Cassano was okay. I knew Callan was okay, because I saw him myself, although physically okay at least. So we -- you know, we wished him well. We made our way over to Chambers and West Street. That's where we ran into -- Chief McCracken actually was there. He looked beat up, but he was in good shape. He was in complete command, as always, of what was going on with EMS. He had established a very good plan about how we were going to do things. He began to say to Chief Gombo, at least for the next few days we need to -- him and I need to -- him and I meaning Chief Gombo and Chief McCracken need to be on this rotating schedule. One of them always needs to be there. So we decided that we would -- Chief Gombo and I would head home.

It took us about midnight by this decision. We would head home and then come back in the morning to relieve him. Chief McCracken would stay own, and then we would go on, like, this twelve-hour thing for the next few days. So we did. We made our way back to the car, and we headed home. That particular night I stayed by Chief Gombo. We went home for a couple of hours, and we headed back in on the 12th.

So that's my recollection of September 11. I mean, I have some other stuff that we did subsequent to that, but, I mean, it doesn't --

Q. No, that's pretty much -- other than anything else you may just want to add. I mean, you know, feeling wise or anything like that, that you'd like to have added into this, that's -- I can't ask for much more detail than you have given me.

A. Well, I tried my best to lay it out, because, I mean, it's helpful for me to talk about it. I mean, it was difficult -- it was a difficult week, you know,. I mean, a lot of stuff went on to establish things there. You know, in the subsequent days, we worked with Jersey City Medical Center, who had lent us a command post to use.

Q. Right.

A. Something that should be on the record, should be that EMS needs to have a command post so we can operate the long-term operation. I mean, we used to have the field com, however inappropriate that vehicle might have been, but we still had it. The truth be known, fire communications has vehicles, but they are fine for fire communications. When we need to set up something like this, we need to go outside and say could you help us, because we don't have -- and that's a kind of silly situation. But that's a personal feeling, not a professional one. We took the time to go to the ME's office and see their operation there. I have to tell you, it's horrific.

They were doing -- I mean literally doing autopsies right on the street underneath tents. I give a lot of credit to the guys who worked sectors in the next coming days. One of the hardest sectors to establish was the morgue sector. It was hard because there were a lot of -- tensions were running high, let's just put it that way.

I mean, we had some run-ins -- when I say we, I mean Chief Gombo and I. We basically were married at the hip for the remainder of the week, you know. We had some run-ins with Chief Butler and Chief Cruthers, which were later ironed out. Of course, they were just nothing more than people being so profoundly saddened by what had occurred. It was important to us, and, of course, it was important to fire suppression, as well. We needed to establish a very clear, well-maintained morgue sector. So that one, of course, we could account for all our lost, both PD, fire and EMS, but mostly so that we could ensure that the remains of the Fire Department personnel would be returned as quickly as possible to their families. That was something that was difficult to do, but I'm proud the way that worked out.

And, you know, we went on. I mean, things have somewhat come down to normal at this point, or at least started to establish a long-term basis, you know. We -- right after the event, we established 24-hour coverage of headquarters and a staffing person at OEM a staffing person at police headquarters, and, you know, staffing people at the command center. For the first week or so everybody -- you couldn't pull people away if you tried. Everybody wanted to be there. They couldn't do enough, but it had to come to a point where you had a decision to make that this is going to be a long-term operation. This stuff is not going to go away tomorrow. The debris is just not going to clear. We are going to have to be into this for six months or a year and still you need to establish a long-term plan because you can't run out of people in six weeks, and that's where we were headed.

So to our credit -- I mean, I think that things are proceeding okay now. I mean, I think it's good that people are volunteering to do overtime down there, and that the 911 system is back in place the way it was, although, in my opinion, of course, I don't know how much -- how long you could ask people to do overtime in that kind of scenario. I think it's a very difficult thing to do.

I mean, I have my ideas about how we could do it also, but we will leave it at that. I'm glad to -- in a sense, I'm glad to have survived it and be able to contribute to this collection of information. I think it's important to document historically what's happened in the department.

You know, from my perspective, I've encouraged everybody I know to speak to you about this, to speak to investigators about this. You know, there's an unfortunate stigmatism that comes with your office and your organization and, you know, what are they looking for? Are they looking to fire people because they put in for comp. packages and they weren't there.

I mean, of course, you know, to be honest with you, if people are performing inappropriately, they need to be discussed with it, but I -- so they don't expect that that's the meat and potatoes of this investigation. I don't -- I didn't approach it that way. I hope my information has been informative to you.

Q. It certainly has been, and just keep in mind that -- actually think about it 30 or 50 years from now when somebody wants to look back and this and get more of the personal stories.

A. You know, I tell you why I think it's a good idea, I'm offering these things up, because maybe it will come up for further discussion.

One of the things we used to at EMS prior to the merger, we used to do post incident summary reports. This was something that Chief Cross was a stickler for when he was the chief of operations for EMS. Any time we had a big incident -- I mean a big -- certainly not relative to this, a big, you know, a plane crash, a building clamps, along those lines, we always take the time to do a post incident critique. What we would do is we would print the CAD and gather all the ACRs and create a time line and a table of organization and speak to those in charge and have narratives written, and this information would be put in chronological order and stored on paper so that we can learn from the lessons we had. I think back on the World Trade Center event, which is an event that we did not do a post-incident summary about, largely because of the magnitude.

Q. Right.

A. But I think back on that event, working in operations as I did, and working with the chief of department's office as the correspondence liaison, I received on many occasions inquiries from people who wanted to learn from our department. It was a standard joke when anybody would call about the '93 bombing they would be switched immediately to Chief Seretta, because Chief Seretta was one of the command officers. Then when Chief Seretta retired, they switched this person immediately to Chief Burns because Chief Burns was also one of the ranking fire chiefs -- but unfortunately there are no more rank and file chiefs that were in '93. All their information, and history and expertise has been lost. That's a real shame, so I hope that -- I hope that this will pave the way for other future considerations for reports like that when we have these types of -- it's important history, and you're doing an important thing here.

That's all I have.

Q. That's about it, Ross. I thank for you the info. It certainly was quite detailed.

A. I hope it's been helpful to you. Thanks a lot, Michael.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

DEPUTY COMMISSIONER LYNN TIERNEY

Interview Date: October 29, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RIGNOLA: Assigned to citywide special investigations unit. I'm here with my partner, Cliff Krug. It's October 29, approximately 1345. I'm here to interview Deputy Commissioner Tierney about the events that happened on September 11, 2001.

Q. Commissioner, would you like just to tell me how you became aware of the fire and how you got there and what you might have seen?

A. I saw the first plane go into the tower on television. I was at home, and I was getting ready to come in to the World Trade Center. I had an 11:00 appointment on the 67th floor of the World Trade Center, tower number one.

So I saw the first plane go in on television. I called Ray Goldbach and said there's a plane into the Trade Center. Then I said I'm going in there.

So I got in my car, and I came -- I live in Brooklyn in Park Slope. So I started to go down Ninth Street, and I was going to turn right onto Fourth Avenue, because I figured it would be better for me to go in over the Brooklyn Bridge, because I would be trapped in traffic if I tried to go through the tunnel. Then Rescue 2 came by me on Ninth Street. So instead I tucked in behind them. I went straight down to the Battery Tunnel in behind Rescue 2.

We got about four-fifths of the way through the tunnel and we were stopped in traffic. They had an emergency lane. We went against traffic in the north tube of the tunnel, or it might be the west tube. I don't know. It's the side of the tunnel.

We went against traffic in the lane. We got about four-fifths of the way through the tunnel. Officers were in the tunnel for the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority trying to pull traffic out. At this time it was probably -- I think it was about maybe 7 to 10 minutes after 9:00, because I had just seen the plane go in and then we got stuck there.

My AM radio worked in the car, so I was listening to the AM radio. We sat in traffic and we didn't move and we didn't move. Eventually two members of Rescue 2 got off the back of their rig and came to my car and stood at the side of my car.

I can't identify them. I may be able to identify them at some point later if I see close-up pictures of them. I'd like to identify them. I'd like to know who they were. But everybody had full equipment on. They had their hoods on. So it was a little hard to tell who they were. It wasn't somebody I was immediately familiar with.

So they were actually standing by my car at the time that we heard the radio broadcast that said that there was a second plane into tower number two. So I think that puts the time at about 9:17. I think that's approximately when the second tower got hit. I'm not sure.

So at any rate, they just -- those two guys got back on the rig, and the traffic inched forward a little bit. Then I looked in my rearview mirror and I saw firefighters coming through the tunnel. It was the members of Squad 1. Their rig was stuck in traffic. I couldn't see it, it was so far back. It must have been at least four or five vehicles behind me.

One by one each member of Squad 1 came by my car. They're my local fire house. They knocked on the car. They signalled me. They said hello. Lieutenant Mike Esposito and Dave Fontana went by. I recognized him.

What they did was approach through the tunnel. They came on either side of my car. They were wearing full Scott packs. They were fully equipped. They had their tools with them, as I recall. They rolled up onto the walkway.

Underneath there's a railing, and then there's a space underneath the bottom part of the railing. They had to sort of roll up on that to get up on the walkway because they had their tanks on and they couldn't just crawl. That's how I know they had their tanks. Members of their company have asked me if they had their equipment and I know they did because I saw it.

So then Mike Esposito, the Lieutenant, stopped at my car and said hello to me. I wished him good luck. He told me that he wanted me to be careful and take care of myself and to make sure I wore my helmet when I got in there. I said I would.

Then he walked forward. He walked beyond the rescue rig, probably, I'd say, maybe three or four cars. At that point the traffic broke and we had a clear shot to get out of the tunnel. So the members of Squad 1 boarded Rescue 2 and they rode in to the scene on Rescue 2.

I believe their rig, as I said, came in behind us. As we came out of the tunnel, we proceeded straight up West Street right behind Rescue 2. I came in right behind Rescue 2. We turned on Liberty Street and Rescue 2 pulled up a little bit more north than I did.

Q. You made a left?

A. We made a left, went across the West Side Highway to Liberty Street. Rescue 2 pulled up here, and there is a hydrant right here. I backed off so we didn't block the hydrant. So I was actually right back here. I was probably actually three-quarters of the way up the street. There was a taxi loading zone there. Rescue 2 pulled up a little bit.

Q. So that was between West Street and South Avenue?

A. Correct. It was just north of the pedestrian bridge but -- that's where we pulled in.

So then I got out of my car. The members of Rescue 2 were getting their equipment. I got out of my car and put stuff in my back seat. I went into my trunk, and I got a jacket that identified me and got my radio. I did not take a helmet.

I started to walk across the street. I shut my trunk. They were already moving across the street, Rescue 2 was. We started to walk across the street into the lobby of building number one. So we had to walk across the divide and then we came underneath the awning -- it's not an awning. It's a big super structure out in front of tower number one.

As we were coming across there, I literally stepped across body parts and airplane landing gear and airplane parts as I was coming across the street.

Q. This is at building one?

A. This is walking across -- I walked up West Street and walked across to building number one.

Q. Rescue 2 and Squad 1, did they go into building one too?

A. Yes, I believe that they did. I have to say, in all honesty, I can't place Squad 1 there. A member of Rescue 2 put his arm around me as I was coming across the street and told me to be careful because there were people jumping.

I can't place with a great deal of surety Rescue 2 in the lobby of that building. But I believe Squad 1 came with them across. However, I don't know, maybe the rig pulled up right behind us and maybe they went back to the rig to get some equipment. Maybe they went someplace else. I'm not sure. But I think they came in right behind us.

So I went into building number one. I walked through the window, walked through the door, walked through the broken window to building number one. The first person that I saw that I recognized was the Commissioner. I spoke to him. I spoke to Chief Feehan.

Before joining the Fire Department, I worked for the Port Authority as the public affairs director. I was there the last time the building blew up. So I knew all the guys from the Port Authority that were there. I spoke to several of them, including Doug Corpela and Mike Hurley, the fire safety director. We went behind into the fire command center back there.

Q. On the first floor?

A. It's right there. It's right in the lobby. When you come in the lobby, there's a desk and stuff right there, right facing you in the lobby. If you went over to the left, there was a fire command center station. We were all in front of the fire command station.

As I say, so many people from the Fire Department were people that I remember seeing and being with like the Commissioner, Bill Feehan and Tom Fitzpatrick.

At some point police officers came in and said that they had a confirmed report of a third plane coming into the building.

Q. (Inaudible.)

A. No, (inaudible).

They said we have a report of a third plane, everybody out, you've got to move everybody out. Chief Hayden came in here. They had command boards set up. We had command stations set up. Chief Hayden came in here and had a discussion with somebody. I don't know who it is. I think it's probably Joe Callan, but I can't -- I know that from other people telling me that. I didn't recognize him that day or I don't know that.

But I did see Pete Hayden. Pete Hayden said we've got to move this command post out of here. There's a report of a third plane. We don't know what's going on here. At which point Bill Feehan, Tom Fitzpatrick and I went to find a place where we could move a new command post.

Q. This was all before tower two came down?

A. This is all before tower two came down.

So Bill Feehan, Tom Fitzpatrick -- Tom Von Essen walked away from us. I believe he walked straight out the windows and straight across the street to West Street, over to these other buildings. Bill Feehan, Tom Fitzpatrick and I walked through the lobby of building number one, up the stairway which was an escalator, which was off, into the pedestrian walkway. We walked across the pedestrian walkway.

I said to Commissioner Feehan is this a good idea to be in here with these bodies falling around us? He said probably not. We stepped it up. We kind of -- we were walking very quickly. We weren't running, but we were walking very quickly through this walkway.

Three-quarters of the way through, we met some security people from Merrill Lynch. We said you better get out of here, and they said no. We're with the building. We said you better get out of here, you better just move back, get everybody out of here and just move back. So they did.

Then we went down the steps into the Winter Garden, and we came out into the corner of the Winter Garden, right over here. We went down the steps and came over to this corner. Bill, Tom and I stopped and said, you know, this is not going to work as a command -- we can't think about putting it here with all this glass. It was pretty obvious of what was happening outside in terms of people jumping. I don't know if somebody could make it that far to us, but clearly debris could fall.

So we exited the building, the three of us. We walked along the back here and stopped about here in the corner by the corner of North Cove.

Q. By the Merrill Lynch Building?

A. Yeah, the three of us. We just stopped there. This is the Trade Center. The scene in front of us, both buildings were fully engulfed, the top floors. I said to Bill, you know, I can't believe this. Now what's going to happen here? Bill was just very concerned. We kept walking. We walked right straight through here and walked through the gardens here and came up the stairwell and came back out to Liberty Street. We walked across this lawn, back north to, I guess we were just on the lawn here.

We came right back up through to where they eventually set up a command post. We found where they were. In the driveway that went back down into the garage, into the underground garage. Chief Ganci was there. I saw Timmy Stackpole. I saw Ray Downey. I saw Bill Feehan, Tom Fitzpatrick and my aide Paul.

Q. They were all in front of The Winter Garden?

A. No, this was all right where they set up the command post. Right where they had had -- they had set up. They had moved the command post from the lobby of number one while we were walking around. They set it up it right here, and it was on the edge of the driveway. You know there's a driveway that goes down in there. I can point it out. It's right about here.

Q. The Merrill Lynch building?

A. Right.

So also at this time Dr. Kelly raised me on the radio and said where are you and then she said she was in ten and ten. I told her we were directly across from the canopy of number One World Trade Center. That we were setting up a command post there and she said I'm going to come there. I said okay, that's where we are. She said who's with you? And I told her who was with me.

Then my aide Paul was here. I saw him at the command post. So he came over and said what do you need, boss. I said we should probably get helmets out of the car. I had everything in the car and the car was just parked right there.

Q. On Liberty Street?

A. On Liberty Street.

You know, when you think of the time, when I heard the second plane go into the tower in the tunnel, so now all this time has passed. We took this huge long walk. We came back here. Paul went to my car, put some equipment in the car, got some equipment out of the car, came back to me.

I gave Tom Fitzpatrick my helmet. He didn't have a helmet. I gave him mine. I figured I was going to be doing press stuff or something. I didn't need it as much as he did. We were all still standing here.

At this point John McLaughlin, who is the deputy director of OEM, came over and said -- to the Commissioner -- Father Delendick was here too. Father Delendick was extremely concerned about the men who were staging back here. There was a huge pile of people staging here. That's where I saw Timmy Stackpole they were waiting to be ordered in. Father Delendick was very concerned about them witnessing people jumping, because at that point it was quite graphic.

Q. (Inaudible.)

A. So at any rate he -- John McLaughlin came over and said the Mayor wanted to see the Commissioner to do a press briefing and they were going to do it at Park Place and Broadway, which is right here.

So the Commissioner, Ray Goldbach and John McLaughlin started over that way. I said to Paul, we might as well go with them because I figured I was of no use over here. So we walked this way.

Q. On Park Place?

A. Onto West Street. We walked right here to the corner of West and Vesey.

Q. That's where I was. That's where I saw you.

A. Okay. So right here at West and Vesey. I met up with the senior officials from the Port Authority, Chief Bill Hall, Jeff Green, who's the chief counsel, and Chris Ward, who's the chief public relations guy.

Because I had been press spokesperson for the Port Authority before, I said to the Commissioner I'll catch up with you at Park Place and Broadway. I'll go this way with them. I'll find out what they have.

To the best of my knowledge, he and Ray continued up this way to Barclay. I started this way with Paul and those three guys from the Port Authority.

Q. (Inaudible.)

A. No, he went towards Barclay. We turned on Vesey. I left him at that point because Paul and I were here.

Were you there?

Q. I was right at Vesey and West because I remember seeing you. I saw the Commissioner go past Vesey.

A. Right. So we went this way and we were right here, right at this corner of Washington and Vesey, when that building fell.

Q. That's number two, building number two?

A. Building number two. We started to hear this rumble and luckily there was a loading dock. We just dove into the loading dock. The whole thing came -- you know, the whole thing came down. People crowded towards the back of the loading dock and they were trying to shove into Broadway.

I went up the steps of the loading dock. Everybody was running. We went into this doorway that was off the loading dock that led into the building, but the door was locked. There was a cop at the edge of the door. Everyone was shoving and shoving and shoving into it. So I stepped back. I didn't want to be shoved in there too much. The Port Authority police inspector had his arm around me. We were pushed up against the wall. Paul was right behind me.

Then the building came down. It went completely back and the entire space completely filled with debris. Not debris, not big pieces of concrete or anything but stuff.

Q. When you left the command center, Chief Feehan was there?

A. Feehan, Ganci.

(Radio interruption.)

A. So we went in the loading dock. Everything came down. Everything turned black. All this stuff came down. It was totally black in there. I called out for Paul, who was near me. We inched our way down the steps. We couldn't see anything. You could barely breathe. I'm sure you experienced the same thing.

So then we got low and eventually stuff lifted enough so we could make our way down the stairs. There were big pieces of equipment and different stuff on the floor. We managed to get around that. Then we made our way towards the front of the loading dock.

Q. The loading dock was --

A. The loading dock was in the basement of seven. It was on the street level of Seven World Trade Center. They had set up as a little triage area.

So we eventually made our way up. There were like three bays of this loading dock. We inched our way along. You couldn't tell if you were inside or outside because it was pitch-black.

Q. I'm sorry, you were with?

A. Me and Paul from the Fire Department. There were no other Fire Department personnel that I'm aware of.

We eventually made our way out and made our way up Washington Street. We went back. We were calling for people to follow us because we knew we had the way out, because we could see a little bit lighter air around. I didn't see people following us. I don't know if people followed us. We go outside and we saw no one in the street. We saw nothing. It was like a snowstorm had happened.

Eventually a cameraman I remember had run in there with us, and eventually I saw the cameraman emerge. We asked if the other people were out. He said they're getting out. Everybody's all right. So we just kept going, because now I was concerned about what happened to them, because we didn't know what happened. I didn't know if this building fell down or that building or whatever.

Q. Did you have a radio on at the time? Because, I tell you, I didn't have radio communications. My cell phone wasn't working.

A. I had a radio with me. I never thought to use my radio for the dispatcher. I was trying to use this Nextel. I wasn't even trying to use that then. We made our way this way.

I was going to try to meet up with the Commissioner. I just kept trying to find him and wanted to make sure he was all right. So we went up to here to Barclay. Then we went up one more block to Park Place. Then I said we're supposed to go to Broadway, and we went up this way, because there was just no people on the street. It was a very strange thing. There might have been a few people and more and more emerged from these doorways.

Eventually, Paul and I stayed together and made our way to City Hall. When I arrived at City Hall, I went inside City Hall. I thought I might find Tom in there, but the whole thing had been evacuated. So I saw Beth Hatton, Terry Hatton's wife, who was the Mayor's assistant, and several people from City Hall that I knew. They evacuated all of those people out of City Hall.

Paul and I remained there with Larry Levy, who is the chief counsel to the Mayor, and Matt Mahoney, who was an advance guy and two of the Mayor's security people. I met one of the Mayor's senior advanced security people. I said is he all right? Is Tom with him? Do you know where they are? But people didn't know where they were.

So we tried to get on the phone. We kept getting intermittent phone service. I would say we were there probably, I'd say, ten minutes before I got a call on my radio. It was from Ray Goldbach, telling me that he and the Commissioner were all right, they were with the Mayor and they had made their way up to the fire house. It might have been 15 minutes that we were here with no communication and we didn't really know what had happened.

I called. I got a telephone line. As I said, it was intermittent. We called the National Guard. On Larry Levy's direction, we called up the National Guard. I think we called the governor's office. We got in touch with Katie Lapp and told them that we needed to get in touch with the National Guard. That someone at the Mayor's command post had asked for them.

(Radio interruption.)

A. I'll just tell you, we remained at City Hall and made several phone calls. We found out where people were going to be operating out of. At some point while we were there, I would say there were about six of us at City Hall. The rest of the people had been evacuated.

At some point the second building collapsed. A huge cloud came towards us at City Hall. We ran under the stairs in City Hall Park. We went under the stairs right in City Hall. Then the dust settled.

Q. After the first collapse you were only with Paul?

A. Yes.

Q. When you first got to the scene, you saw Rescue 2 goes in the tower?

A. Correct.

Q. You're not positive of Squad 1?

A. Correct.

Q. When you left to go down to Vesey, Commissioner Feehan and Chief Ganci were still at --

A. As I left here, I gave Timmy Stackpole a high-five. I touched him. I can place him there. Pete Ganci turned to me and --

Q. Feehan?

A. Chief Ganci spoke to me. I was with Commissioner Feehan. I was with Tom Fitzpatrick. I was with Father Delendick.

Q. Tom Fitzpatrick left with the Commissioner?

A. No, Tom Fitzpatrick did not -- no, Ray Goldbach went with the Commissioner, Ray Goldbach and John McLaughlin.

Q. So before the first tower collapsed, you were all at the command center --

(Commissioner Tierney had a meeting to attend and had to end the interview abruptly.)

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT CURTIS JACKSON

Interview Date: October 30, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. CASTORINA: Today is October 30th, 2001. I'm Ron Castorina from the New York City Fire Department conducting an interview at Battalion 31 with EMT Curtis Jackson. With me is...

MR. DUN: Richard Dun, Fire Department.

Q. Sir, can you tell me your name, your rank, your title and your assignment?

A. Curtis Jackson, EMT.

Q. EMT at battalion--

A. Battalion 31.

Q. Can you tell me, on September 11th, 2001, on that particular day, the events that took place?

A. Sure. We came out of Brooklyn Hospital, me and my partner that I was working with that day, and as we went 98 --

Q. Who was your partner?

A. Decosta Wright.

Q. Okay.

A. We hit the 98 button and got in our vehicle, tried to head to our 89, and we heard the dispatcher sending numerous units over to Citywide. So we wanted to find out what was going on, so we switched one of our radios over to Citywide and we found out the World Trade Center was on fire. So we started to head over into that direction towards the bridge and we asked the dispatcher to give us that assignment.

MR. CASTORINA: Excuse me. This interview is conducted at 0615 hours.

Q. Go ahead.

A. As we requested to be placed on that assignment, the dispatcher gave us the assignment, we went 63 to the World Trade Center. We shot right over the bridge in about five or seven minutes and we pulled up in front of One World Trade Center behind numerous emergency vehicles, fire trucks and EMS vehicles that were already there. At that time we were just told --

Q. At this point what had happened; the first plane had hit?

A. I'm sorry. The first plane had hit already.

Q. That was the start; when you got there, the first plane had hit?

A. The first plane hit.

Q. The tower was on fire?

A. Right. The tower was on fire. At that time, as we were there, we were told to set up triage right in the area where we pulled up at. During that time I saw numerous people just coming out of -- dropping out of the sky, I mean, actually jumping to their death, landing all over the place, crashing through glass, crashing right on vehicles, on the street. We were just told to set up triage and wait for patients to be brought to us, but nobody brought us patients because there was nobody to bring out.

I tried to use my cell phone, but I couldn't get any transmission. So myself, Decosta Wright and EMT Felton started to head over to the building across the street from where the towers were on fire. As we were heading over there, that's when I heard a big explosion. I didn't know what it was. We turned around and saw the second tower on fire and we started running inside the building and we just ran. It was like a maze. We didn't know where we were going.

As we were running around in there, Decosta and I had scaled a fence inside there because everything was closed off inside, and as I scaled that fence, I turned around to see where Felton was. I couldn't find out where he was. So I turned back and ran back to see where he was at to make sure he was all right, and after that, I grabbed him, we all found an exit out of there. We went through some stairways out to the rear of the building.

Q. Which building were you in, do you remember?

A. I'm not even sure.

Q. It was across the street?

A. It was across the street. We ran out through the other side, and as we exited that building, we were told to move our emergency vehicles from the front of the World Trade Center around the corner.

Q. Who told you this?

A. It must have been the Deputy Commissioner or something.

Q. Was this on the radio or --

A. No, this was in person, physically.

Q. Okay.

A. So as we were moving the vehicles around the corner, like I said, I still kept seeing bodies jumping out of the windows and landing all over the place and glass and everything was flying all over the place, and we moved our vehicles around the corner and at that point we were told to move our vehicles further around the corner. I don't know what street that was. As we were moving our vehicles, my vehicle wouldn't start, it was down, mechanical, because the lights were on but the engine was shut off, and at that time all our keys were collected, so I wasn't able to move the vehicle.

Q. Who had your keys, do you remember?

A. Somebody with a white shirt took everybody's keys.

Q. Staging officer, I guess.

MR. DUN: Was this still before the second plane hit?

EMT JACKSON: No. This was after the second plane hit. The second plane must have hit when I heard the explosion when we were running in the building. We started moving our vehicles again and everybody else moved their vehicle. I tried to get a jump from another unit to move my vehicle. At that time the tower came down, was coming down, and at that point I just started running and everybody was ahead of me and I just started running, following them. When I looked back, you see the big -- a cloud of like dust and buildings. It was like it was a giant mutation of something just chasing me. Everybody ran towards the water. I ran towards the water. Half the people ran downtown and half the people ran uptown, as you hit the water side. So I ran uptown and everybody else ran downtown -- no. Half ran uptown, half ran downtown, and I was just following the crowd.

Q. You ran uptown?

A. Yes. I was just following the crowd.

Everybody --

Q. Did that dust catch up with you?

A. No, the dust never caught up with us. I saw people getting caught up from behind me who were slow, who were running slow or just didn't make it. After that point, we waited for the dust to clear, and then I went back to try to see if I could help anybody who needed help, and at that point I was met with another white shirt, an individual from the Fire Department EMS command, and I was told to join another group to set up triage downtown by -- there were two staging areas.

MR. DUN: South Ferry?

EMT JACKSON: South Ferry.

A. There was one uptown at Chelsea and there was one at South Ferry. I was told to join the group down at South Ferry. At that point the second tower came down, so we started running again, and this time I ran downtown and not uptown. But this time I was further away from where the collapse happened.

Q. When it started coming down?

A. Yes. And the same thing again happened, I mean, you seen a big cloud of dust again. But I was nowhere near that. I went down to South Street to help out with other EMTs, set up triage.

Q. Were you hearing any radio transmissions?

A. I heard a lot of radio transmissions.

Q. A lot of radio transmissions?

A. Especially when the first tower came down. All I heard was Mayday and 1013, 1013. I heard a lot of commotion, a lot of screaming, a lot of yelling, help, you know, a lot of calls for help.

Q. Then you ended up you were at triage and were you receiving any injuries, people coming in?

A. We didn't receive any injuries. The only thing, people kept asking was can they hold a face mask, a mask for the dust. That was about it.

Q. How long did you stay there?

A. I stayed there until 11:00 o'clock that night.

Q. You weren't injured in any way; you were okay, breathing and everything?

A. Yes. I just lost all my equipment, my radio.

Q. And your vehicle, I guess; that was under the rubble?

A. The vehicle was under the rubble, but they got it out like a week later.

Q. Your partner was okay?

A. My partner was okay.

Q. All right. Is there anything else you can think of that you want to add?

A. I try to forget.

Q. I understand.

A. There's nothing else I could add or want to talk about.

MR. CASTORINA: Okay. This concludes the interview. The time is now 0627 hours. Thank you, Mr. Jackson.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT BRIAN GORDON

Interview Date: October 30, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

LIEUTENANT DUN: Today's date is October 30, 2001. The time is 0820 hours. I'm Richard Dun of the New York City Fire Department working with Murray Murad. We're here interviewing Brian Gordon.

Q. Please state your title and your shield.

A. EMT, 5546.

Q. Can you give us the story or your account of what happened on the day of September 11th, 2001?

A. Me and Brian Smith had just gotten back from a late job and we were -- we had come in and dropped off the vehicle, changed over vehicles because we were 31 Henry, Tour 1. We had come into the station, did a few things, dropped off our equipment, and Brian -- we were leaving and we were walking up the ramp out here. We got into the parking lot and Brian said did you hear that boom? We had heard just a boom and we looked over and we saw a big ball of fire coming out of the tower.

So we ran back down here and we said somebody just bombed the tower. So Lieutenant McCarthy gave us ambulance 217 and he told us be careful and go over, sign on, but be careful.

Q. So your lieutenant told you you were going to be an extra unit?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. I came out and checked out the ambulance real quick and Brian came out with all our equipment and I signed us on. As soon as we signed on, we said we're available, do you need us to go to the staging area? And they said yes. So we left from here and went into Manhattan and we were coming down --

Q. Which way did you come into the city; over the bridge or through the tunnel?

A. Over the bridge.

Q. Okay.

A. I think we were coming down Church Street. I'm pretty sure we were because this is where Brooks Brothers is, right?

Q. Right.

A. Because I remember going past Brooks Brothers. Actually, like City Hall Park up here? We came down that way.

Q. You came down Broadway and you cut across one of these streets.

A. Yes. I think it was Dey Street.

Q. Okay.

A. There were people over here bleeding and stuff. We came down Broadway to Dey Street and -- what's that private ambulance company?

Q. Metro?

A. Metro Care. They had a patient here having an MI and they're like we need you guys to take care of this patient, and we were like, you know, we're BLS, too. We can't do nothing. Wait for medics.

So we went down Dey Street to Church Street and we were coming down Church Street and I remember seeing like -- we were in front of Brooks Brothers, little steps there. There were like briefcases and people's breakfast and shoes we saw laying on the stairs and stuff. We had already gone past the intersection of Liberty and a police officer or somebody, it was either you or a police officer was up at the intersection. I can't really remember.

LIEUTENANT MURAD: It wasn't me because --

EMT GORDON: You were down in the firehouse.

LIEUTENANT MURAD: I was at the firehouse. PD had requested an ambulance to respond to the firehouse for a couple injuries.

A. Yes. That police officer flagged us here and said we need you down at 10 and 10; there's people coming out of the Trade Center and they're hurt pretty bad. So Brian had to back up, so I jumped out and I ran, grabbed my tech bag and ran.

Q. Towards?

A. Towards the 10 house on Liberty.

Q. So you ran west on Liberty to the 10/10 house.

A. I fell outside of 10 and 10. I stepped on a leg and I fell. There was debris just from the first tower all over there and everything. So I got up and I went into the 10/10 house and I saw Lieutenant --

LIEUTENANT MURAD: Murad.

A. -- Murad. Then Brian backed the ambulance in and we started taking care of patients in there. Can we go into like what kind of injuries they had?

Q. Yes. You know your stuff. That's the purpose of all this now.

A. Out on the street, I remember I saw a little shoe that still had a foot in it, a little girl's shoe, and I could see body parts everywhere pretty much. We went in and there was a little Chinese lady and she was severally burned and Rob, that fireman from Commack, I don't know his name, he was already in there, too, and there were firemen from 10 and 10. I didn't see any guys from 10 Truck in there. I remember seeing guys from 10 Engine and I think --

LIEUTENANT MURAD: 10 Truck took off already.

A. Yes.

Q. So you saw the engine, but there were a lot of guys that were still coming in?

A. Yes. I don't remember really seeing any guys from 10 Truck. Actually, I did. I saw one guy. He came in and just grabbed his gear and ran out. So that guy, Rob, told me what we had, and then Lieutenant Murad told me we had a guy in the back that was hurt pretty bad, had a broken hip. So I went back there and a little Chinese guy named Foo -- I can't remember if that was his last name or his first name -- was sitting in a chair and he wouldn't let me touch him and he wouldn't let go of his briefcase. I mean, I couldn't even take his vitals because he wouldn't let me go near him. So finally I basically forced him to move his hands so I could cut his pants and check his injuries.

Then a fireman, he identified himself to me as Paul Pansini from 10 Engine, came and helped me put Foo in a KED. I put it upside-down with the head down here, to stabilize his hip, and he helped me hold him up and do all that. Then, as he was leaving, I said be careful out there, and he's not here with us anymore.

So we got him in the KED and he still wouldn't let me anywhere -- he was guarding his chest with his briefcase. So I told him, I said, look, I've got to take your blood pressure. So he said hold on, hold on, and he snapped open his briefcase and he took a wad of hundred dollar bills, it must have been four or five inches thick, out of his pocket and threw it in there, and I looked in the briefcase and it was already full of hundred dollar bills, stacks of them, all the way across, with plane tickets and passports. There must have been $500,000 in there at least, if not like a million. He took two wads out like that and threw it in the briefcase. So I cut his sleeve off and took his pressure and he was stabilized.

So Brian was working on the other patients. We started doing the triage tags. Then I went up towards the front of the building and I heard a loud sound and the second plane, I guess, had hit the Trade Center. I ran outside with Brian. We were looking and we were just like holy shit, you know, this is really, really bad. There was pieces of the plane falling, and I don't know if it was the plane or the building or whatever, but something hit the ambulance, too, in the front of the ambulance and like spiderwebed our windshield and everything and kind of caved it in a little bit. I don't know what it was, but I was told that it was a piece of the engine from the second plane. I don't know.

So we went back in and kept working on our patients. I started doing all the triage tags and I went to work on the little lady, the little Chinese lady. The firemen had come back in, a bunch of firemen, and I guess went upstairs and stripped their bunks and brought down all blankets and pillows and stuff and rearranged some chairs and got everybody who was going to come, who was there, stabilized and whatever. I don't even know how long it was, but it was a while.

Q. Did you get a lot of patients while you were there?

A. I'd say between ten and 15 patients. It wasn't that many. I remember seeing a guy out in front of I guess it's 4 World Trade Center? Isn't that the one that was like -- or was that Tower 2?

LIEUTENANT MURAD: I think that was Tower 2 maybe.

EMT GORDON: Because there was a man like trying to get in the doors of Tower 2 and I remember you or -- we were both yelling at him.

LIEUTENANT MURAD: Right. There were the cops and we were all yelling at the guy to get away from there.

EMT GORDON: Right.

LIEUTENANT MURAD: Even the detectives that were over there.

EMT GORDON: Yes.

LIEUTENANT MURAD: I remember that.

A. We were yelling to him get out, get away from the building, come over here, come over here, and he wouldn't leave. He looked like he was trying to get back in. Lieutenant Murad said there's nothing you can do, come back in here.

So we were in there working on the patients some more, going around making sure that everybody that was in there was stable, taking vitals and wrapping up the little Chinese lady. It was a while after the second plane hit and firemen are coming in and out the whole time and there was a Captain, I think he was from Engine 10, he was in there most of the time. Actually, I remember, when we first got in there, the Captain from 10 Truck was in there just for like a minute and then he left, too.

LIEUTENANT MURAD: No.

EMT GORDON: It wasn't him? I remember seeing some Captain from a truck company.

Q. So you were in the house. You were treating patients.

A. There was like no more patients coming. There was like nobody coming in. Nobody was -- I expected there to be thousands of patients.

Q. Right.

A. So I went out, you know, I stepped out of the bay and I was looking up at the towers and it was like raining paper and it was burning real bad and I started noticing people jumping. Then I went back in and I was tending to the patients some more and we get a report of a fireman down on Liberty Street west of the firehouse, and Brian told me to stay with the patients and he was going to go check on the fireman.

So he went and checked on the fireman and then he came back and he said we're going to set up a rehab. He said we're going to go break into the snack trucks and take their Snapples and waters and stuff, and he went back out, and then like maybe a minute after he left, I heard the tower fall. The tower started to fall. It was like real loud, like the No. 4 train going over your head. They came running in and everybody was screaming the towers are falling, the towers are falling, run.

So basically all the patients started getting up and running to the back and so did I, and the tower hit and it was like it picked me up and threw me. I had somebody land on me, a couple people landed on top of me, and I hurt my shoulder. It was like black. You couldn't see, couldn't breathe. My first instinct, I started screaming for Brian, my partner. I was really scared that he was dead because I knew he was outside. But he answered me and we found each other. He had a cut on his face. He was bleeding.

It was just -- it was like being in hell. You couldn't breathe at all. You tried to get low to the floor and you couldn't breathe. So everybody got into the kitchen, in the kitchen of the 10 house.

Q. That was in the back of the firehouse?

A. In the back of the firehouse in 10 house, and there was a fireman back there screaming. He'd broke his leg. Brian was back there with me and there was a couple firemen and an officer. He was the Captain at Engine 10. I know that. Brian told me what we need to do is splint his leg, get a scoop stretcher, go out and see if you can get anything out of the ambulance.

So I went out to the ambulance and all my gear was inside the ambulance up in the passenger's seat. I'd lost my helmet and coat. So an officer yelled at me, told me to grab a coat and helmet off the rack and put it on, so I did, and I got out to the ambulance and the dust was like over my ankles. There wasn't any big pieces really in there, but like the doors --

Q. So after the building collapsed, you were able to move about inside the house?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. So I got into the ambulance and I opened up the back. I was able to get into the compartment where they hold the long boards and stuff. I grabbed the scoop stretcher and grabbed some splints and some cravats, found my tech bag and...

Q. Just treated patients?

A. Yes. I started to treat the patients again. But after I got all that stuff, I set it down and I went to see if the radio still worked.

Q. Did it work?

A. Yes. The radio was still going in the ambulance, but it was pretty fucked up. The whole thing was full of dust and it was crushed down in the front. So I radioed a Mayday.

Q. On the portable?

A. No.

Q. On the vehicle radio?

A. On the vehicle radio.

Q. Okay?

A. So then I went back in and Brian and I started cutting the fireman's turnout pants off of him and his boots and tried to get his leg as straight as possible, splinted him up. There were a few other firemen that were helping us with the scoop stretcher and moving things back so we could get around him.

Q. Were there a lot of civilians in there as well?

A. There was -- yes. All our patients were in there.

Q. So you had a lot of civilians and some off-duty MOS?

A. Yes. The guy who was hurt told me he was a cadet. That's all I remember. I don't remember his name or anything. The back window was blown out and everything and by now there were more firemen and stuff. Not everybody was in that kitchen as far as firemen go. They were going in and out through the kitchen and into the doorway on the left. It looked like there was a stairwell in there. There was like a whole company of firemen showed up at the window, so we were passing out patients through the window and then we passed the fireman through the window.

Q. Now, the second building was still up?

A. The second building was still up.

Q. Okay.

A. Then I don't even know how long it was, it was a while we were doing all this, and then the Captain, he was the last one in there with us and he told us we've got to check the building, make sure we don't leave anybody. So I went out into the bay, checked the bay, make sure there was nobody out there, and that's when I heard the second tower start to fall. So I ran down the hall and Brian came out it looked like from the stairwell area and the Captain was there with him and we went into the bathroom and laid on the floor in the bathroom while the tower was falling. That was it. I said we're dead.

The tower fell, it got black again, but this time we had cling wrapped around our faces as masks, and we weren't dead, it was just black. Then it started to die down a little bit and we got up and we said that's it, everybody out of here because the building, it sounded like the building was groaning. I don't know if that was the building or what was outside or whatever. But we jumped out the window and there was Foo right underneath the windowsill with Rob, and the Captain came out and I had grabbed a hook because somebody left a pole in there, and the Captain started going off with the other firemen, so I gave him the hook and I said, here, you might need that and waved good-bye.

I had managed to grab my tech bag, too. So we made our way, me, Brian, Rob and Foo, up Cedar Street to, I guess --

Q. Trinity?

A. Trinity? Is this still Church Street?

Q. Yes.

LIEUTENANT MURAD: Church turns into Trinity.

A. Okay. So it was Trinity Street, then. We walked Foo -- with his frigging briefcase, you know, he couldn't walk, so we had to carry him. We tried to carry him one arm over each other and he had that frigging briefcase, it hit me in the face. So I just said, Brian, let go of him, and I fireman carried him for a little ways and I put him down and then Brian did it and we took turns.

We made it up to 2 Rector Street and I noticed there was people in the lobby in there and the lights were on and it was clean in there. So we brought Foo in there and sat him in a chair. They had the radio on and everything in there and we were hearing reports of hijacked airplanes and this, that and the other thing over the radio, and then the Pentagon got hit, and the security officer at the desk or the fire safety officer, whatever he was, said that there was somebody on the 7th floor having chest pains, and he said there was nobody up working above the 7th floor. So I ran up to the 7th floor and there was just an older guy in there and he was having it looked like an anxiety attack or something.

Q. Were the elevators working in that building?

A. Yes, they were working. But I didn't know if the building had been hit with debris or anything else, so we told the safety officer to turn off the elevators, lock them down in the lobby. I came back down and I met Brian in the stairwell and he said, look, he said, we've got to get these people out of here. This was on like the second floor. So we came back down to the lobby and we told the guy to put an announcement over for all the people in the building to come down to the lobby.

So people started coming down the stairs and we went back up the stairs and we were checking the floors. So all these people were standing in the lobby, there must have been maybe a hundred in the first group, and Brian jumped up on the security desk and was like giving them orders, directions and stuff. We gave Rob our stuff.

Then there was cops outside and they came in and they said just come out the door and go straight and head towards the light, you know, that's the way out of here. So we had Rob go with the first group out and we waited for more people to come because there was still more people coming. We were waiting. We couldn't carry Foo anymore. So we waited, and then a cop car pulled up outside, so we went out and stuffed Foo in the cop car. Then we came back in and another cop came in and there was like probably about a hundred people in the lobby and they didn't have anything to cover their faces with, so I took off my shirt and handed a lady my knife and I said make some dust masks out of it.

The cop led that group of people out, and we made one last announcement and we waited like five more minutes and nobody else came down, so Brian and I went outside and that's where we met with Lieutenant Murad again. I thought he was dead. I lost him after that. I didn't see him again. But seeing him was like seeing Santa Claus. I was happy. He told us he had a car just a couple blocks away.

So I don't even know which way we walked. I know we walked by a church.

LIEUTENANT MURAD: We made it down to Pearl.

A. Pearl?

Q. (Inaudible)?

A. Yes. We walked and we walked and walked and walked and then walked some more, and my ankle was really hurting. So I told Lieutenant Murad, I said, I can't walk anymore, you know, I need to sit down for a minute, and he said, all right, you two wait here and I'll go get the car. So we waited there and we sat on a vendor's table, a guy selling belts, and Lieutenant Murad came back with his car, it was all fucked up. The back window was smashed in, it was full of dust and debris, it was all crunched up in the back.

Q. It looked like a Rolls-Royce, I bet.

A. Yes. It was like a Sherman tank to me. I didn't care. So we got in and we drove and we got to 100 Wall Street and we saw a conditions boss, an EMS conditions boss, Conditions 55.

Q. You don't know his name, do you?

A. No, I don't. Brian would remember his name. We talked about him this morning. He had braces. He was kind of a dork.

Q. Okay.

A. We identified ourselves as EMS and he told us, well, good, because we've got a patient for you. So we went into 100 Wall Street and there was a lady in there, she was having a legit anxiety attack, you know, there wasn't nothing wrong with her. I mean, we didn't have any equipment. He took his oxygen. He was like, all right, go take care of this patient, but he left us with nothing. I was like whatever.

She sat there and she was talking to us and she was more concerned about us. I don't know, we sat there for it must have been an hour, hour and a half it seemed like. Brian kept using his portable to radio out, 09, we need an ambulance at this location, what's the ETA? All I kept remember hearing is there'll be one there when it gets there, basically.

So an NYPD traffic van pulled up outside and Lieutenant Murad was outside and I was like, we need to get back to Brooklyn. I don't even know what time this is. This is maybe an hour or two after the second tower fell. I'm not even sure. But we were hurting pretty bad. So we wheeled this lady in her chair out and they put her in the traffic van.

Then Conditions 55 pulled up again and he's like, I'm ordering you to go to the hospital with the patient, you need to go to the emergency room. I was like, no. Me and Brian were both like, no, we need to go back to our station, and he was like, I'm ordering you, and we were like, basically, what I'll do is (inaudible), you can kiss my ass. I'm sorry I may get a CD out of that but --

Q. It's okay. Listen. In times of crisis, all bets are off.

A. Exactly. So he said whatever, just get back to Brooklyn then and make sure you go to an emergency room. So, you know, yes, sir. He said go that way to the pier.

Q. Which was South Ferry?

A. Was it South Ferry? It's right down from Battalion 4.

Q. Probably South Ferry.

A. Probably. I know it was on the East River. We made it down to South Ferry. There was a ferry slip there and there was like thousands of people there. It wasn't too far we had to walk, but it seemed like miles. There was a bench down there at the right end of the ferry slip, and we sat on the bench and cops saw us sitting there and so they all ran over and they were like, oh, are you guys all right, are you all right? People were handing me cigarettes because my cigarettes were in the ambulance. A priest came over and he gave me my last rites. So at this point I'm thinking, damn, I must be pretty fucked up. Do I got something sticking in me or something?

So the cops basically carried us, escorted us up to the ferry to Brooklyn. They called it back because it had just left. We got on the ferry and --

Q. The PD boat, right?

A. No. We initially got on the ferry and people started running up to us, clapping, cheering, crying, giving us water bottles and water and everything. Then PD came back on and took us off and brought us to the end of the slip there and the harbor patrol boat came over. I guess it's harbor patrol.

Q. Yes. PD boat.

A. PD boat. They put us on the PD boat and brought us to the Navy yard. We got off at the Navy yard and I remember looking back across the river and just seeing a huge billow of smoke and dust and it was horrible. Then some guy in a van --

Q. You ended up in Brooklyn?

A. Yes.

Q. Where in Brooklyn; by the Navy yard?

A. In the Navy yard, where the Fire boats are.

Q. Okay.

A. There were no Fire boats there, but that's where we got off. There were the firemen all there from -- I guess they were from the boats and they helped us off the boat. A guy -- I don't remember where he was from. I think he was from Cumberland Hospital, in a Cumberland Hospital community van or something. He picked us up and he brought us down here to the station.

We came in the station and everybody saw us and started like freaking out. Not freaking out, but they were like are you guys all right, are you guys all right, giving us 02 and making us drink saline. Somebody gave me a thing of saline to drink and I almost threw up. So our superior officer, Captain Fried here, ordered us to go to the emergency room. So they long boarded us and collared us and the whole nine and put us in an ambulance and brought us to KCH, and they took care of us at KCH.

They admitted Brian. They released me. I told them I wanted to stay with Brian because the whole time when we were at the Trade Center and everything, I kept telling him -- he's like, oh, I've got to go out here to do this, I've got to go out here to do that. So I was getting mad at him. I was like, you're my partner. I ain't going to leave you. I'm coming with you. He's like, no, you've got to stay with the patients. So my partner was fucked up and I wasn't going to leave him. Some doctor was like, well, no, you can't stay with him, you've got to leave, and I basically told him go fuck himself, started getting in an argument with him, and that Captain -- what's her name? Red hair.

Q. Gloffke.

A. Gloffke. She pulled me aside and talked to that doctor and they're like, all right, you can stay with him. So they brought me back here and I took a shower and I went back and I stayed with Brian overnight, and that's when we were actually watching CNN, watching the towers fall, when the plane hit it, over and over and over and over again, and that's when his mother-in-law called him and asked him if he'd heard anybody from hazmat, and that's when he realized his father was there. So he called hazmat and his father was missing and he was pretty upset. I feel bad for him. I knew his father for years and years. He was a good man, wrote the manual on 288, hazmat. Good man. Basically, they released him the next day and we came back to the station and we went home.

LIEUTENANT MURAD: Okay. That concludes the interview and --

LIEUTENANT DUN: Just one quick question. When the initial call came in, were you operating on Citywide?

EMT GORDON: Yes.

LIEUTENANT DUN: From the beginning?

EMT GORDON: Yes. When we logged on, we were on Brooklyn North, and then we said we're available, do you need us to go to the staging area? They said yes, we do, switch to Citywide, so we switched to Citywide.

LIEUTENANT MURAD: Okay.

LIEUTENANT DUN: The time is 0910 and that concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN JAY SWITHERS

Interview Date: October 30, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. MURAD: Today is October 30, 2001. The time is 14 hundred hours. I'm Murray Murad with George Cundari of the Fire Department of New York City. I'm conducting an interview with --

MR. SWITHERS: Jay Swithers, Captain of the Bureau of Health Services of the Fire Department.

MR. MURAD: This is being conducted at the Bureau of Investigations and Trials regarding the events that took place on September 11, 2001. Go ahead.

MR. SWITHERS: On the morning of September 11, which happened to be my 40th birthday, I was hanging out downstairs in the Bureau of Health Services down on the second floor, having a donut and coffee. My pager went off, indicating there was a plane into the building in the World Trade Center. At that point I looked into the lounge area where they have a television and I saw the gaping hole in the north tower.

At that point, I prepared my equipment, I changed into my urban search and rescue uniform, including boots, EBU pants and work shirt and carried my equipment, all my equipment down to my office. I then went up to RCC to see if they implemented or contacted the Urban Search and Rescue medics, to see if there were any orders given at that time. There were no orders given. I looked for transportation to get to the site. When I returned down to my office where my equipment was, I was told that a second plane had hit the south tower.

At that point, I picked up all my equipment, big duffle bag and started to run to the bridge. I was prepared to run over the Brooklyn Bridge; however, I was stopped by a police officer who told me to wait and that something would be coming over the bridge to drive me over. I was picked up by a city car, black unmarked, Crown Victoria with lights and sirens, which came to a skidding halt in the third lane of the Brooklyn Bridge and the man opened up the door and said get in.

I opened up the back door, threw my equipment into the back seat. He asked me who I was. I told him I was a paramedic and he proceeded to drive across the bridge. As I got to the other side, he got on his PA and was screaming get out of way, I have a paramedic on board, all the way down to the World Trade Center.

Q. Was he a police officer?

A. I don't know. He was a guy in a suit. He dropped me off at the corner of Vesey Street and Church, where I was able to see a small triage center set up one block away on Church and Fulton, directly in front of the Millennium Hotel.

Q. Who was there?

A. Janice Ocheski. There were also the paramedics from the Bureau of Health Services. Corey, what's Corey's last name. I don't know.

MR. MURAD: Romanowski.

A. Bonnie.

Q. Regan?

A. Regan. And Carlos Lillo was there with us, and one of my employees who works light duty, Farouk Mohammed. There were a lot of other people there but those are the ones that I remember.

Q. At the triage center?

A. Manny Delgado was there, Dr. Cherson was there, and about 20 people all together in the contingency. While I was there, my primary goal was to try to find Chief Downey, because Chief Downey is the Chief of Special Operations Command and that's who the USR paramedics would report to. Nobody could tell me where he was. Most of the EMS people didn't know what special command was or who Chief Downey was.

I realized they were overwhelmed and I proceeded to help them. One particular person that came to mind was a very obese African American woman who came out of the building and was being assisted by other people when she sat down on the wall in front of the Millennium Hotel. When I went over to her, they said that she has asthma. She was hysterical. I listened to her lung sounds. Her lung sounds were clear. I prepared to calm her down and was giving her oxygen. When I was giving her the oxygen, setting up the tank, you could hear a loud rumble. Somebody said run for your life. I turned to see who was yelling run.

At that point I looked back and most of the people who were triaged in that area with the triage tags on them got up and ran. I took a quick glance at the building and while I didn't see it falling, I saw a large section of it blasting out, which led me to believe it was just an explosion. I thought it was a secondary device, but I knew that we had to go.

When I looked down at my patient, she was no longer there. She had already ran and I started to run. I ran eastbound on Fulton Street, but I only got to the loading bins of the bays of the Millennium Hotel. At the loading bays of the Millennium Hotel, there was a large truck backed up to the bay door, which was closed. I dove into the back of the truck and you could see everything getting real real dark and the sound of large pieces of metal were falling all over, making loud pinging noises, just all over, all around the vehicle. I managed to crawl up to the garage door and cupped my hands in front of my face, between my face and the door and at that point it was like a major storm had hit; continuous blasting of debris hitting my face, hitting my body. It was like a major storm.

I had my helmet on and the only thing I could breathe was if I was just breathing dirt. I was breathing dirt and for the few moments I was breathing dirt, I prayed that if I was going to die I wouldn't suffocate and I prayed that if I was going to die - the large I beams were falling and I could hear them - that one of them would hit me and not let me suffer. I had no clue what had happened. It became very very dark and I just struggled to breathe. At that point thoughts went through my mind such as I should have stayed in the office.

Also the fact that I was going to die on my birthday was horrible and that I couldn't remember if I actually kissed my kids in the morning or last night. Numerous thoughts.

When the sound had stopped, my ears were ringing. It was so loud and it was real real black and I felt somebody grab my helmet and say we have a firefighter here. He could help us out. I didn't tell him I was a firefighter, but I didn't know if I could see or if I was alive. I said is it real dark or am I blind. The voice came back and said it's just really dark. The group of people said what do we do. They were hacking and coughing. I didn't know what to say, so I said we need to know how many people are here. Count out loud. The first person counted one. The second person counted two. The third person counted three. I was about to count four when somebody else counted four. I was again about to -- and this went all the way up to nine. I didn't realize there were nine people there.

Q. All in the loading dock area?

A. All in the loading dock area. They cried what do we do. We stayed there a moment and nobody was really trapped. We were able to see a little orange with about a foot between the top of the truck and the dirt and we realized we weren't trapped. Everybody pushed their ways through into the orange and they were able to see just enough to get out. Everybody had dirt and soot all over them. Some of them were bleeding, but they took off up the block. I remember getting out and being really confused and turning back and looking at building number 5 and just seeing orange and feeling heat, not knowing what was going on, or if it was on fire.

I started walking east. As I walked east I approached a Fire Department command car, a Suburban with the lights on and the engines running. I saw someone who I figured to be a police officer, take his gun out of the holster and start whacking the drivers side window. I said stop, what are you doing, he said we are just trying to get out of here. I said don't do that and he wandered off. As I walked up the street I tripped over a television camera for a television network that somebody had dropped. I proceeded up to the corner of Broadway and Fulton, where I found Lieutenant Bruce Medjuck. Lieutenant Bruce Medjuck had a radio, which I didn't have. We decided we were going to regroup. We saw very few EMS people. The only EMS people I remember seeing at that point was Lieutenant Patrick Scaringello, and he insisted that we should try to salvage a vehicle that was on fire on Church Street.

I told him there was no reason to try to salvage a vehicle. We didn't know what had happened and he sort of wandered off. We agreed that we were trying to regroup. Patients were just coming out of the woodwork; some badly injured, some being gathered, carried by citizens, some being carried by civil service workers. We decided to put them into an ATM on that corner, at the corner of Fulton and Broadway, where there was an ATM machine, a little area that we could put people. We started to place them into that area.

Within a few moments, I regrouped with Bruce Medjuck and I asked him to tell them on the radio to send us MTA buses to get people out. That didn't happen. But one thing that did happen was an ambulance pulled up which was very clean. So I assumed that the vehicle had not been in the - what I thought was an explosion at the time, but was the first collapse.

When the ambulance pulled up, two EMTs jumped out. They gave out simple face - dust masks to people and people started to charge the ambulance. One man was actually brought over in a wheelbarrow. When the people started to charge the ambulance, they started to climb in. There had to be maybe 5, 6 patients in there, when the original African American, heavy set black woman came to me and she was once again crying. I was actually happy to see her because I knew that she had survived the collapse and I knew she was the one person that I was primarily responsible for. Although later on, and I knew at that time, that there were people in that triage area that probably did not survive because they were not able to get up. I knew that one person did survive.

I wasn't able to lift her because I didn't have the strength, but I helped her get up on to the back step of the ambulance and pushed her into the back of the ambulance while the EMTs in that ambulance were crying no more, we are full, we are full, no more. I pushed her and she wound up laying on the floor of the ambulance. I was just about able to close the door of the ambulance by pushing her feet in a little further. I had to push her feet in and close the door. At that point, I asked Bruce Medjuck do we have tracking on this ambulance and he said tracking, it's like the end of the world. This is a major disaster. Just get them out of here. I agreed.

While standing there once again trying to figure out what to do next, I saw car 33, which is the medical car that is the doctor's car, Crown Vic from the Bureau of Health Services that the doctor drives around. The Bureau of Health Services pulled up just behind the ambulance. Inside that car was Dr. Ortiz. She is a female doctor that works in the Bureau of Health Services, a driver and 3 firefighters were sitting in the back seat of the Crown Vic, one of which I know very well. She had only opened up the window maybe 3 quarters of the way and she was holding her jacket in front of her face not to get the debris or dust that was in the air into her airway.

I told her that many people died, a lot of people from the Bureau of Health Services seemed to be dead, I don't know where they are. They seemed to be missing. I don't remember saying there was a collapse. I remember saying I don't know what happened. It's real real bad. At that point they had told me we will pull over and help you. I told them we were regrouping. They said they were going to pull over and help. They turned the vehicle left so they were facing east on Fulton and pulled over. When they started to get out of that vehicle, which I didn't see, but they told me later on, that that's where the second building, building number 2, the north tower, started to collapse.

I immediately just started to run, first north and then east on to Ann Street. As I was running I was looking over my shoulder and I heard the rumbling and I saw the cloud chasing me very quickly with debris. Once again falling. I saw a bunch of people standing in a loading bay with the door halfway down saying come in here, follow me in here. When I got there the man said let's pull down the door. There had to be ten of us trying to pull down the door. As we were pulling down the door the cloud and the thrust of the cloud knocked us all down to our knees and it continued to blow continuously into this bay door.

The people in the back were screaming. I managed to get back up from my knees to my feet and grabbed the door and looked over and there was maybe only three or five guys left trying to pull the door down. As we continued to try to pull the door down, the door actually started to go up. I didn't realize it was going up until I realized I was off my feet. I said I had to let go. I anticipated landing on my feet but with the continuous thrust of the air coming through, I actually wound up face down on my helmet. I was stunned and confused, why was I down. I didn't know if I was dead or what was happening, once again taking in a lot of the dirt. I didn't know what to do. Somebody grabbed the back of my collar and dragged me down the loading bay to safety.

At that point I didn't need their help any more and they were strangling me and finally let go of my collar. I could get up. We entered down into the main hallway of the building. We got into the building and another group of people found the door into what seemed to be Genovese drugstore. We went into the Genovese drugstore and a large group of people pushed for the Poland Springs water that was on the shelves. A security guard that didn't know what was happening in the store said stop, what's going on, are you all crazy. A police officer pulled out a gun and pointed it at the security guard. These people need the water. Don't you understand what's happening. The security guard said he didn't know what was happening. He said it's quite all right. Have all the water you want.

I was confused. I didn't know what was happening. I looked out the windows of the store. Complete blackness. Not knowing what was happening. I started to walk through the store and realized there were a lot of things that people could use in the store. I found small duffle bags. I took three or four of them off the shelf. I was stuffing water and Band-Aids, some things as ridiculous as Tampons, making goodie bags for people to take out with them and for myself.

I prepared the bags and the people then rushed the door. There was a police officer standing in the doorway and said nobody will leave the room, nobody will leave the store. At that point I figured maybe I will call my wife. I picked up my cell phone and I managed to get through. My wife picked up the phone. She was hysterical crying. I told her I was okay. At that point I asked her what had happened. She told me that they are gone. They are not there. I couldn't imagine that both the buildings were gone.

I said what are you talking about. Are the children gone? What you are you talking about. She told me the buildings are gone. I said what buildings are gone. She said the World Trade Center is gone. I said how do you know. She said I have seen it on TV. She was watching regular TV and switched to CNN because she lost regular TV. She told me not more than two floors of that building could be there. I was stunned.

At that point somebody yelled that there was a bomb in the building that we were in. The police officer opened up the door and let people out. I asked if there was anybody left in that building. They said there were a couple of people maybe in the basement. So I ran down into the basement, maybe three floors, and there were a couple of maintenance workers who apparently didn't speak English. I told them they had to leave the building and there was probably a bomb. They looked at me and said that they had to clock out first or check with their supervisor.

I said I'm telling you to leave. I'm leaving. You can stay as long as you want, but I'm leaving. I ran upstairs and I left the building. There was no bomb in the building.

When I got outside I met up with EMT Farouk Mohammed, who happens to be an Islanmic Muslim, which I didn't know at the time. He happened to work light duty with me in the Bureau of Health Services because of a shoulder injury. He was walking with two men and had a plastic garbage bag and was giving out water and rags to people in the street. He approached me and gave me a big hug. He asked me if I was okay. I told him I had ringing in my ears but I seemed to be okay.

At that point we met up with Manny Delgado and Dr. Cherson and they told us that the people were grouping at South Street Seaport, which was east, so we started to head east. While we were heading east, Farouk was able to hand out water and rags, but we had no other equipment available. People said to us what do we do, what do we do. I told them it was in their best interest to run northeast, to get out of there. We had no medical equipment.

When we got up to, I guess Pearl Street and Fulton Street, a man came to us and said that he had an OR available in one of the stores, I guess a clinic. All we needed was equipment and people. I said that we didn't have equipment or people, but I would keep that in mind. We walked another block east, right up to the edge of South Street Seaport where the plaza is and that's where I saw car 33 up on the curb. It looked like it had crashed into a pole or something. It was sitting there. Nobody was in it. These were the original people I saw.

We waited there for 2 or 3 minutes. We couldn't figure out where they went, so we continued. When we got to South Street Seaport, somebody told us that's not where they were. The people were regrouping at the ferry terminal. Farouk Mohammed and I walked to the ferry terminal and started helping with a triage center with very few patients. It was at that point that we got separated and I was asked to go up to Chambers and West for UCAR responsibilities. I got a ride from a Lutheran Medical Center ambulance as far north as possible to that area.

I walked up there. That's just about my story.

Q. Did you have any portable radios or radio contact with anybody?

A. I had no raido contact except when Bruce Medjuck was standing next to me at the -- well, I had radio contact through people while we were doing triage in front of the Millennium and following that the only radio contact I had was through Bruce Medjuck, who got on the air and said I have Captain Swithers with me and we are trying to regroup.

Q. That was at Citywide?

A. I don't know what it was done on.

Q. You never saw EMS Chiefs or Chief Downey?

A. Thank god I never had the opportunity to see Chief Downey. I didn't see any EMS Chiefs until I regrouped at the South Street Seaport and that's where I saw Chief McCracken for the first time and Chief Vallani.

MR. CUNARDI: I would like to thank you Captain Swithers. The time is 1425 hours. This now concludes the interview with Captain Jay Swithers.

THE WITNESS: I saw Chief Vallani and Chief McCracken at the ferry terminal. Just a correction. I said South Street Seaport.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT VERONICA JACOBS

Interview Date: October 30, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 30, 2001. The time is 2155 hours. I'm Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department World Trade Center Task Force. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, title and assigned command area regarding September 11, 2001.

A. My name is Veronica Jacobs, Battalion 58. I'm an EMT.

Q. Also present at this interview is?

A. Christine Bastedenbeck of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade Center Task Force.

Q. Veronica, were you working on the morning of September 11, 2001?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you please tell me in your own words about the events of that day?

A. Well, when I got home from walking the circle with my son and my neighbor told me that a plane crashed into the World Trade Center. So I went inside to watch TV to see what happened and I called my Battalion to see if they needed to me to come in. I spoke to Lieutenant Hoover who told me yes, come into the Battalion and work overtime.

So anyway I took a shower, got dressed and jumped in my car and proceeded to come from New Jersey to Brooklyn. When I got to the Goethals Bridge there was a checkpoint with state troopers and police officers who were checking vehicles and stopping everybody and checking ID. I told them that I needed to proceed over to Brooklyn to work overtime for the World Trade Center and they told me you are either going to the World Trade Center straight from here or you go home. So I told them to lead the way.

I got a police escort from the Goethals Bridge to Beekman Hospital, and I parked on the sidewalk and they parked next to me on the street and we walked with my thumb out to the World Trade Center, at least towards the blackness, the darkness. We couldn't see anything. There was so much debris and dust everywhere.

We went inside Beekman first and I got a couple of maps, I tried to call the Battalion and tell them I was in Manhattan instead of coming to Brooklyn, but the phone was busy, so I proceeded with them to try and find the EMS command, wherever that could have been, because we couldn't see street signs.

When we got I guess about two blocks from the World Trade Center, I couldn't tell you what street we were on.

Q. Do you know about what time this was?

A. It was about 9:05.

Q. 9:05?

A. Yes. There were people running towards us and telling us they needed help down that way and pointing behind them, so we proceeded to go down that way, hoping there was EMS or somebody there.

When I finally realized where I was, I was standing in front of the building that didn't come down yet, the tower that didn't come down yet, not even knowing that the first one came down. I didn't know what it was that they were running from.

I look up and I'm like this looks like the World Trade Center. I think we should just back up and start looking for my command, and the trooper was like okay, let's start walking. All of a sudden a large rumbling and people were running and jumping and hitting the floor next to me and it just got black and gray and I couldn't see and I was running for my life with my hands in front of me, because I didn't know what the hell was happening.

We tripped and we fell and I lost the troopers and I don't know where they went, but they are alive, I ended up finding out, because their car was gone when I got back. So I assume they are alive. Their car is gone, so somebody got it.

When I finally got out of the dust, tripping several times and crashing into telephone poles as I was running, because I couldn't see, it cleared up about 10 minutes later, but as I'm running I'm trying to help people who needed help to run or to walk or just to breathe, trying to cover them with my shirt or whatever I could do, because I had two masks on my face from the hospital.

When I realized what happened, we walked around, I guess Vesey Street or something like that. That was the only street sign that we could see. I don't know how far that was from the World Trade Center, still to this day. But we walked around the corner and I could see the first building that fell and they were telling me this is the building that fell, a couple of firefighters, and they said how they lost their people in the first building and I was like well, what did we just run from. I guess we went almost back to Beekman, halfway back to Beekman, and we met up with some firefighters there. I'm saying we. It was me and a couple of firemen that made it out I guess.

They said the second building came down. I was like oh, my god, I just saw people standing in the lobby, fire engines, everybody was pulling up still and I saw a bunch of firefighters going in and I am like well, why are they going in. Why would they be going in there you know, it's just not safe. You know, can't they fight the fire from above. When I got there and boom, it started falling and I was like, I know they didn't come out, you know.

Anyway, I start walking around trying to find anybody that looked familiar, because you couldn't tell who was who. Everybody was full of soot and dust. As I'm trying to find the EMS command or whoever I could find, we were saving people, pulling people from rubble and there were private ambulances everywhere. They were the only ones up front. So as we are pulling people out of the rubble or walking past we are just throwing them into ambulances, on the floor of the ambulances, two people on the stretchers, anywhere we could.

We pulled out this obese man. He had to be like four or five hundred pounds and that's the only thing that saved his life. They pulled a beam off of him. It took 20 firefighters to pull this beam off of this guy. We threw him on the stretcher and we had to carry the stretcher everywhere. Because the debris was so much, you know. It was just horrible.

After several hours of saving people and pulling people from the debris and still walking, every time I tried to leave to find EMS, they needed more help, so I couldn't just leave, you know what I mean. I just kept doing what I was doing.

I guess it was about 4 hours later, maybe about one o'clock, I finally walked back and they told me several blocks back there are some EMS people. Maybe they are your bosses that you are looking for. These are totally different people now. Like I met, of course, several firefighters and -- okay.

I'm a spaz since then too. I hear noise, you know. Holy shit.

Well anyway, I ended up, there were fire engines set up with those spouts of water, little eye wash spouts of water, off the side of the trucks and I'm washing my face and my eyes are burning and I can't breathe good and I'm full of soot. Some firefighter blew me off with a compressor so that I could actually see and wash my face.

I finally ran into some academy people. It was Gio.

Q. Pineda?

A. Yes, Pineda. Rolando. Paramedic EMS Rolando. Him and a -- it was all paramedics. There were about 5 of them.

Q. Rolando Gardon?

A. He was the instructor. I don't remember his last name. Well, he was a paramedic instructor.

Q. Big Asian guy?

A. Yes, with glasses. He looks Hawaiian. Yes, so anyway, I ran into them and I told them what happened. They are like okay, just hang out here. Do you need any help. I'm like I just really need to sit down and get some water. They got me water and we were just waiting, I'm like you guys got to go in. You know, there's people in there that need help and you are just standing here and there is private ambulances in there that just can't handle it.

They don't know what to do. There is no supervision. Everybody was killed that was supervising, or at least knew what to do. You need to go in there. They are like we can't go in there. They were just standing there. You have to stay right here. What? I'm like what do you mean. Go a couple of blocks in, they need help, they need ambulances. I'm telling you there is people laid out in the street that need to get the hell off and they can't move. Their legs are broken. Their arms are broken. They can't move, they are trapped, they are pinned and these people will be salvageable. Let's go.

Oh, we can't do that. I'm like, okay, so I'm going back. If you don't want to, I will. Just give me some shit, give me some oxygen, and some equipment. I will go back in. I don't care, you know. They were like you can't do that. You have to stay here or you are going to be relieved of duty. I'm like relieved of duty. I just fucking worked 4 hours by my god damn self. If you relieve me now I don't give a shit, you know what I mean. I will go back in on my own. I don't care. I worked without any equipment. I had no equipment on me. No helmet, no nothing. I came from home to come here.

After about an hour and a half of sitting there like assholes, we finally got the word that we could go up closer, which is Ground Zero now, and the triage area, I set that triage area up. We had the morgue inside the building. I set all that up the first day. They are still utilizing it today.

It was just wild, you know. It was just wild. All the bodies and people. It was really -- I mean, do I want to add anything. Probably not, but I could chat for days about this shit. It was so disorganized and there was no help, you know. I was there until one o'clock until the morning with not a sign of relief in sight.

I come back here. I finally left on my own. I told them look, I can't stay here any more. I need to leave. I worked 10 to 6 the night before, went home, walked my son, took a shower, came back and worked all day and all night again. It was one o'clock in the morning. I couldn't work any more. You know, I was on the my feet the whole time. My heel is killing me since then. I don't know what happened to my heel, but I finally left and they wouldn't even give me a ride to Beekman Hospital.

I had to walk from Ground Zero to Beekman Hospital to my car and I didn't even know which way to go, where to go, who to see. You know, I'm asking all these Captain and Chiefs who are standing there hot shit trying to look cute, how do I get back to Beekman Hospital. Can you get me a gator or anything. I don't care what, a crane, anything. Just bring me to Beekman. I'm exhausted. No, you have to find your way. I'm like okay.

So I walked all the way back to Beekman and I got in my car and I had to dust it off, because there is like a foot of debris on it. I came back here, because I couldn't go home like that. I was so filthy and disgusting, I had to shower before I went home in case I was exposed to something.

I got back here and everybody was sitting here. 50 people in there. I'm like what the hell are you all sitting in there for. Oh, well, we are waiting to go to Ground Zero. I'm like what? What are you waiting for? Well, there is a bus outside, it's empty. A city bus sitting outside empty, waiting to leave with people with their equipment and they are on overtime sitting here watching fucking TV. When I just worked damn near 24 hours straight and I'm so tired and so sick and so exhausted, and there is more people that need help with no relief in there and they are sitting here.

So I asked the boss, do you know what's going on, why aren't they going. You know, oh, well, we are not allowed to. What? Again, stupidity. What do you mean you are not allowed to. What are they supposed to do there, just sit there and just keep working without relief and they are like, well, that's what we were told.

They are pissed off and they are all asking me what happened and my side and I'm like, you know, I need some food. So Joe Michel went to McDonald's and got me a couple of Big Macs. I put my feet up and I got a massage. I ate a Big Mac and I told everybody how it was there and they were like wow, I think I was the only person that went. Maybe Greenberg went later. I know he wasn't there in the beginning. I didn't see him at all there, and I saw every EMT and EMS person that was there that day. I didn't see him. Where the hell he could have been I don't know, you know.

That was a fucking experience. Fucking. I hope they like my language. It was definitely an experience. So to this day I'm a spaz. I hear noise. I'm like okay, where is it coming from, you know. There was thunder, I will never forget. I was home I guess the week after that, and thunder, there was this horrible storm that came through and I'm at home and I'm finally in my bed and I'm like okay, I can't sleep, everybody is knocked out and all of a sudden this big kaboom. I was in my bedroom and I have a ranch, a long ranch. My room is here, my daughter's is here and my son's is here and my son was sleeping with my daughter that night.

I got out of the bed, that boom, ran and scooped the two kids up and jumped on top of them. They are like, ah, what's the matter? I'm like what was that? My husband is like holy shit, you need to see somebody about that. I'm like I'm okay. If they are okay I'm okay. I'm like a spaz, you know. I just scooped them up and I'm laying on them. They are crying, what, what, my daughter is like oh, my son is like oh, I'm like shh shh shh shh. It was horrible.

And I still do that, you know. They are demolishing buildings over by where I live to build a new mall. I'm like, what was that, you know, like commando on the floor. Come on baby, let's go. You know, it's wild.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT TRINH DINH

Interview Date: October 31, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. DUN: Today is October 31, 2001. The time is 705 hours. My name is Richard Dun of the New York City Fire Department, working with Marisa Abbriano, also with the New York City Fire Department.

Q. We are conducting an interview with?

A. Trinh Dinh.

Q. Battalion 44, and what is your shield and your --

A. My shield is 5423.

Q. Could you please state in your own words what happened on September 11, 2001 of this year?

A. Okay. I start my shift at 8 a.m. in the morning. That day I was working with a different partner, who has been on the job for 11, 12 years. We had our first job somewhere in north Brooklyn.

Q. Who was your partner's name?

A. Ronald Coyne. I don't know if he shows up on your list. We were on our way to the hospital with our patient when his cellphone rang and it was his wife telling him that she saw two planes crash into the World Trade Center on TV.

As soon as we got to the hospital, my partner said he was going to call Brooklyn central to see if they needed to send us down to Manhattan. As I just got taken care of the patient as fast as I could so that if we were sent, that we could just leave.

I took care of the patient. He came back and told me that Brooklyn central definitely said yes, to head down to Manhattan. They specifically told us to arrive at Church and Vesey. So my partner was driving. We just -- I believe we took the Brooklyn Manhattan Bridge.

Q. There is a Brooklyn Bridge or Manhattan Bridge.

A. The Brooklyn Bridge. Yes, I believe that's the route we took, but we pretty much got down there in probably less than 10 minutes. On the way up there we saw the two towers in flames. They hadn't collapsed at the time. They were still in flames, the top one third of them. Just a lot of commotion. A lot of cops in the streets directing traffic. I don't think we ever made it to Church and Vesey.

Somehow we made it probably right before the second tower collapse, I see at 9:55, the first tower, excuse me, the first tower, at 9:55, we went up to the West Side Highway to the entrance to the underground of the parking lot. As soon as we pulled up there, we just saw this cloud of black smoke coming our way and we just stopped dead in our tracks to where we were. We didn't even just drive any closer. We just stopped and let the black smoke just come over our vehicle. We sat there for maybe like two or three minutes in the blackness.

Q. Was that the first collapse?

A. That was the first collapse. As soon as we pulled up that's when the black cloud just came over us so we just stopped. As it cleared up a little bit, we started to see people like in the white dust. They were just kind of like walking towards the vehicle. At that time, we just kind of walked out of the vehicle and just started telling people to come to the ambulance and just sit there for a little bit, if you needed any oxygen. If you wanted to clean your eyes out and just -- all of a sudden just all these people started coming out. A lot of people.

Q. Was there a lot of chaos and mayhem going on through the streets at this time?

A. I wouldn't say mayhem. I think people were mostly walking out. They weren't really running out. They were just walking towards us. They were all covered in white dust.

Q. Did you see a lot of debris when you were pulling up to the site?

A. Yes. That's exactly why we just stopped where we were, because it just came at us so we just stopped. There was a doctor in the back of our vehicle. We picked him up on the way.

Q. Department doctor?

A. No, it wasn't a Fire Department doctor. She was some kind of, I don't remember what kind of doctor she was or who she worked for, but she just flagged us down and asked if she could come with us. So we let her in the back of the ambulance so that while me and my partner got out, she was in the back just kind of helping the patients.

We were telling her where all the -- we stocked everything, all the sterile water, how to use the oxygen. We just told her, you know, give whatever they need and stuff like that. At that time, me and my partner were kind of going back and forth from the vehicle to the building. My partner was actually inside the building, I believe, and I was just kind of going back and forth between him and the vehicle, because every time I went up there, he would always tell me go back to the vehicle, get me more oxygen. Go back and get me more of this, get me more of that, more of that. So I was kind of running back and forth.

I guess maybe half hour, 45 minutes must have passed. I went back to find my partner because he hadn't come back to the ambulance for a while. I guess he just wanted to stay inside the building and help there and as I was going to the building to find him, everybody started saying turn around, the second one is going to fall. Of course I wasn't paying attention. I was just like well, where is my partner, I got to find my partner, I got to go, you know, find where he is in the building.

I just kept going, I just kept going and then all of a sudden everyone just started running the other way and I just kept going forward. Then I saw another cloud of black smoke coming my way and that's when I turned around and started running back to my ambulance.

Q. Did the cloud catch you?

A. Oh, yes, the cloud caught me, but then I went in the back of my ambulance and we sat there for a few minutes and it was really thick. This one somehow was just thicker than the first one. This one really made me choke, even in the back of the ambulance.

I was back there taking some oxygen with some of the people. I waited a few minutes for it to clear a little bit. Then I walked forward, more towards the building and I just started asking firemen and people, you know, did you see my partner and this and that. You know, nobody was really answering. They were just kind of all in their own little -- you know, doing what they were doing.

Q. Did you ever move your ambulance?

A. I never moved my ambulance from where we were, because when we first got there the black cloud came over us and we just stopped.

Q. That was on West Street, like that underground parking?

A. Uh-huh. So I always wonder, if we had just shown up a minute earlier, we would have just been right up there in the front where the other ambulances were, because when the cloud cleared and I went towards the front, I saw all the ambulances parked like not even a hundred feet, maybe closer than we were and they were all torched and destroyed and nobody was in them and fire trucks destroyed and I was like oh, my god, we were just like not that far back and we could have been this close.

It was perfect timing for us I guess. I just kept looking for my partner and in the midst of it, everyone kept saying, you know, can you help this fireman, can you help that fireman. Even though I lost my partner I guess I just continued to help some of the firemen that needed it. You know, I mean, there was this one fireman who had a fractured femur. They kept saying bring your bus over here so you can take him in the hospital. I said okay.

So I went back to get my vehicle and my vehicle was gone. My mistake was leaving the vehicle with the keys in it running. So I guess --

Q. That's not a mistake.

A. I mean at that time, I guess -- I mean when I needed it, I didn't have it.

Q. Yes.

A. But I guess someone else just decided to take it for their use and another EMT probably took it for their use and took off with it. So I didn't have an ambulance for my fireman. At this time I didn't see any other EMTs around. I guess they all just took whoever and left and I was the only one left.

Then all of a sudden this volunteer ambulance came up the ramp and I flagged him down and I asked him if he could take my patient to the hospital with me, so we took our fireman to Beekman.

Q. Do you remember the name of the Firefighter?

A. I just remember his first name was Kevin. That's all I remember. Then somehow, some medics came and they came with us too and we took him to Beekman and as soon as we went to Beekman, I actually ran into a medic that I know who works right here in Brooklyn for St. Marys. I ran into him and I was like, I lost my partner. He said yes, I lost my partner too. He said let's work together. He says I have an ambulance.

So at that point I wanted to call my Battalion to tell them that I lost my partner, that I don't know where he is, that I'm fine, but they said that none of the phone lines were working because, you know, no reception, nobody's cell phones was getting any reception. My cellphone I left in the ambulance, okay. All my equipment was in the ambulance. Everything that I had. That's why I don't have any equipment right now. So I couldn't make any phone calls to the Battalion.

So I just went out with this medic, Roger, he is English actually. So we went out to his bus and we said what do you want to do. I said let's just drive around and see where we can help, you know. So we just drove around and just kept driving and I don't know exactly where we ended up, but we ended up right there in the middle of the rubble, where Ground Zero is, where everybody is working at right now.

We just ended up there, there was no other EMTs or medics there at the time.

Q. Was the radio working?

A. Yes. You know, I don't even remember because you just don't even think. You are just like in there in the midst of everything and you are just kind of like continuing to do what you do. So we just stayed in the rubble and we tried to set up a triage there because nobody else was anywhere giving us directions or telling us where to set up triage because nobody else was in the middle of the rubble but us.

So we just left our ambulance there and we just pretty much just watched until some of the firemen decided they needed their eyes washed or they needed oxygen. They would, you know, take turns coming in, going into the rubble, cleaning it out and then coming out and getting their eyes washed and getting oxygen, getting cuts cleaned up, and then eventually as time went on, more EMTs and more medics started coming to where we were and then we just started setting triage there.

We just laid everything outside around the ambulances. Everyone was just working from there. Then I saw my partner. This is like three or four hours later. We were so happy to see each other. He got out okay, which is good. Then we all just stayed in that level for a couple of hours, helping pretty much firemen, you know, just pretty much firemen was all that we were really helping.

Q. So nobody tried using the radios to get directions?

A. Well, I know my partner had lost his radio, because I believe he was in the building and whatever happened I'm sure that he lost his radio. My radio, the battery, I believe had died. Because from 8 to 4 o'clock in the afternoon, that's a lot of hours. Usually you kind of change batteries during the day, but my battery had died eventually and then eventually the cell phones started working, so then I started using other people's cell phones to call home to tell them that I was okay.

But I never called the Battalion because at the time, when everyone started coming to the rubble, they had Lieutenants there who set up a triage center and they told everyone to sign in with their unit. So that's what me and my partner did. We went to the Lieutenant, we gave him our name, our shield and bus number.

Q. What unit were you that day?

A. My unit is 38 Eddie. I'm always 38 Eddie. So we were 38 Eddie that day. We signed in so we thought everything was clear. Everything was good, you know. Unfortunately, because I guess of the catastrophe and just all the chaos, somehow they never seemed to tell my Battalion that we had signed in, so by the time I got back at the end of the night, everyone had thought I had been missing all day.

Q. There was a lot of miscommunications.

A. A lot of miscommunication. I mean it upset me, because if I had known it would have been such bad miscommunication, I probably would have thought to call them myself since the cell phones were working.

Q. You did the right thing.

A. Yes, so we stayed at our station doing what we did all day long. After a couple of hours we said let's just take a break. We went over to Beekman Hospital and we just kind of sat outside on the sidewalk for a little bit. That's when you kind of start like looking back at everything that happened, because when you are in the middle of the rubble, you are kind of just kind of like, you are not even in shock about everything.

You don't know what's going on in the outside of the world. People are coming back with these rumors, like oh, my god, they got the Sears tower in Chicago. Oh, they got the Pentagon. Oh, they got the White House. Everyone is thinking, you know, all these crazy attacks and you really don't know the truth because there is no TV, there is no radios. You are just kind of listening to what people are saying and so you just don't know what else is going on out there.

You are not really shocked at that point. Then like when you step back away from the site, Ground Zero, you just kind of think like oh, my god, did this really happen, like, look at us, we are like covered in white dust. We look like crap, we look like we just went through a war, you know.

Then at that point it was like bad timing. All of these news people and newspaper reporters just kind of came up to us, I guess because we looked the dirtiest, you know, because we were the only ones covered in white and they just kind of all just kind of came to us and just all of them just started interviewing us, like what happened, were you there, you know, did anyone live, did you see any of this. Blah blah blah.

So we just gave them a little bit of, yes, this happened, that happened, we were here and we were there. This is what we think about it. You don't really want to say too much. You really haven't collected your thoughts to really give a story or how you really feel. You are just kind of like yes, it was unbelievable. Yes, so a couple of those reporters came and started talking to us.

After a while we went back to the rubble and at this point there were many EMTs and medics in the triage station and pretty much nobody was really doing much, you know. I mean there really wasn't much to do. Like I said, all we were really helping were the firemen and they were little minor injuries, like washing out the eyes and stuff like that, so I mean, there really wasn't much to do, so by the end of the day, say around 9, 10 o'clock, we just looked at each other and said we are tired, there is not much we can do. There is no one here we can really really help.

So we just decided to head back and my partner and I, my original partner and I, said to the medic that was working with us all day, could you drive us around and help us look for our ambulance. At this point we had no way to get back to Brooklyn.

So we just drove around the hospitals and streets and miraculously we found our ambulance in front of the Staten Island Ferry terminal. I don't know. They had used it for equipment, water, soda, I guess, like, you know, refreshments, just drive back and forth to people and it was destroyed pretty much.

It was covered in white dust. All my equipment was gone and the battery had died, so the bus didn't start anyway. We couldn't get it started so we just asked the medic to drive us halfway to Brooklyn. He lived in Manhattan, borderline Brooklyn and so he drove to us his place and we called our station at that point to say can you get somebody to come pick us up at his house.

They sent, you know, a Lieutenant to come down and pick us up by car. They took us back to Battalion 58. I met my Captain and all the other Lieutenants.

Q. By Woodhull?

A. No, it wasn't the hospital, Woodhull. It was another station here in Brooklyn. It was either 57 or 58 where they were all stationed doing whatever they were doing. It was probably around 11, 11:30 at this point and the Captain and some of my Lieutenants were like, what happened. We thought you were missing, you are on the missing list. We didn't hear from you all day.

The Captain said, but then I saw you on TV so I knew you were alive. I go okay. They made us go to the hospital to get checked out, to Kings County. I had my eyes irrigated for like half an hour. My partner had really bad asthma so he was admitted overnight.

You know, basically that was it. I was just really tired. I just wanted to go home. I don't think I got home until like 2:00 in the morning. It was just a really tiring, really tiring. That was basically all we did all day. The excitement was obviously in the morning, but after that all happened, it really wasn't much more we could do. We just pretty much hung around and did little things.

I mean during the course of the day, we started going to pharmacies and they were giving us medication for free, so we kept bringing back eye drops and you know, Excedrins and Advils and burn cremes, and little medications like that that they were giving for free, so we just kept stocking up on it and just kept bringing those back.

Then you had some volunteer, I guess they were just normal pedestrians who were coming back and forth giving us bottled water and whatever, Gatorade or little candies, stuff like that, but by the end of the day, you had trucks of Poland Spring pulling up and all these other foods and, you know, the Coast Guard bringing up food by the water.

At that point at the end of the day, everybody was getting stocked with supplies by each company. So that was nice. That was it. That was just a really long day. Really long day. I mean I just slept all day the next day. All day.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT JOHN MENDEZ

Interview Date: October 31, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CASTORINA: Today is October 31st, 2001. The time now is 1012 hours. My name is Ron Castorina from the New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with John Mendez, Lieutenant Mendez. With me is Thomas McCourt.

MR. McCOURT: Tom McCourt, investigations and trials.

Q. Sir, can you please for the record state your name, rank, title and your work assignment?

A. Lieutenant John Mendez, Bureau of Health Services, Immunization unit.

Q. Lieutenant Mendez, on September 11, 2001, can you tell me the events that took place on that particular day.

A. Around a quarter to 9, maybe 8:30-ish, I went up to the seventh floor to get milk for the commissary on the second floor. When I got up there, Chief Ganci came running out of his office saying that a plane had hit the building. He told everybody look out the window.

So I went to the window on the seventh floor, and I observed the Trade Center on fire.

I stood there for a while, and there was a lot of people at the window, firefighters, civilians, chiefs. The next thing you know, we saw another plane hit the building. A ball of flame came out, and actually the concussion shook our building. We felt the concussion from it.

At that point I came back down to the second floor to see what was going on with the staff down here on the second floor. Most of the people had already gone over to the site.

Q. "Down here" being?

A. On the second floor.

Q. Where?

A. The whole floor.

Q. At Nine Metrotech?

A. Nine Metrotech, yes.

I wanted to go over there, but I wanted to make sure everything was okay on the second floor. I checked in with Mary T. McLaughlin to tell her I was going over there, and I hooked up with Dr. Ortiz. She's the medical doctor that was assigned to the floor for the day, and Jerry Finnegan is her driver.

Q. Jerry Finnegan is a firefighter?

A. Is a firefighter here. He's a light-duty firefighter assigned to her.

So the three of us, along with Charlie Dalton, another firefighter from the sixth floor, took some equipment and got in the medical car and started driving towards Manhattan.

It felt like we left right away, but evidently we didn't, because as we drove over the Brooklyn Bridge we actually picked up a probationary firefighter with his gear walking over the bridge. He got in the car. So now the car had five people in it.

When we got down on the other side of the Brooklyn Bridge in Manhattan, the building had collapsed, although we don't realize the building had collapsed, because there was just so much smoke we couldn't see anything. We didn't know what it was.

I thought I had left Metrotech maybe 15, 20 minutes after the planes crashed. Evidently it must have been an hour, because the building collapsed an hour later.

We made our way through the debris or the dust --

Q. When you got there, one tower had collapsed?

A. One tower had collapsed, the first tower.

Q. The second tower hadn't collapsed yet?

A. No. We were going towards Broadway, heading past City Hall towards Broadway. It just took us a long time to get there because the visibility was bad. We were going to head down Vesey towards the command post. We knew there was a command post somewhere towards West and Vesey, in that area. So that's where we were going to head.

I was in the back seat, and I saw Lieutenant Swithers. That was around Fulton and Broadway. So we were going to head up Vesey towards the command post. When I saw Jay, we made a left near him. He was covered in ash and dust. He looked to me like he was disoriented. So we stopped to help him out, because he works with us on the floor.

Q. This is the EMS lieutenant?

A. EMS, yes, captain.

Q. Captain?

A. Captain. He just got promoted at that time.

He told us that the building collapsed. He thought that the building collapsed and that a lot of people were injured or dead. He was trying to reorganize.

So at that point we made a left. We told him to hang out, we're going to make a left, park the car. We made a left away from the Trade Center down Fulton street. We parked right on the corner.

We got out of the vehicle, we got our equipment, we walked to the back of the vehicle, the smoke was clearing. We could see one of the buildings was down and the other one was still standing. But then all of a sudden that building started to collapse.

We just walked back into the car or ran --

Q. How far were you from the building?

A. We were one block away, according to this map.

Q. You were on Fulton?

A. I was on Fulton and Broadway, Fulton

Street and Broadway.

Q. When it started collapsing?

A. Yes.

So we got into the car, started it up, and this huge wave of debris caught up to us as we were driving away, and everything went black. We actually stopped the car. People were running by us at that moment. They disappeared. We didn't know what happened.

It cleared a little bit. The driver just kept driving straight, very slow. Eventually we ended up stopping at the South Street Seaport. That's where we ended up, on the sidewalk there.

We got out of the car, and we just hung out and hugged each other. Incredibly the other medical car -- we're in 33. 32 came from the west side when the building collapsed. They actually almost crashed into us.

Q. They came to the same spot?

A. Same spot. It was like a miracle.

Q. Who was in that car?

A. Dr. Garvey and Firefighter Velker. He was a light-duty fireman, Pete Velker.

We stayed there for a long time, because there was really no visibility and we didn't know what to do.

Q. Were there any radio communications?

A. No, not really. The radio was on, but really we were all shaken up. A guy told us the phone was working, so we decided to call our families and let them know we were alive, because we knew a lot of people were dead. That's the first thing we did.

We got back in the car, and we drove as close as we could to the Trade Center, probably back to the same location on Fulton Street, and parked it there. We parked away from the building so we could get access to the car and drive it out.

Q. Your visibility was bad at this time?

A. Yes. It looked like a giant snowstorm. There were all particles in the air and there were six inches of dust on the ground, and there were millions of pieces of paper blowing about. Buildings were on fire everywhere in the Trade Center complex.

Then we met Dr. Kelly and Dr. Prezant.

They were wandering down the street. There was a Duane Reade drugstore on the corner of Barclay and Broadway, and we cut it open. The firemen cut it open, and they made it into like a medical -- actually it was the Woolworth Building. It was a Duane Reade next to the Woolworth Building.

We cut the Duane Reade open to get supplies, and we set up a surgical area because there were doctors that were coming to the scene and they were going to do operations right there like a MASH tent. The only problem was over the next 12 hours they didn't get one patient because there was no one left.

From that point, after helping them set up -- I don't know how long that took -- me and Firefighter Finnegan, we just sort of toured the site to try to help out. We walked around the whole World Trade Center complex several times in 15 hours.

The only body I saw was Chief Ganci. We ended up in the back of the atrium as they were pulling his body out. A fireman was carrying his remains down the stairs, his head, and the other firefighters were carrying the rest of his body in a basket. Chief Turi was there. We start crying. They placed his body on the ground, and we all kneeled around it and prayed. They took his body to an ambulance and they took it away.

At that point all the other chiefs converged at Vesey and West, Chief Turi, Chief Nigro, Chief Callan, I think Chief Fellini, and they sort of organized how they were going to fight the fires and organize the men who were left.

I didn't stay there. I just went back. I kept checking in with Dr. Kelly. Then I would walk around again and kept checking in with her, making sure everything was okay.

Eventually later in the day we had to evacuate that site because number seven collapsed. Prior to its collapse, we evacuated all the supplies, the doctors, and moved over to Pace University into the lobby, and they set up another medical area. Most injuries we treated were eye injuries from the debris, basically cleaning out people's eyes.

From there it was nightfall, 8, 9, 10:00. I don't know what time it was. Eventually I escorted Dr. Kelly and Prezant back to the medical office, and we stayed there all night.

That's it.

Q. Anything else you can think of or want to add?

A. I can't think of anything.

Q. Okay.

MR. CASTORINA: The time now is 10:25. This concludes the interview with Lieutenant Mendez.

Thank you, Lieutenant Mendez.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT EMILIO PEREZ

Interview Date: October 31, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 31, 2001. The time is now 0603 hours. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

Q. Conducting an interview with?

A. Emilio Perez, Battalion 14, shield number 3132.

Q. Okay. Mr. Perez is an EMT. We are currently at EMS Battalion 14. This interview is being conducted regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Okay, Emilio, if you begin with when you were assigned to the job?

A. Okay. The morning of September 11 we were at a restaurant called Sunlight located at 149 Street and Walton Avenue. We were ordering breakfast. At about 9:35, about 9. It was 9, about 9:10 when the first tower was struck. We realized it on the television as posted. We noticed that everyone was watching. At 9:10 the plane flew in through the second tower. We were assigned to the assignment from that time on, from 9:10 on.

We responded to the incident via Central Parkway, down Broadway, came across Houston Street, turned left on Greenwich and started approaching the scene. When we approached, we could see the towers in flames. We got closer, we made a right turn on Barclay Street. Parked on West Street off of Barclay at about 9:35.

One of the officers told us to approach the scene, park the vehicle and just set up. My immediate supervisors requested to find out where the triage site was located and I mentioned to him where it was located but he told me to respond to it and I refused to. I set up triage at that area where (inaudible) should be.

We started unloading the equipment to set up for the incident and I think it was about 5 minutes after we set up the equipment, we started approaching to try to assist those injured, we saw the building collapse. Plenty of firefighters reported in. We were following them and as a cloud of soot and smoke started approaching us, we turned around, abandoned the equipment and started running. We ran for our lives, as far as we could. We kept looking back, looking back.

We noticed that the cloud was so thick and deep that we were overcome by it, so we started to turn around, walking back to try to help people, but there was so many people to help, so many firefighters. They were full of soot.

Initially in our area was plenty of firefighters and that's all I could see. They all wanted to find out where all the men were. So our initial response there was to treat all of them that were injured, coming towards us. Their eyes were burning, they couldn't breathe. So we were using saline, we were using the little bit of equipment we had. Saline, we were dousing them. We were able to open up the back of the vehicle to try to get more access to equipment, but we were overcome.

We realized that -- I realized there wasn't going to be enough water to help the firefighters for cleaning the soot and debris from them. What I did was I approached one of the fire Lieutenants and started screaming to him, I need a wrench, I need a wrench.

The men were going right back in. So he stopped them and like two of them just dropped. Got me the wrench. I started opening up as many hydrants as I could in that area. I opened up like a good, a good 11 hydrants.

Then I was directing all the firefighters to go on into the areas where I was telling them to go douse down, this and that, but they were concerned for the firefighters, so I says to them, listen, all your friends are all over there. All your men are right there by the hydrant. Just go over there. You will find them. Just by me directing them in that direction and being -- using the tone of voice that I did, it helped them because they approached -- but they didn't find the men they were looking for, they were being taken care of.

The FBI was there. The CIA was there. Guys with suits there. They were telling me who they were and I was directing and grabbing them and all I could do was just grab them and direct them to water. So then after I realized that, we just kept helping, kept helping, kept helping, we tried to make another approach to go back to assist those that were underneath the collapse.

So when we tried to make that second approach is when the second tower came at you. The Engine Company that had gone into the right side was just wiped out. As the second one collapsed, we just started to turn around again. It was here we go again, start running. This time we were engulfed with the stuff. People were behind us. We started running as far as we can again. Now we couldn't see much. This was like about a good, a few minutes after the first building had collapsed.

There is a whole lot of things were going on, you know, people were running out of there. There was firefighters with police officers and firefighters just trying to set up. Some of them, it just overcome. As these guys got cleaned up and they were ready to walk right back in. They were like let's go. Some were in groups ready to go in and once that second building collapsed, and then people started running, more firefighters were coming out filled with the soot. People were running, so this time we started running so far that the cloud was still following us, you know.

There was a building over there. I think it was the school. I think it was Stuyvesant. They said run inside, run inside. So the clouds kept coming closer, we just kept -- I stopped, my partner stopped, we just kept directing people into the building. I think to Stuyvesant Street, Stuyvesant High School.

So I remember the last person I ran into was an oriental. I told my partner at the time, go ahead, check inside, see how many people in there. He told me there is thousands of people inside the school. I stayed outside. I kept running back trying to help more firefighters, I felt like hours -- there was no help for them back there. So I just kept grabbing them and directing them to all the hydrants, kept washing them down, you know.

Then about a good 10 minutes or 15 minutes after the whole incident, my partner came out of the building. I didn't know where he was at. I started going back to the ambulance to see if he had moved it. After the first collapse I went back to move the ambulance to a safer location, brought it back a little further, when I realized that I found him and I tried to make an approach.

Then again, this is like about the fourth time after carrying everything. I grabbed an O2 tank. I told him grab a tank. We put masks, we took the non-rebreather masks that we keep as equipment. I threw an O2 tank on my shoulder. We took the stretcher, full of soot and all that. We was trying to make an approach toward the building.

I was overcome because I knew that alot of firefighters were caught under there. I didn't want to say they were dead because I had hopes for them. I didn't want to just count them out just like that. So we started walking in. There was a fire Captain, he stopped us in our tracks, got a few feet going north towards the towers.

He says where are you going with that stretcher? I says we are trying to help. He says you can't help anybody down there. He said don't go in there. He turned us around. That's when we just abandoned everything, you know, hell with it all.

I was so full of soot. I was trying to wash up and everything. Then I had it in me to return back and the ambulance was like -- it was just -- if you could see the amount of debris that was on the ambulance. I'm surprised I drove the vehicle, I just -- that I had it in me to get out of there. Then I get the keys and moved it back a little. As I parked the vehicle after we moved it again. Three or four times we moved the vehicle.

We went to one of the immediate supervisors that worked there, just saying what are we going to do. He says oh, well, just stay there. At that time someone came running out of left field. I don't know who the hell it was. Must have been a police officer. He said there was a gas leak. He said there was a gas leak. Man, there was like about three or four police cars that just took off. One took out a private ambulance's door. The other ones just was diving into the car and going.

I find that at this time, you know, there was all -- there was too much chaos going and the only thing I could think of was to board the vehicle, but at all times I was monitoring the radio. We weren't able to transmit at all. The only transmission I made was when I requested additional units, because we had plenty of firefighters that were injured. I think I was the only one that made the call. Might hear it on the tapes, might hear it on the radio, when you listen to 14 David, was the unit.

I requested additional resources, because we had many firefighters that were injured at that site. I was calling from Barclay and West. That was the only transmission I made. We really weren't supposed to make any transmissions, so I made the transmissions and then after that it was all silence. You didn't hear nothing.

Then after this guy comes screaming about gas leak, I jumped on the vehicle, all sooted and everything, we just started driving up Broadway. We drove up Broadway, we stopped. My partner was too -- you know, he was worried, he wanted to contact his family. I just continued driving. You could just see the smoke and the soot just flying off the ambulance. I'm surprised it drove. Parked. Here were people trying to take the stuff from the ambulance, can we take stuff from it. They were collecting from it, grabbing cups, you know. We stopped at a store to get some water.

We stopped at a store that was -- some gas station over on Broadway. I walked in to try to get some water. You know, and what really hit me was that, you know, you would think that after the ordeal, somebody would just say here, take the water, go ahead. No, I paid for the water, you know. I don't want to mention of what nationality I purchased this water from. So I continued from there on.

We had heard over the air, they said respond to Chelsea Piers. From there on you would get further info. We drove up there, there was a good hundred ambulances. We were at the tail end. I got out of the vehicle and started walking around. I was in a trance. I was, you know, nobody asked me anything.

People could look at me I guess and say you know I guess I was in hope. I have pictures there of how I looked when I returned here. So then I approached -- we were there for hours. The ambulance -- you could see the ambulance. We were still collecting soot from the top of the ambulance while we were parked by Chelsea Piers. People were putting stuff in their pockets and walking away.

I had fellow co-workers that they wanted a piece of the World Trade Center as a remembrance. So I said, to hell with it. We waited, we waited for hours. Then I approached one of the supervisors and he said, it's impossible to be relieved from the scene so (inaudible). They disregarded our request. Within the lines, the front lines they started moving units, so when we approached our turn, I spoke to Lieutenant Nevins. I said can you release us from the scene? No, join the party. Just park over there.

I didn't get that. People make remarks, but for me it wasn't that kind of remark to be made. After what I went through, I didn't want to hear something like that. I wanted to hear you know, man, thank god you made it or something to the fact that what happened, just somebody to listen, say let me tell you my part of the story.

Okay. You can return back to your Borough. I took the ambulance right from Chelsea Piers, drove up the West Side Highway with all the soot spraying everywhere. I told my partner, Maximo, you going to do this? Everybody was going, you don't know what's in this stuff.

You know what, if I stayed there, if I did not made the approaches I did, I would have been looking, considered missing. I could have left the vehicle stranded. I could have abandoned everything, but there was something in me that just drove me to come back here. They always say, I remember when I was growing up, you get in trouble, you always run home.

So my first thing was to come right back home. I brought the ambulance back, drove back to here. When I got off here and they said, oh, you was down there. People were very fascinated by the ordeal and knowing that I returned back with the vehicle.

Then I was here for hours, you know. I didn't know how to take my uniform off. I showered here and I had worked overtime that day too. It was an overtime shift, thinking I was going to be in the slowest unit that morning and it just so happened it was that call. Then when I ended up, when the whole situation happened, then I come back and recollect, you know, for a few extra dollars I could have lost my life.

You know, when you start analyzing things you see it differently, but in the heat of everything, I never had such an ambulance ride in years, because I work midnight shifts now. Driving down there through Broadway, and hearing all these emergency vehicles, you know, I realized that my skills are there, I mean, but I have to pull them out the pocket. The way I drove down there through cars, through cabs and through people. As you see the people on Broadway, how they were approaching, get out of the way.

You could see something major had happened, because the people in the streets were just like clearing the way, go ahead, you know. Something that no matter how many times you speak about it, it's always something that comes back to mention, because there were so many things that happened in that incident. I can recollect more as I continue to go on.

Driving to the scene I only wish I had a camera, because when I parked right in front of it, I could see the flames and the fire and I realized I was so close. That's when I knew that I had to make a move, being so close, so that's why I made that right turn and parked there, Barclay.

You know, when the supervisor -- I'm not insubordinate, but when the supervisor told me -- asked me where was the triage area, I mentioned to him. I says Rector and Vesey. You have to go there. I said no, I can't. I got to set up right here. Look at these firemen. Look at all of them. There is about a good hundred of them.

There is no -- there was somebody standing back there with cameras and things, walking back and forth. There was one guy who followed me throughout the whole incident, snapping pictures, videotaping, back pedaling. Every time I looked he was right there. But, you know, these guys are -- I am so into my job. My job is not law enforcement, so I just look to help whoever is coming over.

So as I was helping the next fireman, this guy was snapping pictures, so I think for every firefighter that I think that I was helping, this guy must have had many photos of me and that's the only thing that I keep recollecting, that if I can only get this guy to get me a copy of this picture to see myself going through this whole deal, because I (inaudible).

I see the photos of the chaplain when he was being carried out and it was similar. When I look at that photograph, I did that for a lot of firefighters. I mean I tried to come back with -- my only concern at the time too when the first building collapsed, is when I was really with my partner.

I held him tight, I ran with him and I told him -- he kept looking back, and I told him look, just don't trip. Told him one time, don't trip. I was holding him in the back and as we kept running, I mentioned that statement. Had he tripped I know I was going to leave him. Because there was concern for my life. I was worried about me.

From then on I just -- what I'm going through now is being reborn. I find myself to be more in the gym. I'm working a lot. I'm not normally a work horse, but I tend to try to ignore it totally. This incident with all the anthrax and all that, I don't even want to hear about that. It just started then. After that I returned back the third day.

I knew -- I had hope, but I sensed that there was a lot of dead people. I didn't want to return. After the third day, then I went down there and I returned back to Ground Zero to an area called the hole. I guess my first approach in realizing what they were going through, the rescue phase of it.

At the time I could see there was just -- I found out that there was a makeshift morgue and just being there for the first time and pulling out one body, I says, you know, I said I seen enough. At that time we went out on our own, because we was having problems with being used properly down in that area, as EMS employees.

So we went on our own time and realized that -- tried to help as volunteers instead of being on a unit or assigned by staff. They would allow us to go down there and do what? Issue water, set up flashlights. Come on. There were better jobs to do. We tried to go down to rescue. We tried to help. At the time, I was devastated and I told my two partners, you know what, let's turn away from here because there is nothing we can do here. The greatest feeling of helplessness was there. Everything had to be done because they have to do the rescue and all that, but personally when I had that feeling of helplessness, that you can help nobody, the best thing is to retreat.

After that third day I didn't want to return down there. Not even for all the money they wanted to pay me. They were giving 15 hour shifts. I didn't want to go back.

Q. After the first collapse, you had your bus still on Barclay and West. Do you remember where you moved it to?

A. I moved it back -- I moved it back to around Murray and West Street. After we moved it from there, that's when the second collapse came. I moved it back some more. After the second collapse we ran. As we were running in the second collapse, that's when I started directing people into Stuyvesant High School. Up West. Up West.

Q. Okay. When you arrived on Barclay Street, you said that an officer told you to park there. Was it an EMS officer, fire officer?

A. No, there was a highway police officer.

Q. Highway?

A. There was a highway police officer. That guy was unbelievable, how he handled that situation in that area. He alone saved a lot of lives, because the way he set that spot up. He was directing people. He told me listen, don't park over there, because I parked there and he said move it back. Give them some space, give them some space so we can get out, so I backed it up. We parked it, we parked it across, right on Barclay facing toward the building. I had to back in facing towards the building.

You had to back in facing towards the building because I wanted the back of the vehicle to be open in case we had to treat the people and the equipment was out, so we had the back open. Back side facing towards the tower.

Q. Do you remember when you first got there seeing any EMS officers around that --

A. The only officer that -- I was happy to see him, was Lieutenant Albuerme. He is from Harlem. Then he was like over there, I know him for years on the job, his daughter attended the same school that my daughter attended. Holy Cross. He is the first one I saw.

Q. Okay, who was your partner that day?

A. My partner that day was Delgado.

Q. Do you know your vehicle number?

A. Vehicle number was 138.

Q. Okay. Any other EMS people around that you remember seeing?

A. There was another Lieutenant along with Lieutenant Albuerme there, I just can't recall his name, but I have known him for quite sometime, because I have seen him on the job. He was there with me. As a matter of fact, after the first tower collapsed, we thought he was missing, because we could see him when he made the approach towards the initial tower had collapsed. We didn't see him after the clouds came back. I didn't see him thereafter.

Then I think after the second collapse and everything was said and done, now we was trying to help, I guess, we had this instinct where we tried to -- I realize that we tried to find our men and the only thing I could think of was make sure my partner was okay and find out where the Lieutenants were at the time.

Albuerme came back, we were able to -- I found him. The other Lieutenant was with him also, hugged each other and we couldn't believe. Then they started giving me directions on where to set up again. We were just trying to adhere to their demands as best we could.

Q. Any other thoughts or comments you would like to add?

A. Well, you know, what I have to say is that I'm very fortunate. Like I said when I got back, I am alive, so I must live. I survived through the twin towers collapse, so I'm fortunate. It wasn't my time.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay, thank you. The time is now 0628 hours. The interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT FREDDY BURGOS

Interview Date: October 31, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

F. BURGOS

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 31, 2001. The time is now 0719 hours.

Q. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York conducting an interview with --

A. Freddy Burgos, emergency medical technician for the Department of Fire.

Q. Of EMS Battalion 14. This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 14 and is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Freddy, just begin with when you were assigned to the job?

A. We got assigned to the job. We were responding from the Bronx, down the FDR Highway. As we approached, we see the two burning buildings. Apparently both aircrafts had already crashed into the building.

As we got downtown, we went through traffic to try and find the staging. We finally get to arrive at our staging area and we pull up. To my right I see one of the towers, I believe it's the first one that came down. In front of me on the other side of the street, there is numerous ambulances there.

So I decided I didn't want to put myself right in the middle of it, so I backed my ambulance up to the opposite corner. Just then a rumble was heard, and then after it goes black and pieces of metal and so forth and so forth started falling on the ambulance. It goes completely black.

Thereafter, once it cleared up, I told my partner once it clears up we will get out, get the equipment and we will get out of the vehicle, because we were still in the vehicle. We were actually a little too close. That's where we wanted to go. When the first building came down, after the dust lifted from that one, in front of me, the other ambulances, most of them not Fire Department, private or some other ambulances, burning. I witnessed one vehicle crushed. I witnessed a limb inside the vehicle. There was obviously a person must have been dead inside it. The driver of the vehicle I believe it was.

What else do I say. Me and my partner, Karen Lamanna, get out of the vehicle. We put our equipment on the stretcher. We come down walking, or actually running back to any open buildings, where we could go inside with our equipment. People were in there and set up a little triage area. Little bit of that stuff. Not much thereafter, prior to the second building coming down.

Fire Department personnel and PD personnel running into the building saying it's safe. Other people in there, including ourselves, were evacuated from that building and moved further away from the incident. As everybody was moving away, we are getting everybody. You could see obviously the body parts that were right next to us.

My partner goes one way. I go back to the ambulance to pick up some more O2 tanks and just prior to getting to the bus, I hear the rumble and I drop everything and I run out. As I'm running, I take a look back, see the cloud of dust coming at me and I go into one of the buildings with a little walkway type of deal and ducked in there and see everything come by, it goes completely black. I waited a little bit before I came out. Come out and I'm walking to find Fire Department personnel.

I started walking towards the water. I guess I figured if anything else came down, I'd go in the water. I walked alongside the water, until I wound up at one of the -- West Street or Chambers, I'm not exactly sure where it was. I walked over. I spoke to a Captain. I forget which Captain it was. I think it was Captain Rivera. He was looking at me and I'm all dusty and I'm white and so forth, and he says well, where is your partner, I said I think she is dead.

He takes me to the MERV, puts me in there and from then on I stood there. Not too long before I walked up to -- caught a ride actually, up to the Chelsea Piers where everything was being stationed at. Before you knew it, that was the whole day. From there we got shipped back here. That was about it.

Q. Okay. When you first got there, were you on the West Side Highway, West Street?

A. I was right along the West Side Highway, parallel.

Q. Somewhere around Liberty?

A. Right.

Q. Okay. When the building came, the first building came down, after you got your stuff out of the bus.

A. My stuff was still in the bus. When the first building came down, we were in the bus when the first building came down.

Q. After that, when you got out of the bus, okay, did you come across West Side Highway, did you head west, do you remember?

A. I think I went down -- these buildings along this side here. We got out of the bus and we came down, down south into one of the buildings in there. That's where we set up our staging area. That lasted about 15 minutes, before somebody else came in and said it's not safe. We came back out and I went to my bus real quick to get more O2 tanks and everybody was going south. That's the last I saw of my partner, by the way.

Q. She was heading south?

A. If I remember correctly, she was heading south on the West Side Highway.

Q. Okay.

A. I got caught up, because I went back to get more O2 tanks.

Q. Do you remember any -- when you first got there, any other EMS personnel that you recognized down there, officers?

A. Not officers, I saw a couple of people that were there. I remember I saw Patterson, I forget his first name.

Q. Patterson?

A. One of the workers that was there got hit by something coming down and he hurt his arm. That I remember. Somewhere along the way, there was another EMT, I don't remember who he was. We helped him, he helped us with all our shit. I don't know where his bus was. I don't think he did either. That was -- the point we came down, when I came out of that building, after the second tower came down, I was alone here.

By this time, when building number two came down, I was alone. I didn't know where anybody was. I commenced going before the second building came down and jumping into one of these buildings. I remember falling on my face a couple of times. I kept tripping over body parts. Like they were covered by dust, so I couldn't see where I was going.

After that I came out and I started walking towards the water. I kept looking at the water because I kept saying to myself, if something else comes down, I'm going to jump in the water.

Q. You could see the Hudson from where you were on the west side?

A. I knew it was there. It was partially blocked, but I knew it was there. My wife works at World Financial Center. So I knew the water was there. From then on I met up with -- as we were walking along the water, I met -- started to see people, bump into people. A couple I knew, a couple of people. Joey Conzo, that was it. Until I finally got to the (inaudible) from.

Q. Once you reached the Hudson, you went north towards Chambers?

A. Started walking up towards Chambers where --- somebody said something about Chambers as far as West Street, or whatever that street was, as far as the first safety area. So that's basically where I kept heading, along the water. Basically kept heading that up that way; rubble, mess, shit like that, body parts everywhere.

Q. Yes, yes.

A. (inaudible).

Q. Do you remember offhand what vehicle you were in, the vehicle number that day?

A. I think it was 448, but I can't be sure.

Q. What was your partner's name?

A. Karen Lamanna. She was ALS. I was working overtime that day. I wasn't even supposed to be working. I was off that day. I came in for overtime and that was my first job.

Q. Okay.

A. (inaudible).

Q. Okay. Any thoughts or comments?

A. We were too close, we were too fucking close. It wasn't just EMS. It was the entire system. Too close. That's about my only opinion that, too damn close.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay, the time is now 0731. The interview is concluded. The interview date was October 31, 2001, not as previously stated August 31, 2001.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

SUPERVISOR FIRE MARSHAL BRIAN GROGAN

Interview Date: October 31, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

FIRE MARSHAL RIGNOLA: I'm Sal Rignola. I'm here with my partner, Cliff Krug. I'm on the eighth floor at Nine Metrotech, Fire Department headquarters. The day is October 31st, 2001. I'm here to interview Supervisor Fire Marshal Grogan about the events that happened on September 11th, 2001.

Q. Fire Marshal Grogan, can you tell me how you responded, how you became aware of the incident that happened on September 11th and how you proceeded to the location.

A. I was working a Brooklyn base. I heard on the department radio -- I'm pretty sure it was Chief Barbara. He was calling for every available ambulance that they could get. It was kind of strange to hear something like that, like what was going on.

I jumped out of the chair, and I heard the guys in the squad room pointing to the TV. They were yelling, "Look at this. Boss, come over here. Take a look at this thing." I looked up, and the Trade Center, tower one, was hit. We didn't know how or what or what was causing it, but you could see the fire.

When we looked out the bay window on the side of the building, you could see the tower clear as day. There was black smoke billowing out of this thing.

What did I do? I was sitting there. I think my wife called, and I told her to turn the television on, take a look at what was on TV. Then with that, we got a call from headquarters. I assume it was headquarters. I don't know who it was from at this point. Somebody was telling us, everybody get down there, everybody had to turn out to this thing.

So I was in the office when that call came in. I went back out to the TV. As I was getting the guys together, I looked up at the television and I saw the explosion of the second tower.

Q. The second plane coming in?

A. I didn't see the second plane, because the picture that we had I think was from the north view of the south tower. You could see that big explosion, that gas that exploded out I guess it would be the north side of the tower.

Got everybody together. I think it was at that point I heard the total recall, or it may have been before that, on the radio. There was so much traffic on it.

Q. You're speaking of the department radio?

A. The department radio, yeah.

So we got our stuff together, threw it in the car. Everybody left.

Q. Were you by yourself?

A. I drove with I'm pretty sure it was Stevie Heavey. I'm pretty sure he was with me. It was just him and myself.

We went down past the Army terminal to get onto the ramp of the northbound BQE. We went around a cop car. We got up onto the ramp, and there was a motorcycle cop right in front of us. He was going down the left lane. It just opened up. It never usually opens up for you, that road. It just happened to open up. Freaky thing it was.

We made it into Manhattan. We had the full view of the two towers the whole time, the whole trip in, which took only about five minutes.

Q. How did you go to Manhattan? Through the tunnel? Brooklyn Bridge?

A. We went through the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. We went through the tunnel, and as soon as we came out onto West Street, I pulled the car over and just parked right there.

Q. Do you recall --

A. Where is it on here? Here's the tunnel. Right here. As soon as the tunnel ends and it ends right on West -- see this isn't quite right. But I pulled underneath here. You had the structure over the top of us.

Q. As soon as you came out of the tunnel, you parked the car?

A. Parked the car. We suited up, put our Fire Department gear on, what bunker gear we had, and we started walking up West Street. I don't recall if the other car was directly behind me at that point, because there was different squads working with us that day, the other supervisor.

So I was walking up West, and I noticed the first block we passed I noticed in the street right at the end of where the Jersey barriers are that split up the road before you go into the tunnel -- I guess it would be Carlisle -- I saw the first body or parts of a body, upper torso, no head, no arms or legs. I saw another one across the street.

Q. These are from the people that were jumping out of the building?

A. No, I don't believe so. I believe it was from the airplane, people in the building and the airplane coming through and it blew these people out into the street, because you couldn't have jumped that far. It's impossible. Some of them were burnt. Some of them were just a big bag of bone and meat.

We walked up further, and we saw other things. I saw hands, I saw feet. We got up to the pedestrian bridge --

Q. Which is near Liberty Street?

A. It's right on the corner of Liberty and West. We started to stage some of our guys. As they were coming out of the tunnel, they came up to us and we pulled them over to -- we were going to go over to the command post at that point. We could see the command post from the other side of the pedestrian bridge, the south bridge.

Q. At this time was the command post in front of the Winter Garden?

A. I don't know if that was a command post. I think it was actually in front of the Merrill Lynch building, because I saw some of the brass standing over there. I saw the big mask service unit pulling in, and I remember telling the guy to stop because there was some bodies in the street. I told him to stop and go around them. Then I saw a guy from Rescue, Ray Phillips. He had walked up to me.

Q. Which rescue?

A. He was in Rescue 3. I don't know if he's in a tack unit or something right now. But he walked up to me.

With that we turned around, we looked across the street, and we saw the first few people jumping out of the buildings. At that point it started raining people. You just stood there and watched it.

We were looking at the south tower, and somebody had come up to me and asked me if they thought that they were getting water on the fire.

We were right across the street from it. You saw this white smoke. You couldn't tell if it was a line actually hitting the fire or not. There was a lot of black smoke above it. So it appears as if somebody was in there hitting it.

Then our chief came over, Chief McKay. He wanted us on the other side of the bridge, the pedestrian bridge.

Q. At Liberty?

A. The south pedestrian bridge. I don't know if that's Financial four. I think it is.

We were staging there, trying to keep everybody together to see whatever orders we were going to take, to keep the guys right there. We just kept watching bodies jumping out, people jumping out of the buildings.

At that point I looked up, and it was Joe Pasquarello grabbed me, and he gave me a pull on my arm. He said, "Get the fuck out of there." I looked up --

Q. Were you still on West Street at this time?

A. Still standing there. The building just started coming down. It buckled.

Q. Are we walking about --

A. Two World Trade Center.

Q. The south tower.

A. It started coming down. We ran up the little hill that was in front of the building. I remember him yelling to me to follow the building south. So we ran up on this little grassy hill here, hit the front of the building. I remember Dr. Kelly just passing me. Before she did, she was going north. I don't know where she went after that.

We hit the front of that building, and then we started crawling. By the time we got to the front of the building, you couldn't see anything. There was absolutely nothing --

Q. You're talking about Dow Jones?

A. It says Dow Jones here. I don't know if that's the building or not that's there now.

We started crawling, feeling the building until we got around the corner. It's a different shape than this. That's not the building. It cuts in like this.

Coming down the across the front of the building, and you get hit with stuff. It's getting heavier and heavier. You make the turn. There was a bunch of people. There had to be about five or six people in here. We came around here. We were going to stay there. We didn't know where else to go. I didn't know the building went down inside like this.

So we all piled up, and I heard Joe yelling to go down the ramp. There's a ramp down here that goes down to Albany Street.

So I grabbed the two or three people that were in front of me, pulled them down to the ground, and we started crawling. I hit something blocking my way. There was a fence here, something right across in front of me. I kept turning, right to around it, but I kept hitting the fence. It was a foot high or whatever.

I turned around and went back to the building. I could feel the building and felt over the top of this thing and just crawled over it. I grabbed the guy that was behind me, and we continued south on that ramp. We made the right on Albany, and there was a cutout in the building for a garage. It was a setback.

Q. So at this time you're between West Street and South End Avenue?

A. Right. We're heading towards the water going west on Albany. We were still on the property here of that building. We crawled into this garage area. The outside of the building and the garage itself was maybe eight to ten feet, and then there was a rolldown gate.

It was the first time you could see anything from that whole trip from the front of the building around to the side. You could actually start to see here.

But as we're in there, cops were coming in. We had all kinds of people with us. We couldn't get in through the rolldown gate. We were all choking and throwing up and whatnot and trying to collect ourselves to some extent.

We decided we couldn't stay there. I was telling Joe Pasquarello -- he just got in there. I said we've got to get out of here because if you could actually see parts of the building laying in front of us, landing and whatnot. So I figured we were going to get buried in there, so let's just get the hell out of here and start heading towards the water.

So we left there, and we went down the sidewalk. We went down over the next corner. You couldn't even tell that we crossed the street. We went down as far as we could on Albany towards the water and went to the first building that we could get into. There had to be 50, 60 people following us in there. It would be the Hudson Tower.

So we went in there, and some EMTs and whatnot came in after us. They had some water with them. We stayed in there for a short period of time -- I don't know how long it was -- 15 minutes. We figured we couldn't stay in there. The cops that were coming in were saying the second tower was coming down. We had no idea what was going on, and I wasn't going to doubt anybody at that point.

So I went out the door to find the water, because we still couldn't really see the water. It was only a matter of maybe 100 feet from there. You couldn't really see the waterfront.

So I had a flashlight, and it actually started to work in that area. I found the water.

I just turned around and waved to Pasquarello and told him to come on down towards the water. We saw the fire boat was sitting right there.

So we got to the water, and that's when the second tower came down and you couldn't see again. We started crawling or running or just trying to get out of there as fast as we could down south on the esplanade. There were police boats and whatnot picking people up.

We made it all the way around the battery, right to the battery at the end of West Street. The smoke was still coming and the dust and whatnot, because it was all heading south on us.

We had a roll call down there, trying to circle up our guys and find out who was missing and who was where. The only one we came up missing was Ron Bucca.

We stayed down there. The assistant chief came down and told us to stand fast until we had further orders. Then they relocated us again into Battery Park. The chief fire marshal met us there and told us that -- he made his way down there and told us that the command post was gone and Father Judge was gone.

That was pretty much the end of our --

Q. You never made it to the command post; right?

A. No.

Q. You know it stood at the south pedestrian bridge.

A. We had a view, though. We could see where the command post was on the other side north of the south pedestrian bridge. But as far as what people were there, I couldn't tell you.

Q. You didn't see anyone going in?

A. I just saw guys going in. You couldn't see who it was. It was crystal-clear when we were there. There was nothing blocking our view, but afterwards you see anything.

FIRE MARSHAL RIGNOLA: Thank you very much. The time is approximately 1042.

Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF FRANK CRUTHERS

Interview Date: October 31, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RIGNOLA: This is Salvatore Rignola. I'm here with my partner Fire Marshal Cliff Krug. Today's date is Wednesday, October 31, 2001. The time is approximately 9:50. I'm at 9 Metrotech, 7th floor, speaking to Chief Cruthers, who is the Citywide Tour Commander. Chief, I'm going to ask you some questions about the events that happened on September 11, the year 2001.

Q. Tell me when you initially received the alarm and how you responded and where you went.

A. That morning I was off duty. I was at home in Rockville Centre, and I was having breakfast with the TV on and the news break came on that the Trade Center had been hit by an airplane. I immediately went upstairs to get dressed, to respond. As I was getting changed, I got a phone call telling me that - the same thing and I said that I knew and then was informed that the call was regarding the second plane. So I was still in my house when the second plane hit. I then get in my car and I drove myself directly to the scene.

Q. So you had no aide, you went on your own?

A. Right. I know that I came on the Southern State Parkway and the traffic got very heavy and I got off and came through the Brooklyn streets, and as I was coming, I was still debating which route to take. I believe I came in the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. I came out of the tunnel on to West Street. I turned to the right and I parked pretty close to Rector Street. In the middle there were some angled emergency vehicles parked, angled into the median on West Street. So I parked there.

Q. West and Rector?

A. Pretty close to Rector. I got out of the car, got my gear on and walked north on West Street. As I was walking north, I contacted Chief of Department Ganci to find his location so that I could report to the command post for assignment. I also heard Chief Barbara on the handy talky --

Q. Do you remember the time you arrived about?

A. No, but that will become evident to me in a couple of minutes. I got to the corner of Albany and West Street. There was a pumper on West Street at the northwest corner of the intersection. I got a look at what was happening. I stopped at the pumper, opened the officer's door, I threw my shoes and my bunker pants into the officer's seat and put my boots on and my coat. And then once again started to proceed north on West Street.

There were some units there, along with a Battalion Chief and I gave them some instructions as to what to try to do. And while I was still in that immediate area, the south tower, 2 World Trade Center, there was what appeared to be at first an explosion. It appeared at the very top, simultaneously from all four sides, materials shot out horizontally. And then there seemed to be a momentary delay before you could see the beginning of the collapse.

At that point, I turned and ran west on Albany Street, okay, in an attempt to get beyond the corner of this building on the diagram marked Dow Jones. I got a ways down. As I was running down the street, the cloud kind of overtook us, then the air seemed to be filled with a lot of very light material. Most of it appeared to be paper. At that point, I dove on the ground on the south side of a car that was parked on the north side of Albany Street and there was some other firefighters there.

Q. Chief, that was between West and South End Street?

A. Yes. I told them to stay there. Some more debris came down, a little heavier but it didn't seem to me at that particular point there was any really heavy stuff. Couple of people - after the cloud cleared, which took some minutes, there were a couple of people who were injured. I reestablished contact with Chief Ganci after the first collapse.

Q. The first collapse was at 9:55, so you figure around maybe 15 minutes before that?

A. That I arrived?

Q. Yes.

A. It's hard to tell. Time was -- like I say I know all the things that I did, how long they take I don't know. It all just tends to run together.

Q. After the first collapse --

A. After the first collapse I spoke to Chief Ganci again on the handy talky. I never heard Chief Barbara's voice after the first collapse. I was again making my way north and West Street was strewn with heavy debris. As a means of getting north without traversing the debris field I went into one of these buildings. It's a building where they had an entry on the southeast corner of the building. It's a grade level entrance and when you go in that entrance, there is an escalator that runs from southeast to northwest to the next level.

I had been in the building before and my recollection was that if I went up that escalator, that it was a rather circuitous route to get from the south side of the building to the north side of the building, which is where I wanted to go. So I took a look around in that lobby, grade level lobby to see if there was access to continue more directly to get through the building and out the north side to get to the command post.

While I was doing that, I heard more rumbling. I took refuge on the west side of the escalator corner. Once again there was a tremendous cloud. It was pitch black. I waited again until the cloud began to lift. I made my way back around to the same entrance that I had come in, and then -- from that point, I don't remember what route I went by, but I made my way north up to Vesey Street.

Q. This is after --

A. After the second tower came down. I had given direction to some units working there. At that point, I was told that the command post had been drawn further back north up around Chambers Street. I made my way back up there. I met Chief Fellini. We exchanged what we knew about who among the command structure had been - who we could account for. Chief Callan was up at that command location. And Chief Fellini asked me if I had seen Chief Ganci or Chief Nigro. I believe I learned from him that Chief Cassano had been moved to a hospital and we set it up that I would be the incident commander at the command post and Chief Fellini would be the operations officer, and would go forward, back down to the - closer to the site, set up an operations post and let me know what he needed and we would try to start getting up and getting organized.

A short time after that I believe, Chief Turi showed up at the command post and some time later, Chief Nigro arrived. I believe he had been over somewhere on the east side of the complex and came down and made his way back to where we were.

Q. So Chief, you'd never seen Chief Ganci, you only had radio contact?

A. I never saw him that day. I spoke with him on the handy talky, both before and after the first collapse. After the first collapse I was unable to get any response.

Q. Did you ever talk to Chief Barbara?

A. Chief Barbara I heard his voice. I don't remember whether we spoke directly or not, but I never heard his voice again after the first collapse.

Q. Where was the command post set up that you were heading to?

A. My understanding was Albany - that the command post was somewhere in this area. Between Vesey and Liberty, but closer to Vesey.

Q. Near the Winter Garden.

A. From then, we continued to operate and we got word on the handy talky traffic that there was another group that had formed over on Church Street and Chief Tom Haring from the Eighth Division, now he's down in the Sixth Division, had set up and was operating on that side. We set up a staging area further up. Eventually we moved once things got going, and moved up closer to the staging area down a little closer to the actual operation.

Early on, there was concern that 7 World Trade Center might have been both impacted by the collapsing tower and had several fires in it and there was a concern that it might collapse. So we instructed that a collapse area --

Q. A collapse zone?

A. Yeah -- be set up and maintained so that when the expected collapse of 7 happened, we wouldn't have people working in it. There was considerable discussion with Con Ed regarding the substation in that building and the feeders and the oil coolants and so on. And their concern was of the type of fire we might have when it collapsed. They shut down the power, and when it did collapse, the things that they were concerned with would have been. That's about it.

Q. Do you want to add anything?

A. No.

MR. RIGNOLA: Thank you Chief. It's 5 after 10, and that's the end of this tape. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT FAROOQ MUHAMMAD

Interview Date: November 1, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

LIEUTENANT FEILER: Today's date is November 1st, 2001. The time now is 1035 hours, and this is Monty Feiler of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade Center Task Force. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command.

A. My name is Farooq Muhammad. I'm an EMT. Presently I'm on light duty at BHS. I normally work at Battalion 58.

Q. Of the New York City Fire Department. We're conducting the interview at the BITS office regarding the events of September 11th, 2001. Could you go ahead, beginning with when you first became aware of the incident?

A. Well, I was going about my normal daily routine. I was driving along to work. I was actually driving along Flatbush Avenue, and what I saw was a lot of smoke coming from the direction of lower Manhattan. I didn't know what it was. I just saw that people were actually looking at it. I thought some building was on fire. I didn't know exactly what it was. Eventually, I made it to this parking lot where I sometimes park the car if I do bring my car, and I went inside and these two gentlemen are talking and they're saying how terrible it is about what just happened. I go what happened? And they tell me that two planes went into the World Trade Center and I was shocked.

So what I did was I just left my car there and I ran across the street into the Fire Department Headquarters, where I work presently, and I looked at the TV in the waiting room for BHS, and I see that two planes had struck the World Trade Center. I was shocked, dismayed. My first reaction was to get there or to speak to somebody who was going there, see what the deal is. I knew I was on light duty, but I wasn't really concerned about that. I just wanted to get over there.

So what happened was I tried to find Captain Jay Swithers, who was my supervisor, and I found that he had already gone. He wasn't there. So I couldn't ask him and there wasn't anybody really to ask. So what I did was I teamed up with a few other EMS members. They were actually all paramedics. I remember the names of William Tier, a paramedic by the name of Bonnie, another one by the name of Roque Torres, another gentleman, I forget his name offhand. We decided to go together. We just left the building and we started looking for an ambulance. We just basically flagged an ambulance and it happened to be a private ambulance. I don't even remember the name. I think it might have been Associate. But we flagged them down, they stopped for us, we jumped on and we went over the Brooklyn Bridge and we ended up in that part of town, lower Manhattan, where the incident occurred. But we weren't right in front of the buildings yet.

What happened was we met up with some other EMS people and we started to decide how we were going to work the situation. There was just pandemonium there. People were running around, people didn't know where to go, people were shocked, people were just frantic. Eventually, an EMS lieutenant said that we should -- I guess they set up triage across from the towers.

Q. Do you know which lieutenant it was?

A. I forget her name offhand.

Q. Okay.

A. It was the first time I ever saw her.

So we said fine and we together -- we decided we weren't going to split up. This was the initial thing, we weren't going to split up, and these are the paramedics that I went with. We told each other let's stick together. So together we went in front of the tower and we found that there were other EMS members there that had already set up triage and they were triaging people who had asthma attacks, burns and stuff like that. I saw Captain Jay Swithers there, I saw Manny Delgado, I saw Lieutenant Bruce Medjuck there and -- actually, prior to even going there, I did see Ricardo Quinn. I did run into him and speak to him briefly.

Q. Where did you see him?

A. This is somewhere in that part of lower Manhattan, around there, somewhere around Broadway or something like that, somewhere in that area. I don't know exactly which street it was, but I did speak to him briefly. He had come in, from what I remember, an ambulance with somebody else, and after that I didn't see him again.

Anyway, we ended up in front of the tower and we were triaging people. We were giving them oxygen, giving them nebulizers. We had made a plan. There were ambulances out in front. We decided we were going to start transporting people, this is what we were going to do, and before you knew it, we heard a loud noise, you looked up, and the tower was collapsing. So we started to actually run for our lives. The debris caught up with us. We couldn't see, we couldn't breathe. It was just horrible. I was actually suffocating. I thought I was going to pass out and die. I mean, at first I thought something was going to hit me because there was debris that was coming. There was just stuff falling everywhere. I covered myself.

Actually, while I was running, I fell because there were so many people running and I got trampled a little bit, but I got back up and started running again, and then all of a sudden I just couldn't run because I was suffocating so bad, I couldn't breathe, I couldn't see, and all I thought was, oh, no, here I am going to die now because I can't breathe, I can't see anything. So I started screaming a little bit, as much as I could. I decided to see if -- I was like is anybody here, anybody around me? All I heard was keep running, keep running. I heard a voice. So I just kept running.

Eventually I made it to -- well, actually, before the debris came, while the building was still collapsing, I was actually telling people to run because there were people who were frozen, like civilians, people that were just frozen. They weren't moving, women. I remember mostly women standing there and not running and I was telling them run, run, run, you know, because they were like frozen. They wouldn't move. I guess I encouraged some of them to run because I made eye contact with some of the people and I started yelling at them to run.

So we started to run, and when I looked back, I actually saw the cloud coming, and so you couldn't outrun the cloud. It was just coming so fast and it was like, oh, no, here it comes, and then whoosh, it just passed us, and this was where it was like darkness and it was like breathing in like thick, thick dirt. That's all it was. It was just like every breath you took, it was like you were just suffocating because it wasn't oxygen, it wasn't air.

But after falling and getting up again and then just having the will to just keep running, that's what I did. I ran and luckily somewhere this door opened up. I didn't even know what it was. I ran inside. It happened to be a store. It was some kind of like fabric store because I saw a lot of like fabric stacked up while I was downstairs in the basement. There was a police officer down there. Somebody from the Buildings Department was down there. I actually think I might have his name because later on I took his card. One second.

Yes. His name was Michael Carbone. He was down there, one police officer, another law enforcement officer, I don't remember his name, but he did have a firearm and a shield on, but he was in a suit. What we did, there was some water down there, so we were like clearing our throats. There was like thick stuff coming up. For a good ten minutes all we were doing, we were just coughing and trying to breathe. But a lot of debris was coming downstairs into there also.

But after I regained myself a little bit, I spoke to this gentleman, Mr. Carbone, and the other law enforcement person, and I said I want to get back out there, see if I can help people, and they agreed. They were like let's see what we could do. So the three of us got together and we went back outside, and when we were outside, it was just so thick still, the debris. It was like so thick. We were right close to the tower that in that area the debris was so thick that after running a little bit, we decided to go into this other building that was some kind of like not-for-profit organization. I don't even know the name.

We go in there and, once again, there we are coughing and trying to get water, and we had some people that were there. We started washing them off, helping them to clean themselves off. There was a woman down there who had broke her leg. We carried her downstairs and put her in a comfortable chair because she was very frantic. She was screaming. We told her to calm down because we didn't want her to excite the other people that were coming in. So we took her downstairs, we propped her leg up, made her comfortable, told her to relax, calmed her down.

Q. Do you know her name?

A. No, I didn't know her name. None of the phones were working. We tried to call our loved ones. I have loved ones in Manhattan who worked on Liberty. I have a loved one who worked on Liberty and Broadway, another brother who was in midtown Manhattan. I couldn't reach anyone. I didn't know if they were okay or not. But luckily, thank God, I found out later on they made it out okay.

So while we were in this place, we were helping people clean themselves off. People were coming in like totally covered. You couldn't even tell what color they were, if they were black or white, because they were all covered in this debris. Everybody was like one color. Then they couldn't breathe. It was in their ears, eyes, and we were cleaning them off, and the stuff was like burning. It was like burning your skin. The stuff was really bad.

What we decide to do then was to get out of this building now and try to go back outside and help people. So what we did was we got these garbage bags and a bunch of these people that ran into the building that we were in gave us a bunch of wet rags -- I mean gave us a bunch rags that we wet. We asked for rags; do you have any rags? They found some rags and they gave us the rags and we soaked them, we put them in garbage bags, and we got a bunch of bottled water and we put those in bags and we were going to go outside.

But right before we were going to go outside, the next big, loud noise comes and here comes another big, thick cloud of debris. So it's like we opened the door and we see the debris coming and now people were running and we were like trying to let as many people in as we can. We're like okay, come on, get in, get in, and before you knew it, we had to shut the door because otherwise the whole place was going to be filled with it. So we shut the door, and at one point, you could see through the windows, and when the debris came, it was pitch darkness again. It was like you couldn't see anything outside. You didn't know what was going on with the people.

After that cleared a little bit, we let more people in and we helped clean them off, and then we finally went outside. I grabbed the bottles of water, and Mr. Michael Carbone from the Department of Buildings, he and the other gentleman, they grabbed the rags and we went outside and we started giving rags to people and bottles of water to people, like here. Everybody was like more than willing to take it. They really needed it. People were covered in the stuff, they couldn't breathe, they wanted to clear their throats. So we were giving it out.

I walked one block and then I saw -- I didn't see any EMS people at this time. We were outside. I don't see any EMS people. I see police officers but no EMS people. But then after walking a couple blocks, after like ten minutes, I see Captain Jay Swithers and I was so happy to see him. I ran up to him, I gave him a hug, I'm like I'm glad to see that you're okay because we were like so close to the tower that I was sure that a lot of people got hurt or lost. He told me that he was over there, he ducked under a truck somewhere eventually and that he was okay and I was happy to hear that. I told these gentlemen that I'm going to stay with him and they decided to move on.

So me and Captain Swithers, we started to just try to figure out what we're going to do. We started walking around. In the meantime, I was giving everybody water. I had cups also that I took because I knew that eventually the water was going to run low, so I wouldn't give people bottles, I'd put it in cups, and that's what I was doing. When the water was running low, I started putting it in cups, giving it to people. People were running over to us and asking us where do we go? What do we do? All we could tell them was go to the Brooklyn Bridge, go over the bridge and go to Brooklyn, you know, just stay away from that area, just go towards the bridge and try to go to Brooklyn, try to get out of Manhattan. That's all we could tell them. We didn't have any other advice to really give them.

Finally, we kept walking. We made it towards South Street Seaport area and we started walking along that and we were like trying to figure out where to go, and we were both like concerned. We didn't know if the next building was going to come down, there was another bomb, you know, it's like one of those tense feelings, it's like a war zone. There was the thick debris, it was like three inches on the ground all over the place. It was like walking in the snow. People were covered in this, people who had no shoes, people's clothes were ripped. It's just a horrible scene.

Anyway, a whole group of police officers were walking by and we asked them, do you know if anything is going on, any kind of like treatment area? They said, well, we hear there's something going on at South Street Seaport, South Street ferry area, Staten Island Ferry. So we walked over there. We kept walking and walking, and when we got there, we saw that they started setting up some type of triage and we helped set that up. There were IV lines and all kinds of equipment set up in the lobby of that area. Just then a whole like large group of firemen arrived from Staten Island and everybody was cheering them and they went about their business.

So I remained there doing triage, but Captain Swithers, he eventually left because he was part of the USAR team, Urban Search and Rescue, so he had to go do that. So I stayed there and I helped treat a lot of people who had lacerations, they had sprained ankles and stuff like that, and I helped put them in the stair chair. I helped wrap them up, treat them, put them in the stair chair and wheel them to the ambulances and put them in the ambulances and the ambulances took them. I didn't do any kind of ambulance driving or anything like that. I remained at the South Street ferry.

Q. Do you know who was supervising that area?

A. Chief...

It's on the tip of my tongue. I forget his name offhand.

Q. Were there any other EMS people there that you recognized that you may have come across?

A. Timothy, a gentleman by the name of Timothy, who was at BHS also. That was his first day full duty again. I saw George Gatt, EMT. There were some Metropolitan people there also. I forget their names offhand. Bruce Medjuck was also there at the time. He ended up there. So did Manny Delgado. One of the people in the ambulances for doing transport.

Q. There was a Fire Department car there, too.

A. Idris Bey. I eventually saw Idris Bey.

Q. Who is that?

A. He's an EMT for the Fire Department.

Q. How do you spell that?

A. B-e-y is the last name. I-d-r-i-s. We sort of gave each other a big hug and everything because he's actually a black Muslim and I happen to be a Muslim and we both like were just shocked at this because why would anybody do this in the name of any religion, you know what I mean? Just a horrible thing that people were actually looking at Islam as the enemy, not just those people who did that. So it was good to see him and actually just talk about it for like a good five minutes, just reminding ourselves that there's no way that we could ever accept anything like this as being Islamic, you know, ever, because we know from the Koran that this is an evil thing and Islam never teaches this.

Also, I had another EMT friend there, Stephen Valladares. Joan Hillgardner was there. Hillgardner. She was there. She's part of the union. She was just doing a lot of good work there, she was doing a lot of triage, she was giving a lot of people emotional support. Just a whole slew of EMS people there. We were treating a lot of firemen. It was just a very emotional thing. Eventually it started catching up with you, what's going on. So we did a lot of treating there. A lot of firemen came in with eye injuries and sprains and strains. We had cots and everything set up and we were treating them.

It was hard. We were running out of masks, nobody had any face masks, so everybody just kept breathing that stuff in because nobody had even the disposable type masks. We really needed the heavy-duty ones, but we didn't even have the disposable ones. Ambulances were like completely finished. Nobody had any. It was like people who were part of hospitals eventually would come by and say, look, you need masks? I have a few. It was like that. It was like we had no masks. It was just terrible.

Q. Is there anything else that you want to add before we conclude, anything that you think is important, that you want to reiterate?

A. Well, I'd like to reiterate the fact that, as a Muslim who works for the Fire Department, that I can say that, as far as my family is concerned, as far as my friends who happen to be Muslims are concerned, that this is no way, you know, this no way reflects Islam. Islam does not teach this. Islam is a religion of peace and it teaches brotherhood amongst all people and races. Regardless of what religion they are, you're supposed to treat them with respect, just like you would treat your own mother or father with respect. What you would want for yourself, that's how you treat them.

I think not only was this an attack on the United States, but the people who did this also attacked Islam because now here you are with millions of people in the world thinking that Islam is something that's of violence, when really it isn't, when really it's these people who chose it as a means to get their -- whatever they did, you know, to get that done, not to actually portray the true Islam. It's just something that they tried to use to manipulate. That's what a lot of people do, unfortunately, and a lot of people out there who claim to be Muslims do manipulate people into thinking that killing innocent people is good when Islam clearly teaches you that it's something that's not tolerated by God and never will be and it shouldn't be tolerated by any Muslim.

So I'd like to let people know that, hopefully, I just hope that people could realize that. People could just do some research on their own instead of just listening to somebody who says that, oh, no, Islam teaches hatred or violence. Hopefully, they could research on their own and find that, no, it's the opposite. It teaches peace and love for all humanity, whether they're Jewish or Christian or Buddha or whatever, rich or poor, men, women or children. It actually teaches respect for the most vulnerable, for the weakest, poorest people. You treat them equal, as you would anyone. There's no like you're better than me or I'm better than you because I'm Muslim. It just doesn't work that way.

It just hurts me that this happened, just like a slap in the face, that's how I see it. For good-hearted Muslims who follow the true message all over the world, I feel this is like a slap in the face, and as an American, I hope that as a nation we could conquer this terrorism, I really do hope that, because my family came here many, many years ago for a better life, to live the American dream. I was born here, raised here. I'm an American citizen. This is my home. I plan on keeping this as my home for as long as I live. I mean, I'm an American. Where am I going to go? This is my home. I truly hope that together Americans can overcome this and that peace could be a part of our daily lives instead of having to worry about getting on the train or traveling or driving in your car worrying about some kind of terrorist attack, or opening your mail, worrying about getting sick.

LIEUTENANT FEILER: Okay. On behalf of the Fire Department, I want to thank you for participating in this. Can I just get the time, please?

A VOICE: 11:00.

LIEUTENANT FEILER: We'll conclude the interview at 11:00 o'clock. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT PAUL ADAMS

Interview Date: November 1, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

LIEUTENANT RADENBERG: Today is November 1st, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. The time is now 0647 hours and I'm conducting an interview with...

EMT PAUL ADAMS: Paul Adams, Battalion 49, Shield No. 2212.

LIEUTENANT RADENBERG: We're currently at EMS Battalion 49. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Paul, if you could start with when you were assigned to the job.

A. Yes. That morning we got the job at approximately 9:00 o'clock in the morning from Elmhurst Hospital. We came down Queens Boulevard. We saw one of the towers had been hit, engulfed in smoke. We got across the Midtown Tunnel. We went in the tunnel, came out. We came down Second Avenue south, got over to Broadway. We got to the site at 9:15 at Church and Vesey Street, where we parked the vehicle. We walked down to Fulton and Church where they had a triage set up in front of the Millenium Hotel. At that time the second plane had just hit, just prior to our arrival.

We were asked if we had our triage tags by our Captain. At this time I just turned around.

People were walking out of the buildings. We grabbed one patient who we found out later had 70 percent burns on her body, second and third degree burns. We took her, a couple other people, and shot out of there, went up -- I can't remember the street we went up, but I ended up going to -- it was the wrong way facing Broadway in front of St. Vincent's. Me and my partner, we got her out with some other people.

Then we went back in, back to the site, back to the same area, the triage, and about five minutes later, we looked up, we were screaming, I looked up, I see one of the buildings coming down. I ran about 30 feet. I found out later on I went up against -- I tripped over a fire hose. I lost sight of my partner, Mous Diaz. I got up and went up against what I found out now is the Millenium Hotel's parking lot garage gate. It was closed. It had like a foot overhang.

I was with this FBI agent and I put my helmet over my face and just stood against the gate and took a quick look and here comes the debris from all the building. It lasted for about ten minutes. I couldn't breathe. My lungs were filling up with this stuff. I don't know what it was. I thought I was going to die, either the building debris was going to hit me or the building I was under was going to collapse or my lungs were going to collapse. I was hyperventilating. I just thought to myself I've got to slow my breathing down. I did that and that's the only thing that saved me.

About close to ten minutes later, the dust starts dissipating. I grabbed the FBI agent and I started another vehicle that was like 20 feet away. I put him in it. I said I'll be back in a minute, went around, got six, seven, eight other people, put them in the truck, and then I went back to the site looking for my partner, Mous. I looked around for a couple minutes. I didn't hear nothing, no reaction. So I shot out of there. I had the windshield wipers on for about four, five blocks. It was still cloudy out, dust.

I dropped these patients off at St. Vincent's and then went back in. In the process of going back in, No. 2 came down, and by the time I got, there they had already completely, totally -- you know, it was collapsed. I just went back in, got like another six, seven, eight people out. I had them in the front seat of the vehicle. I had one guy riding on the hood of the truck. I got them to St. Vincent's, dumped them out there. I know it's a shitty word to use, but that's just what it was, just get them in and get them out. I didn't take no names or nothing, except for the original, first one, the burn patient. There was just no time to be filling out paperwork or anything else.

I went back in again afterwards, looking for my partner, looking for Carlos Lillo, and he's gone now. I found my partner about four, five hours later, and I went over to where they had another triage area on West Side Highway and I believe it was Vesey, by the pedestrian bridge. I was checked out in the ambulance over there and I was fine, came back out, and about five hours later I went to Mount Sinai Hospital, where they kept me for like four hours, did tests. I had bruises on my knees, my shoulder was hurt, killing me, constant cough, and that's it.

Q. When you first got there, you parked your vehicle up on --

A. Vesey.

Q. On Church and Vesey?

A. Yes.

Q. It was at that point, roughly, that the second tower got hit, right as you pulled up initially?

A. Which are you talking about; the first one?

Q. Yes. When you first got to the scene.

A. The second tower got hit, I learned, I believe, as we were under the Midtown Tunnel.

Q. Oh, okay. All right.

A. It was about 9:11 or something, 9:12, the second one, the second plane hit?

Q. Okay. When you got over here into Church and Vesey and Fulton, any other EMS units over there?

A. Yes. We had the medics. They followed us. I forgot to mention that. They followed us from Elmhurst Hospital. We got the jobs together and we both went.

Q. 49 Victor?

A. 49 Victor, yes.

Q. Okay.

A. Carlos Lillo, who's now gone. We both followed each other in all the way through from Elmhurst right into downtown. When we got off at Vesey and Church, we parked the vehicles right there. As far as other vehicles at the time? I think there was like a private ambulance company there, numerous fire trucks. I really didn't see any other people.

Q. Any EMS officers around that you recognized in the area?

A. Yes. There was a Captain over there. There was Bruce Medjuck. He was there. He's a nice guy, good people.

Q. Do you remember the Captain's name?

A. [redacted]

Q. Okay.

A. Her first words out of her mouth were where's your triage tags? Where's your triage tags? There were people walking around with their green tags on and I just looked at her and I said are you kidding me? I said these people should be just getting out of here. Get out of the site. The buildings didn't come down yet, but it was still debris and everything else coming down in the area from the plane and fuel. So we just grabbed our first patient.

Q. The burn patient?

A. The burn patient, right. That was the first one that we grabbed with her friend that walked down the 83, 84 flights. I feel they're going to find a lot of people with triage tags on with greens on them that because of so-called people following protocol that was basically made for, I think, just like a regular plane crash somewhere in a field, somewhere in the ocean.

But I don't know. Like I said, you're going to find a lot of people dead with green triage tags around their neck.

Q. After you got the burn patient to St. Vincent's, do you remember what route you came back to the scene on?

A. Yes. Broadway.

Q. You came down Broadway?

A. Shot down Broadway, yes, down regular Broadway.

Q. Do you remember where you came west back into the site?

A. Yes. I'm not sure exactly. I did some fenagling to get -- you know, I like went up one block and down another just to get back to the same site again.

Q. Back to Fulton and Church?

A. Yes.

Q. That's when the first building came down?

A. Yes.

Q. Right as you got back down there?

A. About five minutes later, when we started treating some other people. There was one person that sounded like she was having an MI because she had walked -- it was an elderly woman. She had walked down 80 some flights also. We had just put her on the stretcher, actually, and that's when people looked up and started screaming and we looked up and that's when the first one came down. We pulled the stretcher as far as we could with her on it, you know, get her out of the way. Then we found out later, though, that she was all right. She got up out of the stretcher also. She seen God, I guess, seen the light.

Q. So after the first collapse, you took another load of patients up to St. Vincent's?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you come back the same way, down Broadway again?

A. The same way again, yes. I was stopped by a Chief. I forgot to mention that, too. But he asked me to -- this is the third time I'm going in. The second one I just came down. He asked me to pull over to the side. He was setting up triage. It was like five blocks away. He had three ambulances at the side. I said how many patients you got? He goes one. So I kind of cursed him out, and I said what, are you nuts, and I just drove right back in.

Q. Do you remember where on Broadway that was?

A. No. I have no idea.

Q. Do you remember who the Chief was?

A. Some young guy. I'm not sure.

Q. When you got over to West and Vesey, any idea what time that was? That was after the second --

A. Yes. That was about an hour after that because I was looking around for my partners.

Q. About an hour after the second tower came down?

A. Yes. Then I was just physically exhausted and I had problems seeing, coughing, my knees were killing me.

Q. Okay. Anything else you'd like to add?

A. No. I've pretty much said everything. Thank you.

LIEUTENANT RADENBERG: Thank you. The time is now 0659 hours and the interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER WILLIAM QUICK

Interview Date: November 1, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. McCOURT: The date is November 1, 2001. My name is Tom McCourt, Investigator, New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview along with Murray Murad, Investigator, New York City Fire Department. We are interviewing Firefighter William Quick.

Q. Mr. Quick, just identify yourself please.

A. Firefighter Quick, Ladder 134, badge number 12123.

Q. Can you describe the events that happened on September 11, 2001.

A. September 11, 2001 started with for me putting my children on a school bus at 8:30 in the morning. After that, I walked into my house. I was getting a box of tank top Fire Department shirts to bring to the fire house from my volleyball tournament. I was driving in my car towards Queens. I heard that a plane hit the World Trade Center. With that, me being a firefighter through and through, I just started heading towards the World Trade Center. I'm one of these guys that always carries his gear in his car and a fire extinguisher, just in case of an emergency.

As I got on the Van Wyck and as I got up to about the Grand Central Parkway, I met the NYPD and I followed NYPD all the way into Manhattan on their tail, as fast as I could. I drove with NYPD and met up with another madman ESU truck and he got me down to Church and Vesey Street, where I parked right on Church and Vesey. Right behind I think was Engine 21. I'm not even sure. I'm not too sure. They were parked right on the corner there.

Q. What was the scene when you got there?

A. When I got there the buildings were still on fire. As soon as I parked my car and got out it was mass hysteria. There were people running every direction imaginable, screaming and yelling. People were running past me with blackened smoke faces and people just running with terror in their eyes. No coordination or anything going on down there, anything like that. I started donning my fire fighting gear that I had in the car.

With that Lieutenant Eddie Datri, from squad one, came running up the street and he was getting dressed while I'm getting dressed. He looked at me --

Q. He was off duty?

A. I think he was off duty too. I think he must have just came from the fire house because he was still in uniform. He looked at me and he said Billy, can I put my sneakers in your car. I said yes. He said all right. I will meet you up on the fire floor. I said I will be there. That's the last I saw of Eddie D'Atri. He ran from Vesey to Church right between, I think, building four and five, right there. That would be this building here. This is the fire building, right, yes, this is the fire building. I was parked here on Church and Vesey and he ran down this way and of course the building is right here so I'm sure he ran right between these two buildings.

Q. Which buildings?

A. Between four.

MR. McCOURT: Between four and two.

A. And five, but he ran between four and five. I'm sure he ran to the closest building, knowing him. He was a great firefighter. With that he left me and I donned all my gear. I started going across Church Street and when I went across Church Street, I saw the door open on building 5 and a police officer yelled to me. He said I need help, I have people trapped down in the subway. They won't move. Like that. So I was like all right, I'm here to help. You know.

I think this man saved my life really.

Q. You went down there?

A. I didn't go down into the subway. I went in, and as soon as you go in this entrance, there is like either four or five escalators, I can't recollect, right there. What it was was all these people were bunched on the escalator. They all had darkened faces, smoke, bleeding, injuries, but they were in mass hysteria. They were like --

Q. Where were they coming from, do you have any idea?

A. What I think this policeman did is, I think, he took them from the north tower, maybe the north tower or the south tower or what have you because of falling debris and I think he huddled them into this building and walked them through the subway. Because they all had blackened faces and that's why I feel they were from the building. So what I did is when I got to the top of the escalator, you know, I have been in a rescue company. I'm pretty quick to adapt to situations like this. I just yelled out really loud Fire Department. All of a sudden they all stopped and looked up at me.

Q. Took command of the situation?

A. Right, and I just said there are ambulances outside to take care of you. Just walk out these doors and go to your left and go towards Vesey Street. When I ran in, I saw like, you know, two or three ambulances as I was running in. So I just -- but the cop, he said to me I can't get these people to move. I said all right. With that they all started moving.

I said look, you lead them out. So the cop led them out and they kept on going. There was like around 50, 60 people easy. I looked at every one of their faces as they went by. They were all blackened, bleeding, with different injuries, and so they all got out and all of a sudden I looked down at the bottom of the escalator and there was a guy there, an older gentleman. I said pal, come on, let's go, you got to get going. All of a sudden the guy looked up at me, and he was really bleeding profusely from the head. So I ran down the escalator stairs, I grabbed the back of his belt and I ran him up the stairs. Now I got back outside. He was the last one.

There were ambulances there. These people just I think, scurried, I don't even think that they went to the ambulance. I carried the guy to the ambulances and said here you go, to the Fire Department EMT. I said you will be all right. I turned around and when I started running along --

Q. Where were the ambulances parked, do you know?

A. The ambulances were parked like on --

Q. By your car?

A. Yes, by Church and Vesey. Yes, there were police cars and an emergency service truck right there, a couple of police cars. The ambulances were right there. When I started to run back, all of a sudden I heard the rumble. Now all of a sudden I see people running towards me. I said all right, maybe part of the plane fell off in the building or a section. I had no idea that the whole building was coming down. So what happened was there was by Fifth Street, there was like a doorway. It wasn't really a doorway. It was just like an I beam. These I beams -- this is four and this is five building. These I beams are right here. This is where I stood for the first blast and the entranceway was a little further up from the subway.

I stood here and with that, gray smoke came and all of a sudden, black smoke came. When the black smoke came it was such high heat that I had to get down on one knee. The heat was so intense that I laid on my stomach. I laid on my stomach. At this time I was laying on my stomach, my head was hiding inside my coat and I was saying to myself, you have been on the job 20 years. You have been through every tough fire in every situation. You have survived. You know what to do. Just hang in there. You know, I'm breathing inside my coat, breathing inside my shirt and my T-shirt. I'm just, you are out in the middle of the street, just stay alive.

With that, someone steps on me and the guy said "Who's that." I said Fire Department. The guy said: "I think I'm burnt." I said pal, I can't even see you. I said just stay next to me until the smoke rises. I will see if I can take care of you. It took a good ten minutes. It was a beautiful clear day. I explained this to other firemen, like I was in a bedroom with a mattress fire. That's how intense the smoke was. And for me to hide inside my coat and not be able to breathe is pretty intense. The high heat. This guy thought he was burned.

Q. Did he stay with you?

A. Yes, he did, yes yes. He was a Fire Department EMT. Then after a good ten minutes, the smoke lifted where you could see each other. It was just snowing out from the dust and the soot and everything like that. This guy had 3 inches of hot soot on top of him. So did I. I stood up and brushed my eyes off and got all the stuff out of my mouth. He started shaking. He was wearing a short sleeve shirt.

Q. He didn't have a -- he probably didn't have his jacket on?

A. He didn't have a jacket on. The EMTs -- you know, it was a crystal clear day. I brushed off his arms and everything and he kept looking at his arms and he said: "Oh, man, my arms are so warm." From what I could see it doesn't look like any burns. Maybe you have like a sunburn or something like that. I said "Are you all right." He said "Yeah". I said are you okay to walk and everything. He said "Yes". He just left. I never saw him again. He went on his way.

After that I stood there. I looked around and it was like the night of the living dead. It was like it was snowing out still. Everyone had the thousand mile stare on their eyes, like coming out from where they hid, walking across Church Street and just looking. I had full fire fighting gear and I stepped out and I just looked around. Then I walked across Church Street from the fire building and looked up at the building and saw that it was still burning. So I was like, all right, I don't think I have to go into the building because I got a feeling there are more people in the street hurt from the collapse.

So I started my search down Church Street, checking all the vehicles. They were all wrecked with debris on top of them, everything like that.

MR. McCOURT: Continuing the interview with firefighter Quick.

A. At this time I walked across Church Street. I saw that the building was still burning and I felt it was my need to stay in the street and look for victims from the first collapse. As I went down the street, I checked out every vehicle.

Q. Describe the terrain --

A. The condition of the street, everything was covered with 3 to 5 inches of soot. Debris in the street, it was everywhere. Papers, things from the office building. Further down towards Liberty, you could see parts of the building and everything like that, but I didn't get down there yet, by the Millennium Hotel. I wanted to make a diligent search of the area.

Q. Did you find a lot of people?

A. I kept zigzagging back and forth and checked out all emergency vehicles on the street. I kept looking on the Church Street side of the -- between four and five building and kept walking down and looked between four and five and I didn't see any people. People started coming out and looking like what has happened just now. Everything like that. They were all emergency workers and some were workers from buildings and everything like that. In fact, there were two guys that came out, and there was an engine parked probably on Dey Street or something like that, and there was an ambulance on fire.

So these two civilians started -- you know, to grab a hose to put it out. I walked off and searched the ambulance that was on fire and looked around. I looked up at the building and I was like, you know, the first one collapsed, maybe the second one could collapse.

I said listen guys, forget this ambulance. It's in the middle of the street. It's not a priority. I know you mean well. I said just look for victims laying in the street. They put down the hose. I said just look around for people. Everyone had this look of disbelief on their faces.

Q. Did you see the second building?

A. I could see the second building still burning.

Q. The other one, it was totally gone?

A. Totally gone. The smoke cleared up, just smoke laying over the rubble, over the ruins. I kept walking down. I kept zigzagging on the street, kept going back and forth. That way I wouldn't miss anybody across the street or on the other side. I was like, I would say I met those two guys on Church Street and I met maybe another three or four people on Church Street as I was walking down.

Q. That was it?

A. That was it. People coming out of the woodwork, just looking, you know. I kept walking back and forth, like I said, making searches. I made it all the way down to the Millennium Hotel where I just got in front of the Millennium Hotel. When I got in front of the Millennium Hotel, all of a sudden I had my back to the towers. All of a sudden I heard the rumble again. This time, I figured, I just started running up the steps of the Millennium Hotel. And all the windows were taken out on the bottom.

Q. They were already out, right?

A. They were already out. What it was was a men's clothing store in there. I remembered the old football thing. You know, if you are getting chased by a guy, don't look back because it wastes time. So I was just like I'm not looking back, I'm just running. I had surgery on my left knee, so I'm still a little injured. I'm still not hundred percent running. So I just kept running, running, running, and dove into a building. I looked at the building and there was two gigantic pillars in the building. I went right behind a pillar and as soon as I went behind the pillar, darkness set in again.

Q. Same scenario?

A. Same scenario. This time I'm in the building all by myself. I am in there and pulled my coat up and get behind the pillar. Covered, same thing. Having a talk with myself. Come on, you can survive. You know, hang in there. Breathe, breathe in your coat, breathe here. I'm coughing a little bit. This time --

Q. Did you feel that intense heat this time too?

A. I didn't feel the intense heat, but this time the smoke lasted longer. Maybe because I was inside the building or what have you, but the smoke lasted more than ten minutes and I was down on the floor. I would say at least 15 minutes. Like that. I kept looking at my watch, like how long can I breathe and everything else like that. I kept going for breaths in the armpit of my arm and breathing in there and breathing through my hood.

The smoke finally cleared. When the smoke finally cleared where I could see stuff around me, I walked out to the steps and it was still charged, still smoke. All of a sudden a guy came up to me, I think he was a fire patrol, because he had a red helmet on. He said "Who are you? " I said Billy Quick. He said "I have heard of you. I will stay with you. I have a good chance of staying alive with you." So I was like all right. Stay with me. I stood on the steps of the Millennium Hotel for 25 minutes because the smoke was so heavy and it took so long to get out, for it to get out of the street and everything.

From the steps of the Millennium Hotel, the wreckage that I saw was right across. These are the steps, that's the handrail and this is the wreckage that I saw. Famous wreckage there.

Q. That's all that was left?

A. That's all that was left.

Q. Pile of rubble on top.

A. There was heavy smoke all through this area. I just stood there. I then, like, I was like oh, if I go in the pile and start searching for people and they send another plane I can't move out there, I'm a sitting duck. That's why I waited on the steps for 25 minutes. In that 25 minutes I overlooked everything. Same thing, you know, people just coming out of the woodwork very slowly, very cautiously. You know, looking around, looking for people.

Finally after that, I remember looking at my watch. It was like 12 o'clock. So I guess I stood on the steps a little longer than what it really was. It was 11 o'clock. It was like the top of the hour. I set off and walked across the street. I walked on all these ruins, all the way to Liberty Street and I came back to Church. In the middle of Church, all of a sudden a black fireman from 10 engine came walking up. This guy had the thousand mile stare. He was just like -- I said, how you doing. He just, he couldn't say anything. I said all right, listen, stop, open up your coat, okay, open up your bunker pants, okay, do you know where your company is? He just shook his head. I go all right. I was like, all right. I said from here, do you know where your fire house is? He said "Yes". I said I want you to go to your fire house and just stay there. That's all I want you to do. He was a young guy. He was black and I could tell from his helmet that he was pretty new but he wasn't a proby. That was the last I saw of him.

So then I just went from -- I stayed on the Church side and I went from building four and I searched in building four and was going into offices looking for people. The building started -- was on fire, and the building just started getting engulfed in flames. I was making searches just as the fires were starting.

Q. Where were you in the building?

A. First, second, third floor. I made it up through the rubbish into the building. I started looking for people in there too. The place was so vast. I figured I would just stay on Church and just work that area. Go back from four to five.

Q. Did you find anybody?

A. Didn't find anybody. Not in the buildings. Not in the middle of these two buildings. I got to five building and I went inside and yelled for people. No people at all. I kept walking back. I finally left about 6, 6:30 that night. Just like totally exhausted. My car was parked here, Church and Vesey. My car got totaled. It got wrecked. Windows were smashed out of it, the front grille was all smashed. My insurance company totaled it. They were like that's it. So I lost my vehicle.

Q. Did you come across anybody after that time while you were, you know, for those couple of hours --

A. I didn't come across any civilians, any victims, any body parts.

Q. -- any supervisors or anybody else?

A. No --

Q. Independent pretty much?

A. Independently just going around searching. I was the first one on this pile looking for victims. I know that for a fact, because I was the only one walking out there. Then all of a sudden ESU cops came and they started towards the outskirts like that. Then after that when I left them, I just walked out and I said I bet nobody searched these buildings. That's when I went in the building and I started searching four and five.

I had been through a lot and it was pretty late. After hours of being there I just sat down. I had been through the mill here. I said I'm on vacation. So I guess I will head home now. I called my wife from inside. There were other people inside the clothing store with me at the Liberty hotel there, Liberty plaza. Millennium Hotel. The security guard, he was like do you guys want to call home, tell them you are all right. I says yes, please. I got in touch with my wife and I said I'm okay.

From there I just worked nine days straight down there. That's --

Q. Did you touch base with your officer at 134 at all?

A. I came back and I told him I was down there for the collapse. In fact on my cell phone I called my wife saying listen, I'm going in, there was a plane hit. I have to go in. She goes you are on vacation. I says yes, well, that's the way it is. That policeman saved my life. The one that came out and said I need help here. I said I'm here to help. I don't care who it is. That was a big factor right there. I would have been around the corner in this area too, going towards the building, just like every other man. That's the way it is gentlemen. I hope your news is good news. I hope that helps you a little.

MR. McCOURT: Time is 8:45. Concluding this interview. For the record the interview started at 8:20. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT ORLANDO MARTINEZ

Interview Date: November 1, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. DUN: Today is November 1, 2001. The time is 740 hours. My name is Richard Dun from the New York City Fire Department.

Q. Working with?

A. Fabiola Quevedo from the New York City Fire Department.

Q. We are conducting an interview with?

A. EMT Orlando Martinez, Battalion 4.

Q. Shield?

A. 2815 shield number.

Q. In your own words, can you describe the events leading up to the events of September 11, 2001?

A. Early morning, about 8:40, I was parked down at Church and Barclay, regular normal routine, getting our breakfast. While inside the deli a few minutes later, there was a large explosion. We went outside, the building shook we were in, looked up and we saw the top half of the World Trade Center on fire.

My partner ran to the vehicle with me and as we were running he called over the air for an explosion at the World Trade Center. I'm not sure if it was the first transmission, but it was 30 seconds afterwards. We were a block away.

Q. What was your unit designation?

A. Unit 01 Adam.

Q. Tour 2?

A. Yes, that's our regular unit. We got in the vehicle. We drove one block to Church and Vesey in front of World Trade Center 5, in between 5 and 4, right on the corner. We opened the doors up. As soon as we opened the doors up we got overwhelmed by patients just coming over to us for help. People were bleeding, tripping, minor injuries, some major, we had some second degree burns run up to us initially.

We continued to call for back up. About 4 or 5 minutes later, we finally got the first back up; that was the medics.

Q. When you first pulled up was there a lot of debris on the ground, what was the scene like?

A. No, no debris. Not where we were at. We were parked on Church and Vesey. Later on there was a lot of debris, but most of the debris was, I think inside the courtyard of the World Trade Center, not so much on Church and Vesey, not yet anyway.

Q. Was there a lot of chaos and panic at the time?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. People were running --

A. Well, they were running towards us, asking us for help, asking us for help, asking us where to go. A police officer came up to us in plain clothes and told patients in the ambulance -- we were packing the ambulance, we couldn't kick anybody out. Usually we have a triage outside sitting on the sidewalk. We just couldn't stop everybody. He told people in the ambulance it was a plane accident. It's not a terrorist attack. Once he said that, a few minutes later the second plane hit.

After that everybody -- they didn't believe him any more. Some people jumped out of the ambulance, some stood inside. Once the second plane hit, the shrapnel from either the plane or the building started hitting the top of the bus and the area around us. Anybody who was near the ambulance ran inside the ambulance and ducked for cover.

We closed the doors. People inside the ambulance were screaming. We were trying to calm them down, telling them to relax, including my partner.

Q. What was his name?

A. EMT Frank Puma.

He was calm though. For the most part. We did our best. About a minute later I told Frank we have to get out of here. It's not safe to be on this corner. So I jumped out of the back, went to the drivers seat and put the vehicle in reverse and went forward down Vesey Street towards Beekman Hospital.

We had a second degree burn patient with respiratory problems, so we needed to get him out of there. For our safety and to just transport at least, the busload of patients.

Q. At this time, both buildings were still standing?

A. Oh, yes. Once we started taking off, I guess 30 feet in front of us, there was a lady on the ground by the curb and she was just waving her arms. That's all she could wave. Her legs were crushed. Apparently she got hit by part of the landing gear, one of the tires of the airplane. There was a large tire next to her.

The person who was next to her, I guess worked with her, said something hit her. It may have been the landing gear. It was a large piece of metal that was so sharp it slit her whole back open, buttocks. Her legs were exposed, bones. I told Frank, jump out of the back of the bus, get the stretcher. So we took the second degree burn patient out of the stretcher, threw him on the bench. We placed him on the bench. We took the stretcher out, took the long board.

Q. In your words.

A. Yes. We boarded her as fast as we could. There was nowhere to grab her. She was too slippery, so I grabbed the hip bone. That was exposed. We just kind of picked her up, put her on the long board and we strapped her up, put her on the stretcher and took as much flesh as we could. It was just hanging all over the place, put it between her legs. Put her in the ambulance and rushed her to Beekman.

From there we dropped off the first seven or eight patients. Came out the ER after we dropped everybody off. Actually we dropped the first patient off, the lady with the -- that got hit with the landing gear. When we got back to the ambulance a minute later, it was empty, so I guess the doctors outside took everybody out of the ambulance. I don't know what happened.

Went back to the ambulance, there were purses, wallets, people's personal belongings in the back of the ambulance. I grabbed everything I could, go into the ER, dropped it off, told the nurses here's everybody's belongings. I guess they sorted it out.

We cleaned as much as we could, whatever we could on the long board, not the long board, the stretcher. So we just wiped it down. No sheet. Went back over there. Went back to -- we tried to go back to Church and Vesey, we knew there were a lot of people there, but we saw most of the ambulances going up, I believe it was Barclay Street toward West, there was a new staging area.

Dispatch said to go to the staging area, so we rediverted to the staging area.

Q. Buildings are still standing?

A. Still standing, yes. Very swift, still within half an hour, we had to be out there. We started going towards the staging area. We got flagged down by Hatzolahs. They had critical patients by the Church, so we rediverted one block and we treated a few more people injured there. Hatzolah had three busses, so we let them take care of them. They transported and we went back to the staging area.

We never made it there the first time. We attempted the second time. We got there. We parked on Vesey and North End, with all the other ambulances. Once we parked there, they told us stay by the bus and wait for further instructions. We stayed by the bus and waited, and I realized that we had almost nothing left in the ambulance. We depleted most of our resources.

I told Frank stay with the bus. I have to go to the LSU, Allan Cruz. It was half a block away. I said I will be back, don't worry. He goes all right. I went over to the LSU, got some water and some more supplies, restocked the ambulance. After I got all the supplies I started walking back towards the ambulance and dispatch on the radio goes everybody run north, the building is leaning. So I started running towards the bus. I didn't see him. I said maybe he left already.

So I ran this way towards Stuyvesant High School on the right. I went up Vesey, I made a right towards Stuyvesant High School. My partner Frank went to the left towards the water. He's a good swimmer. I'm not.

They said some people jumped into the water. I'm not sure they did. Anyway, I ran to the right. He ran to the left. After that I didn't see him for two hours after that, maybe an hour and a half. I presumed he didn't make it out of there. He presumed I didn't make it out of there.

Q. This is the first building collapsing?

A. Right. There was an explosion and after we started running, I was able to make it to Chambers and West, where I only saw one EMT, EMT Vega. She is new here. She was the only EMT I saw from the station and with all the cops and everybody else running, rescue workers. I grabbed her and I said just stay with me. We will try to get out of here.

So we made it to Chambers and West, which is about 4 blocks from Vesey. We stopped, looked up, waited a few seconds for further instructions. The new staging area was Chambers and West Street at that time. We waited there I guess about 10, 15 minutes. That's when we heard the building collapse. That's when they told us to run again.

We ran again, up north, as fast as we could. We made it to the -- I made it to the St. Vincent's garage, I think it's on Vestry. I ran two marathons in New York. When you got to run, you run.

Q. (inaudible).

A. Yes, it is. We made it up there. Waited for further instructions. Nobody knew what was going on, nobody knew where to go. They told everybody stay out of the World Trade Center area. Don't go back in.

It's not safe. So I was looking for my partner about an hour and a half. I still couldn't find him. I presumed he was missing. He presumed I was missing. An hour and a half later an ambulance comes full of soot. It's all covered in white and he is in the driver's seat.

Q. Was that your vehicle?

A. My vehicle, my partner made it out. I don't know how he did it, but he did. He was able to get out. He had one EMT on the right-hand side on the passenger side of the ambulance, D'Angelis. He was off, he just came out of his shift, midnight, and I guess jumped in the truck and he came down to help.

Q. Who was that?

A. Actually he came down in his personal vehicle to the World Trade Center. D'Angelis. I forgot his first name. He came in his personal vehicle. He drove to the World Trade Center, parked it by the World Trade and started helping out and he met Frank Puma there. They both jumped in the vehicle and they drove up West Street. I met Frank by the St. Vincent's garage.

After that we stood there for about, I guess another half hour, 40 minutes. Time is a little flaky, man. I can't really remember too much. Everything seemed like it went so fast. I guess half an hour. We all convened, we all got together. We met everybody we could and then started calling the station. Every time we saw somebody, we would call the station and we started making our list of who saw who.

Half an hour later they told everybody the building's leaning again. Everybody run north. Everybody got in their vehicles. My vehicle was packed with EMTs and paramedics in the back. Like a can of tuna in there. We jumped in the vehicle and we just gunned it to Chelsea Piers, the new staging area. That was the third one we went to.

Q. You are talking about the second building collapse?

A. Yes.

Q. The first building hit?

A. Right, the first building, it was already collapsed and after I guess the second building, they told us to start running again. That's when we took the ambulance to Chelsea Piers. I'm almost positive. I'm not sure. So we are at Chelsea Piers. We parked there, just waited for further instructions. We parked the vehicle facing south, so I made a U turn. Parked by the pier facing south. Went to the nearest officer who was there. The highest rank was a Lieutenant; no chiefs, no captains.

Q. Who was that?

A. May have been. It was a Lieutenant, I think Miller. I'm not sure that's his name. I don't know if you know him. Went up to him, saying we are 01 Adam, we are here. He goes okay. So we just stood by the bus and we just waited. We just walked up and down a little bit, staying as close to the bus as we could and started looking for our members, anybody we knew. That's what everybody was doing, just looking for somebody they knew.

There were too many Maydays already. We couldn't get through on the radio. People -- Mayday, help, trapped, can't get out.

Q. But the radios were working?

A. The radios were working. It was just very hard to transmit.

Q. Anything else? Any other people that you saw down by the site, like officers, Chiefs, things like that?

A. Chiefs. I saw Apuzzo, Captain Apuzzo. He finally came with a van full of people.

Q. Was that during the collapse or after the collapse?

A. That was at -- Chelsea Piers? I believe it was at Chelsea Piers. It may have been after the collapse. It was probably. That's about it. Most of the tour 2 I guess we saw there. Some tour one came over that worked the night before and were still lingering around came over. Tour 3 came a little bit earlier. They showed up.

That's about it. As far as names and who I saw, there was a lot of people. I can't remember everybody. That's basically it.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT GREGG BRADY

Interview Date: November 1, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. DUN: Today's date is November 1, 2001. The time is 10:20 a.m. I am Richard Dun in the New York City Fire Department working with.

Q. Fabiola?

A. Quevedo, of the New York City Fire Department.

Q. We are conducting an interview with --

A. Gregg Brady Battalion 4, EMT D.

Q. Gregg, in your own words and description please describe the events of September 11, 2001 this year.

A. Okay. I reported to work normally as I do, reported in at 8 a.m. At the time of the first crash, I was sitting in our office speaking with the ALS coordinator of Division 1, Esther Coarse, when we heard a loud bang, we both thought it was a sanitation truck, either dropped something or they crashed. Never thinking it was a plane.

At that time, we heard a lot of talking on the radio and I got a call from Captain Mark Stone saying to load up vehicle 849, a Suburban, and be waiting for him downstairs. As he arrived, we proceeded down to the north tower of World Trade Center. As we were proceeding through the Battery Park tunnel, as we came out, we saw the second plane hit the south tower. At that time, traffic was very dense and it was very hard to get through.

Q. Was it dense because there was debris on the ground yet?

A. Yes, there was a lot of debris on the ground. There was a lot of people looking up, watching, a lot of people not knowing what to do.

Q. Was it chaotic or anything like that?

A. Yes. Very chaotic, people, they were evacuating busses and stuff like that. I managed to make my way through and I parked vehicle 849 across the street -- across from the south tower on the West Side Highway. At that time, me and Captain Stone met up with Chief Gombo, and Chief Gombo and Captain Stone proceeded on talking on what courses of action that we should take.

After meeting -- after their meeting, Captain Stone proceeded to ask me to instruct 3 units to follow us into the north tower's lobby and set up a triage area. At the time, as we were going through, it was very chaotic. A lot of jumpers. Had a body laying about 20 feet to my right.

Q. Were the radios working at that time?

A. At that time radios were working, cell phones we were having a lot of trouble with. We proceeded through a broken window that the Fire Department broke to lead access into the south tower. We proceeded to set up a triage area. At that time plans changed and we transferred the triage area over to 7 World Trade Center, in the lobby.

From that time, I proceeded with Captain Stone back into the south tower to meet up with Chief Gombo again. Chief Gombo proceeded outside, so we went outside and I found myself standing underneath the south tower.

Exact place, I believe, was across the street near a toll booth. I remember a toll booth. At that time, as they were speaking we heard a loud rumble and we look up and we saw that the south tower was coming down. We all turned around to go run and all we saw was a building. I pretty much thought I was dead. I didn't see anywhere else to run. Although we saw a bunch of firemen running into an underground parking garage, so seeing that, I followed them into the underground parking garage and huddled against the wall waiting for the debris to come in.

Q. Was Captain Stone in --

A. Yes, Captain Stone proceeded in. At that time, we lost each other. After all the debris stopped from coming in, I turned around and I couldn't even see my hand in front of my face. I had no clue where I was, I was breathing a lot of dust and concrete dust. It and was all globbing up in my mouth and I tried to spit it out and a bunch of firefighters turned on flashlights and started yelling come towards the light.

We found an exit, the way out. We found an exit, the way out. We came out a side exit. Came out through a stairwell, a side exit of a stairwell on the bottom floor. Came around and proceeded around to the front of the second building. Actually --

Q. The first tower?

A. The first tower. We were standing right over here.

Q. The parking lot and the driveway is over here.

A. There is an underground parking lot somewhere over here, right?

Q. Right here.

A. Okay. So we ran over here.

Q. You came out in the Financial Center?

A. Yes, we ran underneath 2 World Financial Center and we came out in front. I don't know how we came out. There must have been a side exit out. When we came out in front it was just as dark as it was out there. You know, we came outside and I thought -- I didn't even know we were outside it was just as dark as it was inside.

From there, at that time I still lost Captain Stone, I hadn't seen him. I met up with Chief Carrasquillo. I met up with him outside. I know him from being Chief Ianarelli's aide. I met up with him. We proceeded to 3 World Financial Center, the American Express building and we -- they set up a plan of action. They set up a triage area in that lobby.

Plans changed again. I met up with -- I saw Captain Stone in that lobby. They moved the triage area to -- I'm not sure what the building is called.

Q. North End Avenue?

A. North End Avenue and Vesey Street, there is a building right on the corner. At that time we proceeded into the middle of West Street directly underneath the north tower. At that time, I had a very tight feeling in my stomach, just experiencing what I went through with 2 World Trade Center, being that close. I didn't feel at ease at all.

We were standing underneath and Captain Stone was speaking again. We heard -- I heard 3 loud explosions. I look up and the north tower is coming down now, 1 World Trade Center.

Q. Did you see any fire Chiefs or anybody like that?

A. I saw two fire Chiefs. I don't recall their names. I saw two fire Chiefs, Chief Basile, Captain Stone and I don't recall who else was over there. We were standing in a circle in the middle of West Street. They were talking about what was going on.

At that time, when I heard the 3 loud explosions, I started running west on Vesey Street towards the water. At that time, I couldn't run fast enough. The debris caught up with me, knocked my helmet off. I tumbled and then eventually I started running again. I made it behind a building on North End Avenue. I set up a triage area in that corner building and at that time I started treating patients.

I was standing around and I saw a whole bunch of patients coming in. I started treating -- I do remember treating a 3 star Chief from the Fire Department. He was on a backboard and we put oxygen on him, we are bringing in equipment. They were setting up ambulances outside to get them out. Was treating regular pedestrians, regular civilians.

Q. Was there a lot of chaos at that time?

A. A lot of chaos. Inside the building was Chief Gombo, Chief Pascale, Chief Basile, Captain Stone and a Lieutenant that I'm not sure -- I don't recall his name, from EMS. They were talking over a strategy of what else was going to happen, what they should do. At that time I left and I started treating patients again.

After that, I left with Captain Stone to the West Side -- we left to go to the West Side Highway. I'm not exactly sure why or --

Q. Did you happen to go north or south?

A. We went north on the West Side Highway, after they talked about what strategy. We started walking towards Chelsea Piers, because they set up a triage area up there. From what I remember, Captain Stone was injured during the second tower coming down, and we met up with Chief Randy Hirth and Lieutenant Grace Cacciola, and Captain Stone was transported to Bellevue for an x-ray on his shoulder. After he was released, we returned to Battalion 8 for about 20 minutes and we proceeded back down to Ground Zero.

After that, we were -- I'm not sure. I believe we went up to Chelsea Piers and we started --

Q. With Chief Hirth?

A. With Chief Hirth, Grace Cacciola and Captain Mark Stone.

Q. So Mark came back?

A. Yes, Mark came back.

Q. You all went back to Chelsea Piers and that's where you stayed the rest of the tour or the remainder?

A. We stayed up there for maybe I would say maybe half an hour, 40 minutes, then we proceeded back down to West and Chambers where they set up the command post for EMS, where Captain Stone met up with Chief Basile again, Chief Carrasquillo, Chief Pascale and Chief McCracken. They started laying out the plan for --

Q. Long term operations?

A. Yes. For long term operations and from there I met up with Chief Steffens. At that time I was acting as his aide because Chief Ianarelli is out on medical at this moment. We were instructed to head up to Chelsea Piers and Chief Steffens was to take command of Chelsea Piers. At that time, I acted as his aide, recovering information as well.

Q. Okay. So that's --

A. That's basically my experience.

MR. DUN: Okay. This concludes the interview. The time is 1030 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER DANIEL LYNCH

Interview Date: October 31, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. TAMBASCO: I'm Mike Tambasco with the World Trade Center Task Force. We are in the main conference room on the fourth floor at Metrotech in BITS. The time is 1632 hours.

Q. The subject of the interview today is?

A. Firefighter Daniel Lynch, assigned to Ladder company 7. I'm presently detailed to the Fire Commissioner's office as an aide to the Fire Commissioner.

Q. Would you be good enough to just tell us your story right from the beginning.

A. On the morning of September 11, I was on my way to the medical office. I was not on duty that day. I live on Staten Island. I was just about at the Verrazano Bridge when I heard a radio report that there was a fire at the World Trade Center. I changed radio stations to a news station, at which point I heard that there was a plane crash and they were interviewing civilians that had witnessed it. There were several different accounts; small plane, large plane, so on and so forth.

It became apparent that it was a large plane. By the time I got on to the Verrazano Bridge, I certainly could see that there was a large fire going on at the World Trade Center. There was a large amount of smoke coming from that area. I was continuing on to go to the medical office, which is at Fire Department headquarters.

At some point in the radio broadcast they had mentioned that another plane had hit the other tower. I could visualize that from where I was on the Gowanus. Traffic was starting to build up. I got off the Gowanus and was taking the side streets. Along the side streets I remember not only traffic being heavy, but large amounts of people coming out of the subway stations. Everything seemed to be kind of quiet. Kind of an amazing thing. I guess I imagined that it must have been like it might have been years ago during war time, you know.

Obviously after the second plane hit it was obvious to me and apparent to the news outlets that I was listening to that this was some type of a purposeful terrorist attack. Sometime in that trip I had heard over the radio that there was a total recall of all Fire Department personnel. I was on my way to headquarters anyhow, so there wasn't anything different that I would have done. I can recall just getting to the back of Metrotech. There is a -- on Flatbush Avenue. A van in front of me stopped, a fire officer got out of the van because I believe it was Engine Company 236 was en route down Flatbush Avenue, towards the Manhattan Bridge. A fire officer waved the Engine Company down and asked if they could wait for him to get on while he parked his van. They said they would wait. He parked his van behind Fire Department headquarters, grabbed his gear and got on.

I checked into it in the next day or two and it was Lieutenant Edward D'Atri assigned to Squad one, who was lost in the World Trade Center. When I finally got into the building I went upstairs to the 8th floor, asked what to do, what we should be doing. Basically the only people that were left on the 8th floor were some of the secretarial staff with the exception of Mike Vecchi. Mike was not aware of anything in specific that we should be doing right now other than let's sit and wait and find some direction as to what might happen.

A short while later, somebody had said that the first building had collapsed and certainly was very much a surprise to myself and anybody else that was present. When that building collapsed we had not heard from any of the staff on the scene, anybody from Ray Goldbach, the Commissioner's executive assistant, to the Commissioner, to the First Deputy Commissioner. Commissioner Fitzpatrick, Chief Ganci, Chief Nigro, anybody that I could think of that we would have heard from on the 8th floor they hadn't heard from yet.

I had made a determination that we needed to try to contact them in some fashion and I was in the process of getting a list of Nextel phone numbers so we could start to call them on the Nextel phone number. We didn't have the Nextel available to us to just beep them on the walkie talkie portion of the Nextel so I wanted the phone numbers.

In the process of procuring them, I ran into a Firefighter Patrick Cleary, who works in the press office. He was going to go over to the scene. Bear in mind that both myself and Pat Cleary were dressed in sneakers, shorts and T shirts. He said -- he asked me if we had any gloves around. I found a couple of pairs of work gloves in the Commissioner's office. I asked one of the secretaries up on the 8th floor if she could try to call as many people on the Nextel list as possible and has she got in contact or has anybody contacted her to start to develop a list of those people. At least we would start with some type of tracking point for senior staff, I guess was the thought in my head. Pat Cleary had in mind that he had to track down Commissioner Gribbon, who was his direct supervisor in the office of public information, who he had also not heard from.

We took the Commissioner's spare Suburban and headed over towards the towards the site. As we crossed the Manhattan Bridge, there were numerous people walking across the bridge, obviously had been involved in the collapse of the first building. Some people with no shoes. Some people with -- certainly everybody was in disarray.

We drove down along Bowery to Park Row South and as we got closer to City Hall, it started to be the development of the dust that was still floating around. We got to the end of City Hall Park. There was certainly some traffic problems, some increased dust condition. There was some firefighters in different areas starting to muster up in the area and head down towards the World Trade Center plaza.

Traffic caused us to go north on Broadway to Murray Street. We attempted to get masks from several different ambulance services and finally on the corner of Murray Street and Broadway there was an ambulance there that had a couple of extra masks for us.

Just as we got the masks and were trying to figure out what we were going to do next as far as head in what direction, we started to hear a rumble that was about a thousand times more intense than the sound of the subway that runs underneath the ground, but something similar to that. Like I said, a thousand times more intense. With that, somebody came running around the corner and I always make the comment that I don't think his feet were touching the ground. To me I would assume it was a police officer. He had a badge around his neck. He was holding a handkerchief over his mouth and he was saying run run run, the building is coming down. There were some other people behind him. The dust cloud was right behind them. We dove back into the Suburban. By the time we got the windows rolled up and the doors closed there was already a dust condition inside the vehicle and then it just was like several minutes of I say black snow, because the debris and the dust just kept coming down on us.

We really had no idea what we were going to do. Even if I had decided to drive the vehicle, if I knew that I was going straight up Broadway, then maybe we could get further away from the building, but there was a vehicle blocking me and I couldn't do that, so it was just a matter of let's wait and see what happens. Afterwards, several days later I asked Pat Cleary what we did. For the most part we were just like oh, shit what are we going to do.

When the dust settled, we got -- proceeded to go down Murray Street across Church Street, across West Street, sorry that's West Broadway.

Q. West Broadway?

A. I think at one of the intersections of West Broadway possibly or possibly Greenwich Street, there was a fire truck there and we came up with the idea that maybe we could use some tools from the fire truck. It was Ladder 124's rig.

We got off. There wasn't much left on 124's rig because they had obviously taken a good portion of their own tools with them. But we did take one or two axes, there was a flashlight. We took a Herst tool. We took an oxygen bag and thermal imaging camera.

At that point I also ran into a Firefighter that I know from 4 Engine, who I believe was the MPO of 4 Engine that day. His name was Bob Humphrey. Bob was rattled to say the least. He mentioned that he thinks his rig was crushed. He thinks his guys were crushed.

He is not sure. He didn't know where he was going. I just mentioned to him make sure that somebody knows where you are, wherever you go make sure somebody knows that that's where you are.

We continued down in the Suburban down to West Street. When we got to West Street it was like a movie type of scene. There was about a foot half deep of paper and dust and any movement created more of a dust cloud. The first people we came across were several firefighters and Chiefs. The one Chief was Chief McNally, who I believe is a Deputy Chief. He was in the process of trying to set up a command post. We walked down further towards the site, which would be Barclay or Vesey Street. I think on the intersection of Vesey Street and West Street I saw Chief Hayden, a Deputy Chief from the First Division. Chief Hayden was aware of who I was because I know him, but certainly was also obviously rattled. Both of these two Chiefs were covered with dust, so they were certainly part of whatever happened.

We decided to continue down to look for anybody, the main mission being the senior staff, although anybody that was found. I had had the thermal imaging camera. I had looked around, there were fire trucks crushed, fire trucks on fire, cars, trucks, not all on fire, but several on fire, large pieces of steel. I guess some of the sheathing from the building, I don't know if it's aluminum or what, but other types of metal. The foot bridge was down, which I think was considered the north foot bridge.

We had turned on the thermal imaging camera, made a pass underneath some rigs, underneath the walkway that was crushed down. I can remember looking under the walkway and seeing a crushed fire truck. I don't know what company it was, but the lights still being on even though it was crushed down.

At one point I ran into a firefighter -- a Fire Lieutenant I think from Rescue 1. Name I'm not sure of. At that point he had started to climb over some rigs and go into another area underneath that foot bridge and being that I didn't have any equipment at that time, I thought it best that I hand off the thermal imaging camera to him and go and try to procure equipment if I was going to stick around the scene any longer.

I do recall somebody being, I think what it might have been the top floor of 6 World Trade Center, which was also looked like it was from a movie set the way it was devastated. From the top floor window, which would be the northwest corner and I do believe there was somebody with an apparatus making an attempt to possibly get a ladder up to that person. I don't know what the end result of that was.

When I walked back towards the corner of West Street and Vesey Street, I saw Commissioner Gribbon and Lieutenant McLaughlin, who also works in the Fire Commissioner's office. I proceeded to go inside what I guess is 3 World Financial Center, the American Express building, make a phone call on a pay phone to Fire Department headquarters where I told them that I had accounted for Commissioner Gribbon and Lieutenant McLaughlin and I was also informed by them that Commissioner Von Essen and Captain Goldbach were at the quarters of 24 Engine. I told the girl who answered the phone, who was Sandy, to make sure that she reached out to their wives and let them know that we had accounted for them.

I had also questioned them if they saw anyone else, such as Commissioner Feehan, Chief Ganci, Chief Nigro or Commissioner Fitzpatrick or Commissioner Tierney. They had said that they had seen them but they weren't quite sure whether they saw them after both buildings had come down or not. I didn't make the assumption that they were accounted for at that point.

I was heading back up to Murray Street where the Suburban was parked and at that time I think told Lieutenant McLaughlin that I was going to go to 24 Engine and see what the boss was doing and see what he needed. At which point I walked back up to Murray Street. There were some more firefighters starting to gather at that point. Chief McNally was still there, I think a Chief, Mark Ferran was there, several people, Louis Garcia was there, Chief Garcia. At that point I said I'm going to go up to 24 Engine. I got in the vehicle and made my way up West Street to 24 Engine's quarters.

When I got to 24 Engine's quarters, the Mayor's people were there. The Fire Commissioner was there and his executive assistant, Ray Goldbach. They were having a little bit of a meeting behind one of the offices. I acknowledged them through the glass window. When he came out, he asked me what was going on. I told him what I had known, what I had just been previously said and that I had a vehicle here for him, what did he want to do. He said well, just stick around, let's see what we are going to do. There was a brief press conference.

We went from 24 Engine's quarters to the Police Academy, where we started to set up a temporary command post or a command center I should say. Also with us at that time were 2 fire Marshals, Fire Marshal Mike Owney, who is now promoted to Lieutenant, and Rich -- I'm not sure what Rich's last name is. Somewhere along the lines they had come across Commissioner Von Essen and they had said to him if nobody is with you we will stick with you and be secured and he agreed to that and they did that.

At the command center on the 6th floor of the Police Academy, we had gotten some phones that we could utilize and we were starting to do whatever we possibly could as far as get information from the scene, get information from headquarters, kind of regroup in a way.

There was many meetings that the Commissioner and the Mayor had in and out of offices. I guess at one point the Governor showed up and some additional press conferences. I guess at one one point, some additional staff came, such as some of the other Commissioners' drivers and at one point when we first got there, being that I was in the shorts and T-shirt when I first dropped the boss off and found out where we were and what we were doing, I told him that I was going to go get a uniform, so I stopped by my own fire house, which is Ladder company 7, a few blocks away from the Police Academy and I got my bunker gear and some work duty clothing.

Then I also went to Engine 39 where we parked the Commissioner's vehicle and I got my uniform and proceeded back down to the Police Academy. One thing that I noticed when I was going to 39 Engine, which is on 67 Street between Third and Lex, the New York City blood bank is on 67 Street between First and Second and there was a line all the way around the corner of people to donate blood. I felt that this thing had just happened minutes ago and I was kind of amazed at that, you know.

We went back down to the command center. Probably spent the next several hours going back and forth from the site to the command center for several different reasons. The possibility of some recoveries, to get information, to get some communication set up, whether it was by cellphone or by 800 megahertz radios. Communications I know it was a difficult situation in the beginning.

I believe it was about 10 o'clock at night, we were back down at the scene along with -- I can remember Chief Fellini being there and the Commissioner. It seemed like they were trying to gear up for whatever the tasks were going to be for the overnight. Lighting was an issue, we were getting some lighting, heavy equipment was an issue. That was coming in. I remember earlier in the day there was a meeting and I don't recall exactly who was there or where it was at, but we talked about how it was going to get dark fast and we needed equipment.

There were many issues about the amount of people that were there and how we could control them and the amount of apparatus that was there and how we could control that and certainly seemed to be a monumental task in the late hours of that day, but the early stages of the whole operation.

That's pretty much a good synopsis of the first day. I think by the time we finished up that first day it was probably around 2 or 3 a.m. By the time we dropped the Commissioner off and tried to get some semblance of what we needed to do from our standpoint of view as the Commissioner's aides. Picked them up the following morning at 6 a.m. and that became a routine for about seven days. I think that's pretty much it as far as that first day.

Q. Anything else you would like to add to it, just --

A. The only thing it's something that I'm sure many people have said and I just recall that those first -- those first minutes from the time that sound started, the rumbling started to occur and the dust started to fall and then stopped to get gear and equipment from the fire truck and then continue down to West Street and getting there and seeing the crushed fire trucks, crushed cars, vehicles on fire. It was like a movie set.

It was amazing and the people that I did see and I didn't see anybody that was hurt physically at least serious. But all the people I saw certainly were rattled, understandably rattled, but because might not have been able to get the answer that you wanted out of them, you know, but understandably.

As time went on we had heard of some of the fatalities and we were hopeful in many cases about certain people that unfortunately didn't pan out. I guess Father Judge and Commissioner Feehan and Chief Ganci were the first three majors that came across and what can we say about that, you know. It was obvious from early on to us that the toll on the Department, whatever the numbers might have been at that time in anybody's head, it was going to be heavy. Certainly knew that it was something that the Department, nobody could have ever believed was happening. Oh well.

Before September 11, yes, yes, sure, that will never happen. After September 11 I think we all know that anything can happen.

MR. TAMBASCO: All right then. I thank you for your interview. The interview concludes at 1656 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT MALA HARRILAL

Interview Date: November 2, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. CASTORINA: Today is November 2, 2001. I'm Ron Castorina from the New York City Fire Department. We are here at Battalion 31 conducting an interview.

Q. With me is?

A. Richard Dun from the New York City Fire Department.

Q. Your name, ma'am?

A. Mala Harrilal, Battalion 31.

Q. What is your rank?

A. EMT-D.

Q. The time now is 0540 hours.

On September 11, 2001, on that particular day, could you tell me the events that took place that you remember?

A. Yes, about minutes to nine o'clock I heard on the radio, a unit was saying that a plane just crashed into the World Trade Center and both me and my partner drove down by the water in Red Hook. That's my assigned area and you could see -- we saw the smoke. There was a second plane circling the building and I kept saying why is he so near the building? Within minutes, before even talking about it, he just like slammed into the second building.

We got on the radio, called the dispatcher. She said fine, we were assigned to the job. Took the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. We were stuck in the tunnel for a couple of minutes and as we got out of the tunnel on the West Side Highway, there were cars crumbled and crushed all over. There were body parts on the street. I saw something that looked like a helmet, but it wasn't a helmet. It was a head.

We made the left, right on to Liberty Street, where we saw the other units. Within minutes there were like Chiefs. I saw Chief Grant, Chief McCracken, and they were all setting up the staging area where they told us, the command center in fact, where they told to us move the busses and park. Stood there looking at the building burning, saw within 5 minutes, I thought that like 16 people jumping off the building.

Q. Who were you with, who was your partner?

A. Frank Pastor. At one point I couldn't take it again, because I would keep yelling can we go help them, can we go help them. But he is like you can't, because the scene wasn't safe. So there was nothing we could do.

Q. How far back from you from the scene, where were you from the building? Were you like a block away?

A. Like two blocks away, two blocks away, where we were parked, so I can't even tell you where exactly. We were a little by Liberty State Park, to the side. I saw a couple of the crew members that I knew on 31 David and some medics from Woodhull. I told my partner, I said if you need me I will be standing right by my ambulance.

As I turn around and I'm coming back, all I heard was don't turn back, just run. I look up, saw the building coming towards you. Keep running, I couldn't see anything, I couldn't breathe. I couldn't see anything, just that jet sound. Everybody was like pulling people inside stores. I just like -- while running, stopped to help this EMT from Jersey, I think, she fell down and broke her arm in like 3 places. Picked her up like three times and kept running.

Somebody pulled me into a store, pulled us both into a store, some of those Hatzolah guys. Got into the store and just keep yelling, where is the back, where is the back door, where is the back door. There was no back door. We look around, all you could see was alcohol. It was a liquor store. At that point in time, the debris got lighter.

Chief McCracken ended up coming in and yelled get out of here, this is not a good place to stay. So at that point, I was just getting out --

Q. Who were you with in the store, you and your partner or --

A. No, my partner and I were split up.

Q. You were with some civilians?

A. Yes, mostly Hatzolah guys and civilians. They gave us water. It was just to wash your eyes and keep running again. We ran so far, I mean my last resort was jumping into the water. At that point in time I think that's when we saw Chief Grant, Chief McCracken and I ended up with my partner. People were just yelling, please help us.

Q. How many injuries were you seeing, the ones that were running?

A. Mostly they couldn't breathe and their eyes. The Hatzolah guys were running out with medics from Maimonides, medics from New York Cornell that were injured. They had them on long boards and stretchers and they were just running with them. So when the people started screaming, Chief Grant got -- Chief Grant and Chief McCracken, they both got on the radio and asked for boats. Within 5 minutes boats were there. Circle Line, New York Waterways, even tug boats were there.

At that point in time, we couldn't do anything but help the people get on to the boats. So we first started with the kids, then the parents, then, you know, basically got everybody off that area. I guess at that time it was just like us alone there, us and the cops. There were a lot of under cover cops, a lot of detectives, and we kind of basically got out of that area, because at one point they were talking the building that we were standing by was burning, was -- fumes, gas fumes.

So we got out there and that's where we met everybody else from -- all the guys from the academy, all the other Lieutenants. They brought back our ambulances. Then we drove down -- further down near the Battery Tunnel, I guess, to meet everybody else.

Q. This was the first collapse, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Then what happened, then the second collapse came, you weren't there for the second collapse?

A. No, no, it was the first collapse and by 2:00 we were dismissed from there. Because we had -- when we got back our ambulance, there was no equipment in the ambulances. My ambulance was blown off, the windows were blown out. Even my cellphone was gone. We had nothing. We were totally wiped, covered.

Q. Initially when you were there and the first building came down and you ran and all these events took place, then somewhere in that time frame like an hour later, the second building --

A. The second building came down.

Q. But you weren't involved with that part, because you were already out of the area, you were by the boat loading people?

A. Right, because we heard the explosion. We wasn't there.

Q. Right.

A. It was just like -- I think the second building, I could be wrong, but the second building that fell crumbled. It's the first building that fell. It actually came down, so -- I really didn't witness the second building at all.

By 2:00 we were dismissed from the scene and went to the Battalion.

Q. Were you injured in anyway or your breathing --

A. I have asthma. For the first week I was fine, the second week I started coughing. By the end of the second week I started wheezing.

Q. How were your eyes?

A. At first my glasses were messed up, I had to go get new lenses and I have been taking the pump ever since.

Q. How is your partner, your partner made it out of there okay?

A. Yes. He is fine.

Q. Anything else you can think of that you want to add?

A. No, I felt -- I mean what was bothering me the most is that that's what we are there to do, to help people and at that point in time, there was no way of helping anybody, but to help yourself, to run for your life, and that's all I kept saying and praying, Lord help me, I'm not ready to die yet. I'm glad my partner is safe.

I saw Chief McCracken and Chief Grant. They were okay. I don't know. I'm glad to be alive. So it felt good, me going back Tuesday, because I wanted to go back ever since, but there was really no time to go and then at one point when I figured -- you know, thinking about the smell of the place and everything, I might have a hard time with it.

So I finally went back on Tuesday and it was fine. At least I knew I was there for 14 hours, 12 hours, 12 to 14 hours, to help people who needed to be helped.

Q. Right, the other day?

A. Yes, last week. So I felt much better.

MR. CASTORINO: Okay. This concludes the interview. The time now is 0550 hours. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC EDGARD SUAREZ

Interview Date: November 2, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CASTORINA: Today is November 2nd, 2001. The time now is 0625 hours. I'm Ron Castorina, New York City Fire Department, at Battalion 31 conducting an interview. With me is --

MR. DUN: Richard Dun, New York City Fire Department.

MR. CASTORINA: And your name, sir?

PARAMEDIC SUAREZ: Edgard Suarez.

MR. CASTORINA: What is your rank and title?

PARAMEDIC SUAREZ: Paramedic.

MR. CASTORINA: Paramedic? Where are you assigned to?

PARAMEDIC SUAREZ: Battalion 31.

Q. On September 11th, 2001, what were you assigned to that day?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. What unit were you assigned to?

A. I was working 31 Victor Tour 2.

Q. Can you tell me on that day the events that took place that you remember?

A. I stayed for a double tour, and about 8:30 or 8:35 we were assigned to the World Trade Center. When we got there --

Q. Who were you working with that day?

A. I was working with Paramedic Cherrington, Andre Cherrington.

Q. Andre Cherrington?

A. Yes.

We crossed the Brooklyn Bridge, and we arrived at Broadway between Fulton and Cortlandt Street. We were sitting right in front of the Millennium Hotel.

Q. At that point the first plane had hit?

A. That was right after the first plane had hit.

Q. After the first plane had hit?

A. Yeah. We hadn't seen the second building on fire.

We were triaging in that area. There were many people requesting ALS, so we were triaging people, people having chest pains.

Q. This was in front of the Millennium Hotel?

A. Right in front of the Millennium Hotel.

People were coming to us with lacerations, bleeding all over. We were trying to do our best. There was two firefighters brought this guy with about 85 to 90 percent burns, major burns, first degree and third degree burns. So we started taking care of this guy. We started an IV on him.

There was a female lieutenant that wanted us to stay to take more patient with us. This guy was in such severe respiratory distress.

Q. You had him on your ambulance? You were getting ready to transport him?

A. Yeah, he was on board. He was ready to transport. So we decided to start moving. We were about one block away when the first building collapsed. People were running toward us, banging the ambulance, "Open the ambulance." We just couldn't do it.

Q. Were you able to get out of there and take the patient?

A. Yeah, we got out of there. We were pretty lucky.

Q. What hospital did you go to?

A. We went to New York Cornell Burn Center.

Q. Then when you were done with the patient, did you return back to the scene?

A. Yeah, we went back. We were assigned to the West Side Highway where they had --

Q. At that point when you went back, had the second building collapsed or first building collapsed?

A. Yeah, the second building.

Q. Both buildings were collapsed already?

A. Yeah, we were listening to the news when the second building collapsed.

Q. You went back there to triage?

A. Yeah, actually we were sitting on the West Side Highway when we hear that there was like a gas leak. There was so much panic, everybody running. We were a couple feet away from the ambulance. So we actually left the ambulance behind. When we came back after everything settled down, I guess it was.

Q. In was what, the second time when you came back, you're talking about, the gas leak?

A. Yes.

Q. You were down by where?

A. That was the West Side Highway.

Q. And where; do you remember?

A. West Side and about Murray Street.

Q. Murray Street and the West Side Highway?

A. Yes.

Q. There was a triage area there that was set up?

A. Yeah. Actually there was like a staging area. There was many ambulance, many PD cars. We were there waiting for hopefully going to help somebody. When the news came that it was a gas leak, everybody started running.

Q. Everybody left their vehicles and left?

A. Yes, we actually left our vehicle behind. When we came back for it, it was gone.

Q. What happened?

A. We just couldn't find it. Somebody took it away or -- I don't know.

Then we went to --

Q. You had left the keys in the ambulance because of the staging area?

A. Yes. I have the extra key, and the other key was in the ignition. My partner was driving, so he left his key.

Q. Was the vehicle ever found later on?

A. Yes, the vehicle showed up.

Q. Somebody must have just pulled it out of the area?

A. Yes. We saw it later that day like seven, eight hours after. They had it at the morgue moving bodies.

That's about it.

Q. Okay. Anything you want to add?

A. No.

MR. CASTORINA: The time now is 0627 hours. This concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT LAURA SIEBUHR

Interview Date: November 2, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is November 2nd, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York, conducting an interview with --

EMT SIEBUHR: Laura J. Siebuhr, EMT 5478, Battalion 45.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 45 regarding the events of the morning of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Laura, if you would begin with when you first became aware of the incident.

A. Okay. My partner and I were actually getting coffee first thing in the morning. We were within our 89, which is our cross street location. We noticed there was fire in the distance. From where we sit in our 89, we have a whole view of the skyline, and obviously it's fairly close.

So my partner said exactly, "Holy shit, Laura, that's the Trade Center on fire." I told him to shut up, no way. He said, "Well, let's take a closer look to get away from all the trees and everything." So we drove up closer. My partner Patrick said, "Oh, my God, Laura, that is the Trade Center on fire," and I agreed.

He called central and said, "This is 45 David. Central, did you know that the Trade Center was on fire?" Everything was completely silent, I would say for maybe a good 15, 20 seconds. Everything was just completely silent. There was nothing on the air, which was highly irregular, because there's always activity going on over the air.

I remember the silence. I don't remember who was dispatching at the time, but they started dispatching units out, and 45 David was one of them, which was my unit. They told us to transfer over to citywide and report to I believe the 59th Street Bridge. We were very close at that point. We were told to continue to I believe West and Vesey or Church and Vesey. I'm not clear. I have no really working knowledge of Manhattan.

We did as we were told. As we were getting closer, you could see that it was just a horrific sight. Going over that bridge I'll never forget. It was bad. Actually I didn't really know too much when I went in to work, being that I had never been to an MCI before.

We saw other ambulances on the opposite side of the bridge trying to get through, but for some reason we were flying and we were bypassing everybody. I don't know why, I don't remember how, because this was so much traffic. For some reason we just had a straight way.

People were just getting out of our way so quickly that we got there I believe within less than eight minutes from where we were, which should have taken us a lot longer than that. I guess because at the location where we were trying to see, we were pretty close, even to the bridge.

We got there, and there was a lot of people running out of the building. I didn't see any other ambulance units there other than Hazollah. I didn't even know where any Manhattan units were. I guess the thing had just hit, so within that span. Everybody was within traffic. Everybody was trying to get in there all at once.

My partner and I got out. Being the other unit was there, Hazollah was there, we were making a make-fast triage underneath the second tower, the next tower over. I get them confused, tower one, tower two. I don't know, just everything happened so fast.

As people were coming out of the first tower that was hit, we were bringing them over and we were triaging them. Those people were pretty bad. We were basically sectioning them off and tagging them who goes where, the most critical and the least critical.

We would section them off, and we were putting them on buses, not ambulances but regular city buses, so they could transport them out because there wasn't enough units there. We couldn't leave because there was too many people. People were very, very bad, very bad.

I was so geared to working on the patients and trying to focus -- you didn't have time to think. You did not have time to think about anything. People were hurt so badly. I remember just hearing a very low hum, I guess because I was focused on what I was doing with the patients.

But I do remember hearing a very low hum in the background, which people will probably tell you different, but this is what I heard; and then just a massive explosion, and that was loud, because I was standing right underneath it when the second plane had hit.

My partner ran and grabbed me by my arm and started yelling at me to run. So he was actually holding onto me and making me run quicker. Still I didn't know what was happening. I didn't know it was a plane. I just thought it was an explosion from the other tower. I didn't know a plane had hit. So I'm pretty much oblivious on what's really going on at this point because everything is happening so fast.

We ran and we got maybe less than a quarter of a block, less than half a block, maybe. I don't really remember. But I remember we were still right there. Within minutes later, over the radio or somebody had said, "Oh, my God, the Pentagon got hit and this is war, we're at war." [redacted] [redacted]. You couldn't breathe because when the second plane hit, all that debris, it was like cement. It just filled up your throat, it filled up your lungs, you could not breathe. You were actually spitting out huge particles. It was like it manifested itself in your mouth because it was so small and it filled up. You couldn't breathe. It was just caked in your throat.

My partner says, "All right. Listen, stay with this unit." My unit was directly in front. He said, "Stay with the unit, and I'm going to go back." [redacted]

Maybe within -- I don't know really time frame. I don't know time frame. But there was a command or somebody had said the units had to start moving. It wasn't that long after. I was sitting in the back of one of the units, and I don't remember what unit it was.

I said, you know what, I'm not going to go with these units. I've got to go back. I've got to find my partner and make sure that he's okay. I didn't really feel threatened at this point. Some time had passed, not much but some, to where I was able to gain some composure about myself and I wanted to find my partner. I needed to find him. It was very important that I had him and I knew where he was.

So I started walking back. The next thing that I know, I was just about there, and a firefighter, which I really wish I knew who it was. I have no idea who this person was, but a firefighter started running and he said -- this is another one he actually grabbed my arm. He said, "Oh, my God, Honey, run."

I looked up, and it looked like the tower was leaning. I was almost underneath it, so it actually looked like it was leaning. So you didn't know which way to run. You just saw a lot of firefighters and police and EMS and all of the major people that were down there to try and rectify the situation before it got any worse started running, and I didn't know why. Not in my wildest dreams did I ever think that this was going to come down.

So he grabbed my arm and he said, "Honey, run," and he started running with me. I said, "Oh, my God, are we going to die?" He said, "I don't know. Just keep running." Then the loud rumble, and then that thing, that monster, just started coming down.

They teach you in the academy about the feeling of impending doom a patient might feel. I have never had that feeling up until that day. I knew that this was it. I knew that this is how I'm going out. The only thing that ran through my mind was -- other than saying the "Our Father" as I was running, "God, please don't let this hurt." I thought it was going to hurt. Just "God, make it quick."

I was running, and the fireman had let my arm go. He had gone one way and I kept running. I remember there was a building on my left-hand side, and I don't remember what building it was. I remember not being able to run very fast because of fear, and my radio and my helmet was weighing me down. So I threw off my helmet. I threw my radio, which was found, by the way. It was unbelievable.

I just remember I couldn't run, the fear was -- you could not run. You're just stricken. I just remember just heat. I felt the heat and the smoke just eat me up. But right before it did, this building to my left, I remember approaching it, wanting to say, well, I've got to get some kind of cover. I got sucked in by that huge cloud. Not sucked in but I guess --

Q. Enveloped?

A. Yeah. Then I really couldn't breathe and panic and disorientation.

I came up to the building, and the doors, they slid open from side to side. They were electric. That I remember because I couldn't find the handle, and I'm banging on the door. I couldn't breathe. You just could not breathe. Whatever you did, there was nothing to do to get away from it. You just could not breathe.

I was banging on the door, and somebody had -- a girl or a woman had got the doors open for me, and I just kind of fell in. All I wanted to do was just breathe, get my lungs -- you know,

I couldn't catch air.

Then I got into this building, and I paced and paced and paced, and that's all I did was pace. I was so worried about my partner. I was crying a lot. I wanted -- I needed to find him, because I didn't know anybody. I didn't have anybody with me. I was alone, except some of the people in the building. I didn't know if we were going to get hit again. It was bad. It was really, really bad.

During that time in the building, I didn't know that the second one had gone down. I had no idea the other building -- I didn't know. About a half an hour later I was looking outside. It got to the point where you could actually see your hand in front of your face. Things started lifting.

The only thing that I had on me was my phone, so all I'm trying to do is call my family and tell them get in your car and go east, because I didn't know. I just wanted them to get out of harm's way, you know.

Then I wanted to go outside, and some of the people said, "My God, don't go out there."

I still needed to find my partner. I was very adamant about it, and arrogant I was, because I was panicking and just "Don't touch me. Just leave me alone. Just let me think." I didn't have my radio on me. I had no radio contact, and I was freaking.

Some old woman gave me a wet scarf to put around my face, and I went out, which I thought was very sweet. I went out and I started again heading back to the Trade Center. I wasn't far. I mean, I was just not even up the block. It was not even a block, that I can remember.

I can't even recall what building it was; I can't. I don't know which one it was. I had gone there repeatedly and tried to find this building I was in when I do the Trade Center and do my overtime there, because I've been back there twice a week every week. I do the overtime and stuff. And I can't remember.

I started making my way back to the Trade Center. When I got there I saw a lot of people. I didn't hear anybody talking. The only thing I heard was those loud tones. That's all I heard was those tones. I guess it was the firemen looking for their own. That's all I heard was those tones and me looking for my partner, calling, "Patrick."

A fireman came over to me and said, "Make your way back to the peers, or start going to the peers. Just get out of here." I was at the corner, so I wasn't like -- there was so much stuff everywhere, so much. It looked like Armageddon. Everything was just gone [redacted] We started making our way back to the piers. I still didn't know anybody. They were all unfamiliar faces.

About an hour and a half, two hours later, I see my captain, and there went my professionalism [redacted]

[redacted]

Finally after about an hour and a half, almost two hours that I can remember, in a fireman's jacket and an SCBA on his back and a hood, I thought I saw him. This person came closer, and there went my professionalism again, and I knew he was alive. And cling, held on tight to him. I was so relieved that he was alive.

Even now I get emotional because to lose him, I would be losing such a big part of my life, because since I got on this job and came to this battalion, he has taught me everything that I need to know. He also saved my life by putting me in somewhat of a safe spot to where if I wasn't at the ambulance and him pulling me and running with me after the second plane hit and putting me in a safe place, I probably would have been gone and would have followed him because he went into the building.

I probably would not be here if it weren't for him, and I hold a lot of respect for him and I love him for it, because he let me go home to my daughter, which a lot of people didn't.

Q. Right.

A. We started making it to the piers. The calvary was there. Everyone was there. And I got to go home that night.

That's all I can remember.

Q. What's your partner's last name?

A. Richiusa.

Q. When you first got down there to the Trade Center, do you remember seeing, aside -- you said the Hazollah ambulance. Any other kind of EMS personnel?

A. Yes. You know what it was? There was a lot of people there. I remember nurses being there. I remember doctors being there. I remember people saying that they were nurses and doctors. I remember people saying that they were EMTs and paramedics that were off-duty. I remember a lot of ununiformed people were there, a lot.

Forgive me, and I could be wrong but the only other ambulance that I saw at that moment was Hazollah. I could be wrong, but that's what I remember.

Q. Okay.

A. I remember pulling up and thinking -- I remember actually thinking, my God, we came from Queens and although we made it here so fast, where the hell are the Manhattan units? Where are they? I remember seeing fire trucks, a lot of them, but I don't remember seeing FDNY ambulances. I don't remember. I could be wrong, but that's what I remember.

I remember thinking to myself where are they, and I just remember seeing Hazollah. And how I remember that -- I don't even know if I'm pronouncing it right, but I just remember seeing the curls on the side of their heads. I think they're Hasidic.

Q. Yeah.

A. I'm not clear on it. They were awfully nice. They were so nice. And we did work together. I believe it was four of them and Patrick and I. I remember directing the people that would come out of the first tower that was hit. They were so bad.

I mean, people did not -- people were coming out and didn't have any hair on their bodies and on their heads and on their faces. I remember facial hair was so singed off and badly burned and them saying that they were several floors underneath. I don't really know how it works when a plane hits. I know nothing about it.

But I remember a lot of screaming, and I remember people falling out of the buildings or jumping. I remember seeing it. I remember just a lot of smoke, a lot of crying, a lot of people going into shock, a lot of talk about elevators inside the building.

I just remember people talking about elevators, that they weren't working or that it fell -- it felt like it fell several floors and hit a specific floor hard and people were complaining about back pain and skin hanging from their bodies and being in a lot of pain. A lot of pain. Everybody was just -- there was a lot of pain. It was very heartbreaking.

Me only coming out of the academy nine months, ten months. I knew nothing except just keep bandaging them up, keep oxygen on them, and put them on where they need to go. Next. It was fast and furious. You didn't have time to think.

That's all I really can remember, and just feeling very badly and very scared. I never in my wildest dreams ever think those buildings would come down, never, never. When I saw my partner, he was badly hurt. He got stitched up on the scene, with a leatherman tool, no less, his own tool.

A doctor, he said he's never done it with a tool, but I think he got 13, 15 stitches, some on his back, some on his shoulder. He didn't have the correct tool to do it with. Pat whipped out his tool and he said, "Well, you can use this." He actually started sewing him up without anything, just a needle and thread, and showed him up with his leatherman. And he blew out his knee, which I believe he had to get surgery for.

And that's all I can really remember, and just being extremely happy that I was going home to my little girl and able to tell my family that I was alive, because my mom knew that I was down there and my sister actually in Colorado knew I was there and saw it on TV and knew I was there. So they knew that I was gone. They actually thought I was gone. I was just happy to be home.

That's the best of my recollection moment to moment. I mean, it's also two months later.

Also actually what I do remember, one thing that I neglected to say, that on the way there, there were two priests that were begging to stop us. They were saying, "Please take us with you. There are so many people down there that need their last rites." So I said, "Get in," and we took them.

Whether that's against the rules or not, I don't know. But you know what? There were people down there that needed it. And whether they made it out of there alive, I don't know. I hope they did. But I thought that was the right thing to do. My partner and I both agreed on it.

I basically threw these old men in there. I threw them in, "Get in," not even thinking of any kind of repercussions of anything, because I didn't know what we were going into. I just knew that it was a huge MCI. I didn't know that it was a plane at that point. I just knew that it was big and that there were more than likely hundreds of casualties because of what it looked like, not knowing what caused it.

We picked them up and we brought them in, because I knew that there were going to be people that perished in whatever happened. And we did, we picked them up and we brought them over there.

Q. What's your 89 location?

A. My 89 is -- oh, God, Metropolitan and Forest, which gives you a complete view of the whole skyline.

Q. Right.

A. You're not far at all. It's like an arm's length away. You're looking and you're like, wow, you can see the whole entire skyline.

That's basically all I can remember that day, that disgusting day.

Q. Any other thoughts or comments you'd like to add?

A. [redacted].

With that said, I'm done.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN HOWARD SICKLES

Interview Date: November 2, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is November 2nd, 2001. The time is now 0526. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York, conducting an interview with.

CAPTAIN SICKLES: Captain Howard Sickles, commanding officer of EMS, Battalion 45.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 45 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Captain.

A. On that morning I was assigned to the battalion because I didn't have a command vehicle. I was running the ambulance station as I normally do. A call went out, and I see notification that there was a plane into the building at the World Trade Center.

I went outside. The TV was on, and I saw the devastation from the first plane hitting the tower that was broadcasted on CNN.

I sent messages to Howie Hahn Lieutenant Hahn -- he was on patrol -- to pick me up, and we started out to the Trade Center. I called the tour commander to let him know that we were going and did he want us to go to what location, because they were staging ambulances around the city. He advised me to go directly into the site.

On arrival we staged at Church and West, and I walked down to the command post, which was in the first floor or the lobby level of the north tower of the World Trade Center. Chief Gombo was there with Ross Terranova, and I believe Chief Kowalczyk was at that point also there.

Things were a little confusing. They were trying to put an operation together. The windows of the north tower on the ground floor were blown out, were broken. I don't know if they were blown out, but they were most certainly broken. There was a lot of glass. That was actually how I entered; I walked through one of the windowpanes, or where there would have been a window, into the building and started going through the doors.

I saw there was really no command post set up. It was a little haphazard. Commissioner Feehan was in the lobby. I asked him if there were any spare command boards around. He told me there should be outside. Any chief car that pulls up should have one.

I went outside. I believe it was the Division 6 car was just arriving. I told him I need his command board and I had Commissioner Feehan's permission. I got the command board from him.

Actually as I exited the building, I thought somebody hit me from the back, tapped me on my back. I turned around and didn't see anything. Somebody pointed to my feet. I looked, and there was a body on the floor. So apparently he's what brushed against me, hitting me in the back, because it wasn't there, it was behind me. I had just walked there. So I knew that body fell. So I'm pretty lucky I wasn't hit then.

I walked over to the chief's car. I got the command board. I walked back into the building, and Chief Kowalczyk said, "Let's go." And I took 49 Henry with me so we would have an ambulance crew there with us. Chief Kowalczyk said, "Come on, let's go. We're all out of here.

We're going across the street."

We went across the street and we set up in what would be, I'm assuming, is Three World Financial Center. We were in the garage -- we were in the throat of the driveway. We put up the command board. We started drawing the towers, putting this all together, and we decided -- I told him, we need to put this all onto one frequency because citywide's too congested and we need to have a point-to-point frequency and a dispatcher to come to.

I went inside. I spoke to Chief Diggs on the telephone. I told him what our needs were. He was a little argumentative. He didn't want to do it because of the high call volume in Manhattan south. I said, "You can give us any frequency. Manhattan south was just a suggestion."

He put me on hold. I said, "I'm not waiting here all day." I left. I sent an EMT back inside to call Chief Diggs and to wait. We were at command post operations. We started to set things up.

We sent Chief Brown to the south side to the south tower to see what was going on there, to give us a reported. He took a package which included Captain Deshore and a couple of ambulances, and some of them were volunteers.

Ambulance crews were showing up at the command post. Maimonides Medical Center showed up with an ambulance with a transfer truck of their's with a couple of paramedics on it and a supervisor. We sent them back to go north, and they ended up not taking the direction. I saw the ambulance later on and it was crushed but there was nobody in it. So that worked out well but they didn't listen and they didn't take direction.

We were at the command post. We had assigned Lieutenant Medjuck along with Captain Olszewski was on West and I believe around Church Street, there on West and Vesey, at first West and Barclay, in that neighborhood. I don't remember exactly where they were, but they were in that neighborhood, on that side of the operation.

Chief Brown was to the south. We had nobody on Trinity or Church that I was aware of.

He actually may have been around Vesey and Trinity -- Vesey and Church. I don't remember the exact location; I just know he was on the north side of the operation with Captain Olszewski. We were trying to divide it up and get everybody assets in order that they can handle. Chief Goldfarb was down at staging.

We heard a rumbling. We thought it was another plane. We looked up, and you actually saw the towers just starting to roll down at you. You saw the building portions coming down. I stood there and couldn't move. I just couldn't move. I couldn't believe what I was looking at.

A couple seconds later I turned around and started to go. You just saw a sea of humanity. Before that we were at the command post. Chief Nigro and Chief Ganci were behind me, and they just couldn't believe the human devastation of watching people jumping out of the upper floors. They were hitting the ground and because of the force of hitting the ground, they would break open and blood was splattering and body parts and you could see them hitting the ground and bouncing and parts bouncing up.

They were just like, "Oh, my God, oh, my --" and they couldn't believe the devastation; nobody could. Everyone was sort of standing there in a little bit of awe, trying to get this under way and just watching people jumping for their life.

To go back to where I was before, everybody went through the building. Lieutenant Moore was in front of me. The building had a grating for water run off as it goes down so it doesn't go into the garage. He apparently tripped on that grating and fell. I was right behind him. I fell over Roger, and we tumbled maybe some 20 feet into this garage. We really didn't get anywhere.

Q. That was in Three Financial Center?

A. I believe that was Three Financial Center. That's where we were, just across the street. I'm not sure if it was three or two, because we were directly across from the tower. I'm not sure which one is directly across. It might have been Two World Financial Center. It was directly across. It may have been two. It's hard to tell from this map.

Q. Right.

A. I don't remember whether it was the American Express building or two. But looking at it more closely, it's probably Two World Financial Center, right across the street, because we weren't very close to the pedestrian bridge. So I would tell you it was probably Two World Financial Center. I have to change that. I believe the garage was Two World Financial Center.

Q. Okay.

A. So we were directly across the street. Everybody ran into the building. And Roger and I fell over each other. We made it like maybe 20 feet into the building.

You just heard a rumbling and you heard things, and it got very black. You couldn't see anything, nothing. There was no light. I couldn't move my legs. I couldn't move myself. I really thought at one point I was dead. I couldn't see my hand. I couldn't think of anything. I was in no pain. I just really thought I was dead.

It was dark. You couldn't hear anything. There was no sounds. There was nothing. There was no sound in the background. There was nothing, no noise. Beforehand there was noise because there were fire alarms going off -- not fire alarms, the pass alarms from the SCBAs. They were going off early, because I had said at the command post can we shut those stupid things off. They were going off early. I'm sure they were going off when we were running down the hill.

After the first collapse, it was dark, it was black, it was just deadly silent. I really thought I was dead. I started talking to myself, and then Roger Moore, in a couple of seconds, moans and tells me to "Shut up. You're not dead."

So I still couldn't move, and I was telling him, "I can't move. I can't move." He's telling me he can't move. A couple of firemen came by, and I don't know who they are -- I didn't know who they were. They lifted off what looked like to be a desk later on, because they showed us with a light. They had hand lights with them, and it looked like to be the top of a desk. They lifted that off of us and they moved some other debris, and I was able to get up.

Then they helped Roger out. They told me just get out of the building, and I went back up towards West Street. I didn't go into the building. I told them they were coming to West Street, and they went into the building further. They figured they would come out on what would be North Road or -- I think it's North End, the back end of the building. They figured they would come out on North End and it would be safer.

I went out straight. I got out of the building, and you couldn't walk. There was so much dirt, dust and debris, it looked like it was snowing out. It was still falling, the ash. It was snowing. I couldn't believe what I saw. What was once a command post where there were 50 people standing, there was nothing, there was nobody. It was quiet. The area was dead. There was no noise, no noise, nobody around, nothing. You couldn't hear anything.

There was a communications van from the Fire Department, an old Chevy van, a low top, not one of the big rescue looking communications vehicles, and it was just dead. There was no noise coming out of it, nothing. Everything inside was gray. Everything was covered. There was just nothing. There was no noise. There was no noise on the EMS radio. There was nothing. It was just dead silence.

I got my wits about myself, and I tried to remember where everybody was. And then I was trying to call people on the radio and there was no response.

A few minutes later Chief Ganci came walking up the street and he told me to go north. I said, "Where are you going?" He said, "I'm going south" I told him to go north, and he just continued south. He said, "Just go north."

I stood there for a couple more minutes. I had to sort of get my wits about me. I started calling people on the radio. I got Bobby Brown on the radio, Chief Brown on the radio, and he was telling me that he's okay, he's not injured badly. The building collapsed around him. They're trying to figure out where they were. I told him to go south.

I got a hold of Bruce Medjuck, and he said he was okay. I couldn't get anybody else.

Goldfarb came up on the radio and asked what was going on. I said to him, "There's nobody at the command post. It's just me. I don't know where anybody is or whether anybody survived," because I didn't know what went on inside the basement of that garage.

I got onto Manhattan south, because we already had the frequency. I told him we had a major collapse and they need to start sending more units; send south through the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel and send north units from the bridge and they really shouldn't go past Chambers until they get here. I told them twice, twice, because the devastation is just unbelievable.

Before I got anywhere, I was walking up West Street. I just wanted to get out of there at that certain point. I was walking towards Goldfarb at Chambers. Before I could even get far, the second building came down. I know when I walked up West Street just a little bit, maybe just past what would have been Vesey, I really didn't get that much further. The second building came down, and I was pushed. I actually flew like 40 feet.

I was covered in debris a second time -- oh, no, before that happened I saw one of my EMTs, Pat Richiusa. I saw him on the street, and he told me his partner was missing. I said, "Go west. Just go north and let's get out of here and we'll find her. We'll find where everybody is." And he disappeared.

Then I went up West Street. The second collapse happened. I was knocked down. I was covered in debris again. Again, dark, very scared. Again, no flashlight with me whatsoever. I waited. I just sat there. I got up after the debris, and I started going north. I went north. I got up a couple of blocks, maybe just past Vesey, and I went towards the water.

I saw Chief Carrasquillo there, and we went into the Renaissance Hotel. We set up a treatment area. Chief Gombo was in there, Chief Carrasquillo. Chief Pascale was wheezing away. Chief Kowalczyk I believe was there. We were just trying to put things together.

I even yelled at Chief Gombo because nobody was listening. I knew Bobby Brown was injured. I knew where he was, and we couldn't find him. I knew where Bruce Medjuck was prior to the collapses, and we couldn't find him. Nobody could tell me that they found them.

We were operating in there. Chief Cassano was there. We had to put him on a back board. We sent him off to the hospital because we had neck and back pain. We must have sent about six or eight people to the hospital from that point.

Then we had to evacuate because they said there was a major gas leak in the area. We went to the water side. We went up to river end. We walked up to River Terrace up here somewhere, probably closer to Chambers. There's a nursing home over here or a senior residence. We went to use that. We couldn't use it logistically.

We went into the school. They started operating in Stuyvesant High School, so it was around Chambers. I guess it was closer to Warren than Chambers, the nursing home, north terrace or River Terrace, and we had to leave there. Actually I think it was North End, because then we went to River Terrace, and we had to leave there.

Chief Carrasquillo, Chief Pascale, they just went north. They went as far as the piers, and that's how we ended up taking the piers for the operation.

I went up to Chambers, and from Chambers and West, Chief Peruggia was there. I ended up in the command post with Chief Peruggia, Chief Cruthers, and I forget the other Citywide Tour Commander. Butler, Chief Butler. I worked in the command post with them.

It was eerie because they looked like they got mad at me. When they were talking about what assets they would need because they were going to go into an OEM meeting at Police Academy -- they were sending another chief down there to go and let them know what our concerns were.

They were talking about rescue tools and rescue operations and DMAT teams. I said with a very straight face, "You need to order DMORT also. What's DMORT? Disaster mortuary response team." They looked at me like I had two heads.

I turned and I looked behind me, and I said, "You really need this DMORT team here. It's going to be more than we can handle." It took a couple of seconds, and then Cruthers and Butler agreed. They both told this guy, "Get that DMORT thing also."

It was eerie because I don't know if they didn't want to believe it, but it was very hard because they're theory is everybody is always alive until proven otherwise. You just didn't need any proof that there were going to be people dead there, just knowing the devastation. Operations sort of commenced.

Then there was the funny things that happened by history. They didn't have any command board of sorts. They took a white car, like a fire safety car they use, the fire education car, the little Chevys or the little Fords. They wiped off the hood of the car, and the guy had a grease pencil and, lo and behold, the hood of the car became the command post.

So wherever the hood is now -- I don't know where it is now, but you have to get that hood for the archive. I'm sure it was washed off by now. But they used the hood of the car, and that was the command post for hours upon hours.

When we actually moved down towards Vesey Street, they drove the car down towards Vesey Street and they used it as the command post. It was a command board. There's a little joke out of everything, but you have to have it. That's what we used, the hood of a car. So it's actually a pretty interesting thing.

Later on, a couple of hours into this, Chief Peruggia turned white as a ghost. He grabs everybody and tells them that they found the Commissioner and they found Chief Ganci and they were both killed. We couldn't get body bags. We were talking to corrections, and we kept telling them where to bring the bags. Not hard.

You couldn't understand why they couldn't figure out where it was, because there was no street. There were no street signs. There were no markings. The bridge took everything down, the walkway. Apparently he was near the walkway. I never saw him. I never got down there until much later on that evening. You couldn't do it. You just couldn't get around.

That night I walked around with one of the chiefs. I think it may have been Chief Butler. We went a couple of blocks in every direction, and you couldn't believe the devastation: big fire trucks crushed, ambulances crushed, vehicles crushed. The amount of devastation was just unbelievable.

We had a fire marshal with us and they were marking stuff where they saw it on a map and trying to writing down where things were, and you just couldn't believe where things were and what they looked like.

We went up to the third floor of the World Financial Center, and we had a command post there the first night. We were looking out over it, and it was amazing to see these big backhoe vehicles coming in to move things. You watch them at construction sites. But to pick up a step van that used to be a hazmat support unit, pick it up and just drop it off to the side; pick up what was an old EMS Chevy -- they're white and gold now -- pick up the Chevy and just drop it into a container truck, into a container, a garbage container.

It was amazing, the devastation that was there. Rescue trucks just covered. You knew that all these people were gone. Sitting in the corner of the room, the back corner, were two firemen. I don't know if one was an officer or not but there were two firemen calling companies and just trying to figure out who was missing and who was not missing, a list. They must have had like 500 names in the beginning. It was just unbelievable.

I was collecting names of missing EMS people. I was just writing off the names that this kid had written on a list because he was told to give it to me. Chief Carrasquillo, Chief Gombo, my name was on the list, Chief Kowalczyk. Chief Peruggia's name was on the list. Bruce Medjuck's name was on the list. Karen Deshore's name was on the list. Roger Moore's name was on the list.

Nobody knew where these people were. The list was long. There had to be 30 names on the list that he read off to me. I'm scratching off the names, and I realize I'm Captain Sickles. I wrote my own name. The guy said, "No, no, no.

Captain Sickles is a big fat guy. I met him once before." "No, no, it's me. Thank you."

It was comical at one point, but I knew where most of these people were gone already. I knew Chief Gombo. He went up to OEM. Chief Carrasquillo was standing there. Chief Peruggia was standing there. Chief Pascale, they made her stay up north because she was wheezing away, but she was around. Chief Kowalczyk was around. We didn't know where Karen Deshore was for a long time. We didn't know where Bruce Medjuck was for a long time. We didn't know where a lot of people were for a long time.

Chief McCracken's name was on this list also. We didn't know where he was for a long time, and he showed up. As a matter of fact, as I was writing the list, maybe five minutes later he came walking up the block. Scratched his name off the list.

Then the list got smaller and smaller and smaller. Nobody knew who was on the New York Hospital ambulance, but we knew they were missing. Two from Cabrini were missing. Carlos Lillo, we had his partner. We didn't know where he was. We had Quinn's partner. We didn't know where he was.

The list, very early on we were actually able to narrow it down to like ten names. Then we found out Karen went to New Jersey and Roger was in New Jersey somewhere, so we were able to get them off.

We whittled it down to -- we didn't have on that list the person from Hunter or the person from metro care that was from Albert Einstein. We didn't have them on the list. We didn't know about them. The Hunter guy, they're just not in our system. We have no way of tracking them.

The Albert Einstein person, I didn't know about that -- I wasn't doing it anymore when we found out. We were trying to do patient tracking. There was no patient tracking. It was very annoying. You called communications, and you just got put on hold, they couldn't help you, no one could do anything.

I know hundreds and hundreds of patients went to hospital, but we had no patient tracking, we had no victim tracking. So we had to start sending -- from the command post we sent what supervisors were available to area hospitals, and fire marshals, just tracking down firemen and EMS personnel and police officers, and that was their goal.

The command post wasn't worried about civilians. We couldn't track them all. There were just thousands of people. But they wanted to find out so they could identify who was missing from public safety. It was tough.

So that information was hard getting it back and forth. There was lack of communication, but because radios were down. The Fire Department communications vehicle was down by City Hall originally because it couldn't get closer. It died. We had no command post vehicle. We couldn't get one in. We couldn't get an operational one. So they got that up and running, and that showed up much later on in the event.

It was just hard. Anything that you tried to do, it was just very hard. Things weren't going smoothly. Things weren't going the way they should go. It was very hard getting people up and operational. Everyone had concerns about everything. They were just wanting to call for 30 seconds. It was very, very hard.

Some things were annoying. One guy walks up and says, "I have to go home. I volunteered for my community tours for the month. I don't have to stay all the time here. I want to go home now." I just looked at him and I said, "And?"

I couldn't believe what was coming out of some people's mouths. It was just amazing. The personal toll it had on me, I don't know. I don't know if I was the last one to see this poor guy Chief Ganci was alive. How do you tell his wife that your husband died a hero, trying to get everybody to safety?

He was with Commissioner Feehan toward the end. Why the two of them didn't go off to a command post and try at the first collapse try to put this back together and try to put organization together, the first thing this guy thought of was to walk further south, trying to get people to safety and figure out what was going on.

I saw him -- I don't know what was going through his mind, but it was perceived as he was just looking to get people to a safe area. How do you tell that to somebody? People don't understand that. I think I'm the last one to see this poor guy alive, and he was killed. [redacted] I don't know the condition of Chief Ganci, but I understand he was pretty much in the same condition.

It's just amazing the amount of devastation. When you look at this day after day, it's amazing. I don't know what else to say.

Later on my missing personnel -- I told you earlier I saw Pat on the street and he told me his partner was missing. When we got to the River Terrace, she was standing there. Everybody's gray because they were all covered in soot. She was clean. She was clean. She was absolutely clean. That was striking.

Walking up Vesey when we went to the North End when we went to the Renaissance Hotel, I saw my command car. The vehicle next to it was no windows, no nothing. I said, "Dan --" my car was clean. There was dust. The vehicles on the other side of it, nothing, clean. I couldn't understand. Was there a wall that just stopped it?

It was just pretty funny. You walk up and you -- and that's why my car was stolen. What's his name, [redacted]I was there for 24 hours. I want to go home. I have no way of getting home.

Oh, 844 is up at staging. [redacted]

I was on site for 25 hours. I had to see this devastation, what was going on. When you walk away, there were some funny stories. But this girl was absolutely clean. Laura was clean[redacted] She clung to me. I couldn't get her off of me. I put her in an ambulance, a Cabrini truck, I think it was,

and I sent her to the piers further north.

At a later point I actually hooked up -- when I had a chance to call the station, the first thing I said is "Have we heard from Richiusa or Seibert? Did they get back together?" "They're here. They're together. The truck has a broken window." "I don't give a flip about the truck. Are they alive?" "Pat has a knee injury. He's cut up, but he's okay." All right. That was it.

I was happy. I didn't lose anybody from here. Everybody got out safe. A lot of my people showed up. There was one of my guys that was on jury duty, Smith. I turned around, and I don't know what time he arrived there -- we were at the command post -- and there he is in uniform. "I'm here, Cap, ready to help out. What have you got for me?" "Aren't you on jury duty?" "I got canceled" "Oh, good." That's how he found out about this; he was in the car on the way home.

It's just amazing what goes through your head when you were there: "Why are you here? You're on jury duty." It was amazing.

I'm standing here looking at this map, and it's not here anymore. It's just not there. It's just amazing.

Unless you have anything else. That was it. This was the first two or three hours that I was there.

Q. I just need to make some notes on the map itself. When you went into Manhattan after the first crash, once you got closer downtown, do you remember what route you took to actually get down to the incident?

A. I think we came across Chambers. I think Vesey was the first staging area. I don't remember if Vesey was the first staging area. I don't remember if Chambers-- it had to be Vesey. Where's Stuyvesant High School?

Q. Stuyvesant is off the map.

A. Stuyvesant is up here by Chambers?

Q. Further north, yeah.

A. So the first staging area was up by Chambers. When I arrived I walked from Chambers down to the Trade Center. No, where is the Renaissance Hotel? The Renaissance Hotel is off of Vesey. The Renaissance Hotel is off of Vesey.

Q. Yeah, Vesey and North End.

A. The first staging --

Q. The movie theater?

A. Right. The first staging was somewhere around Vesey. Here's the Renaissance Hotel. The first staging was somewhere around Vesey. Howie Hahn dropped me off at Vesey and West, and I walked up to the north tower, where I met Chief Gombo. Then we went across the street, which would be Two World Financial Center, and we evacuated that. So I was over there.

Arriving on the scene we came down Chambers to Vesey. That's how we arrived on the scene. We came out of the Midtown Tunnel, we came downtown, we zigzagged a little bit around traffic, and we came across Chambers.

Q. Okay. Do you remember the second plane striking the tower?

A. I don't know if we were on the scene. I believe that's when we were inside this tower, and that's when we evacuated this tower and went outside.

Q. And Lieutenant Medjuck and Captain Olszewski?

A. They were on Vesey. I don't know if they were over here by Vesey and West.

Q. This is actually West Broadway.

A. West Broadway. I don't know if they were by West Broadway or they were by Church, but they were in this neighborhood.

Q. Right.

A. I tend to believe they were closer to West Broadway than Church. Actually I left it at home. I have all my notes from the first day and the days coming. I have it in one reporter pad. I left it home by accident. They were over here. They were on Vesey in this neighborhood.

Q. Okay. Any other thoughts or opinions, comments?

A. No.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JEFFREY WARNER

Interview Date: November 2, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is November 2nd, 2001. The time is now 0745 hours. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. I am conducting an interview with --

EMT WARNER: EMT Jeffrey Warner, badge number 2933, Battalion 45, Queens.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 45 and is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Jeffrey, if you would please start from when you were assigned to the job.

A. We were assigned the call 10:11 a.m., and we responded from north Queens over the 59th Street Bridge. We went over the 59th Street Bridge. My partner was driving. I was in the passenger seat. We came down Broadway. Somewhere on Broadway we picked up an auxiliary fireman. He jumped in the back. We proceeded down to the corner of Murray Street and West Broadway.

At Murray Street and West Broadway, we believe that's when the second collapse occurred.

The amount of dust in the air became a lot more thick. We heard of course a loud rumble. We didn't see it collapse; we just heard it. From discussion and the time line, it pretty much seems after the second collapse occurred.

We weren't able to safely drive the vehicle any further because of the dust in the air. There were burnt pieces of paper falling all over the place like a ticker tape parade.

We loaded up our stretcher like we would for any kind of standby, and we just started making our way as far as we could down Murray Street. We made a left on West Broadway Street, where we eventually came to Barclay Street.

At Barclay Street, which now I'm told the building that we came upon was number Seven World Trade Center, we noticed that there were people trapped who were unable to get out at that time or unaware of how to get out -- I'm not sure I want to use the word "trapped" -- on what appeared to be the eighth floor from the outside.

Myself, my partner, an off-duty fire lieutenant, somebody from OEM, who was also with the Port Authority, and a female police lieutenant made numerous attempts to get into the building from the parking area. We finally found a door that was somewhat open on the Barclay Street side near the parking garage where there was a regular door.

We entered the building. There was some kind of an emergency escape ladder in the parking garage that went up. Myself and the off-duty fire lieutenant went up the ladder, and we were met maybe a story or two up with a Plexiglas trapdoor that was padlocked.

The fire lieutenant told me that it was padlocked, and I remember that the OEM guy had a Halligan tool. I told the boss I was going back on the ladder to get the Halligan tool and I was going to bring it up to him.

He made numerous attempts to try and open the lock; it failed. We were alerted to evacuate the building by Lieutenant Scullion and Lieutenant Frazier of the former ERS.

We came out of the building, and we gathered all our equipment. We were met with -- we had already been with but we had more equipment that was brought over to us by the carpenters union.

We left the building. My partner and I went to get our vehicle. We got our vehicle back down eventually to where our equipment was, loaded everything up, left the area and went over to Chambers and West Street. There was an EMS staging area set up there.

Everything seemed to be organized from then on. We spent most of the afternoon parked over there.

Q. Who was your partner that day?

A. Nicole Ferrell.

Q. Nicole Ferrell?

A. Nicole Ferrelo, F-E-R-R-E-L-L.

Q. The equipment that the carpenters brought over --

A. Yes.

Q. -- what kind of stuff did they bring over?

A. The carpenters brought over lots of jugs of spring water from spring water machines. It was a self- contained suffocating breathing apparatus, but it wasn't a Scott pack. I think was like made by MSA or something. They had like really old, long cylinders of oxygen. I think they may have had one of those MASH-style stretchers, the folding stretchers.

The corner where we had left our equipment initially was where they started putting more equipment. It almost became like a small depot, but it wasn't -- it only remained that way like 45 minutes, because we ended up taking all our equipment and heading over to that staging area on Chambers and West Street.

Q. From the time you arrived on scene in the area other Broadway and Murray until you met up with Lieutenant Scullion and Lieutenant Frazier, any encounters with any other EMS personnel or officers?

A. Yeah, there was the off-duty MOS. He said he lived in Jersey. He came over in his own vehicle. He had like a non-issue tech bag, but he had a uniform on and a coat on and a helmet on. He was the one who gave me the cartridges for my mask that I had gotten from the Port Authority van when we arrived down there.

Q. Do you know who he was?

A. No. I think he was either from Battalion 4 or Battalion 8. He had a goatee, in his like late twenties, early thirties, really nice guy. We had a couple interactions with him. He was just there to help. He worked there without a unit.

We had seen that one guy who was assigned to OEM that worked for EMS and telling him where we were coming from. He was in civilian clothes. There was the one paramedic that started getting real bossy. I'm not even sure what his name was. I know there was that one EMT or medic dressed like a lieutenant, but he started giving orders and we realized he was only one of us. We're like, you know --

As far as interaction down there, more civilians or guys from the unions, electrical workers, carpenters. And off-duty firefighters were down there.

Q. Any patients, walking wounded, anything like that that you encountered?

A. Initially when we arrived down there, my partner treated a guy with either an arm or a shoulder injury. She gave him a sling and a shot, and he ended up just running away.

Q. Sorry, that was --

A. Yeah, that was outside. I failed to mention that. That was initially when we initially arrived on Broadway and Murray. I wasn't even aware of that until afterwards because I hadn't known my partner had done that until I saw the in the newspaper.

Like I said, I was loading up the stretcher with equipment. I guess she just sat him down on the back bumper and treated him, and he just kept going north. Like I said, there was a huge exodus of people just going up north.

We encountered some reporters and stuff. We were very careful about what we said to them. We weren't even really sure who we were talking to. We were like, "Yeah, we're from EMS," and just left it at that.

That was really it until we got over to Chambers and West Street until we saw more EMS workers later on that day.

Q. Any thoughts or comments or opinions on what happened that you would like to add?

A. No, just -- when we got over to Chambers and West Street, that's when it seemed like things started to get really organized. You really couldn't get on the radio at all. Every radio was jammed up. It was impossible to talk on the radio. Communication was zilch. I think a lot of people got on the radio and they just kept talking and talking.

Other than that, organizationally until later on that day when the boss knew who we were, what we were doing there, and got us all in the staging area by BMCC. That was really it as far as being down in this area right here by Seven World Trade Center. As far as that's concerned, we were kind of on our own down there.

That's really it.

Q. Okay. I thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

ASSISTANT CHIEF FIRE MARSHAL RICHARD McCAHEY

Interview Date: November 2, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

FIRE MARSHAL CAMPBELL: The time is now 11:10. This is Pat Campbell, Fire Marshal of the Fire Department, New York City. I'm here conducting an interview with Assistant Chief Fire Marshal McCahey in the conference room on the 6th floor of 16 Hooper Street. Also present in the room is --

FIRE MARSHAL STARACE: Fire Marshal Michael Starace.

FIRE MARSHAL CAMPBELL: And --

CHIEF McCAHEY: Assistant Chief Fire Marshal Rich McCahey.

Q. We are here to get a history today of the events that happened on September 11. What we are interested in is that from the time you became aware of the attack until the first plane hit the south tower until after the second tower had collapsed. Just go ahead and tell us everything. If we have any other questions, we'll ask them at the end.

A. Okay. Tuesday, September 11 was Election Day. I remember when I got up, I called the bases like I do every day. I checked with each of the commands, how the night was before. On my way in to work I stopped to vote at McKee High School. I guess it was probably maybe 8 o'clock, five after 8, along those lines. It was the wrong place to go so I was directed to go to another place to vote. So I went to that place. New Dorp High School. I put my vote in.

As I was leaving, I remember as I was leaving the high school after voting, my beeper went off, a page for 722-2900, which is up here on the fifth floor, which I assume is Murf. My car was probably 15 feet away and I said I will wait until I get into the car and call him. As I put the key into the car door, that's when I believe the first page I got was 33 for plane crashing into the World Trade Center, a third alarm.

So I didn't think -- I didn't know what it was. I'm thinking maybe a small aircraft. I get into the car, I call Murf, asked him what's going on. He said have you heard it, yes. Plane crashed. No, at that point I believe he said looks like it was a big big crash and I think he said at that point he also told me that the second crash had just taken place. He said it looks bad. They were watching it from the windows at Hooper Street. I told him okay.

At that point I said, reach out to Bobby Burns and all the FIU, and have them respond right there. I said reach out to Brooklyn base, have them respond there. Reach out to the fire senior and have him respond. Reach out to -- basically everybody. I wanted everybody to the scene. Notify the Chief Fire Marshal that I was responding at that point. I started heading up Hylan Boulevard towards the Verrazano Bridge and then past the 122 precinct, I believe it's the emergency service truck number 5 was pulling out lights and sirens.

Figuring that's where they are going, I got behind them. I figured they would open a path, which they did. Coming down Father Capadanno Boulevard, there was debris, papers and just ash and I got my first glimpse, as I was getting on to the bridge of the towers. I could see it was bad. I called Murf again, basically asked him if everybody was on their way. He was reaching out to us and I told him keep the radio open, keep your cell phones open and I will be getting back to him.

I followed ESU 5 up the Gowanus. It was clear sailing through, I believe it was the buff lane, so we were moving. We got to the tunnel. They had already cleared the tunnel, so I was followed by maybe one or two other emergency vehicles, but it did seem like it was us two. I followed them through the tunnel. At that point I just received a phone call from Murf who said that it appeared it's a terrorist attack. He even thought that the second one was a missile. He said it looked like a rocket from there, but he feared, if it was a terrorist attack, just to let me know. My mind was -- not going through the tunnel was a good move. Anyways, we went through the tunnel. I remember coming out at the other end of the tunnel. I think they were directing us. There were probably tunnel cops there. I followed ESU. We went up, made a right up West Street, looking at your map here. We went up West Street, things were going well. Actually I remember in retrospect, I remember seeing what I thought was one or two, maybe two or three bundles on the side of the road from the tunnel, up until around Albany.

Later on I had found out they were body parts. I just thought it was a couple of dogs. You know, a couple of dogs got hit. Your mind plays games. I pulled up at Albany and West Street. They waved ESU. There was a police officer there, they waved ESU into the opposite lane to get up more in front of the building. That's, I guess, where our command post was. I was right behind ESU. They stopped traffic. They stopped me right there. As ESU went up, the cops who were waving, I believe maybe another rig or two were coming. I sat there for probably 30, 40 seconds. I said you know what, the hell with this. I made a right. I went over the divider at Albany. There was a cut in it anyway, so it wasn't a big deal. I pulled right on to the corner on Albany, off the corner of West Street facing towards the water.

I got out of the car, I let the Manhattan dispatcher, I think I did, I can't remember, I usually do, that I'm on the scene. I definitely let Hooper Street know that I was on the scene. At that point I started walking up West Street in the direction towards Vesey to locate the command post, which is where I usually report in to at a scene like this, where the highest ranking officer are found. On the way up there I remember seeing Dave, the buff car parking on West Street from Brooklyn base, and in front of him was, I believe it was Harry Meyers, I believe Steve Gregory was there, maybe another individual. I believe Jerry Barbara was there. They had their trunk open, maybe they were putting their gear on. I just stopped and asked them, kind of half joking, is this the command post, I'm on my way to the command post. They said no. I said do you know where it is. I think Harry said, I think it's up there, so keep going.

I continued up and at this time, I was just in a suit and tie. At this point I continued up West Street. I went under the first overpass. I guess that's around Liberty Street according to the map. I go under the first overpass and I cross Liberty Street and as I get maybe 15, I'm looking at the sky the whole time. I try to keep my eyes up.

Again, like I mentioned before to Mike earlier, in '93 one of our big problems was falling glass. There was a lot of glass falling in '93, so I was conscious of that. I didn't have a helmet on at the time. I was looking up. Everything looked good. The sky was blue. I looked down for a brief second. About 3 feet in front of me a piece of metal maybe 6 inches by 11 or 12 inches hit the ground about 3 feet in front of me. I didn't see where it came from. There was a firefighter to the right of me. I remember looking over at him, he said wow that was close or you were lucky or something like that.

At that point I said you know what, I'm going to go back and put my helmet on. Again, I was probably halfway towards the command post. I just passed maybe 50 feet on Liberty Street. I turned around, walked all the way back to Albany and West, opened up the trunk of my car, got my helmet, and at that time I put on my windbreaker to identify myself, who I was.

As I closed the trunk, I believe the first group of guys I think I saw were Brooklyn base guys coming, Brian Grogan was the supervisor. He had about three or four Marshals with him. I can't remember all of them, I think Masser, Pascarella, something like that, you know, those guys. Nobody had gear on.

At that point I stopped them and I said I want everybody to go back and get their fire gear. They were like biting at the bit to get up and see what was going on. At that point though I was stern. We may have even had -- to make a point, I even -- at one point I even told Brian, I want gear on, and I pointed to the front of 1 World Financial Center, which was across the street and I said this is where our command post is going to be. I wanted everybody to get gear and report back to there. That was just short of the overpass, the south overpass. We were right there. 1 World Financial Center, between Dow Jones and Oppenheimer, right there.

I put them up there, right in front of the door, but I watched them later on as they creeped up towards the foot bridge. But they didn't go past there. I grabbed Brian Grogan, who was supervisor, you are in charge of keeping everybody there. You know, anybody goes by here Brian, you know, we're gonna fire them, or something like that, in jest, but I wanted to get the point out. I didn't want anybody going past here.

At that point I believe Jay, Supervising Fire Marshal J.D. Lynn, I saw him coming from across the street, where the hotel was, whatever that construction they are doing over there. Right about here, to whatever that building is over there. Coming from like Cedar, he was coming from across the street. Again I believe he had a windbreaker on. I stopped and I said, "J.D., don't even think about it. Go back and get your gear." I believe he acknowledged me. Again at that same point I believe Bobby Burns showed up, and some of the guys from FIU. Again, I relayed the same information, go back and get your gear. I didn't want anybody going past there, and we'll maintain a command post where I had already said.

I believe I probably had one -- as I was talking to Bobby, I remember one of the Marshals going holy, whatever, pretty loud and I turned around and I noticed these black figures that were in the corner of my eye were actually bodies. They seemed like little tiny black figures. I saw one or two of them. I remember turning to the Marshal and telling him relax. Then he went again oh, my god, somebody went oh, my god, another one. I remember turning to the Marshal and saying listen, we are the professionals here, we got to compose ourselves. Relax, don't be screaming that out. We got a job to do, okay. Again, everybody go get their gear, okay. I think at that point we probably turned around and watched maybe 2 or 3 people jump. I remember standing there just watching. I remember one guy coming down. One guy was coming down on his back, his hands up. One guy came down with a white shirt. It looked like he was waving it. Probably after that I think we all saw one. He hit like a light post or a fence, and basically just went to pieces.

At that point, I was going to start my way again back to the command post. I think Bobby Burns showed up with a helmet or a bunker coat. After making sure that I had all the guys, I told them we want to stay here. I will go up there, find out what they need. When I come back, again, I want everybody to be here. I don't want nobody going anywhere, okay.

I had turned to start and at that point I remember looking up at 1 World Financial Center, to the best of my recollection, I remember seeing Mike Starace, but I also remember seeing Dr. Kelly and she was with a firefighter or an officer. He was a guy with a helmet and turnout coat. I think he was a Lieutenant or Captain. I think his front piece was white. I'm not sure. That distracted me. I went to see what was going on.

I walked up sort of an incline, walking up right here. So I walked up the incline, I think I got to the top, I don't know if it was like, hey, what's up, or what's going on. I don't know what came or how much we got until somebody -- I heard a roar and somebody said, whatever, it's collapsing, it's going and everybody started running. I don't think I looked at that time. I just started running down, back down the incline. I think when I got to the sidewalk area, turning to go to make a right back towards Albany, I looked over my shoulder briefly and I could see this big cloud of dust. It looked like it was coming pretty good.

At that point, thinking fast, I had a few options. When I got to the corner of Albany, that's where my car was and I was thinking about either -- my first thought was actually, there was a fence, a chain link fence, it was covered in green. I actually stopped there briefly and I crouched down and when I leaned against it I realized it was chain link and that probably wasn't going to be a good place to be. Some of the stuff started coming. I thought briefly about going under the car. But I figured I go under the car, if it doesn't, with my luck the car is not going to be completely crushed or half crushed, then you are stuck under the car.

So at that time I had no choice. I went maybe another 15 feet, 20 feet, and there was a brick wall, which I thought was the side of 1 World Financial Center and I figured since it was a tall building, so I was pretty safe there, which I later found out was only a one story back of the garage. But I basically put myself as flat to the brick wall as I could. There were people around, I don't remember anybody. I don't know. I know Mike said we bumped into each other. I didn't remember that actually until we talked. I remember bumping, going like hi, like in a cartoon, where you are trying to go right but you are going left. I don't know where anybody else went.

While I was against the wall, I could hear the stuff coming and I remember looking over my shoulder and I saw the stuff going past me, nothing large. I saw small debris going past me. I remember thinking, what's the chances of something coming straight down the building. That's all I was worried about. So that went on. At that point I figured maybe we will luck out, and then a couple of seconds, I don't know, the stuff seemed to be coming back. It started pinging off the wall. It was like it went that way and then all of a sudden it whipped back. Again, nothing big, I didn't see any big chunks. A lot of dust, a lot of little things. Started pinging back off the wall. At that point I got down on the ground. I went down to maybe my knees, and then the dust came in and then the black came in.

When the black came in I thought, at first I thought that it was smoke coming down there. I saw an orange glow, I don't know where it was, a small orange glow. I believe it was to -- I was disoriented. It looked like it was to my left. I'm thinking maybe people; now I'm thinking that jet fuel, the thick black smoke and I'm down on the ground. I got my face, my teeth to the concrete at that point, completely flat, just using what I was taught, you know. Get low. At that point I figured, I kind of thought this was -- my only thought was this is where they're gonna find me on the street corner. I thought I was in -- I it was in a smoke area. I figured like I said it was diesel or jet fuel. It's not going to do any kind of, whatever. It gets inside your lungs just like an oil burner fire.

Anyway, at one point I'm down there and I'm not covering my face. I'm just breathing slowly, I'm pacing my breathing, I'm not panicking, trying to keep everything nice and calm like we are supposed to. I heard some people screaming. Some people like I can't breathe, I can't see, stuff like that. Sporadically, not a lot, very sporadically. Maybe two or three. Somebody, which actually helped me, I don't know who it was, after somebody said I can't breathe, somebody, I don't know which direction it came from, screamed out don't panic or relax, relax. It's not smoke. It's just dust. Just relax.

At that point, that's when I started to realize my mouth was filling up with like a sand ball. All of a sudden I realized when whoever said that, now I'm starting to pay attention to my surroundings. I realized there was no heat, you could breathe. Stuff was going in your mouth but it was like a cool air coming in when you breathe it, so I said maybe he was right. You couldn't see, it was gritty.

So at that point I took my jacket and put my jacket around my face. I remember hearing a mask go on, somebody turning on their scott pack. Then I heard the breathing start. I was choking. I was spitting up at that point a little bit. Still not sure what's going on. I remember standing up half way, maybe crouched now, and feeling what I felt, the turnout coat. I remember tapping the guy and asking him if I could -- pal, can I have a hit of that. Whatever. I remember sounding stupid. I said can I have a hit of that and I don't think he heard me.

Anyway, at a certain point while it was still black, previously to that I saw this orange glow before, let me backtrack -- before this guy had said it was dust, I saw an orange glow. I had decided that I think I was going to try to make my way toward the orange glow, figuring again, I've been out of fire ops for so long, that it was taking in oxygen from the flame. If I get close to the orange glow, I stay low, maybe I will get some oxygen off that, if things were getting bad. That was going through my head prior to realizing what exactly the environment was.

At a point I started moving and I started moving fast. I didn't know where I was, I actually thought I may have been indoors. I took about maybe 3 steps, I was disoriented. At one point it was dead silence and it was pitch black and I thought I was indoors.

So I started to move. I was moving at a good pace, not running, but I think I started a good brisk walk. I banged my knee. It must have been a car. I hit another car. After I hit like two, banging my legs and I hit my shoulder against a car. Something fell on my head. I don't know what the hell it was. It wasn't heavy. I remember thinking it felt like sheetrock and I know it couldn't have been sheetrock. I realized if I start running blindly I'm going to be running into things. So I walked slowly and I saw another glow and when I got up to the glow it was a white SUV. I remember that, because I could see it when I got right up -- you had to get right up on top of it to see it was white. He had his headlights on. He must have been in the middle of the street or whatever. I don't know. So I continued going, because I remembered when I parked the water was straight that way. So I thought I was going in the right direction.

Probably a couple of minutes later or very shortly after, I saw the green go to red or red go to green up in the air. As I kept staring at it I could see it was a street light. As I am staring at it, I remember seeing a branch, like branch, looked like it was only about 3 feet over my head. So I figured, I knew I was outdoors. That made me feel better and I just kept going very slowly, eyes squinted, and it started to clear up. As it started to clear up I remember I could see I was on the corner, I guess it was on South End Avenue and Albany. Because the light I think I saw was on South End and Albany right there and then there was a store over here. I made it down South End Avenue. I had no radio. I lost my radio, I had lost my cell phone, which was on my belt. I realized that was gone. My radio was gone. I had no communication.

I wound up going all the way down to the esplanade, I guess. I started to walk by the water, that's all I know. Everything was white, everything was dust, there was nobody around. One or two firemen I may have passed. When I got down to the esplanade it was like vacant, and the dust was starting to lift and my eyes are like this, and I got here and I run across a female, she had her shirt up over her head. No under garments. Quite a sight.

But she was going, walking back towards Vesey Street, I don't know where that is, north. She was walking north. So I remember grabbing her and telling her, "You are going the wrong way. Come with me." She was kind of hysterical. She said no no no. She said "How do you know." I said I know because I just came from there. I remember she was grabbing around my shirt and she felt my patch on my windbreaker. She said are you a cop or a fireman. I said I'm from the Fire Department, so she spun around and started walking south and nobody was there.

At that point some young kid, tall kid, with his shirt wrapped around his face, blond hair, I remember he comes popping up and again, going north. I grabbed him and said, "No, let's go this way." At that point we saw a -- I remember seeing a baby carriage from the back. I couldn't see if there was a baby in it. I went up to it, spun it around and there was no baby in it. I remember somebody, I don't know who it was, somebody said let's go into one of these buildings over here. He said -- I have no idea where I was at that point. Somebody said the building is open. So whatever it was it was a back door to one of these buildings along the esplanade.

We went up there, we go through there. It was like a triage center with people screaming and panicking. As I walked in I had a windbreaker on. It said Fire Department, Fire Marshal. It was like a magnet. A well dressed older gentleman grabbed me immediately and said, "You are with the Fire Department." I said "Yes." He said, "Well, I'm a doctor, is there anything I can do." I asked him are there any other police officers, firefighters, in this lobby area. He said, "I think EMS, I think you have EMS here. They are in the back." So I went back to EMS. There was a baby there. A small baby, and the lady was going hysterical. The baby looked okay to me. The doctor thought he was okay.

I went into the back room and they were not EMS. They were in uniform, they were park police, I think, if I remember correctly. Park with the green uniform. It was a female. She was trying to calm people down. At that point I was having trouble seeing. There was a desk there and a doorman and I remember asking if the phone's working. He said "Yeah," and I said, "I'm gonna use it." He said, "You can't use it." He was a black gentleman. I think I told him we need the phone basically, and I used the phone. I don't know what happened. He moved out of the way and I used the phone and I called headquarters.

I called Chris Tempro. I said Chris, do you know what's going on, I mean I have no phone, I have no radio. Yes, blah blah blah. I said listen, do me a favor. Then I think I said forget about it. I wound up calling Hooper Street, because I know Hooper Street has their radio, they would answer, so I got Hooper Street, and I got, I don't know who I got, I got Murf or somebody. I was looking to move, I'm getting confused. I think at that point I was just trying to get the guys moved back. I don't remember where the first move was going to be. I just wanted everybody that was on West Street to fall back, south. I kept saying go towards Battery Park. I wanted everybody moving towards Battery Park.

At that point the doctor came over and he said you better wash out your eyes, blah blah blah. I went into the bathroom, somebody gave me some water. I washed my eyes. I was having trouble keeping them open. At that point I looked outside. I hung up. I think I called my house and I called my wife to tell her I was okay. I went back out. I remember the doctor saying, "Where are you going." I said, "I'm going to go back out. I got to find my guys." He said fine. Everything seemed to be okay. It was kind of lifting up. I had given the address, so I gave the phone to the doorman and I said give him the address. Send EMS, or whatever, he was talking to. Then I went back out and I guess I walked back to Albany and up Albany.

As I came across Albany, there was a, I think I ran into Lane, Lechter Lane, yes. There was another Marshal there, I ran into somebody else. I'm getting confused with the second collapse now. Time flies by. I know we definitely had Lechter Lane. There was some sort of bodega or Gristedes or something there. And we went into there, went there to the door. It was locked. I remember knocking on the door and I remember seeing a girl and guy. They weren't going to open the door. I took my shield out and knocked my shield against the glass. Open the door. Then she opened up. She didn't know who the hell we were. We went in there and their phone worked. So then I called Chris again and I said we will make this a command post. I have a line going in and out. I believe we took some water. There was other guys that were firemen in there. I can't remember.

Anyway at that point, I believe I asked Lane to stay there. I gave Chris that telephone number. I think I took somebody's radio and I was trying to get people on the radio. I remember getting Jack McCauley and I wanted the guys moving back to Battery Park. We were going towards that way. Somebody said that's like a mile away. You know, back and forth. Now I'm -- I don't think we moved back to Battery Park until the second, it was after the second collapse, right, when we actually got to Battery Park.

At this point I'm a little confused -- where now -- I was there, I think I went back up South End Avenue, okay. That's correct. I'm trying to think. We did move back to Battery Park after the first collapse.

Q. (inaudible)?

A. Yes, I was back there by the water. The water was right to my back. I remember going back and forth. I had somebody's radio, going back and forth about moving to Battery Park. I think we did. We moved to Battery Park. I think that's when I met you again, right. That was after the first collapse. Okay. Was it after the second collapse?

Okay, that was after the second collapse. Then I got in the truck and drove back. I'm confused now. All I know is we were here. And I may have left Lane. I can't remember who I ran into, okay, whatever. I know I had left Lane on the phone. I spoke to Chris, gave him the address where we were. Okay, now I remember. I was in contact with Jack McCauley and Jimmy Kelty, but he couldn't make it. He kept telling me, he wasn't sure where he was. I think Jack probably wasn't sure where he was and I wasn't exactly sure where my location was at that time. I don't know that area down there. But that was it. We had a lot of radio traffic. Once I got the radio, a lot of radio traffic with Jimmy Kelty, who was supposedly trapped up by 10 and 10. He said he had a bunch of guys with him. Okay. He could not meet. He couldn't get to the West Side Highway. Jack was basically telling me it's too far. But I put him in charge. I think he was on up on West Street.

At that point, I don't know how I got, but I remember walking back up the west side. No, no, that was still after the second collapse. No, it wasn't the second collapse. It was on West Street. That's right. On West Street, as I started going to Battery Park, I believe that's when I ran into Chief Nigro. I believe it was Chief Nigro and -- Chief Nigro was by himself. Chief Nigro asked me if I -- I asked Chief Nigro, "Do you know where the command post is, is there a command post?" I said, "I'm thinking about putting my guys back on Battery Park." He asked me if I saw Chief Ganci. I said, "No". I think I asked him again. I said, "You know, I am having the Marshals move back up towards Battery Park. Do you know where our command post is going to be?" I think again he asked me if I had heard or seen from Chief Ganci, if I could find out if anybody.

I think I went over the radio. I got McCauley. I said, Jack, have you seen Chief Ganci. Wherever Jack was. With the guys. He was -- I don't know if anybody was with Jack. Wherever Jack was I can't remember, but I asked Jack because he was the only guy that answered me and he didn't see Chief Ganci. I told Chief Nigro no. At that point I believe he started walking back towards the Trade Center.

I think I ran into Andy McCracken, Chief of EMS, and that would have been probably around Rector Street, between Albany and Rector. I don't know what we talked about. He mentioned something to me and I can't remember. At that point I wanted to go back to my car, I figured, to get my -- I told him that I had my car keys, actually my house keys were in my car and it seemed like everything was settled down and everything was that way. I remember I needed my gear. I needed a helmet, I needed my bunker coat. I started walking back down West Street again. There was pretty much nobody there. It was kind of empty. It was weird, with the dust. It was like a ghost town.

I remember getting back to right at the same spot where my car was parked and standing in the middle of Albany Street it was covered with dust. There was a tire in the middle of the street. I ran into Commissioner Gregory, Steve Gregory. Evidently they had sought refuge over here but I'm not sure. I can only remember talking to him. Now this whole trip, I don't know how long it took, 15, 20 minutes, I'm going down, going here, stopping there. And coming back, going back. I guess it was about 15, 20 minutes. I remember standing there and reaching for my car keys to open up the car to get my stuff out and then I started talking to Commissioner Gregory. I asked him if he was okay. How you doing? Do you believe it? We were looking up at the thing like it was normal stuff.

I heard that roar again. Sounded like a big jet plane and my back was facing. I was talking to the Commissioner, and I could see the look on his face. I turned around and all I saw was that mushroom coming down. I turned around, I don't know where Commissioner Gregory went. I thought for a second of running across the street because I figured there was something over there, but, because I hadn't been there before, no way, I didn't want to get caught. I just wound up going back, right back to the same spot. Basically, it was like deja vu all over again. Same routine, except I knew what to expect.

Q. Was your car smashed already?

A. My car, the first time the windows blew out. The first time, yes, that's true. When I got back to my car, the passenger's side windows were out. There was a little bit of debris on it, but I remember the passenger side front and rear window got, the back window I think was broken. I can't remember when the hood -- the hood, I think that was after the second. Mike might have a picture of that.

I went against the wall, there was a little nook. It was like being by yourself this time. I knew there was nobody around. I went through the whole thing, what's the chance of something coming straight down on you, the whole nine yards, so at least I knew what to expect. After everything blew over and it got dark, I remember there was a fireman. Again, I could hear his mask. He wasn't too far from me. He had a flashlight, he had a light. He was there. I started to move. I moved -- I started to move out a lot faster than I did last time. I didn't wait as long.

Again, I don't know, I didn't feel as much coming out of the sky. The black came in. I remember he was leading the way with a flashlight in his hand. I was holding on to his -- I had asked him for the flashlight. He said, nah, nah, I got it, and I said well, I know the way out of here. I remember telling him, you know, been there, done that. But he held the light and he had his hand on the right wall and he started moving slowly down the block and I had his mask and the back of his cylinder. He started going to the right and I knew going to the right was going to go into the building, into the garage. I told him go left. And he said basically, no. I think I just wound up going off to my left in to the middle of the street.

At that point it was still fairly dark, but you could see the street light up the block. As I made it up the block, I wound up - my eyes were bad that time. I couldn't even -- they were hurting, they were hurting, okay. I couldn't find, believe it or not, I couldn't find the Gristedes we went to the first time. I don't know why. I thought it was right there. I thought the store was in like a cove of some sort. Again somewhere back here, I may have been on the wrong corner the first time.

So I went straight back, all the way back to the water again. Made a left, started walking, doing the same thing again. I believe I ran into Mike Kane. Mike Kane is coming this way. He is walking up from Battery Park, direction south, walking north. I am coming this way. I couldn't see him. I said, "Hey Mike, what's up?" He said, "Where's the guys, where you going?" I guess we had some small talk. I said hold up a second. I said, "I know there is a store with a phone, I just wanted to find it, but I couldn't. I had to take a break."

So I went to the marina someplace here where the boats are docked. I could have been that far over.

Q. There's only one marina.

A. It's not. There's something over here. There is something over here. You don't have it. It's got to be right around here. I went down these steps on to the marina. I remember seeing two guys taking off on boats. I know boats, I figured there is a hose, there has got to be a hose. I don't know where he has the hose. My eyes were bad. Even Mike said that I couldn't open them up. So I went down there, not a freaking hose. Not -- so I went over to the corner. I just pushed the water out of the way. I remember sticking my head, put my head right into the Hudson River, cleaned my eyes. It felt good. It really did help.

Now when I came back up, I think -- I don't know if I lost another radio, or Mike had a radio or we used the same radio. Again at that point I think that's when I started asking everybody to go to Battery Park. Not towards Battery Park. I said I wanted the command post, I want all the Marshals to Battery Park. Again I remember getting Jack McCauley, I remember the guys at Hooper Street answering me, and asking them to relay it. I wanted the command post back at Battery Park. I think it was Jack, who said it's a mile to Battery Park. I don't remember who said it, but I want everybody at Battery Park. Jimmy Kelty, we found that he could not make it to Battery Park. I had Mike with me.

Somehow we wound up coming up one of these side streets. I got Mike into the -- we wound up in this space I was in before, this little supermarket. Okay. I don't think Lane was there, and I was a little upset. As it turned out, that's why I left him in charge there, so we could have an open line with a radio, for the radio and the phones. If I needed, I could call up Lane and he could call on the phone. But evidently, nobody knew where he was and evidently it turned out that he -- somebody got hurt. He wound up helping somebody so he wasn't there. Lechter was gone with the radio and there was no Fire Marshal present. So it was me, myself and Mike. We took over the phones again. We did the phone things. I don't know what else we did.

I think -- I can't remember if there was another Marshal or two that showed up in there. What I think was I asked the guy for two box cameras that were hanging up there. I took two box cameras off the thing. I gave the guy my name, I said thanks. I remember last time, what had happened in '93 was we had one of the first initial photographs. Timmy Marr got a lot of photographs that nobody had, the press didn't have. Today everybody has cameras, so it didn't help, but I took both box cameras and then we went back out.

I started walking towards Battery Park. Took a weird route there. I can't remember. I was with Mike so Mike may remember better. I think we hit the back roads. Then we ran into another dead end and we had to go down again. But Mike said he knew because that's the way he came. We made it eventually, we made it back -- we made it to Battery Park. Okay. I may be missing things here because I should have wrote this down in the beginning because between both of these and being in the same place both times I'm getting confused, but I think I'm pretty much right on that.

We made it back to Battery Park, and I remember the first guy I saw, I remember seeing Mike, you sitting there with a bunch of guys sitting there.

I remember Mike looking like a war zone. Guys were covered, disheveled, beat up, you name it. But I saw a lot of guys there, so I was kind of happy. I didn't know if my message -- who was getting it through there as far as moving back to Battery Park. If Hooper Street was working. I don't know if Jack did it all by himself. I remember reaching out to Bobby. I might have even gotten Bobby once or twice. All I remember Jack, we had a lot of dialogue on the radio. He seemed to be the only guy who was getting back to me. So somebody had it.

I remember walking up there and seeing who we had, if everybody was okay. The usual. I grabbed the supervisor, I guess it was Jack. I remember Bobby there and Jimmy Devery. John Grogan was there. So I asked is everybody here, everybody okay. Looked like everything was okay.

At that point I turn around and I see Dr. Kelly and Dr. Prezant were coming up the street and I remember the first thing - I said hello to Dr. Kelly. She was right by me. I remember she just went and asked everybody is everybody okay. She went there talking to the guys. At that point Jack McCauley came over to me and he said something to the effect that Chief, we are missing a couple of guys. Who are we missing. I did a roll call. We are missing Ronnie Bucca. I said, "Who is the supervisor? " He said Jimmy Devery. I said send Jimmy over. Jimmy came over, I said, "Jimmy, where's Ronnie?" He says, "I think he was in the building. I'm not sure." I probably got a little upset with him. You know, what do you mean you're not sure? He's either in the building or out of the building. He said, "I think he's in the building." I think I might have asked, "What was he doing in the building?"

At that point I don't know what I did, I just walked back over there to Jack McCauley and Jack goes calm down, I said okay. And then it dawned on me and I had Jimmy come over and I asked who is his partner and I think he said Andy Difusco. I said, "Where is Andy Difusco? " He said, "I don't know." Now I'm thinking we are missing two guys. I think we -- I think Jack somebody. I may have had someone go on the radio, ask around, are they here, are they there, are they there.

At that point we had the mobile command post parked there, the big trailer. I remember walking into the trailer and only seeing Chief Nigro sitting in there. Wondering where everybody was. At that point we had gotten in touch. I think -- I think I started asking Louie again, because I had a radio. I remember Louis, Chief Garcia, was over on the other side. He was asking if I could come over to his command post at Manhattan Community College. That's where his new command post was. You know the Fire Department command post.

So to make a long story short, I grabbed the crime scene unit, Mickey Shadwicke. I spent probably the next 20 hours with Mickey. That truck was great for getting through the streets with the lights. So I got in there and had Mickey wheel me over to the Manhattan College, Community College command post, where I hooked up with Garcia.

It was at that time that Garcia told me that Chief Ganci was dead. I believe Chief Feehan was dead. Father Judge, I was in total amazement -- at that time, even with all that I forgot that people were in harm's way.

From there the Chief wanted to know where the Marshals were. I said I had the Marshals at the command post in Battery Park. I think while we were there, I believe Jack McCauley moved in farther into the park, because there was still dust and debris.

Chief Garcia wanted to go to the command post, so we walked back.

At that point I had the camera, they were taking pictures. It was a scene of devastation, just walking back, cars were turned over.

Q. You had said to me you were north of the south bridge?

A. Yes, for the first time, yes. After we left the Manhattan Community College, we just walked back and we got to the north bridge there. We couldn't get by there. We just walked and walked and then when we left, when we got to here, I took him back down to where the store was. I called the Marshals. I had somebody else in there. I know we just all walked together. We all walked together back to Battery Park. Nobody was there. We started walking. Jack said keep walking. We have to move farther. You guys were like by the restaurant. There seemed to be more guys, a couple more guys than the first time.

Basically we took stock of what we had to do. We told everybody we were moving up to the Manhattan Community College. I don't remember much. My eyes were killing me so bad Louie did all the talking. I think I just kept dumping water bottles on my eyes.

Q. (inaudible)?

A. At that point after Louie gave me the directions, we jumped back into the crime scene unit. I believe it was myself, Garcia, and maybe, I don't know, maybe Bobby, maybe not. I can't remember. We went back to Manhattan Community College, where we pretty much set up our command post the remainder of the night.

During the course of the night they walked in early on in the evening, they walked in with this guy that was wearing fire fighting gear. Somebody had seen him at the pile. They brought him in. We had him in another room there, Intelligence was notified, I believe it was Inspector Arnett showed up from Intelligence and we turned him over to them. I believe it was at that time I had my first contact with Andy Difusco, who showed up, looked like Lil' Abner. Basically just a T-shirt, pair of ripped pants, I don't even think he had shoes on. I didn't know that he was -- I didn't know how much he was involved in this collapse. I didn't put two and two together, why he had no clothes on. I never realized till later on.

He was basically talkative, he was active, doing his job. We had a lot of Marshals starting to show up. I had all the supervisors in there. I started delegating different jobs, you know. I gave -- I broke up the Marshals regardless of who their squad was. I assigned to get some coverage going. I assigned -- somebody marked to be supervisor, so we had some control. I believe for the most part that's what we were doing right at that point.

We had some contact going in. Guys were coming back and forth. I don't know -- not much more for us to do. At one point later on I then took a break, again going back to my original why I went back to the second collapse. I needed to get my gear. At that point, it seems like it's probably going towards the afternoon, 3:00. The recovery effort was on, I grabbed Mickey Shadwicke, I said, "Mickey, I want you to take a walk with me."

First we were going to drive, we couldn't get the truck down. I needed to get in my car. All my gear was in the truck, my duffle dug, my bag, my briefcase, my keys, so Mickey and I walked all the way back to Albany, the back route to Albany and at that point I noticed there was a pole, a six-foot long pole through the back window and then right through the front. It looked like a curtain rod. It was round. All the windows were blown out, the hood was semi-dented. My trunk was up. No, my trunk was closed. I opened up the trunk. It was covered with ash, with white powder, I couldn't figure out how it got in there.

Later on Mike had showed me a picture that he took after the second collapse of the trunk of my car. My trunk was open. Somehow it popped open and somebody must have closed it. That's what it was. I couldn't figure out how I had so much stuff inside it. I loaded up all my stuff, my 400 pounds of bunker gear and me and Mickey trucked it all the way back and threw it into the back of the crime scene unit.

Q. Were you parked near any companies, any fire companies?

A. I remember parking, I remember that when I pulled up. When I made the left on Albany, there was nobody else on the street. Right behind me pulled up a black Crown Vic '93 behind me, because I know what it is. Three guys got out. They looked like police types. That car -- I'm trying to remember -- that car was gone. The car was gone when I went back with Mickey. I remember saying I don't know if it was totalled. My car was gone by the second day. We went back the second day, because I remember, I was actually going to try to move it down the block, because I remember I said I will get in, stay hunched over and I can get this started. I walked with the key and when I got there the car was gone.

The only car left on the block was a blue Crown Vic, which turned out to be down the block, which turned out to be Dr. Kelly's car. That was down the block. Well, that's it. If you have specific questions, go ahead.

Q. Prior to losing your radio, do you remember hearing any transmissions?

A. Nothing. All I remember is the verbal part, the collapsing, and then like most guys said, the dead silence. Again, not panic. Like maybe two or three people, saying I can't see, I can't breathe. I can't see. That was it. Like one or two, and whoever the guy was, I don't know. Something tells me it was a Marshal. The guy that said that it's not smoke, relax, it's not smoke, it's just dust. That actually got me thinking.

Q. It wasn't Bobby Burns by any chance?

A. No, it wasn't Bobby. Brian Grogan said it was one of his guys. I think he said that. I'm not sure if he had a name. I don't know where Bob was. You were even close. I didn't even know you were that close.

Q. Right after I bumped into you. Chief Barbara, you said you saw him when you reached the scene?

A. Chief Barbara, he was talking.

Q. Was he parked?

A. There was a car parked there. Now there was a trunk open. That would have been Albany before I went under the underpass, so right from Albany, what, he was parked on West, maybe they were on West. I don't know whose car it was. Somebody's trunk was up. They were on -- it was Albany. It was on West Street between Albany and Liberty. It was probably in front of the World Financial Center where we had the command post. That was when I first got there.

Q. They were walking?

A. No, they were talking. I believe it was him. Harry Meyers. Steve Gregory and maybe Sal Cassano. I'm not sure. That day I remember saying I'm getting confused. People were telling me they were over here, over there. Again it was well before the first collapse. It was almost like they were just getting their stuff together. They were at somebody's car getting their stuff. I remember thinking maybe that was the command post and asking them if it was the command post.

No, I remember to myself because I thought it was unusual that both Barbara and Harry were there, do you know what I'm saying, because (inaudible). That's it. No, that was the last place I probably saw him, when I was walking up West Street.

Q. Anything else?

FIRE MARSHAL CAMPBELL: Time is now 12:01. Thank you very much, Chief.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN KARIN DESHORE

Interview Date: November 7, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

INVESTIGATOR TAMBASCO: Today is November 7. I'm Mike Tambasco with the World Trade Center Task Force. We are doing an interview with Captain Karin Deshore of Battalion 46 into the events of September 11 at the World Trade Center. Interview time is beginning at 0549 a.m.

Q. Captain, would you be good enough to tell us your story?

A. Okay, on 9-11-01 I reported for duty as usual, at 0500 hours. Lieutenant Spiro Yioras was sent from Battalion 49 to be Conditions 46. He arrived here roughly around 0615 hours. Mr. Keller, who became part of the persons responding with me, arrived for duty at 0630 hours. I don't know the exact time, but I was sitting behind my desk when Mr. Keller came into my office and told me that an airplane had just hit the World Trade Center.

Because Mr. Keller is a prankster, I told him to leave me alone, and get out of my office. Then he said to me it was really true. I looked at his face. I got up and sure enough there was smoke coming out of the World Trade Center building. We had the television in our lunchroom.

Thinking it was a possibly accident of a

Cessna or something hitting the World Trade Center, I did become concerned, but at that time I didn't have a command car. I didn't respond. When it became apparent that a commercial airliner had hit the World Trade Center, the first hit, I called Lieutenant Yioras in from patrol. He came here and another one of my employees, Mr. Prue, also called and asked did I want him to come in, since he lived right around the corner and I advised him, come on in. When Lieutenant Yioras arrived, Lieutenant Yioras, myself and Mister EMT Keller, who is here on restricted duty, but I still felt he could respond with me, if it was just as a matter of being my aide or carrier or assist and Mr. Prue responded in command car 825.

It is my recollection that we drove Northern Boulevard to the 59 Street bridge. At the beginning of the 59 Street bridge, the second airliner hit and we witnessed it. Mr. Keller later on told me that we were still at the office here, but I remember it hitting when we just hit the 59 Street bridge on the Queens side. People were just standing on the 59 Street bridge in total disbelief. No traffic was moving. Traffic agents were trying to clear the way to get us over the bridge. We could see the smoke coming out of the buildings, explosions, you know, dark smoke coming out of both buildings.

We made it over the 59 Street bridge, made a left on Second Avenue and we took the rear end of a caravan of police vehicles, Fire Department vehicles, black cars with sirens and we just followed them, because there was just no other openings. People were standing everywhere on Second Avenue and just looking, because you couldn't see the twin towers, but you could see the smoke coming, you know, above the area.

I was not driving, Lieutenant Yioras was driving and somewhere we made a right turn. In the meantime, I notified communication, was told to switch to Citywide, which we did, and I told him who was all responding and I was advised that I was cleared to respond even prior to that, because we also heard EMS employees on the air advising that they were on the scene of the locations and there were no supervisors and they didn't know what to do, where to go or who to await.

So they were told by communications to go to various staging areas. We were told to go to West and Vesey. I have no idea where West and Vesey is and we just kept following the caravan of emergency vehicles.

We arrived on the west side and I believe it was West and Vesey. We couldn't go any further. It was in front of -- just prior to one of the twin towers, and I believe it is number 1 twin tower. All right.

Just as we got there, Chief Charlie Wells was there trying to set up an area with all of the ambulance crews that were just standing there and really didn't have anybody to give them any directions. He saw Lieutenant Yioras and myself and he basically asked us to keep in touch with him and be part of his contingency.

Most of the individuals that were there were Hatzolah volunteers, maybe 3 and 4 to a bus. I had one Flushing paramedic unit and I remember it was Al Touro on the paramedic unit. We also had a student that was his first day riding as a paramedic student. He, of course, had no helmet. I had another BLS unit from Flushing. I don't know their radio designation, but the two ladies' names are Jen and Bonnie and I really didn't know that they were ladies either.

Later on I found out a react unit and one of the gentlemen was Orlando Rivera I believe. They were told basically to respond with myself and Chief Wells to the further part of the World Trade Center buildings, the southwest corner of building number 2.

I left Lieutenant Yioras in charge of all the ambulances. He was to collect the keys and as the units would get patients, they would come back to him, get the keys and then respond to a hospital and then come back to him or whatever they were told to do. I was with Mr. Keller and Mr. Prue. This is funny, but Mr. Keller told me that I looked like an ass and I told him it was really unprofessional for him to say that. I said to him why would you say that. He said to me I had my helmet on backwards. So I put my helmet on the right way. Apparently I was a little excited at that time, because I was trying to get everybody as close to the west side as I could because of the falling debris and the bodies kept coming down.

I spoke with paramedic Charl from Flushing and I said to him did you see that, he said what. I said just look up to your left. Here the bodies kept coming out of both buildings. Some of them were on fire. Some of them were moving, others were not moving and the worst part was as they hit the ground, they would go like a splush sound. You could just see the whole body would just disintegrate into pieces and splatter all over and the sound and I saw a couple of them do that, was just enough to just make me tune out to that.

I became more concerned with everybody in my contingency not getting hit by falling debris. I had the rear. Chief Wells had the front and all the volunteers were in the back. I was trying to keep them moving and trying to move left, because once I got them out from underneath the buildings, they weren't getting hit by bodies, but the debris just kept coming out, and the billowing smoke and as people kept pouring out of the buildings, there was total chaos. They were coming in our direction and before we could do anything for them, they would turn and they would go back in.

There was no organization, anybody saying hey, just keep going in this direction. People just would not listen to any kind of advice, suggestion or demand you made of them to keep them safe. My concern at that time was basically all of the volunteers that I had who had no helmets. So as we got over to the furthest end of the World Trade Center building, which was now building number 2, the southwest corner, Chief Wells said to me Karin, give me one unit to go in with me. Go on the command frequency and when I need another unit, I will call you. Then you know that the other unit has a patient and gone back to their bus, which at that time I felt saved a lot of lives instead of us just all go into the building. His decision was an extremely wise choice.

I didn't know that the two people I chose were two ladies, they were Jen and Bonnie, because they were the only ones with helmet. In the meantime I am yelling to get everybody else underneath a pedestrian overpass over the street, because again they had no helmets and the debris, there was no longer danger of them getting hit by bodies, but the debris was just coming down. It was unbelievable.

Charlie Wells, my last recollection of him was going towards the building and Bonnie and Jen. I told them to follow Chief Wells with their helmet on, but they didn't have a long board so I said to -- later on I found out they were ladies. Don't you think you should take a long board with you and they didn't have one. Somebody went and grabbed a long board from someplace and they had their stretcher up, they laid it on the side of the stretcher.

As they are walking now they are tripping on the straps, so I told them -- again, I told them this is not right. You are going to fall and hurt yourself. You won't be able to help anybody and they took the long board and put it on top. My last recollection was of them going towards the building.

I asked at that time -- everybody else was with me still and I kept pushing them back and back and back, because I said what is this, a subway at the end of the overpass, because there is fire coming out of the ground. I didn't realize that that was a car already on fire over there.

All the ambulances were parked right there in front of me also, underneath the overpass, just neatly parked towards the buildings, all of them. There must have been at least two rows of ambulances, maybe 10 of them. Of course cars parked everywhere else.

Apparently, my last recollection like I said, was Chief Wells and the two ladies going towards the building. I didn't know that Chief Wells made it out of the building and apparently my delaying their entering the building, Jen and Bonnie, might have saved them all, because they also survived. My back was towards the building, trying to push everybody up. Grassy hill was there and up underneath that overpass, when somebody just simply shouted and I have no idea who it was, it's blowing.

I had no clue what was going on. I never turned around because a sound came from somewhere that I never heard before. Some people compared it with an airplane. It was the worst sound of a rolling sound, not a thunder. I can't explain it, what it was. All I know is -- and a force started to come hit me in my back. I can't explain it. You had to be there. All I know is I had to run because I thought there was an explosion.

I ran about 10, 12 feet up this little grassy hill and by then this force and this sound caught up with me already. I threw myself behind the last support column of the pedestrian overpass. It became pitch dark. The sound got worse, the force just kept passing me. At times I thought it was like an orange light maybe, coming past me.

I was unaware what was happening. I thought it was just a major explosion. I didn't know the building was collapsing. I was sitting with my left side towards the support beam, total darkness, total noise. I felt beyond alone. I felt desolated. I felt like, all I could say was people think about their families and whatever. All I kept saying to myself within me I don't want to die, I don't want to die, I don't want to die.

I can't tell you how long it was before it died down. I just felt like the darkness the loneliness and being alone was the worst thing I ever experienced in my life and not being able to breathe. There was no air. Whatever this explosion was simply sucked all the oxygen out of the air. You couldn't breathe and the feeling of suffocation, I can't explain no further on that.

I don't know how long it took. All of a sudden it was all over and the silence set in. Nobody cried, nobody talked, nobody made a sound. There was nothing. Absolutely nothing. You could open your eyes, it was pitch black. Breathing became a little bit easier but I just sat there. I didn't know what was happening and I just sat there. Again, I can't give you time periods, 5 minutes, 5 seconds or however long it might have been.

Somehow over my right shoulder I hear this male voice, "is there anybody out there." I didn't know at first should I answer, should I not answer. Then I just said I'm over here, please don't leave me. The man said I'm over here, I can't see. That's when I opened my eyes. I said I can't see either. He said okay I'm going to talk. I said I'm going to talk and we will find each other. That's exactly what we did. We found each other. We kept talking to each other. We found each other. Nobody else answered, nobody else said a word. I was unaware that there were people from my unit laying all around me. They described it later on where they were.

I had a police van in front of me, about 6 feet that I remember being there. I saw a picture later on, it was totally destroyed. Two feet to my right there was an overturned car, which I saw later on the pictures also. I had steel beams all around me.

Like I said I found this gentleman and we held onto each other like little kids. By then we were coughing, vomiting, spitting. It was just -- we were trying to breathe. It was total darkness. We couldn't see anything behind us at all. We found about 5 or 6 more people and we held onto each other. Like little kids, we walked, as I found out later on, towards the water. Since I didn't know any of the location I didn't know there was a marina. We just walked in a direction where we could walk. We held onto each other. We were all coughing, vomiting. Some of us fell down. We would pick each other up. There might have been 6, 7, 8 of us by now. There were dead bodies laying everywhere, obvious signs of death.

I had no ambulances. I had no medical equipment. We had nothing, just the way we were, that's what we had. Towards our -- as we kept walking down a street, I have no idea what street it was, halfway down that street, two ladies came out of a building. They brought us some water. We started to rinse our mouths out and we started to -- I at least, I know I irrigated my eyes because I had whatever it was in my eyes and that made it even worse. Now I apparently created mud in my eyes. As I was told later on, we had granulated cement and jet fuel mixture all over our uniforms and our bodies.

It just got worse. We now picked up a fireman that was severely severely injured. I had some female police officers that had severe cuts and lacerations and people were just bleeding, by now maybe 10 of us. We were just -- I didn't have any obvious signs of injuries that I could see on myself, but other people were bleeding.

We went into this location of business where the ladies came out and found out it was a distribution place for napkins and table cloths for restaurants. We used their napkins to bandage people up. Somebody found a long board and we put the injured fireman on. He was severely injured, bleeding from the rear of his neck or occipital area in the back of his head.

Police officers now came in. Again, maybe by now we were 12, thinking I was Fire Department and had the Fire Department helmet on, I was chosen to run the outfit there, because I kept telling them bring all the wounded in here that you can find. We started bandaging them up and so on. The officer said do you have any ambulances. I said I have nothing. We had no equipment whatsoever.

Somebody apparently found some face masks and we attempted to put them on, but they hindered us from breathing even more and we just couldn't breathe. It became a little lighter out. By now it was grayish. The officer saw that there was a little marina. They went across there to try to get the boats that were docked there started and they couldn't.

After I bandaged everybody up and everybody was sort of calm in the location. Like I said, maybe 10, 12 people now. Now I also had two elderly females that were a part of that business there. So we had maybe 12 individuals. I went outside to see what I could do, when I saw the second building of the World Trade Center, still unbeknown to me the first one had collapsed.

Somewhere around the middle of the World Trade Center, there was this orange and red flash coming out. Initially it was just one flash. Then this flash just kept popping all the way around the building and that building had started to explode. The popping sound, and with each popping sound it was initially an orange and then a red flash came out of the building and then it would just go all around the building on both sides as far as I could see. These popping sounds and the explosions were getting bigger, going both up and down and then all around the building.

I went inside and I told everybody that the other building or there was an explosion occurring up there and I said I think we have another major explosion. I don't know if we are all going to be safe here. I told them I can't force you, but I don't know if we are going to be safe here. I'm going to try to get as far away from this building as possible. Unbeknown to me, a half a block down was the water.

Now we are picking up this injured fireman.

It took 4 to carry him. We are picking up all the injured. We took the two elderly ladies from the building with us and now 10, 12, of us, 14 of us, are going out of the building and further down, only to get down to the water.

Down at the water was one EMS person. I saw his Fire Department uniform, with his hands over his ears, yelling I can't find my partner, has anybody seen my partner and he is just running back and forth. He wouldn't stand still long enough for me to even speak with him. I had another EMS person, later on I found out he is from Battalion 20, his name is Kemp, the last name is Kemp. There were two ladies there that apparently had been jogging up and down this East River or west river, whatever you want to call it, and they were in little jogging shorts, jogging in circles. You couldn't stop them. I tried to stop them. I tried to find out if they were injured or anything. I couldn't stop them.

So here these explosions are getting bigger and louder and bigger and louder and I told everybody if this building totally explodes, still unaware that the other building had collapsed, I'm going in the water. I said I can swim. I'm taking somebody with me and hold them, because it was maybe a 6 foot drop.

Just then, a small Jersey boat, it was Jersey police officers as I thought, entered this little marina. By then the darkness had turned to gray and there was light on the other side, but you couldn't make out that light. Maybe because my eyes were that bad I couldn't see that good, but there was light and the boat came in. I don't recall that I had to go down some stairs to get to that boat. I saw that later on when I went to visit the site about a month later.

We went down, we carried everybody down. The elderly ladies got on. The fireman was put on board and the police officers and the EMS person, maybe 10, 12, 14 people got on the boat. I had not got on the boat yet. There were 3 officers, two officers and one sergeant, what I thought was a sergeant. As I'm standing at the door to the boat, the sergeant yells at me and pardon me for my language, what the fuck are you going to do now. Are you going to come or not. I'm still standing there trying to figure out what my next move should be, when the same sergeant says fucking shit, it's coming at us, and that's a quote.

Again, I didn't see what was happening behind me, but knowing of all the explosions I thought here was another explosion coming and this sound again and this wave of this force again. I just jumped on the boat, closed the door with my left hand and just sank down to my knees. Here whatever it was just came right at us again. The sergeant is yelling at the one officer. The second officer was in the back with some of the people that had been in the back of the boat. I had no clue what was going on back there. The sergeant is yelling at the second officer, get the fuck out of here, get the fuck out of here. I'm sorry for using that word repeatedly. The poor guy behind the steering wheel is saying I can't go any place, we are tied on.

That is about what saved our lives, because this force came at us and hit us with everything. The boat was attempting to overturn and it kept hitting in the back against the pier. Again, I was just -- by then I was resigned to die. I didn't mind dying because I was with other people, you know, and the guy behind the steering wheel just sank to his knee and the sergeant just stood at the other door. I have no clue how long that lasted. I was -- my back was towards it and as I'm sitting in this corner there I was just resigned, this is it, it can't happen to me a second time. We were -- this time was a difference. We were capable of breathing and I was with somebody.

When again, I don't know how the window didn't get broken or how the boat wasn't overturned, nothing happened really, but when all of it quieted down again, the sergeant opened the door and he got out and he untied the boat and by the time this starched individual with the starched uniform came in, he was covered with everything. He told us this guy who -- officer who finally got off the floor, just get the fuck out of here now. He said I can't see where I'm going. He said just turn the boat to the left and every time you hit something turn it to the left and turn it to the left and turn it to the left till you get out in the open water and when you get out, just keep going. That's exactly what this officer did.

As we finally got out of this small opening of that marina, you could see the light in New Jersey, because he apparently was by then was going in that direction. I got up from there because I appeared to be in the way. I got up from there and I went down into that small cabin that was down there and he was -- they apparently had taken, thrown the fireman and long board down into that cabin. The fireman had come off the long board and was just laying there. He was still bleeding profusely.

I went down there and I straightened out his leg. The long board was laying half way going up the stairs and people were just sitting and hanging there and by then they had gotten back on to the top of the boat and the back. I straightened out his leg and -- sorry -- he had all the stuff coming out of his pockets and I said to him I'm going to empty out your pockets because you got -- they looked like hose connections, metal and everything in his pockets and his turnout coat and I took everything out and I threw it to my right. There was like a bench or an area there. I just threw it. He still had his helmet on. He was laying in his own blood and he says to me just I'm all right. My name is Bob. So I said to him my name is Karin and we just held hands. So we just held hands till we got over to Jersey.

When we got over to Jersey they told me to get the hell out of the area and I said I can't get up right now. I just couldn't get up. I didn't have the strength to get up. They came and got Bob and they put him on the long board. I saw them turn him over to my side. They put the long board and the 4 of them got Bob up and I still couldn't get up. They came and they physically stood me up. I couldn't get up. I did walk up those about 3 stairs up and I got to the top of the boat and they weren't ready for us in Jersey.

We were the first boat to get over there. There was nobody there. The cops kept yelling, there were cops there. The cops kept yelling, just give him your hand, give him your hand, put your foot up. I can hear all of this. I couldn't react. I know I didn't do it, but I could hear them. Somebody finally took my right hand and gave it to somebody and they took one of my legs and they put it up there and gave it to somebody. I mean they put it up and they pulled me up and they pushed me up. Then somebody came and just assisted me and they put some sheets over on the pier and they put me right there. I don't know what happened to anybody else. They started coming in, medical teams, and I don't know what happened to Bob.

So we were just laying there and again they gave us water and they irrigated our eyes and it just made it worse. By then, we were vomiting. Some of us were vomiting blood and so on, but I appeared to be one of the better ones off, because they had triage tags and I started making out triage tags and putting it on everybody, just their names and Ladder company or Engine and EMS and civilians and I made triage tags up for everybody.

Maybe 45 minutes to an hour later they got not ambulances, but some vans to take us to Jersey City medical center, 4 of us. When we got there they had just set up some kind of an auditorium or whatever. They took us into the auditorium and they proceeded to treat us with -- I got albuterol treatments and I got an injection. They got an ophthalmologist and they cleaned out my eyes and my ears were just, I don't know. I couldn't even hear any more, probably from all the noise.

My problem was I refused to give up my helmet. I would not surrender my helmet because I didn't know when the next thing was going to come. Somebody dropped an oxygen tank and 4 of us hit the deck. I mean I just got out of that wheelchair and I threw my self on the ground looking for someplace to hide. I can remember that.

But the most unbelievable thing is that when I looked down, my right foot had no sock on. I found my sock in my pocket. To the best of my recollection, as I child I was always told by my grandmother, if you ever have to jump in the water take your shoes and socks off because it will pull you down. I think in anticipation of jumping in the water I started taking my shoes and socks off and then saw the boat come and put my shoe back on. That's the best I can remember.

After treatment, we were taken up to a conference room where they had gathered all fire, PD and EMS people. I saw some really traumatized individuals. By then, I had this only survivor syndrome. I hadn't heard, seen or anybody from my unit. My feeling of sending Charlie Wells and those two ladies into that building, because by then people said that both buildings had collapsed and I had figured that everybody was in there. It just took a total mental toll on me until maybe sometime in the afternoon, around 4, 5 o'clock Al Touro was brought in, the paramedic from Flushing.

We saw each other and we just stood there and we hugged and we cried. We just cried. I had been unable to get any kind of message to my family because the phones were out. My husband works over at Battalion 47 in the Rockaways. The last transmission from me was that I had lost all of my people, that I was with individuals and I was trying to evacuate them. After that there was no more transmission. Even that apparently didn't get through to people.

Lieutenant Gleeson here went to the command center here. He initially had me declared missing, then missing and possibly dead and then definitely confirmed passed away. That of course, reached my family and they had a very hard time trying to figure out what had happened.

My husband left work that evening at 5 o'clock after doing 12 hours tours. He immediately caused an accident and totalled the car. He had to be picked up by one of my children Danielle, and she brought him here and that was about 8:30, 9 o'clock that evening when I reached them for the first time and told them I was alive.

By 10 o'clock that night a minister from Jersey got a bus from somewhere and because the city was closed down, we got an escort from the Jersey City police and we were all brought back to somewhere in New York where we wanted to go. I reached here at 10:30 that night. That was for the first time my family really knew that I was all right.

We were allowed to take showers at the medical center because by 1, 2:00 in the afternoon all that soot that was covering us had created a total rash situation. I think I stood under that shower for, I don't even know how long, but I couldn't get it off. I found debris inside my clothes that was just unbelievable how it got there. It just can't be explained. My uniform was totally gray. It was covered with a soot that I can't explain what it even was. My visor on my helmet was cracked, but I think I was one of the better ones that got away as far as injury was concerned.

I'm alive. Anything else I can tell you?

Q. Quite a story. Quite an experience.

A. Well, it hasn't left me. Yes, people came here to give us counseling. After a while, while I felt they had the best of intentions, after a while I just simply had to tell them please don't come here no more, because if you come here and you sit like you are sitting across from me at the desk and ask me one more time how do you feel. Do you want to talk about it, I will go off the deep end.

The only people I want to talk to is the people that were there with me. What has really helped me was to know that nobody in my unit got killed or seriously injured. The most they had were fractures. Rabbi Birnhack confirmed that all the Hatzolah volunteers survived. I spoke to all of the other people that were with me and they all survived. I was so grateful that Charlie Wells survived. He was the first one from my unit into that building.

I have a problem with the whole situation still. I wish the Fire Department would come around with professionals and not people that are from a local counseling service or whatever -- excuse me for a moment. My concern really was that no one from the Fire Department made any kind of effort to even find out how we were doing. I didn't get a phone call. I didn't see my Chief until Saturday a week after that, which is 10 days later.

I even received a phone call from Mr. Velez, the executive director of Elmhurst Hospital at my home, but no one from EMS contacted me to find out how I was doing. There was great concern here about some other people, which after I had gone through all the problems I had to handle, because again nobody was available to handle anything at the facility here concerning the other individuals that had gone through this trauma.

To this day I have not been asked do I need any counselings from some certified people or do I wish to participate in counselings with a group. Elmhurst Hospital has offered me counseling services, which I will accept, but I feel more of an effort should have been made by the Fire Department or the EMS command to assist us that went through this.

Anything else I can help you with?

Q. No, ma'am, unless you have anything else that you would like to add.

A. I'm retiring.

Q. May I say congratulations on that.

A. Thank you.

INVESTIGATOR TAMBASCO: Thank you for your interview Captain. This interview concludes at 0633 a.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN JANICE OLSZEWSKI

Interview Date: November 7, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. MURAD: Today is November 7th, 2001. The time is 8:45. My name is Murray Murad.

MR. CUNDARI: I'm George Cundari.

MR. MURAD: Of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with -- CAPTAIN OLSZEWSKI: Janice Olszewski, captain EMS operations.

MR. MURAD: The location of the interview is at Nine Metrotech at the Bureau of Investigations and Trials, and this is regarding the events that occurred on September 11th, 2001.

Q. Captain, can you just tell us what occurred on that day?

A. At what point do you want me to start?

Q. From upstairs when you heard what happened. Where were you, from the beginning?

A. I was sitting at my desk here at Metrotech on the seventh floor, and the pagers came over that there was a plane into the World Trade Center. So I went down to the end of the hall to look out the window, and you could see that it had happened, the first plane into the building.

So I went with Lieutenant Bruce Medjuck in my sedan I was using, a marked sedan, down to the site. So we grabbed a few radios and went down there. We went across the Brooklyn Bridge and arrived at Vesey and West. I don't remember exactly where I parked the car; I really don't. It might have been right at Vesey and West. I'm pretty sure, but I'm not too -- I think.

So we got out, and we were in the vicinity of One World Trade. We were close to One World Trade at that point, and we went over and we bumped into Chief Gombo, Bruce and I. He asked us to go to the other side. So we ran down Vesey and got to Vesey and Church. I left my car where I had originally parked it.

We met up with Lieutenant Davila in his suburban, and he was already starting to set up at Fulton and Church, a triage area, right next to the Millennium Hotel, across the street from the Trade Center, the towers. So that's where we assisted in setting up the triage area for the people being evacuated out of the buildings.

Q. This was still the first plane had hit?

A. By the time we got there -- en route the second plane had hit. First plane had hit. We were on our way. When we got there we looked up and saw now the two holes. So by then the second plane had hit. Somewhere while we were driving there, it hit.

So now they both had hit, and we went over to the other side to start patient care over there. So we set up the triage area over there in front of the Millennium Hotel at Church and Fulton.

Q. Church and Fulton?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. You had a good view of the towers?

A. Yeah.

People were being evacuated, and units started to come in, from all agencies, as well as more supervisors. So as more supervisors came in, we were assigning them to each sector. We set up virtually all the sectors we can set up, and we started to get going with triage with triage tags, setting up areas where people were more badly hurt than others, telling other people to just keep going if they were relatively all right.

Q. A lot of people in that area?

A. Yeah, there were. What we're talking about here, the time line for me being there in particular was something like 30 to 35 minutes. So we weren't able to do too much. We were going pretty good for what it was, though. We were starting to set up those sectors. We were setting up the sectors, staging treatment, transport, triage.

The people were pouring out of the buildings, and a lot of them were coming over to our area. I cannot estimate how many. It's impossible. They were all over the place. They were on the corner. We were trying to keep them corralled in our area, but other agencies were breaking off into other little triage areas. I think there was another one over on Liberty and Church, another section there we heard, around the corner.

So there were things sort of happening all over. So it's kind of hard to get an estimate of how many patients were in that area.

I can say in our area it was starting to become overwhelmed, that corner. There were starting to be so many. I figured we're going to have hundreds of patients coming out and we're going to have to have alternative areas to have them go, because it was too small. Right at that point the first building collapsed.

Q. The south tower?

A. The south tower, yeah.

So as we heard it start to collapse and as we saw it collapsing, we or I, a lot of us, ran east on Fulton to get away. Then the cloud caught up, and we all just scattered and did our best to get out of there. I ended up on Broadway and Fulton and went north on Broadway, kept going north on Broadway.

I set up an initial -- well, actually ambulances start to come down now south on Broadway that weren't involved in the collapse. These were fresh people coming in already, all kinds of units again coming south on Broadway. I met up with a few of them at something like Warren, Warren and Broadway.

I walked down that far and was not -- anybody who would listen to me, I didn't want them to go towards the area yet. I didn't think it was safe. I didn't know what was going on. I thought more could be happening down there. I didn't know if it was an explosion. I didn't know it was a collapse at that point. I thought it was an explosion or a secondary device, a bomb, the jet -- plane exploding, whatever.

So I didn't know what was happening, so I was attempting to stop people from going in until we could get somebody back on the radio, reestablish a new command post and know that it was safe. So I was telling them not to go down. Some still went in; some didn't.

Q. Were there radio transmissions at that time?

A. I don't remember because I didn't have one at that point. I was pretty shocked and stunned and was choking and covered with dust. I was dazed and don't remember that. I didn't have a radio, so I don't know.

So at that point you heard that the second -- I heard the rumbling again, and that was the second collapse. So now that's about what, 10:30. That was about 10:30 now. Then I heard it again. You still didn't know what was happening, but you couldn't miss the rumbling sound. So you knew something else was happening.

So I kept going north on Broadway again. I turned around and saw the cloud coming down again, so I started to run away from that cloud again. I got a little further north up Broadway. Now more ambulances are coming south. One of them stopped. I waved, I flagged one down. One of them stopped. I got in, and I said, "Turn around and just go north, because I don't know what's going on down there. It's too dangerous. Let try to get a little further north."

So they drove me north to White, Broadway and White. There the cloud had not come that far. We got out of the cloud and the mist, and we set up a patient collection area there. About five more ambulances stopped there, and we set up and were treating patients that were coming out.

Now I started hearing things on the radio, because there were radios around me now and I borrowed one from somebody from OMA. It was the frequency that supervisors were on. I heard Chief Kowalczyk, and he started saying that there was a new command post at Chambers and West, as I remember, to be the new command post.

So I figured, okay, it's safe. We have something reestablished over there. He was asking for supervisors and units. They were asking for units on citywide, I guess. I don't know if there was citywide. But I know they were asking for units to come back.

So the five or so units that were with me wanted to go back in, so I said, "Okay, go ahead. Go in." They started heading over. I left one unit there to keep treating the patients that were still trickling out. By then there weren't really many, and they were fine. They were pretty okay. So I left one there.

I jumped in one of the ambulances going over and said, "Can you take me to the command post?" They said, "Sure." As they drove me over -- we got as far as about West and -- I know there's Chambers on here, but I don't see it.

Q. Whatever you recall.

A. Whatever. I don't remember. I don't see it. Is it further north?

Q. Chambers is here.

A. I don't think I got -- I didn't get that far. I got stopped on West around here somewhere. There were so many emergency vehicles trying to get in, there was a little bit of a backup. So I only got about there.

I got out of the ambulance, and I bumped into a chief officer, who insisted I go to the hospital. He just basically pushed me into the ambulance and said I needed to go. So I went to the hospital at that point. I was taken over to NYU Medical Center to be treated.

When I got out, I made my way back here. I hitched a ride back here with another some sort of city vehicle, and I worked here over night until 6 in the morning.

Q. Basically after the collapse you didn't see many patients?

A. Well, the patients I saw --

Q. While you were there?

A. Oh, you mean before the collapse.

Q. After the collapse.

A. After the collapse the patients I saw were basically on White and Broadway coming out of the collapse and cloud that needed to be treated for whatever injuries, smoke inhalation, they had. We treated approximately 30 patients -- again I don't know -- for that sort of thing, while we were waiting to hear somebody come back on the radio and let us know where we should go.

After that, like I said, I went to the hospital, so no.

Q. On the original collapse, you just saw the cloud start coming at you or you saw some of the top of the building start coming down?

A. I wasn't facing it. Some people say they saw it tilting and going. I wasn't facing and I wasn't looking, so I didn't see that. But I did hear it, and then I turned around. By then the cloud had obliterated the building, so you couldn't see it going down.

Not that you were standing there waiting and watching; you were running. The only chance you had to get away was to run. So there was no watching. I just heard it, saw the cloud, knew something catastrophic had happened, and tried to get away.

Q. Anything else?

A. No.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS LIEUTENANT BRADLEY MANN

Interview Date: November 7, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. MURAD: Today is November 7th, 2001. The time now is 1047 hours. My name is Murray Murad, M-U-R-A-D, with Richard Dun, D-U-N. We are currently sitting with Lieutenant --

LIEUTENANT MANN: Bradley Mann.

MR. MURAD: And your rank?

LIEUTENANT MANN: Lieutenant.

MR. MURAD: Where do you work?

LIEUTENANT MANN: Chief of Department's office, planning unit.

MR. MURAD: This interview is being conducted at the Fire Department Headquarters at the Bureau of Investigations and Trials, and this is in regards to the tragic event on September 11th, 2001.

Q. Lieutenant Mann, will you give your account?

A. I was working the day tour. Approximately 10 minutes of 9, I was sitting in my cube with Captain Abdonahmod. The window in my cube overlooks Manhattan.

As we were speaking, I thought I heard some type of noise. Abdo and I turned around and looked out the window and saw thick black smoke billowing from the top of the World Trade Center.

I got up, I walked around the corner to Chief Nigro's office, told him to look out the window. I walked down the hall to Chief Ganci's office and told him to look out the window. Chief Ganci told me to get everybody together, get as much equipment as we could find and we would meet in Manhattan.

I grabbed Lieutenant John Nevins from the document control unit. We went to the EMS command where we secured about six radios and as many helmets as we could find. We went downstairs to the street, waited outside the building, and we got into a vehicle with Chief Cassano, the Citywide Tour Commander, and we responded into Manhattan. That was approximately 10 minutes to 9 when I first looked out the window. I would say that we left headquarters probably about 9:05 a.m.

We drove into Manhattan. We crossed the Brooklyn Bridge, from mid-span on the Brooklyn Bridge, from what we could see, it looked like just about everything from the 70th floor on up was on fire.

Chief Cassano was making some phone calls, and Lieutenant Nevins and I were discussing some things in the car as to what our role may be seeing as we didn't know what officers were already on the scene.

We arrived in Manhattan. We came over the Brooklyn Bridge, went down Park Row and drove across Murray Street to South Broadway. Chief Cassano parked his car on the corner of South Broadway and Vesey.

We exited the car. We put on our helmets and our turnout coats. Lieutenant Nevins and I made a right turn and headed west on Vesey Street between WTC 7 an WTC 2. By that point already, debris was falling from the towers. I actually was hit in the back by an unknown body part. I don't know what it was.

We headed west on Vesey Street to the intersection of West Street. At that point I saw Lieutenant Davila from battalion 4, who at that point was the EMS command officer. I asked him what he needed, and he asked me to assist him to set up the EMS staging area.

At that point Lieutenant Nevins and I established an EMS staging area on Vesey Street between West Street and West End Avenue. We had approximately 50 to 60 ambulances on the street at that point, and we were in the process of organizing them and keeping track of who was there.

As time went on, more staff chiefs arrived. Chief Gombo arrived. He took command of the incident. We spoke with him as to what type of action he wanted us to take, and he told us as soon as we had a count on how many units we had, ALS and BLS, to let him know and he would request resources as he needed them.

I would say probably about maybe a half hour or so later all of a sudden we heard a roar. And I looked at Lieutenant Nevins and he looked at me, and we looked up. And the next thing we knew there was another plane, and it crashed into the other tower.

We were in the staging area the entire time. Shortly before the first tower came down I remember feeling the ground shaking. I heard a terrible noise, and then debris just started flying everywhere. People started running towards the staging area.

By that point we probably had 70 or 80 ambulances and vehicles in the staging area. People were jumping in their vehicles, trying to drive away from the scene. And Lieutenant Nevins and I instructed everybody to leave their vehicles and run west as far as they could until they couldn't run anymore.

The rationale behind that being is if everybody tried to get out in a vehicle at the same time, obviously the street would be clogged and nobody would be able to get out. And as it turns out, a good majority of the vehicles that we told people to leave were crushed on Vesey Street just west of West Street.

By the time the debris settled from the first collapse, we started to walk back east towards West Street, and a few minutes later -- I really don't remember the time frames because we were so busy in trying to account for who was in the staging area and who wasn't -- we basically had the same thing: The ground shook again, and we heard another terrible noise and the next think we knew the second tower was coming down. And again we were running for our lives on Vesey Street.

We ran as far as we could, turned the corner at West End Avenue and took shelter in the lobby of an office building, where we meet met up with a lot of the other chiefs -- Chief Gombo, Chief Kowalczyk -- and we discussed some further actions plans as to what we were going to do, seeing as we knew we weren't operating in a safe area. And we decided that we were going to establish a north staging area at Chelsea Piers.

At that point myself and Chief Kowalczyk and an unknown EMT responded in an ambulance. I believe it was a Jamaica Hospital ambulance. We got a ride up to Chelsea Piers where we began to set up a staging area. I stayed at Chelsea Piers for the next three or four hours, organizing units and having resources ready to be called south.

And then sometime in the afternoon, probably 2 or 3:00, I was requested to report back down to Chambers Street, and I was put to work on the command report. And that's pretty much it. We just started doing shift work at the command post from about 3:00 p.m. on the 11th for the next about two and a half weeks. And that's really it.

MR. MURAD: Rich, any questions?

MR. DUN: No.

Q. Were you operating with radios?

A. We did have radios. I don't even know who I got it from, to be honest -- oh, I'm sorry, I remember when I took it. We were on citywide. I was the staging officer. And until Chief Gombo took over, I was communicating with Lieutenant Davila.

MR. MURAD: Any other questions?

Lieutenant Mann, I appreciate you giving the interview. This concludes the interview, and the time now is 10:55 hours. This concludes this portion of the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

ASSISTANT CHIEF JOSEPH CALLAN

Interview Date: November 2, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

FIRE MARSHAL STARACE: Today's date is November 2, 2001. The time is 1440 hours. This is Michael Starace, Fire Marshal, New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with Chief Callan.

Q. Could you state your command and - assigned command and rank?

A. Assistant Chief Joseph Callan, Citywide Tour Commander.

FIRE MARSHAL STARACE: Also in the room is --

FIRE MARSHAL CAMPBELL: Patrick Campbell, Fire Marshal.

Q. Chief, going back to September 11 from early on, how you became aware of the first plane hitting until after the second collapse.

A. At 8 o'clock that morning, I relieved Chief Donald Burns as the Citywide Tour Commander. Shortly thereafter while monitoring the radio, there was a second alarm transmitted for a fire in the World Trade Center. And on the radio I heard a report of a plane crash into the World Trade Center. I immediately proceeded to leave the office and respond, and responding at the same time with me was Chief of the Department Ganci, Chief Nigro, which was the Chief of Operations at the time. Chief Cassano, Chief Burns and a few other Chiefs.

Shortly thereafter, we arrived at the World Trade Center. Chief Ganci assigned me to take command of the north tower and he assigned Chief Donald Burns to take command of the south tower. Getting out of my car, putting my gear on, I then went and did a reconnaissance of the exterior of the north tower. I saw we had numerous floors on the upper levels on fire, approximately eight floors with fire showing. As I was going around the far side of the north tower, I then saw the second plane hit the south tower. I immediately went into the lobby of the north tower to take command of operations. In the lobby of the north tower, in command was Chief Peter Hayden, and Chief Joe Pfeifer.

I took command and we started assigning additional units to the upper floors. I gave them instructions that we are not going to be extinguishing fire. What we were going to do is assist in evacuating the building. Numerous units arrived. They were sent up and put to work. Joined at the time - I was in the lobby. We had very little communication via handy talky during the time I was in the lobby with the units on the upper floors, because of the building construction. The elevators were not working, nor were any of the building communication systems. So we had very little control or contact, communication wise, with the units that were on the upper floors.

Approximately 40 minutes after I arrived in the lobby, I made a decision that the building was no longer safe. And that was based on the conditions in the lobby, large pieces of plaster falling, all the 20 foot high glass panels on the exterior of the lobby were breaking. There was obvious movement of the building, and that was the reason on the handy talky I gave the order for all Fire Department units to leave the north tower.

Approximately ten minutes after that, we had a collapse of the south tower, and we were sort of blown up against the wall in the lobby of the north tower, and we gathered together those of us who were still able to. Chief Pfeifer gave the order for everybody, Mayday for everybody, to leave the north tower and we then proceeded to try to find our way out of the lobby of the north tower.

Approximately ten of us, visibility of zero, proceeded up the escalator from the lobby up to the mezzanine. We got up to the mezzanine of the north tower and we proceeded via an exterior walkway to get to the adjoining building, then down from the adjoining building into the street. Shortly after we got on to Vesey Street, the north tower collapsed. That was the end of the story.

Q. It's hard to believe that that's 30 minutes. Everybody that sees that and myself, I was there too, you can't believe it's 30, 34 minutes. Chief, you had not much, you had said, not much transmissions on the handy talky?

A. Minimal transmissions on the handy talky and I think that was because of the building construction. The handy talkys generally don't work great in those type of buildings and we relied many times on alternate types of communications and the building communication system. In this particular operation the building system was out of service almost immediately. So that was not available to us. So like I say, because of the lack of communication, we had very little control of units on the upper floors and that to me was a very large problem. Since the fire was burning for close to an hour, I thought it was time to get our units out of the building.

Q. Do you know what units you had there?

A. Chief Pfeifer and his aide had a command post set up in the lobby and he was tracking the units, so we had a handle on most of the units that did go above the lobby.

Q. How many were there, about how many units?

A. I wouldn't want to guess. I wouldn't want to guess because many of them were assigned prior to my arrival and units were assigned while I was discussing strategy with other Chiefs in the lobby, so I wouldn't want to guess how many there were.

Q. Is this in that command post on the northwest corner of the building?

A. That's where I believe we were.

Q. When you arrived you said you were there a few minutes before the second plane hit?

A. I was on the outside of the building making a reconnaissance of the exterior before I went to the north tower and as I got into the rear or side of the north tower, I saw the plane go into --

Q. South side of the north tower?

A. Yes, that would have been it, the south side. That's when I realized this was not an accident, because up until then I don't think anybody knew that.

Q. Where did you park when you got there, do you remember?

A. I think it was on Vesey Street, but shortly after we arrived, my aide moved the car to a safer location away from the north tower.

Q. Do you remember who else was in the lobby as far as Chiefs?

A. When I got there it was the two Chiefs there. That I can remember was Chief Pete Hayden from the first division, Chief Joe Pfeifer from the first Battalion and also I think Chief Steve King, the safety Battalion Chief was there. I know the Commissioner was there with me for a few minutes. Pretty much the only ones I remember.

Q. Any thoughts?

A. No.

FIRE MARSHAL STARACE: We are concluding this tape at 1450 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIRE MARSHAL SALVATORE RIGNOLA

Interview Date: November 5, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. STEPONAITIS: It is November 5th, 2001. The time is 16 hours and five minutes. This is Fire Marshal Steponaitis of the special investigations unit of the Fire Department, City of New York. We're conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank, title and assignment.

FIRE MARSHAL RIGNOLA: My name is Salvatore Rignola. I'm a New York fire marshal. I'm assigned to citywide special investigations at 16 Hooper Street, which we are right now, on the fourth floor.

MR. STEPONAITIS: We're conducting an interview regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Also present in the room is --

MR. BURNS: Supervising Fire Marshal Robert Burns, special operations command.

Q. Fire Marshal Rignola, please give us the events that occurred that day from the time that you were notified until the time that you left the scene.

A. That day I was out in the field in Queens, and I received a radio call to respond to the World Trade Center. I had my regular radio on and heard that a plane crashed. While on my way responding to the World Trade Center, I'm going over the Queensboro Bridge, the second plane crashed into one of the towers. I know there were two towers there.

I proceeded to Manhattan. I drove down the West Side Highway. I parked my vehicle around Murray Street. I walked down towards the Trade Center. Around Vesey Street I saw Chief Fire Marshal Garcia. He asked me if I had a radio. I said yes. He asked me to go on in and call the other members of our bureau which were assembled near the telephone building on Vesey and West Street. The radio wasn't working properly, and we never made contact with anybody.

So while we're there on West Street and Vesey I saw Fire Commissioner Von Essen pass by. Fire Marshal O'Mara was with him. I saw also Deputy Commissioner Tierney pass by because she went up from West to Liberty Street.

I'm just standing under the first pedestrian bridge near Vesey Street, and I see my old fire company 131, I see 101 from my battalion, a couple of the companies there. I'm over there standing and someone starts yelling: There's an explosion. All of a sudden you could hear some weird sound like crumbling. All of a sudden everybody starts running.

So I went to the corner of Vesey and West, and there was the ESU truck. I went against the ESU truck, and all of a sudden everything got black. The wind blew by. Material flew by. About two minutes later it cleared up that I was able to see.

Then I saw Chief Fire Marshal Garcia again. He asked me to get on the radio and try to assemble everybody and get all the fire marshals assembled near West and Vesey, but the radio wasn't working.

I started checking 131's rig to look for a mask. There was no mask there. I tried 101, went through the rig looking for a mask. Then I saw Supervisor Fire Marshal Devery. The first thing he asked me: "Did you see fire marshal Bucca?" I said no. Then Devery proceeded up West Street north.

I was still trying to look for masks, so I did a little search in the building. I still didn't believe that the tower came down, because when you look towards that south tower, you couldn't see. It was dust.

I tried using my cell phone. That was dead. I went to a pay phone. I called my house to make sure my wife doesn't go anywhere, get the kids home.

While I'm standing up near the north pedestrian bridge, the few people around start running again. They said the tower is coming down. While I'm standing there you could see now the north tower, World Trade One, you could see it starting to come down. While you're looking up, you could see it come down.

So I went to the middle of the street on Vesey and West. I went into a truck. I think it was Ladder 21. I went in the officer's seat, rolled up the window and you could see the stuff coming down. I covered myself. Debris hit the truck. I waited about five minutes, came out, and just started up --

Q. Did anything come through the truck?

A. Stuff went through the windshield but on the driver's side. Nothing hit me. The windshield got broke, but I didn't get scratched.

Right before that, about two minutes before that, I remember seeing Chief Garcia was talking to Lieutenant Sheehan. He used to be an A&E with the PD. They were at the corner of West and Vesey. That was like five minutes before that.

After I left the rig, I started -- it was almost like a ghost town. Then people started appearing. We started searching over some of the debris. The north pedestrian tower actually collapsed, but it collapsed on 101. So you could actually walk underneath the tower to get on the other side.

On the other side of this tower, there was like 15 feet of just debris. I remember seeing other fire marshals and everybody saying all the marshals start assembling at Chambers and West, I think it was.

I went to Chambers and West, and more and more fire marshals came there and we just stood over there for a while and that's about it. On that night I went back down, tried to maybe look around, couldn't see nothing. That's about it.

MR. STEPONAITIS: Thank you, Fire Marshal Rignola.

That concludes Fire Marshal Rignola's statement. It is now 1609 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

DEPUTY CHIEF THOMAS GALVIN

Interview Date: November 7, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. DUN: Today is November 7th, 2001. The time is 1600 hours. My name is Richard Dun of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with --

DEPUTY CHIEF GALVIN: Deputy Chief Thomas Galvin, division 3.

Q. Sir, at this time I'd like you to give a brief description of the events of September 11th, 2001.

A. When the first plane hit, I was in my office, watching it on TV and basically stayed in the quarters because my quarters were quarters 421. Basically now I'm the acting Citywide Tour Commander after the fifth alarm was in.

And then when the second plane hit, that's when I knew no matter what, I was going anyway. So I left quarters with Carl Asaro, who was the division firefighter, and battalion Chief Dennis Devlin, who was the special events coordinator here. He wanted to come down to give Carl a hand if Carl needed a hand with the command board.

As we were leaving quarters, that's when the dispatcher informed me there was a fifth alarm for the south tower and I was the incident commander for the south tower.

We responded down the Henry Hudson Parkway and we got along down to West Street, and we parked the car on Vesey and West. We parked on the south side of West Street on the island between -- that separated West Street there. There's an island that separates it.

So we're parked just south of West Street on the left-hand side of the southbound lanes. What vehicles were parked in front of me -- we parked right there. I got out of the car, told Chief Devlin and Fireman Asaro to get the command board together and I'll meet you in the south tower.

After I talked to Chief Ganci -- Chief Ganci was at -- I could see him down the block at the command -- I saw him down in the distance. I went over to them because I wanted to find out what channels we were going to use in the south tower and to go over communications with them. That was the last time I saw those two guys.

Q. What channel were you working on or did you work on?

A. In the south tower we were going to work 5 -- channel 5 was going to be the command channel. It's the same command channel as the north tower, but we were going to go to secondary tactical 3 for the south tower.

Later on I know Ladder 5 was on the northbound side and Rescue 1 was right in front of them. Any other rigs, you know, I wasn't paying attention to the rigs. I was really looking up because there was just stuff falling out of the sky, debris falling down.

I continued down West Street to go to -- because the command board was actually in West Street in the street, and I was going over to the Field Com officer, who I think was Lieutenant Regan.

I was asking him what channels we were going to use. He wasn't too sure. Chief Ganci had just walked up. I brought it up to him, told him why I was there. We were going back and forth for a short time to square away the channels. That's where we settled on 3 and 5.

The next thing I remember, Chief Cassano comes up and said let's get the board out of the street. So I had to stop and carry the board with Lieutenant Regan, and we put it up on the sidewalk in front of the financial building there with the garage.

Q. With the underground parking?

A. Where that exact location is, I couldn't tell you anymore.

Q. It's the underground parking.

Was there a lot of debris falling at the time?

A. No, there was debris by the building across the street. You could see things coming down. It was parts of the building, maybe parts of the plane. And there was really no bodies on that side of West Street.

But there was debris coming down. My interaction with Regan and Chief Ganci probably lasted around three to five minutes where we were going back and forth on the channels.

Chief Cassano comes along. I probably spent about three to five minutes because as I was walking away from the Field Com officer, I said: "Do you know what companies I'm using in this building?" He said: "I didn't know you had a fifth alarm." Then I had to sit down and I had to write out the whole assignment for him so he was aware of who was being assigned to the south tower.

So after that period of time, I told him okay, I'm going to go into the south tower, and they had already told me that Chief Barbara was already in there and I think they said Chief Burns -- Burns I'm not too sure. They told me that Chief Barbara was already the incident commander in the south tower.

I had to go south a little bit to swing around to get on the other side of the island. The safest way to get into the towers was to go through the -- I keep calling it the Vista, but it's the Marriott now.

When I got into the Marriott, we had about ten companies in there. And I remember hearing a report about people being trapped in the Marriott or there was a problem with the Marriott.

So when I got in there, I grabbed the fire safety director and I said: "Listen, do you have everybody out of this building?" He said no. So I got bogged down in there, and I assigned 23 engine. It was given -- they normally designate a command post company. They run the elevators.

So I had David there and I said listen, I need you to run the elevators, find bank elevators we can use. You will run the companies up and down. I assigned Ladder 13 -- now, what floors I gave them, I can't recall.

It was Ladder 13 that was in there, 2 Truck, 54 Engine, 65 Engine. Those are the only companies I can really recall. Because I know the officers, so I remembered speaking to them. It was a 22-story building.

I gave each unit like three or four floors, go up, search, get the floors evacuated. I remember coming in -- you had to constantly tell people go to channel 3. I considered that part of the south tower operation. I wanted to make sure they were all on the right channel and not interfering with the north tower.

That probably took eight to ten minutes to get that all straightened out in the lobby and get that going. I'm getting bogged down now in this hotel. I really didn't think that much about it because I knew I already had Chief Barbara in front of me in the other one.

Q. At this point the buildings were still standing?

A. Yeah, the buildings were still standing. Yeah, the buildings were intact.

So then Chief Cassano came into the building, because he said to me, where's your aide? I said they're in there. I told them I would meet them in the south tower but I wanted to get the units to clear out the hotel, the units that we had here.

Let me start moving to the south tower. And now hindsight's twenty-twenty when you see the layouts of the buildings. I wasn't aware the Marriott directly interconnects -- even this picture doesn't give it to you. It directly interconnects into the north tower.

I remember saying to somebody how do I get into the tower, not realizing that this interconnected with both. And the guy actually sends me to the north tower. And I remember going through the atrium and hugging the wall, because when you come out -- you had to go north in the lobby for about 100 feet and make a dog leg to get into this area. There was stuff falling down. I remember hugging a wall.

When I got in there and I'm looking for the units and I'm saying where is everybody? So I grabbed somebody and said where's the fire command station, where's the chiefs? Oh, they already went outside. Why would they go outside already? What I didn't know is they had already made the decision to take the command post from the north tower out into the street.

Now I'm making my way back into the thing. I don't think at that time I realized I was in the north tower. I just said something's wrong here. It just doesn't seem right. I remember coming back and there was more debris that's falling down into the atrium. I'm calling it an atrium, but it's just an open area.

Q. Concourse?

A. An open area, the concourse.

I ran now into a couple more units. I knew they were assigned to me for the south tower. I said make your way to the south tower and just start getting -- I said I'm trying to find my way to the south tower too.

I remember running into Tommy Jensen, who was a Chief in the 8th battalion -- I'm sorry, Tommy Deangelis, D-E-A-N-G-E-L-I-S. I said listen, find your way to the south tower. Chief Barbara was in there. Just take the upper floors as best we can. Just figure out what floors you have to take, and I'll get units to go into it.

Because what was happening was the safest way to come in from the West Street side or come from the south end, everybody seemed to be coming in through the Marriott, and there were a lot of companies in there.

I said no, we have to move to the south tower. Number 22 Truck had just gone by me. That was with Jerry Riley. The next Chiefs I remember talking to, Freddie Scheffold from the 12th Battalion and Chief Joe Marchbanks. Because I remember saying why are they both here, quick in my mind. I know Scheffold worked the night before, so I figure he buffed it. And I told him I was working the south tower and I just wanted to get these units moving.

I would say from that time maybe a minute later, two minutes later, is when the hotel just started shaking. Everything came down. I ran south down the lobby, and that's when I got caught in debris in the lobby there. There was just dust, debris coming down all over. I got knocked to the floor with a lot of people.

You hear somebody say okay, the rumbling stopped, and you hear somebody say the rumbling stopped, we're all right, we're all right, everybody's okay. Let's just find our way out of here. You really could hardly see anything.

I remember we came up to a metal roll down gate. I said let's get this up. I need help. There was like four of us who pulled the gate up. And there were like eight civilians on the other side, and they were looking at us the same way we were: What are you doing on this side of the gate? Somebody told me later that was the gate that separated the lobby from the restaurant.

I said relax, keep looking, everybody keep looking. Somebody said we have a way out over here. I got over -- what direction -- where I think we're moving now is continuing moving south in the lobby towards Liberty.

And I remember seeing clear daylight where people were sort of going up a little incline and getting out that way, and somebody said we can get out over here. And I went in that direction. There was another way we went out these doors, down some steps.

And I was going out, and there was a fireman there. He had a life-saving rope and a search rope. I said give me the search rope. And I hooked the search rope up to a pole where we were, and I ran the search rope back into the lobby. Come this way, come this way and follow the rope.

I got about another 50 feet back in the lobby, about 50 feet, and I ran into two guys from 58 Engine. I said let's get out of here. They said no, we've got our officer -- there's a guy Bob Nagel, who's a lieutenant from 58 Engine, he was caught in debris. He said he wasn't pinned.

We were talking to him like we were having a conversation just like this. I said Bob, we'll get you out of here, Bob. I said is there any way you can go back? He said no, I can't go backwards.

I remember going to the right. There were elevator shafts, and we just couldn't get around them. It just was me and the two firemen. I said listen, I'll tie the search rope here. I'll get you help back in.

I worked my way back outside, and ran I into Ray Brown and the guy from 113 Truck. I ran into them about 60 feet outside the building. I said Ray, we've got this guy, he's alive. We've just got to get tools to clear this area out. Grab whatever air bags off any of the rigs around here.

I said go, you'll see 65's pumper, you'll go up a few steps, you will see a search rope, just follow the search rope. I figure I've got him being taken care of. Unfortunately it never happened because -- I'm getting ahead of myself now here a little bit.

So I kept walking outside, looking to see if there was anybody else outside. I saw all these ambulances turned over. Half of them are on fire.

The next guy I remember running into is Chief Carruthers. I think he just came on the scene. I told him whoever could get out of the hotel got out of the hotel. I said but Nagel and I have guys working. We couldn't even find our way back to their location. There was just so much debris and smoke and dust in the air. We couldn't even see 65 inches, approximately. We must have swung out a different way or we just couldn't backtrack.

So he left. Carruthers left at this point to go back to the command post where it was set up originally. And I started making my way back to the Marriott just to see if I could find a way back in. And that's when the other tower came down, and I got caught in the street with all that dirt and debris.

That's when I thought that these guys didn't get out. Forget what they brought in. What I found out later on was they all got knocked down in the debris but they all got out.

Ray Brown got taken to a hospital in New Jersey. Two other guys got taken to hospitals elsewhere. But the only guy that really -- aside from Asaro, was Nagel, and they still haven't found him.

I remember now getting caught in the dirt -- more the dirt field, all the crap that was falling down from the building. After that settled down, I remember now the next guy I ran into was Artie Lakiotes, one of the safety Chiefs. It was just me, him and a few other guys showing up.

I remember guys -- Jimmy Marketti, he was battalion chief and captain of 176 at the time. He was in civilian clothes. And I said what are you doing here, Jimmy? It popped out, because guys were just showing out through the clouds.

So I figured, Artie, what are we going to do here? We have nobody to work with. The next thing you know, Nick Santangelo, Chief of training, he showed up with about 25 guys. Now we're trying to get a water supply. I told Artie Lakiotes: Artie, you have a supply here because I've got to get back to the command post. We've got to organize this thing better.

From there I made my way down to Vesey and West, and that's when I ran into Chief Carruthers, who has now taken control of everything. He was now with Chief Fellini and Butler and Chiefs Callan and Turi sitting on the island, and they were just like covered in debris. You could see that they were mentally out of it.

I was probably mentally out of it because Carruthers gave me a few things to do and find out, things that were going on with the Special Operations Command, the people at the FEMA system, tools and equipment. He knew that I knew what he was talking about. So he put me in charge of getting that to the scene and getting people to get that equipment. I got on the department radio, and hazmat operations said they were going to take care of that.

The next thing Chief Carruthers said listen, we have no communications with Police Plaza, so he sent me to be the liaison between the Fire Department and the Police Department at One Police Plaza.

I left the scene. I was there for about four or five hours, and I was back at the scene and basically just helping them -- when I got there, that's when they pulled everybody back completely and were doing a roll call.

So I gave a hand to Chief Visconti and Chief Fellini with that. That was like at -- I think that's just south -- it's like Vesey and West, just west of West Street was where they were forming it. They were forming up in there.

And then I just gave them a hand for the next couple hours, just getting the interchange, getting the companies out of the way and getting the equipment out of the way so we could get the heavy cranes back in.

Basically I made my way back here around midnight and basically spent the next two days here just getting the division back in shape, because the amount of people and equipment that we lost. I really didn't go back down there until -- it happened on Tuesday; right?

Q. Yeah.

A. I was back down there Wednesday night because I had to deliver some drawings. And I operated down there Wednesday night into Thursday morning, down at Liberty and West, in front of -- that would be in front of where the Marriott Hotel is, clearing out that area with a bunch of units.

MR. DUN: This concludes the interview at 1616 hours. Thank you, sir.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

BATTALION CHIEF JOHN SUDNIK

Interview Date: November 7, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. KRUG: We're doing an interview with Battalion Chief John Sudnik on November 7th, 2001, at approximately 1900 hours, regarding the World Trade Center on September 11th, 2001.

Q. Chief, if you can just tell me what your actions were and how you responded.

A. You want me to go in order of this?

Q. However you got there and where you went.

A. I responded from headquarters, from the seventh floor headquarters. I responded in Chief Nigro's car. I guess we followed Chief Ganci's car. Chief Nigro was in Chief Ganci's car. We stopped the car probably on Fulton Street and I guess what's that, Trinity Church?

Q. Right.

A. That area there. Maybe it was Broadway. We walked up to Vesey, I believe, the best I can remember, and walked over to where the command post was being set up, which was opposite One World Trade Center, directly in front of -- I guess that's the rear of or the side of Two World Financial Center.

At the command post I was operating with Chief Nigro, Chief Ganci. I was trying to help out in whatever manner I could. Chief Nigro gave me an order to go back to his car, find his driver and to bring his turnout gear for him. I did that and went back the way I came down Vesey Street. I guess I was around two-thirds of the way there and I ended up running into his driver who had his turnout gear.

At that point that's when the second plane hit. I heard the noise of the plane coming in, and I heard the explosion. I looked up and felt the heat from the fire ball and everything like that.

I made it back to the command post, and I was just operating at the command post. At that time we had two planes, one into each tower, and units reporting in. I was helping out. At some point I was working along with Chief Downey. He was giving me orders to stage units in the driveway area behind the command post.

I was trying to get accountability of how many units we had on the scene. I responded to an order from Chief Downey to get five truck companies to report to him, and I guess he gave them an order to go to tower two. I don't know which ones those were. It was kind of crazy at that point.

The best I can remember, we were just operating there, trying to help out and do the best we could. Then we heard a loud explosion or what sounded like a loud explosion and looked up and I saw tower two start coming down. Crazy.

So after tower two started coming down everybody really pretty much took a beeline into the garage area where we were operating. Anybody who was operating near that command post or at the command post, most got out. I didn't see where everybody went, but I know a lot of guys took cover down below, because I know I did, underneath that garage area.

I got about 15 feet into the garage area, and there was a cutout. I was anticipating a lot of debris coming into the garage area, and I just wanted to try to get out of the way. I know a lot of guys had gotten in there before I did. There were units probably already staged in there.

So I jumped into the cutout and just waited there. There were two people next to me. I don't know who they were. It just went black. I just hung out there until the noise stopped. I said to myself -- I totally expected to be blocked in there by debris or trapped in there. I found I didn't have any turnout gear with me. I didn't have a mask or anything on me. So I just figured the best thing -- I had to get out of there at some point because I couldn't breathe.

So I just waited until the noise stopped, and I just said, all right, I'm going to try to go out the way I came. I heard a lot of voices towards the rear of the garage area. I assumed at that point that they were looking for a door.

So I went out the way I came. There was some debris that I was able to get over. Before I knew it, I was walking up the ramp again. I kind of assumed I was outside, and I kept walking and I walked into a tree. That was it. I got out there. There was nothing. It was total silence, no sign -- I mean, you couldn't see anything, but there was no sign or anything being around there of what was left of the command post.

I heard some voices I guess to my left, which was north, so I figured I would try to find out who that was at that point, if it was somebody I was working with at that time. I kept walking off, and the dust got a little bit lighter as I kept walking. Eventually I walked out of what was the heaviest part of the cloud.

There were a couple of firemen that were there. Guys kept coming out of the cloud the way I came, a few guys. Then I saw the majority of the guys who I guess were at the command post. I remember seeing Ganci's driver, Steve Mosiello; Mike Donovan, who responded down to the command post with me in Chief Nigro's car. I saw a couple of guy's from the Commissioner's office from the eighth floor. I saw I believe it was Fitzpatrick. I think I saw Frank Gribbon at some point. That's all I recognized.

Somebody gave me a bottle of water. Actually it was a bottle of seltzer. I was able to wash the stuff out of my eyes, out of my throat, out of my nose. I ended up throwing up a couple of times.

I was just trying to grab guys and just wait around until the guys I was working with came back out or whatever, try to regroup, get some guys together and start maybe going back and making a search, trying to get some command staff back together.

I was telling guys, the firemen that were coming out of the offices that were walking out of the cars or out of the building -- I guess the building that they were walking out of I guess was Two World Financial. They ended up going through the back of the garage and going through a stairway and out onto to Vesey Street.

I was trying to get them to stage up on the next block north, and that's when the second building came down. There was a little bit of a dash to get away from that one too. Because I didn't have a radio, I ended up trying to stay near a couple firemen, guys with turnout gear, guys who seemed like they were -- they seemed okay but they were shook up.

We ended up walking up around probably along the river up a couple blocks. I don't know what street we ended up coming back around, but I know there was a fence, an orange fence, along the river here. So we ended up coming up, back around this way, north a couple blocks and back east. They wanted to get back to -- they were anxious to get back to the quarters of 8 Truck. They got back to 8 Truck.

I came back to the scene to try to find out where the command post was. Somebody said it was set up on West Broadway and Vesey Street, I believe. So I walked back down that way. At that point there was nobody from the command post that I could recognize that I was working with at the command post.

I don't know how much later this was or how long it took me to get back over there. I would assume it was probably anywhere from a half an hour to 45 minutes by the time I made it back around down to where the new command post was set up. At that point Chief Haring from the 8th Division was in charge of the command post.

I hung around that command post waiting to see if I ran into Chief Nigro or Chief Ganci or Chief Downey. Nobody knew where any of them were. I just hung around there and tried to help out the best I could with whatever I could.

That's about it. It was an awful experience.

MR. KRUG: All right. Thanks, Chief.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

DEPUTY CHIEF PATRICK McNALLY

Interview Date: November 8, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. CUNDARI: Today's date is November 8, 2001. The time is 1550 hours. I'm George Cundari, New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an individual with the following individual.

DEPUTY CHIEF McNALLY: Patrick McNally, Deputy Chief, 14th Division.

Q. Can you Please tell us the events that happened on September 11, 2001.

A. I had just finished working the night tour in the 14th Division. I was about to go off duty. We had the TV on and we were watching the events as they unfolded. We had seen one. We didn't see the first plane crash. We just saw that there had been a plane crash into the Trade Center. We saw the second plane crash and at that point I decided to go down to the Trade Center. I changed back into my uniform and myself and Firefighter Mike Laskowski, who was one of the division aides and I, took a division van with a couple of masks and went down to the Trade Center, via the LIE, Midtown Tunnel and the FDR Drive.

We arrived at West Street approximately, I would say 2 blocks south of the Trade Center and I reported to the command post, which was on West Street across from the Trade Center, approximately 50 to a hundred feet south of the Winter Garden I believe. In the area of the Winter Garden. I'm not exactly sure on this map. There was a bridge across, there was two of them.

Q. Who was at the command center when you got there?

A. A number of staff Chiefs. I remember speaking to Chief Cassano. I reported and he said stand by for a minute. I will give you an assignment. I would say approximately within five or ten minutes, the first tower collapsed and we retreated into a parking garage down a ramp, which was directly behind us at the command post. I went into that garage area.

Then I came out after the collapse; myself, Firefighter Laskowski and Chief Downey came out from under the rubble. The entrance to the garage was not blocked. We were able to walk right out. I understand there were two doors. The other door was blocked with debris, I was told later on, but we were able to walk right out to West Street.

Then I believe I spoke to Chief Turi, met him out in front here on West Street and he directed me to try to locate another command post further north. I went up to the area between Vesey and Murray and set up a command post in that area there.

A few moments later, I was talking to Chief Cassano, and we decided go back down south to look for Chief Galvin, who we thought was missing. We were between Vesey Street and Liberty, closer to Vesey than to Liberty, when the second tower came down.

Q. Were you speaking with Chief Cassano via radio?

A. No, face to face. In this area here. I would imagine we were north of the bridge, in that area there. The second tower came down. I was able to make it to the building on the corner of Vesey and there was a cut out in the building. I was able to get in there and get out of the way.

After that, we regrouped again and I spent the rest of the day on Vesey, working between what would be West and Washington, I believe. I worked with Chief Fellini, Citywide Tour Commander. I worked with him, helping him direct rescue operations until approximately 8 o'clock that night.

Q. You were never in the World Trade Center itself, never got inside the towers?

A. No.

Q. Was there radio communications at that time, were you on frequency one?

A. I don't recall what I was on. I'm assuming I was on one. We grabbed two spares from here. I don't recall hearing any radio transmissions.

Q. Were there a lot of people going towards you when you first arrived there?

A. No, from what I understand, they had moved the command post from inside the building to across the street. They were assigning companies. I remember I saw Chief Hart and I believe he was the communications coordinator, the Battalion Chief. I recall seeing Commissioner Feehan in the same area, Chief Ganci. They were just directing operations, but I only just got there probably no more than ten minutes before it happened.

Q. Were there a lot of injuries when you got there at all?

A. No. The only thing that I had heard on the way down is that there were jumpers and that they had been warned about that, that people had jumped out of the building. I heard that on the radio on the way down on the FDR Drive.

Q. Did you know the tower was collapsing or you just knew something was happening?

A. At the beginning I thought that maybe the area from where the plane hit from above, had collapsed. I wasn't aware the whole tower had collapsed.

Q. How long were you in that parking garage before you got out?

A. Couple of minutes.

Q. Still clouds of smoke?

A. Right.

Q. Could you see?

A. You could see up close. I remember talking to Chief Downey. I could see him. I could see my aide and Chief Downey stayed. Chief Ganci was behind him, but I never saw him again.

Q. You went north?

A. I went north. I don't know where Chief Downey went either. Chief Ganci was discovered south of that walkway, that bridge. Later in the day we discovered him, so I'm assuming he went south of the area in front of where the command post had been.

Q. When you went north, were there a lot of firefighters going north with you?

A. There weren't many people out on the street at that point. Just a few. I don't know where the rest of them were. In other words, this area, I was setting up here for another command post. There were not a lot of firefighters up there, only a couple. I left my aide up there and then I went back down south.

Q. Where did you park your van?

A. We parked the van south of the towers on West, I would say approximately 2, 3 blocks south of the towers.

Q. Were you able to get the van out later on?

A. Yes, we were able to drive it back. It had one broken window and it was covered with soot, but we were able to drive it.

Q. Anything else would you like to add?

A. No. I wish it hadn't happened. That's all.

MR. CUNDARI: Thank you for your time.

DEPUTY CHIEF McNALLY: I told them earlier, it wasn't much. Like I said I barely got there.

MR. CUNDARI: Before everything happened.

DEPUTY CHIEF McNALLY: So I wasn't aware of what they were trying to do. As far as the radio goes, I don't recall hearing many transmissions. I'm assuming I was on channel one, but I would imagine they would have had a command channel and maybe one or two tacticals by that point, but I'm not sure.

Q. After the collapse you heard a lot of Maydays then, right?

A. Not really. Very quiet after both collapses. Unusual.

MR. CUNDARI: Thank you for your time. The time is 1555 hours. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JOSEPH FORTIS

Interview Date: November 9, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is November 9th, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. The time is now 0717 hours. I'm conducting an interview with --

EMT FORTIS: Joseph Fortis, EMT 1376.

MR. RADENBERG: Joseph is assigned to EMS Battalion 20. This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 20 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Joseph, if you would begin from when you were assigned to the job. You can pretty much take it from there.

A. Me and my partner Mike were at the station here. We first put all our stuff in the vehicle and we attempted to log on, and there was a computer problem with our ambulance. We heard the dispatcher start screaming for units. We volunteered.

"3 John, put the job on the screen," and we couldn't log on. He just said, "Head down to staging. Start heading down there. I'll give you some more information." We attempted to log on a few times on the way. We went on the Bruckner southbound and started heading down towards the incident.

We went down the Bruckner and through that Brooklyn Battery Tunnel underpass, the Battery Park underpass. We were on our cell phones at the time, and I was talking to my mother and so was Mike. They told us a plane hit the building. We couldn't get the job up on the screen. We couldn't log on. So we were getting our information from our family.

We went down the Bruckner to the FDR, and then we jumped on the FDR and they closed the highway. We had maybe like 15 cop cars and highway cars and 3 fire trucks and like 5 ambulances. We headed down there. We came out, and we didn't know what was going on. It was just an accident at the time. We came out through the tunnel.

When we pulled up onto West Street, the whole world was pretty much blocked in front of the towers. So we actually went into the oncoming traffic. They had it closed down. We proceeded north. They told us staging was at Vesey and West.

We got there and we backed our ambulance -- I was, and Mike was teching. We backed the ambulance in. Whoever the captain was there at the scene asked us to just grab all our equipment and stay with our vehicles and we were just placed in front of the vehicles at the time. So we did that and lit up a cigarette and waited to see what they wanted to do.

I believe at that time -- I can't even tell you the time frame. We actually heard like the engines I guess for the second plane coming in, and it just got louder and, boom, the second plane hit the other tower. We stood there and we watched. I guess like a fireball cloud came down. We were all standing on the corner I guess by the pedestrian bridge off the corner there with our equipment. We were just amazed in awe.

Everybody was running at us saying evacuate and we're under attack kind of thing. Then the light went on to run. We turned around and started running west on Vesey Street, and we made it just past the American Express building.

It was just coming too fast. We couldn't get away from that cloud per se, and we ducked into the lobby of a building there. I believe it was between -- it might have even been the American Express building on the corner there.

Q. At this point it's the collapse of the first building now?

A. No, no. This is just when the second plane.

Q. Okay.

A. The buildings were still up. So it was just a blast from I guess the second plane, I think, came in, and the dust cloud just came. We were on the corner there, and you just felt the heat. Our back and all our eyebrows were all singed and everything. We had a little flash burn because we were right -- I guess when it were came were we right on West off the corner of I guess where six was, if that was it, if this is West Street here.

Q. Yeah.

A. We were actually right by the pedestrian bridge, because when we -- the bridge is there, and we were actually over here and the ambulances were parked off the corner.

Q. South of the pedestrian bridge?

A. South of the pedestrian bridge, when I guess the second plane came in. So we ran. Everybody was running down Vesey west, and that's the way we went. After that incident and everybody composed themselves, a couple minutes later everybody was just like -- it was just chaos.

One of the people who worked here at the station, I believe he just finished dropping off his girlfriend or his wife at the Trade Center. She worked there. So we were actually trying to keep him calm and keep him from running into the building. It actually took like three of us to stop him from running across, just running back into the building. He wanted us all to go with him. They were like stay here, so we stayed there.

Then everybody composed themselves, and we were back on the corner of -- back on Vesey and West where the staging was, and they were like, "Stay right here. Stay right here. Nobody go towards the building."

All of a sudden we started -- they wanted us to go towards whatever building that we were going to do triage in the lobby of -- I don't know if it was one or two, but we were supposed to set up a triage there. But they weren't too sure yet. They were waiting for a confirmation or something. We had all our equipment, and everything was already singed from that point.

Like I said, we started ahead like halfway across West Street with our stuff, and the ground started shaking like a train was coming. You looked up, and I guess -- I don't know, it was one that came down first or two? Which one?

Q. The first one to come down was the south tower, number two.

A. Two? We were standing on West Street, and the ground started to shake. You looked up, and it looked like a ticker tape parade off the back of the building, because all this stuff started coming down. We thought it was just like all papers and everything. Like I said, there was pieces of body parts all over the place.

We came halfway across the street, and the building was coming down. Everybody was running out of the same evac, the building's falling and ESU and everybody and everyone's screaming "Get back! Get back!"

We dropped all our stuff and started running again, west on Vesey, headed towards Vesey and West. Then we went west on Vesey. We just made the turn on I believe on North End Street. Just as we got to the corner, I guess the debris from the cloud came up Vesey and up Murray and then up and over that building that's there. So we actually stood up against the building here.

Q. Vesey and North End?

A. Right, right. The lobby is like right there. They didn't want us to go in the building. Actually everybody -- it was just chaotic. That cloud came, and we just leaned up against the building and it was just -- no one could breathe or anything.

Then after that we -- an ambulance came by from I think it might have been Cabrini's ambulance, and they stopped right in front of that building on North End Street. We all jumped in the ambulance. Like I say, you could just see the cloud coming up and over the building. We waited and the ground was shaking and all that. We waited like two, three minutes. We got out of that vehicle and proceeded I guess east on Vesey towards the buildings again.

At that point there were -- all the ambulances on the corner there, I believe like the first three or four off that corner were destroyed. We were maybe the seventh or eighth ambulance off the line. So our vehicle was -- we left it running, so it was still running at the time. The windows were open and all that, and a couple windows blew out.

I jumped in the ambulance, and we pulled them on -- we headed westbound and parked them in front of the building there on North End Street. Then I went back and we grabbed Cornell's bus and grabbed like three other vehicles that were all running. I think it was like Cabrini, Cornell and then our ambulance, 429. At that point I didn't know where my partner Mike went, because he went one way and I went the other way.

After that we actually went towards the buildings there, and we were just taking people from -- I guess from right off the front of Trade Center one, all these people, and we would bring them over to the ambulance and they would go. And we would go back to almost the stairs of building one again and just help people straight across the street, and back and forth.

Then everyone was screaming that it's unsafe and everybody had to pull back. Meanwhile everybody was still taking people from -- helping people from the sidewalk in front of the towers across the street almost to Vesey and West, and from there they were going to an ambulance or they actually set up a triage in the American Express building, I believe it was, on the corner there.

We went across to the sidewalk like two, three times, and then when we came back the third time they told us to stay here. We were going to do like -- make that like a forward triage, this American Express building.

It was me and my partner and Steve Pilla and a couple other people from the station.

We had like those multiple oxygen mask trees on like a big tank, and we were just bringing them to only firemen and cops. We didn't have any civilians whatsoever. We had a couple chiefs. Everybody was just like minor cuts. Nobody was life-threatening.

Everyone was hacking, so we actually had like maybe 20 to 30 police and firemen on like the non-re-breathers. I think it was on in the American Express on the corner there.

A few minutes after that, after we had everybody we were treating, they were shipping them down the block. ESU came in and said they thought the gas lines were going to blow for the building or something and we needed to evac out of there immediately.

So we just grabbed all the stuff again and piled them on the stretchers. Actually all the firemen and cops were ripping off their oxygen masks and running out of the building. As we got out the American Express building on the corner there, we started running again westbound, because everybody was just screaming, "It's going to blow! Run, don't walk, and just leave all the equipment."

I guess the next building came down. Again we were like halfway up the block, and it just came and annihilated the triage area. I believe two other firemen and a cop were killed or something over there or whatever it was.

So after that again we went back to that building on North End and Vesey Street, the building on the corner there. We set up -- they wanted to do it there, set up a forward triage there instead. Again we set up everything again. There's an atrium there, and we had everything underneath the atrium with the glass, we had to move everything over.

After I guess the second building came down and that cloud came again, again nobody could even breathe. We had a line with breathers on in the back of the ambulance because the windows were missing and the cloud was just devastating.

After that then everybody split up. I don't know where Mike, my partner, went. He wound up I believe on the opposite side almost over like at Trinity and Church, because we got separated. He ran left, and I ran right. He got to the other side.

Then after everything was kind of calmed down a little bit, it must have been after 10:30 then. We were just doing, again, just firemen and police officers. We didn't have any civilians whatsoever. They were all just like respiratory problems and minor cuts. A couple people were kind of critical. So we would take them and throw them in the ambulances.

Then after both buildings were down, we were actually going from right to where the sidewalks used to be and just trying to move things with everyone who was there and put people into ambulances or direct them, throw a gauze pad on their head and tell them to keep walking north on West Street, just keep walking north.

That's really about it. We did that, and then time just passed. The next thing I remember was I guess when the third building came down. We were right in front of -- I don't know if that's a school. We were actually still on Vesey and West but just north of the pedestrian bridge on the corner there. Everybody stood back right off the point where the water starts. I don't know where that is. Is that right there? Wherever the water is, there's like a little --

Q. This would be the marina behind it.

A. We were here. I thought there was another -- like here where the boats pull in. I don't know if we were all the way over here. They actually had a couple tugboats there.

Q. I know it's just in behind the Winter Garden.

A. Right. On the other side of the building here there's actually -- where's the high school from here, Stuyvesant?

Q. It's further north.

A. When the third building came down, that's where we were. We were actually -- they pulled us all back.

Q. Yeah, Stuyvesant is all the way up here just north of Chambers.

A. They had some boats over here. Actually they pulled us all the way back that far at the point because they didn't want any -- they didn't want us anywhere near it. Everyone was just running around. When the third building came down, we were on that corner in front of the school, and everybody just stood back.

They pulled us all back at the time, almost about an hour before it, because they were sure -- they knew it was going to come down, but they weren't sure. So they pulled everyone back, and everybody stood there and we actually just waited and just waited and waited until it went down, because it was unsafe. They wouldn't let anyone next to I guess the two piles, we would call them, where one and two was. We stood back. We waited.

Then after the building came down and the dust and everything settled, everybody actually went back. Everybody was just moving things, and we were actually picking up a lot of body parts and putting them in red bags and just having them shipped to the morgue and this and that. We did that for a couple hours, and it started to get dark.

The next thing I remember, I was down -- it must have been about 10:00, and they had like a whole bunch of people from our station were right in front of the school, Stuyvesant, and they were all holding hands praying. I walked over and slapped them five. I was like, "What are you guys crying -- it's all right, you know, things are going to get better."

They had me, because Mike was on the other side, and I guess at 12 he talked to someone and said "Where's your partner?" They're like, "I don't know. I think he was at -- he was supposed to be --" we were just taking people from the stairs of the building. We weren't going near the lobby. They said it was unsafe. They weren't too sure.

They said, "We think the building's safe, but don't just go anywhere yet." They wanted to do triage in one of the building lobbies, but they said hold off a few minutes and we'll see how it goes, and then things rolled from there.

When we split up, he said, "They told us to go to the lobby." So he thought I was in the lobby of the building at the time. It was about 3:00 that afternoon, and our cell phones finally went on so I called my house. I talked to my wife and told her I was fine.

From there, like I said, I was talking to the guys at the station and Lieutenant Sullivan smacked me in the head and we were laughing. He said, "Thank God you're okay, you moron. We had you down because you were supposed to be in the building." I was joking around with him, saying, "Well, you know it takes a unique person to be a firefighter. I don't run into burning buildings that people are running out of."

When we were there, even my partner, we were like just to watch all those regular people jumping out the windows was -- we saw maybe like 10 or 12 people jump out the windows. That was the thing, when we get to almost the stairs when the buildings were up, we just looked up just to make sure, because you couldn't help but look up, just to make sure everything wasn't coming down.

What else can I say? After they found out at 10:00 that I was okay, I told Lieutenant Sullivan I wanted to go home. He just gave me the keys to an ambulance that was off the corner that was destroyed. I boosted it, and it started up. It was destroyed. I got in, and I drove and I drove back to the station.

I dropped a fireman off halfway up off the West Side Highway. I dropped him off somewhere. I don't even remember who he was. I dropped him off. Then I came home by myself. I pulled into the garage of Battalion 20. That's when everyone found out I was okay. I was on the missing list and all this.

Supposedly my mother was here at 12. I was on the phone with her at about 10 to 9, 5 to 9, saying I'm on my way down. She works in Brooklyn. Like I said, they were telling us what was happening. So when the phone went dead, she came here to the station from home. It was 12, 12:30.

Whatever transpired here, they said, "Well, we can't get in touch with everybody, but we think everyone's fine," this and that. They're like, "He's not even down there." She's like, "Don't tell me he's not down there. He told me he was in front of it," because we weren't logged onto the computer, so it didn't show that 03 John was there. That's how that started.

Q. What was your partner's last name?

A. Negron, Mike. He doesn't want to talk about it.

Q. Okay. No problem.

When you came out of the Battery Park and coming up West Side Highway, did you park on West Side Highway or --

A. I parked right on Vesey right off West Side Highway. There was maybe one, two, three, four ambulances off the corner, and then, boom, we were the fifth one right there, because we were directly in front of the entrance of the American Express building.

Q. Right. Then you staged down just south --

A. Just south of the bridge.

Q. -- of the bridge, on the west side of the street?

A. Right. Then as people were coming out and were having difficulty coming out down the stairs -- because they really didn't want us to cross the median. That was kind of like, "Guys, just don't cross the median for a few minutes."

Everybody wanted to help, but they really had it under control. I've been here ten years, and there was a reason for them to tell me to stay there. I pretty much followed the rules.

Q. Right. When you arrived at West and Vesey, do you remember seeing EMS officers down there, other personnel that you recognized?

A. When we came up -- when we were coming north on West Street, we had the windows open. It was so funny, I remember Mike looking out the window going, holy, you know, look at that shit. He was looking out the window, out the passenger window. There were so many vehicles parked from Liberty all the way to Vesey on the north side of West Street, heading north on West Street, that you just couldn't get by.

I always like to leave myself an out. They told me to get to Vesey and West anyway, so that's where I was going. There's like a little island there, a little sidewalk. It must have been just south or actually over here by wherever we came out on Cedar. I came into the southbound lanes, because it was shut down anyway, and just drove all the way up to Vesey and West and backed the ambulance in right there.

So when we came by, we saw all the -- there was a couple I think it might have been like Cabrini and a Metro Care ambulance, a lot of the private ambulances and the fire companies were all right in front of -- right on the north side of West Street there, and we just drove right past all of them, because we were supposed to be on Vesey and West, because you always leave yourself an out.

Q. Yeah.

A. All those vehicles were parked there. I don't remember who it was, but we saw I believe there was Deshore from the academy, from EMS.

Q. Captain Deshore?

A. Captain Deshore. They were heading towards -- everyone was running across in front of us, and we were still going to Vesey and West. It looked like her and a bunch of other EMS workers. There was someone else from -- I believe his last name is Joseph, one of the other new guys here. I thought I saw him go by and one of the medics from the south. I only know his first name is Joe. They were all going towards the site. We were still trying to get to Vesey and West at the time.

So we just backed the vehicle up there and, like I said, put our equipment in the front. Just as I was ripping tape to put 03 John on the windshield, I guess that's when we heard the turbines or whatever.

Q. The second plane?

A. The second plane per se. We didn't even know it was that until afterwards, until days after.

Q. Right.

A. The people you were with, it was Chris Attanasio and Roland. They were like, "Oh, no, dude, that was" -- the first thing we heard was the plane coming in, because then we were there for the other collapses. I didn't even realize it because it was just chaos and everybody was just scared, to be honest with you.

Like I said, when that blast came out, everybody got this little sing. Even like the little bands on our jackets just melted right off, the reflective bands. We just dropped everything when the cloud came, composed ourselves, and went back to the site again.

Then the rest of the day between whatever, 4 and 10, after I guess the third building went down, they said it was okay. Everybody was really on like the bucket thing and on the pile, just moving debris for a couple hours.

Then when I went to go get a soda, then I was relieved. They sent me home.

Q. After the second hit, you came back pretty much to the same area south of the pedestrian bridge?

A. Yeah, after the second plane hit we ran to North End Street and Vesey and waited until the blast went by, went back to where we originally staged and moved all the ambulances back around the corner. Then we went after that and just with our equipment in the stretchers stood over here and waited because they wanted to keep the vehicles out to the side. They were just like, "Grab whatever equipment you can."

Q. You were back down on West, south of the pedestrian bridge?

A. Yeah, by the bridge. Actually just north of the bridge, because the bridge was annihilated at that point.

Q. When the treatment area was set up in the American Express building, that was after the first collapse?

A. After the first collapse. We must have been in that building for not even like -- it probably was a while, like 10, 15 minutes, but it just seemed like for a minute or two. I guess the big one's an H tank. We had the multiple trees, and all I did was rip off the non-breathers and people just coming in, just policemen, firemen. We started doing our thing.

Like I said, all of a sudden ESU came in and said the building was unsafe and we needed to get out of that building because they thought that the gas lines were going to go.

From there we moved again back to North End and Vesey in whatever building that was there. That's where we started to do another triage, forward triage thing. There was a little construction there, and the water's right there. So they said, okay, maybe it's not safe there. One building was still up.

What happened was everyone was just taking vehicles and taking people and heading northbound. We stayed there for a few. It was me and my partner -- not my partner, Steve Pilla and a couple other gentlemen. I don't even remember who they were. Everyone was just throwing equipment into that location from all the other vehicles that were destroyed. They would just salvage the equipment and bring it right to there.

They determined that that was a little too close still, and they wanted us out of that building. We to go north. When the second building was coming down, we must have been like on Murray and North End, and the cloud was coming from the second building. So we actually went back into this one here just to avoid the cloud. Then after that passed, that's when we returned back to actually ground zero or whatever then.

Q. Any thoughts or comments, anything else you'd like to add?

A. No.

Q. Okay. I think we covered this, but when you first arrived at staging do you remember the officers that were there?

A. I can't remember his name, but I see him regularly. I believe there was a lieutenant there, a captain, and one of the chiefs was just going by. But I don't even remember who they were. As a matter of fact, I saw him maybe down there another time, and he was like, "I'm glad to see you're okay," and that kind of thing. I don't know him by his name. It's always like, "Hey, what's up," that kind of thing.

Q. Right.

A. That's really about it.

Q. Okay. I thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JOHN FELIDI

Interview Date: November 9, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today is November 9, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The time is now 0756 hours.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with --

A. John Felidi, Battalion 20, 2985.

Q. Okay. Mr. Felidi is an EMT. This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 20 regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

John, begin with when you were assigned to the job, where you were, et cetera?

A. I was at the station in the morning when we were watching the news and they were showing pictures of what was happening at the World Trade Center, that a plane hit the tower. At that point, Chief Basile came in and said John, take the LSU truck down to the World Trade Center. So, that's what I did. Took the West Side Highway all the way down.

I got to about the West Side Highway, between Barclay and Vesey Street. I couldn't go any further, so I parked the vehicle there and spoke to Chief Villani. I told him I couldn't go any further, due to the mass of emergency vehicles that were down there. So he told me go down, to take the vehicle and put it on the other side of the West Side Highway, which is the west -- the west side of the highway there. So I did. I went down to -- took the West Side Highway back to Murray Street, made a left on Murray Street, came up North End, came down Vesey Street and I parked approximately right in this area here, which is the West Side Highway and Vesey Street, right here.

Q. So, right by like 7 World Financial Center?

A. Correct.

Q. The American Express building?

A. Right near there. We were doing some triaging, triaging a couple of patients, here and there. We were ordered to evacuate that area. They didn't give me a reason why. So that's what I did. We pushed down to North End and Vesey. At that point in time we were also doing some triaging. We -- now we are down there. We heard a rumble. I heard the rumble and looked in the back of me all I seen was a monstrous -- I can't even describe it. A cloud. Looked like debris, dust.

We ran down to North End between Murray and Vesey Street. There was a -- I think there is a -- I thought there was a hotel and office building right there. We ran in there. The cloud was really really bad. So we ran in there and we waited until it subsided. That was about like 10, 15 minutes went by. I was down there, I lost track of time so I really can't -- even speak about time.

So after that happened, we found out that the second tower that was hit collapsed. We went back out, started triaging again. We asked a fireman that we had, a Captain from one of the -- actually, I don't even know what his name was -- what Battalion or whichever he was at. We were triaging there. There was so much debris down there, like you were covered.

At one point while we were triaging again, we were told to evacuate the area because the other tower was about to collapse. At that point in time I tried to jump in the vehicle and the only thing I remember is getting into the vehicle. I didn't even have time to put the key in the ignition and that was it. That was so -- I mean I think I was closer to that tower than this one.

Q. Yes, number 1. The north tower.

A. Right, that's the one. That it was so dark down there that I couldn't even see in front of me. I tried even moving the vehicle about two feet but I couldn't do it, because people are running everywhere. We had EMS personnel in the middle of the street. We had the New York City Police Department running. I seen a couple of firemen running by me, so all I did was get in the vehicle, stay there until -- actually it came to a stand still.

That was about a few minutes. That was a while. The first time I got covered with it. The second time we knew that it was going to collapse. We were told to evacuate the area. That was it. I got into the vehicle, put the key in and I couldn't even go anywhere.

About 15 minutes went by. We started triaging in -- I don't remember, I think the Ambassador or the Embassy.

Q. Embassy?

A. Yes.

Q. Embassy Suites?

A. Right. We started triaging in there and we were getting hit heavy with patients. About -- I'm giving you a rough estimate because I really don't remember the time. About 20 minutes to half an hour went by, we were told to evacuate that area due to major gas leaks in the area. At that point in time I started putting some of the equipment that I had. I left a lot of equipment down there because in the 21 years I have been there, I have never never seen anything like this. Never.

We were told to evacuate the area and we were told to proceed down North End to Chambers, take the West Side Highway up to Chelsea Piers, 23 Street. At that point in time I think, I picked up Chief Pascale. I put her in the truck and I think there was also a Lieutenant and her aide, because they needed a ride up to the Chelsea Piers. I even seen Dario Gonzalez, Dr. Dario Gonzalez. I seen him down there. I seen numerous people from the Battalion down there.

There was one point in time that we were scared shit. What scared the shit out of me was we were down there and all we heard was another aircraft coming, but it turned out to be, I don't know, an F-15.

Let me tell you something you never seen anybody stand still, because you didn't know where to run, honestly. We evacuated that area and went down to Chelsea Piers. I started setting up a triage area down there and at that point in time I stood there until I was relieved. I came back to the station.

Q. Okay. When you got to west side and Vesey and you saw Chief Villani, do you remember seeing any other people down there that you recognized?

A. I remember -- after the collapse I remember seeing Chief Basile. He was covered in debris because he was one of the Chiefs that I believe I think was in the pedestrian walkway when it collapsed. Also I saw Louie Cook down there, who was the ALS coordinator next door, in the division. They were covered in -- full of debris.

Q. Do you remember where you saw them?

A. About right here when we were down by triage, in this area.

Q. By North End and Vesey?

A. Yes, the hotel down there.

Q. Yes, that's the Embassy I believe.

A. Yes. In fact I don't remember the name of it. I know it's right here.

Q. All right. Do you recall anybody with Chief Villani when you first arrived?

A. I seen a Lieutenant, but I don't know his name. I really don't know his name.

Q. All right. Other EMS ambulances down in the area?

A. I seen one of the new MERVs from Manhattan. I know it was Manhattan because it was one of the new ones. One of the last ones we got in. I seen people getting triaged in the MERV, but I couldn't tell you who they -- what their names or anything like that.

Q. Okay. No problem. Heading up to Chelsea Piers, you picked up Chief Pascale and her aide?

A. Right.

Q. Do you remember roughly where you picked them up? Was it somewhere over here on North End or --

A. No, I think it was near West Side Highway. I think around or past Chambers Street.

Q. North of Chambers?

A. Yes. I think -- she was -- as a matter of fact, I seen her when we were triaging in that building. But then after the second collapse, everybody scattered and I didn't see her until -- up in that area. Like Chambers and the West Side Highway.

Q. Okay. When tower one came down you rode that out in the LSU?

A. No, that one, what I did was --

Q. Tower one was the second tower to fall.

A. Right. When the second tower fell I was right here in this area here. I heard the rumble. Sorry, that was the first tower that fell. I heard the rumble. We were in this area here.

Q. Right. West Side Highway and Vesey?

A. Right. So when that collapsed, I felt a tremor and I ran towards North End, but we had a cloud following us, so I ran around the corner to try to avoid it. It came down Vesey Street. Then it came down also Murray, so I was stuck right in the middle of that area. The only thing I could do was duck and ran into that building, but I got covered in debris because by the time I turned the block here, it caught me.

Q. Right.

A. When the second tower fell, that one we were right here in this area here again. That one was more, like I would say more powerful, because I was closer to it. That one I got full of debris. Also, that was when I jumped into the LSU truck. I didn't get a chance to put the key in, you know.

Because the first time, I believe it was the first tower that fell, the LSU truck was here and I ran. I left the truck. I ran around the corner, but when the second tower fell, I never forget that sound. It sounded like a freight train passing by. I never forget that sound, never forget that sound. Like a freight train.

Q. Okay. Anything else you would like to add, thoughts or comments or anything like that? No?

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. John, I thank you very much. The time is now 0708 hours. This interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC KEVIN DARNOWSKI

Interview Date: November 9, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is November 9th, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. The time is now 0934 hours. I am conducting an interview with --

PARAMEDIC DARNOWSKI: Paramedic Kevin Darnowski from Battalion 20, shield 3103.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 20 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Kevin?

A. Regarding the events of September 11th, 2001, my story is I was dropping my fiancee's son off at school in Brooklyn on Fourth Avenue. After dropping him off, I was heading northbound on Fourth Avenue, and I looked to my left and I see the north tower of the World Trade Center burning. My fiancee works in the north tower on the 98th floor.

At that time I proceeded to call Lieutenant Guzman here at Battalion 20 and question him as to whether or not he had a job in the system for the World Trade Center. He told me that he had reports of a fire on the upper floors of the World Trade Center.

At that time he asked me if I wanted to continue to work or go down to the scene. I opted to go down to the scene, as I was on my way to work anyway. And in uniform, I opted to go down to the scene at that time.

As I headed down towards the scene, I was trying to call my fiancee in her office, and there was no answer on the phone. It just kept giving me a busy signal. I tried her cell phone, and there was no answer on her cell phone.

I was approaching the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. Behind me was EMS Chief Goldfarb. In front of me was a couple of tower ladders and rescue companies and engine companies that were going through the tunnel.

Right before the tolls on the Brooklyn side heading towards Manhattan at the Battery Tunnel, we were sitting in traffic and we watched United Flight 175 hit tower two, which was the south tower of the World Trade Center.

At that time everybody was just in shock. The firefighters and I were just really trying to get through the traffic when the plane hit, and we were just standing there in like awe of what was happening. Finally we ended up getting into the tunnel,and we ended up sitting in the tunnel for about another 10 minutes, 10 to 15 minutes, trying to get through the traffic.

When we finally got through the tunnel to the other side, I parked my car on the corner of Carlisle and West Side Highway, West Street, and I proceeded northbound on West Street towards the command center or what I believed to be the command center at that time.

I went along the center median, meanwhile looking up at the towers in disbelief and basically sheer awe at what was going on. None of us at the Battery Tunnel knew what was going on until the second plane hit. Right then we knew it was a terrorist attack.

So as I'm walking up to the scene, I see droves of firefighters running towards the buildings, but nobody's coming out on the West Street side. I questioned one Fire Department official -- I believe he was a captain; I don't remember his name -- as to why there was nobody coming out on this side. He told me the Port Authority had locked the doors on that side of the building and was having everybody come out on the Trinity side by the church, like Trinity and Fulton area for easy evacuation.

At that point I met up with EMS Chief Goldfarb again and his aide Mary. We were over by Three Financial Center. At that point we were standing with numerous amounts of firefighters and fire supervisors and police officers, and we got a report of another incoming airplane. So we proceeded to go into a parking garage that was in Three Financial Center underneath.

Shortly after that we realized what was flying over was the armed forces F-14s flying over, and we got a confirmation from the FAA -- over the police radio we got a confirmation from FAA that all airports had been closed and there were no planes flying within the New York City area at that specific time.

So we all came out of the garage, and Chief Goldfarb started setting up triage on the corner of West and Vesey with the ambulances going towards North End Avenue, facing West Street along Vesey, along Three and four Financial Center.

At that time we weren't getting that many -- we ended up putting -- I don't know what this building was over here.

Q. Vesey and North End.

A. Yeah, there was a building on the --

Q. Embassy Hotel?

A. It might have been The embassy Hotel.

Q. There's a movie theater also.

A. Right, right. There was a parking lot in the front on West Street. We ended up putting triage initially in Three and Four Financial Center.

At that time Chief Goldfarb and -- I had explained my situation, that my fiancee was up on the 98th floor of tower one and I would be as much help as I can. He told me regarding patient care-wise that don't bother with patient care, just with moving of patients and equipment.

So we went back over to the pedestrian bridge in front of Three Financial Center. We were standing under there with the Fire Department command center. We were attempting to set up a command center there, when one of the firefighters starts screaming, "Look up!" Everybody looks up, and we were watching the people jump out of One World Tower Center and hitting the overhang in front of World Trade Center where the taxis would let people off originally.

At that time it was just -- the best word to describe it was pure chaos. Nobody really knew what was going on other than the firefighters going in to try to put out the fires.

Chief Goldfarb instructed me to go back to the MERV, which was sitting on West and Vesey. I went back over to the MERV, and I met up with one of my coworkers from Battalion 20, Chris Attanasio. He put me in the MERV, because he knew my situation, and he tried to calm me down and just told me to sit tight and relax and just hope for the best and just things like that. He was trying to calm me down and stuff. I just had to get out of the MERV. I had to be outside on the street watching what was going on.

At that point Chris Attanasio took me and he told me we were ordered by -- he didn't specify any -- to go over to West Street just south of the north tower right at the base of the hotel over there, because we were getting patients from Two World Trade Center that they were bringing down the stairs from Two World Trade Center down to West Street. We were going to be getting patients over there.

So I proceeded with him and his partner over to that area, and we started loading patients, firefighters and civilians, in the back of the ambulance. At one point we had five patients in the back of the ambulance, and he was standing and he asked me if I wanted to go to the hospital with him. I told him no, I needed to stay in the area. I wanted to see if Chief Goldfarb needed me for anything. So he said okay, and he started to leave. He proceeded down towards like Albany Street, like Liberty and Albany, to go to one of the area hospitals; I don't remember which one.

At that time I started walking back up towards Vesey Street. I heard three explosions, and then we heard like groaning and grinding, and tower two started to come down. To the firefighters and the cops that I was standing there with started running northbound on West Street and we made a left on Vesey and ran again towards North End Avenue where we were having EMS triage, and we stopped over there.

Down that specific street on West Street, there wasn't that much debris and smoke coming down because Two World Trade Center is more or less blocked by the hotel and a couple other buildings. It did come down like Liberty Street and towards Two World Financial Center and towards like the Winter Garden area.

We ended up just staying there for a while till the smoke more or less cleared up. We started putting our masks on and stuff like that at that time.

Shortly after that Chief Goldfarb told us to go back down towards where we had the ambulances staged on Vesey Street and start moving the ambulances back more and a little north in case tower one fell.

At that time I encountered Chief Larry Mittleman, Chief Fran Pascale, Chief Basile from Division 2, and ALS coordinator Louie Cook from Division 2. I encountered them all at the EMS triage we had at North End and Vesey.

They were at that point -- Chief Goldfarb explained my situation to them with my fiancee being in tower one, and they were just trying to calm me down. I was helping move patients.

We went back to Vesey and West Street and started moving the ambulances back towards North End more, and then we started going northbound on North End towards Murray Street. We were moving the triage because we got a report of the parking lot in front of the building we were in, some of the cars were on fire, and we got reports of gas lines that were blown and the fire were starting to get to them. So we ended up moving the triage initially, and we just started heading northbound to Murray Street.

We got up to Murray Street, and that's when -- Murray Street and towards West Street we ended up putting the triage just for temporary purposes. Then shortly after that tower one started to come down. Captain Fenton, I believe, was on the scene. He said at that time to just get in the ambulances and whatever vehicle you could get in and just head northbound on West Street until you get to Chelsea Piers.

That's how the triage ended up at Chelsea Piers. Everybody just started heading northbound. They started -- we were getting over the radio, EMS radio, that they started having the ambulances staging at the Chelsea Piers.

Captain Fenton told a lieutenant from the Bellevue station that was on the scene to take me back to the station, because I could be of no use patient care-wise given my situation. He told him to take me back to Bellevue station. They removed me to Bellevue station.

Just while I was at Bellevue station, I was acting as a liaison between the station itself and the emergency department with a couple of the other lieutenants there. I'd just seeing a couple of the injuries -- I saw the firefighter they brought in in cardiac arrest that was hit by a civilian that jumped out of one of the buildings.

At that point I still didn't know what was going on with my fiancee. I was calling her sister, calling her mother. Nobody heard anything at that point.

That whole time I had no idea what time of day it was or anything like that. They removed me to Bellevue station at about 3:00. From 3 until 5:30, as I said, I was acting as a liaison between the emergency department and the station.

My twin brother is also a paramedic at Battalion 20. He brought in a patient to Bellevue, so I was talking to him for a while. I went back to the station. I called my house to see if there were any messages on the answering machine, and there was a message from a nurse at Brooklyn hospital saying my fiancee was at Brooklyn Hospital. She was okay. She was being kept for observation.

At that point I called her sister, and her sister was already on her way over to Brooklyn Hospital to see her. So then I approached the desk lieutenant at that time at Bellevue, and I told him the situation. He was going to try to get me a ride back to Brooklyn, but he said obviously it wouldn't be any time soon since the events were still unfolding down at the World Trade Center.

I explained to my brother what had happened. He said fine. So they just told me to continue what I was doing and they would let me know about a ride over to Brooklyn. So I was continuing acting as a liaison.

At one point I brought the firefighter's equipment that had died back over to the emergency department from the station because his coworkers from the engine company were there requesting his equipment.

While I was standing outside in the emergency ambulance bay, I was talking to my brother and another EMT -- I don't recall his name at this time -- and I started experiencing some chest pain and chest tightness, and I was brought into the emergency room. I was treated for angina and anxiety. I was subsequently admitted to the cardiac care unit over night in Bellevue, and I was released at about 6 in the morning.

Just that's what happened to me on September 11th.

Q. When you got in to Manhattan and you parked down by Carlisle and West, do you recall seeing anyone outside from Chief Goldfarb? Do you recall seeing any other EMS personnel around there that you recognized, or fire personnel?

A. Offhand? Not offhand initially, not down at that time. There was a torso of a human that was down over by the hotel by the front of Liberty Street that they had blocked off, and I saw a couple of police crime scene units there. I saw a couple firefighters; I can't recall their names or what engine or ladder company or battalions they were from. I didn't start seeing EMS people until I got up to West and Vesey Street.

I saw NY Cornell ambulances in front. I saw Long Island College Hospital in front. I saw some Fire Department ambulances in front of the hotel and tower one on West Street. A whole bunch of fire apparatus and police vehicles. I saw what looked like a Fire Department command center. I don't exactly know who was there.

Everybody had their turnout gear on. So at that specific time, it was kind of hard to differentiate who had white shirt, light blue shirts, you know, who was just wearing turnout coats.

Like I said, I ended up seeing EMS people from up here, Battalion 20, from New York Hospital that I recognized, some names being Craig Viscuti, Chris Attanasio and Roland Diaz from up here at Battalion 20, Joe Fortis and Mike Negron from up here at Battalion 20. I saw an EMT by the name of Steven Hess. I believe he's from Battalion 57 or the old Woodhall station down in Brooklyn.

At that specific time, I don't remember seeing any EMS lieutenants or captains, just Chief Goldfarb at that time. Other than that, I really couldn't tell you any names.

Q. You've basically covered everything we were looking for. Any thoughts or comments you'd like to add, opinion?

A. No, not really. In that type of situation other than the word "chaos" describing it all, all in all everybody more or less did what they were supposed to do. The firefighters did what they were supposed to do. They were supposed to go in the building and try to rescue the people from the fire floors, extinguish the fires as best they can. EMS people staging outside, some in the lobbies of tower one and tower two; I knew that.

I mean, other than the chaotic scene that was going on, I would have to say everybody more or less did what an emergency action plan recommends with regards to a mess. Obviously nobody thought the buildings would fall. That was unexpected.

What was expected was firefighters were going to go up to the floors, rescue civilians, as many as they can, extinguish the fires, then we would treat and transport. Basically that was the emergency action plan that was in effect, and was what everybody expected to happen. Nobody expected the towers to fall.

So other than that, basically everybody did what they were supposed to be doing. With the chaos, I'm actually surprised. I was the only one that was actually a little bonkers.

Q. How's your fiancee?

A. She's okay. She's doing good. She's hanging in there. She hasn't gone back to work yet. Her work actually relocated, but she hasn't gone back to work yet. But that's okay.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. The time is now 0954, and the interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT LONNIE PENN

Interview Date: November 9, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today's date is November 9, 2001. The time is now 0851 hours. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

Q. Conducting an interview with --

A. EMT Penn, first name Lonnie. Shield 1296.

Q. Lonnie is currently assigned to EMS Battalion 20. This interview is being conducted at Battalion 20 regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

A. Particularly on that day, I was working the unit 20 David, Tour 1, and approximately two minutes after the first plane hit, I was assigned -- basically the route I took was down the Bruckner to the FDR all the way downtown. I must have been around 23 Street when the second plane hit. Shortly, within another 5 to 10 minutes, I was in the mix. I got waved all the way in to the front of the staging. Immediately got out, and proceeded to put on my helmet, pulled out a stretcher and prepared for an MCI.

After that, I helped one lady out of the front of the Marriott entrance, I recall. I was on my way back. I had actually brought her to the Hatzolah ambulance, because they were carrying her, and a few other people and I assisted with her. Then on my way back to the entrance, I felt the ground shake, I turned around and ran for my life.

I made it as far as the Financial Center, like right before it, behind the last Hatzolah ambulance facing the Trade Center, when the collapse happened, and I mean it was just -- I can't -- it was sheer hell, but hell fire passed me and all the rubble, at least 10 feet of rubble had passed me. The only thing I was really scared of was dying of respiratory distress at that point.

When I got up and looked around, my ambulance was obliterated and gone. I looked for my partner. I didn't see him. I was worried for him. Basically I only saw two other people alive on the block that I was at. I got myself together and then started heading through towards the water and I saw two other co-workers from station 22. We all hugged and I saw Captain DeShore and then a boat came in from New Jersey police harbor patrol and Captain DeShore was ordering us to get on and two of us did and one stayed behind.

While I was in the mix of helping people get on, the second collapse proceeded. We got covered in all of the smoke again, all of a sudden and we just escaped with our lives. It was close, very close.

I just got to say I thank God for living. Basically that's it.

Q. Okay. Do you remember where you staged?

A. Approximately -- would this line right here be the barrier that was there? There was a barrier in the middle of the street.

Q. Yes, the black line. This is West Street and then the West Side Highway.

A. I was more or less right on this corner.

Q. Right on Liberty and West?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Who was your partner that day?

A. A rookie gentleman by the name of Joseph Henderson or Henderson Joseph. Basically, we got out and we passed a lot of body parts. I mean it looked like Beirut to me. That was from the debris of the two crashes. My rookie partner, he was in shock, he couldn't believe it. He froze. I just you know, I couldn't stop, I couldn't even watch. If you looked up and you see people jumping, we saw a few jumpers. I couldn't look no more. I had to act. I went to the front. That was where I went over to like the Marriott front.

I assisted that lady to the Hatzolah ambulance and was on my way back when we felt the rumble. My partner actually came sort of like running up to me but not all the way. What should I do. I just said go get a long board from the ambulance and that was the last I saw of him. We felt the ground shake. You could see the towers sway and then it just came down and I never looked back once I started running.

Q. When the collapse started you ran north on the West Side Highway?

A. No, I jumped the barrier and I must have made it right over to where this second line is here. Because I was -- there is like -- it was a little high, I remember where I was it was 10 feet of rubble had passed me.

Q. You were pretty much in front of like 2 World Financial Center?

A. Yes, that's as far as I got.

Q. Right. Then --

A. I actually saw a police officer shoot the window out to get through.

Q. To get through 2 World Financial Center?

A. Yes. Because he was ahead of me. I could see him. He shot the glass out and jumped through and I had later saw him in the hospital in Jersey.

Q. When you reached the yacht harbor behind 2 Financial, you said Captain DeShore was there and two other people from --

A. Two other EMTs from Boston Road.

Q. Do you know who they were?

A. My friend Conzo and Billy -- I can't pronounce Billy's last name. Truoccolo, yes.

Q. Okay. So you were all pretty much back here for the second collapse?

A. Yes.

Q. At the harbor. Who got on the boat?

A. Captain DeShore. We assisted a fireman that had possibly a broken back. This guy, they already had him on a long board and was carrying him over. I assisted to help get him on the boat. There was about two other police officers and I think two civilian ladies, two ladies, I think they were civilians. We assisted them downstairs into the boat. I came back up and it was me and Conzo, Truoccolo was very hurt, his leg was gashed. He had a load of glass all over him, over his neck. He was cut up. I guess his adrenaline just kept him going.

Q. Right.

A. Basically at that point it was me and Conzo on the deck and Captain DeShore was saying get on this boat and Conzo says to me, are you going to Jersey or what? I said -- I could just hear Captain DeShore screaming out again, get on this boat and then all of a sudden we hear the second collapse coming and that was it. I jumped on it, Conzo stayed and thank God later that night I heard he was okay.

We all got treated very nice as soon as we got to Jersey. The people from Day Tech were the best. The firemen were there, on the other side of Jersey. They hosed me down, all that soot. I was coughing, throwing up. I had soot in my -- my eyes were burning, they were sheer burning. I can't forget that.

When I was running from the first collapse, I must have got hit by a body part because I had carcass like on the side of my leg. It was stuck to my pants. Basically minor injuries as far as back spasm after that and my leg had a bruise. I had a bruise from getting hit from some debris. That's basically it.

Q. Okay. Billy Truocollo got on the boat?

A. Yes.

Q. And Conzo?

A. Stayed.

Q. He stayed back?

A. Yes.

Q. When you arrived at the staging area, do you remember who was there as far as EMS officers, personnel?

A. The last known must have been -- it was a Captain or somebody of ours had a vehicle over here between Albany and Carlyle. There was someone in that vicinity that I recall passing one of my bosses. Otherwise it was strictly Fire Department personnel, fire trucks just waving me in. I had got waved in, I remember I passed this bridge here and I was coming in on this side and then I made this turn, right here was the turn where I made and I parked it right here because I was on that side.

Q. You turned around the barriers, the Jersey barriers?

A. Yes.

Q. By the Marriott and then parked on the east side of West Side Highway so you came up this side on the west side.

A. That's when I got waved to turn.

Q. Turn around.

A. Like I said as soon as I stepped off the ambulance I mean I was just -- I felt like I was in Beirut. All I saw was debris and body parts. I recall a little girl's foot. It was like a pink sneaker. It was tiny, around the age of seven, eight or so, because I have a daughter that size. I mean I just saw so many body parts, it was unbelievable.

Then I look up and see people jumping. Really bugged me out, because I couldn't even watch them land. It was just -- I just couldn't understand jumping. I mean I just couldn't fathom it. I would rather take my chances and ride it out. But these people were like I would rather jump than get burned. That's how I thought of it afterwards. I don't know what else to say.

Q. Anything else you would like to add, opinions or --

A. My opinion was that staging was way too close. I got waved all the way into the front. Where it was unnecessary that personally there was nothing I could do to help anybody from what I saw you know, as far as -- evacuation yes, but that's not my job. So I mean I still assisted in that sense. I just had to act. I couldn't watch these people jump off any more.

I had to do something. That's when I went to the foot of the Marriott entrance and just assisted the first lady I could help. They were all leading them to the Hatzolah. There was a line of like Hatzolah ambulances I recall, at least 4 or 5, and we were helping them.

Q. Okay --

A. That was actually on this side where like two, it was over there.

Q. On the west side?

A. Yes, that's where --

Q. The Hatzolah?

A. Yes, they were faced with their ambulances backed up right there.

Q. Right.

A. So then we had to go -- it was actually by the turn, that's how I remember too. It was by the turn, where I did my turn was across there. We had started walking up over here, me and my partner, I guess we were like right on this corner here.

Q. On Liberty and Washington?

A. Yes, and that's when I saw somebody jump on this side of this 2 World Trade Center on the top on this corner. I saw a man take a leap. I mean I have done a lot of jumpers down, but this one was live in your face. I must have stopped watching when he got to around the 30th floor. I just put my head down and said lord take care of me and I reacted. That's when my rookie partner, and there was two other medics from Boston that showed up. Joe Jefferson and I forgot his partner, but I heard his partner fractured his shoulder and it was just one bad day.

It was such a beautiful day. Nobody expected this. I had a funny feeling in my gut that once those planes had hit, that the World Trade Center was going to collapse. I had a feeling it was coming down. I just didn't think so quick. It was within minutes.

Q. One last thing. The last time that you saw your partner, he was --

A. He was at the ambulance.

Q. Just prior to the first collapse?

A. Yes, yes. He was getting a long board, he was like what should I do? I said I -- it's like telling a husband and I'm helping his wife give birth like, he don't know --

Q. Go boil the water.

A. I just said go get a long board. That's what he was doing. Basically after the first collapse and I look back to where my ambulance was parked, it was no longer there. It was gone. I couldn't even see it. It was obliterated. Thank God it was one of the spare vehicles. That's what -- everybody at -- like the bosses, said ah, it's a spare.

I got to thank the New Jersey harbor police. I mean they -- he did a hell of a job getting out of that situation blindly during the second collapse. He got it backed up, did a little bump, hit the wall and then swung it right out. I mean blindly, because you couldn't see anything. The soot was hitting us already from the second collapse. Just covered the boat. Fortunately we made it out of there.

I remember on the boat at that moment, though, I had to grab a fireman on the long board down the stairs. I just hope I didn't hurt him any further, but I just reacted so quickly.

Q. You pulled him down into the cabin of the boat?

A. Yes, he was on the deck and I pulled him down. There was a little bump.

Q. Right.

A. You know, otherwise he would have died of respiratory distress, because he couldn't move. He was definitely temporarily paralyzed from the legs down.

The Jersey City harbor guy didn't realize when he drove in, he tied it up, so during that moment in a split second, I mean this guy did it like a real naval seaman, he spun it and we got out of there.

Him and his partner were frantic. You could see the panic in him when we couldn't see anything in the harbor. All the dust was just covering our faces. My shirt was already gone, because I couldn't even breathe no more from the first collapse. I took it off. Just took my shirt off. It was -- couldn't do nothing for me any more.

I remember I went into the bathroom after I helped the fireman down. I went into the little bathroom cabin and it got full, full of smoke and the soot and what was on my mind then was I just thought, just prayed to God this wasn't chemical warfare also.

When I got to Jersey, like I said, I was throwing up black soot, chunks, chunks. The firemen hosed me down. By then I practically just had my pants tucked in my boots. Oh, man. I don't know what else to say.

Everybody at Day Tech was great. I mean they were there. They had tons of water, food, whatever you wanted. I was just devastated sitting there, watching you know, it just burn, dying. It was 10 o'clock in the morning and I was on the Jersey side and we're right there watching it burn, I just couldn't believe it.

Sat there for about two hours in shock till a guy came over to me and he don't know me, didn't -- you know, just gave me a hug. It was really a touching moment. He gave me a hug. I didn't expect. Just a lot of support on that side. Then we saw the F 16s coming and fly overhead and stuff like that. Then the Jersey City harbor police did a phenomenal job. Back and forth and we were assisting -- I was helping assist them.

We were all walking people also from -- as soon as they landed from the harbor patrol pier -- the plane, one piece there, helping people get off the boat until about 12:30, when a lady from the hospital came up to me and said you are crazy, you got to go to the hospital already. She said I seen you down here since you got here. You just don't stop. I said all right. I was like you know, I guess my adrenaline was wearing down now.

I finally went to the hospital and I saw Captain DeShore a few hours after and she had a burnt cornea, something was wrong. We just happened to see each other in line. I mean even at the hospital they were excellent. They treated us like we were -- any complaint. Each one by one, a specialist came over.

It was just one crazy day. I mean I kind of say it's all in a day's work, but that you will never forget. This is a time line in history.

Q. Yes.

A. We all have to endure.

Q. One last question. When you were on the Jersey side, aside from the people that you went over with, after that, the subsequent trips by Jersey harbor, do you remember anybody else from EMS or the Fire Department being brought over before you went to the hospital yourself?

A. Actually no. I don't recall seeing anybody that I particularly knew from EMS. The rest of it was none of our guys. It was other civilians from the area you know, the financial area, and some civilians made it. They were over by the water. After, it just kept going. It kept going back and forth. It was the only way to get out of there. I mean if I could have I would have swam right up the Hudson all the way to Co-op City where I live. I wanted to go home, but I got to say, what's this guy's name, from the Police Department, New Jersey, what do you call it, the chaplain, he arranged a charter bus for us to get home, me and Captain DeShore. We dropped off people throughout the boroughs, going back once. This was late at night already.

Then you know, we got a police escort. They were really good. I just thank God again for me living. It was a tremendous tragedy. That's about it Paul.

Q. Anything else you want to add?

A. No.

MR. RADENBERG: All right, thank you. Time is now 0916. The interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT-D CHRISTOPHER ATTANASIO

Interview Date: November 9, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today is November 8, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The time is now 0631 hours.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with --

A. Christopher Attanasio, EMT-D, 5303, Battalion 20, Division 2.

Q. This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 20 regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Christopher, start from when you were assigned to the job.

A. We signed on to the KDT approximately about 8:30. At approximately 8:48 or 8:50, the dispatcher came up and said I need whoever wants to go to the World Trade Center, I have something going on. Just switch to Citywide. So my partner and myself switched to Citywide with vehicle 85 and proceeded to go down to the World Trade Center.

We took the FDR Drive south. There was a lot of traffic on the drive going south. We decided to get off on 96 Street, which would cut across to 2nd Avenue and we took 2nd Avenue all the way down.

Upon arrival, towers one and two were both ablaze. The second plane had hit the second tower already. Both towers were totally engulfed. People were jumping out of the buildings. There was airplane fuselage and landing gear around the site. Body parts, victims' remains on the floor. There were some injuries on the street. Some cars were on fire.

I pulled over. I was directed to stage at Liberty and West, where I saw Captain DeShore, Chief Villani, my partner Roland Diaz, 03 John, Joey Fortez, and Mike Negron. Different agencies, voluntary agencies, ESU, Fire Department, Customs, Secret Service, Port Authority people, Hatzolah, and we were staging and Chief Villani had told us to get our equipment out of the vehicle because they were going to go into the first tower that was hit, because they were getting reports of casualties.

So we proceeded to the ambulance, put on our turnout gear, helmet and turnout coat, and as we were taking the equipment out of the ambulance, the second tower -- the second tower, started to come down. As the tower was coming down, we ran. I ran, I guess it was west to the West Side Highway. The tower came down. I grabbed my partner, we ran.

When the tower finally came down, there was a white cloud of smoke that hit us, knocked us to our feet. It was very hard to breathe. We inhaled a lot of white powder, whatever it was, dust, concrete, whatever it was.

After the building fell, I remember seeing Chief Pascale, her aide, her name is Immaculada, Gattas is her last name. I remember running with her. Total chaos from the scene. An ESU guy coming out covered from feet, head to toe, bleeding from his head. We treated him. People started just -- we were able to -- after the building fell we went back and rescued our ambulance. Vehicle 85, which had been struck with pieces of the building, had a broken left mirror, broken windshield, debris on it. We cleared it off.

We went back to where they were staging by Battery City and we went back, I went back to the tower that had come down, but a gentleman from OEM, who is a black male, that's all I remember, a very big black male, he had told us that his boss was in the building. We proceeded to go back to the tower that was already down and when we pulled up, we saw burnt vehicles, fire balls, smoke, debris, dust, bodies.

When we went in front of the tower, I remember a Chief saying on his bull horn, all Fire Department personnel, abandon your vehicles. I looked up, tower one was still burning, but tower two was already down. I told my partner Roland Diaz, and I had another paramedic in the back, Darnowski, Steve Darnowski, was in the back of vehicle 85. As we looked around, we saw nobody. It was a ghost town, everybody had left.

I put the vehicle in reverse, people started coming out of the woodwork. We had an injured firemen, we had a lady, a guy having a heart attack. We had another fireman with an avulsed face. We had some paraplegic lady that they had carried down, all the way down, and they left her on the street, but she wasn't injured. She just needed transportation out of the site.

We had a total of 13 patients in the back of the ambulance, ranging from cuts and burns and scrapes and bruises, to some lady having -- she was having an MI, blunt trauma, a lot of people with difficulty breathing, so we notified the dispatcher. I was 3 Ida that day, that we had injuries in front of tower two and asked for direction on what hospital to go to.

The dispatcher came back and replied take your patients to Columbia Presbyterian. I acknowledged and as I was leaving the site I picked up a rider, some gentleman that just wanted to get out of this. I put him in the front of the bus. As we are going up the highway, as we are going up 9 West or whatever you want to call it, the patient's condition started getting worse in the back, the fireman, he was really bleeding now, so we diverted him over to hospital 19, which is St. Clare's.

When we got there, we were met by several EMTs, who took very good care of us and took all the patients out. We restocked the bus and went back down to Ground Zero. We just went past Chelsea Piers. We had gotten a couple of more patients and took them to Beekman Hospital. Same thing, cuts, bruises, scrapes, respiratory problems.

After coming out of Beekman Hospital, we reported to the Chelsea Piers. Basically that's the best of my knowledge that I can remember.

Q. Okay. When you got down, coming down Second Avenue, when you got into the neighborhood of the Trade Center complex, do you remember what route you took to get to Liberty and West?

A. Right. I definitely went right by City Hall, right where J and R Records is, and I cut across. I was following another EMS ambulance who knew Manhattan, because he was zipping in and out, so I was just following him. I was directed when I came, I came all the way around, and I cut this way.

Q. Again, down Church and Liberty?

A. Church, and I guess I'm making a right on Liberty, and these are where the busses were, on this side.

Q. Liberty and Washington roughly and the West Side Highway?

A. Right, right.

Q. Do you remember what the number on the vehicle you were following by any chance?

A. No, I don't.

Q. There wasn't anybody following --

A. FDNY.

Q. But it wasn't from Battalion 20?

A. Negative.

Q. When you got to Liberty and West, you said you saw Captain DeShore. Chief Villani was down here?

A. Yes, he was.

Q. At the site?

A. Yes, he was.

Q. Do you remember seeing any other EMS personnel or officers down there?

A. Officers, no.

Q. Any fire personnel, Fire Department personnel that you recognized?

A. Joe Truocolla, he works 18 Charlie, tour 2. He got injured, I think he works out of Boston. 22. I'm not sure. Who else did I see down there. I can't remember.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't remember. I don't remember. Just my partner Roland Diaz, Joey Fortez I remember seeing. Mike Negron. Chief Pascale. Oh, Steve Pillar. I saw Steve Pillar too.

Q. He is the ALS coordinator?

A. Coordinator for Division 6.

Q. Okay. When tower number two started coming down, you said you ran west across the West Side Highway?

A. Right.

Q. Do you remember where you wound up in that area?

A. It was right before Battery City. It was right -- let's see -- I ran this way. We ran all the way. I couldn't tell you. I don't remember. I just -- it was -- I couldn't recognize anything, the wave of white. I couldn't see. I don't remember.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't remember.

Q. No problem. You said you had come back after the dust settled a little bit?

A. We went back to get the ambulance.

Q. To get your vehicle?

A. Right.

Q. Do you remember where you moved the vehicle to at that point?

A. The vehicles were staged on Liberty, so we went to West Street, where I picked up that gentleman I told you. We went back, because he said, he worked for OEM. I remember that much. I remember that. We went back and I don't, you know --

Q. You got out somewhere on to West Street, West Side Highway and then --

A. After getting the vehicles and going back to the downed tower and coming back I had proceeded north on West Street, on the West Side Highway. I know that's how I got to the hospital.

Q. Okay. Do you remember approximately when you came out of St. Clare's the first trip?

A. What time?

Q. Do you remember approximately or do you know at that point had the second tower --

A. Had fallen.

Q. Tower one had come down?

A. Tower one? To what I believe, I believe that while I was in the hospital, that's when the second tower fell. I wasn't there for the second tower. I had already picked up injuries from tower two, which was the first tower that fell. That's how I would have to believe it. Because I never saw the second tower fall. I never saw it. I only saw the first tower fall.

Q. When you came back from St. Clare's back down to the site, did you come down the West Side Highway?

A. I went all the way down the West Side Highway and I made a left. I just cut across and I was just following some emergency vehicles. I think it was ESU or Port Authority ESU, and I just went back and we just picked up some more patients. There were just patients everywhere.

Q. Do you remember where in the area you got to?

A. I think it was down as close as maybe Church and Rector, if that's possible. Maybe. We just -- we were getting flagged down by people and we were just piling them in the ambulance. There was no -- we weren't told. We were just coming back. As we were coming back down, I think I made a left and cut across somewhere, and we just started getting flagged by people walking that were covered in debris during the towers.

Q. Okay. Any thoughts or comments you would like to add?

A. Thoughts and comments? No, I was just -- I just -- you know. I have been through a lot of stuff in my own personal life, but I never seen anything like that. I am a Persian Gulf War veteran and I have never seen anything like this before in my life, and I still to this day can't believe it. I just can't believe it, that it happened. Basically that's all.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. Time is now 0644 hours. The interview is concluded. Thank you Chris. Point of correction. This interview is conducted November 9, Friday. The time is correct.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN MICHAEL DONOVAN

Interview Date: November 9, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CUNDARI: Today's date is November 9th, 2001. The time is 1350 hours. I'm George Cundari working with --

MS. QUEVEDO: Fabiola Quevedo.

MR. CUNDARI: -- from the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command.

CAPTAIN DONOVAN: Captain Michael Donovan. I'm presently assigned to Division 14. At the time of the incident, I was a lieutenant, Engine Company 290, assigned to operations.

Q. Captain, can you just tell us the events that happened going to that tragic day of September 11?

A. Yeah. On that morning I was assigned to operations. I was on the seventh floor of headquarters. We were writing a bulletin on accident prevention and apparatus accident prevention.

At the time that the first plane hit, we were in an office on the seventh floor.

Another lieutenant came in and said that a plane had hit the World Trade Center. So that would be at 8:48. We went to look out a window, and as we were walking one way down the hallway on the seventh floor, Chief of Department Ganci, Chief of Operations Nigro and Staff Chief Cassano were walking the other way. They were heading to their cars to respond to the World Trade Center.

They grabbed a couple of the officers, myself and Captain John Sudnik, and told them to come with the command staff and be assigned to the command post. They were looking for help in the way of aides, administrative aides.

We took the elevator down to the basement garage. We got into Chief Nigro's car, John Sudnik and I, along with Chief Nigro's driver. I think his name was Adam. We got in the car.

Quickly we were on the Brooklyn Bridge, left Metrotech down on the Brooklyn Bridge. We could see the north tower on fire. The wind appeared to be blowing south and west, blowing the wind eastward and north. It looked to me eight ten floors of fire, heavy black smoke. We tried to size up the building on the way across the bridge as to how you would approach this fire.

We came over the Brooklyn Bridge, down Park Row, made the turn onto Fulton Street, and then we parked on the corner of Church and Dey, I believe. I'm not completely sure on this. I have memory blanks. But we were on Church Street, either Dey or Courtlandt.

We parked on the corner. I asked the driver if he had -- being we were responding from headquarters, I had no firefighting gear. They went into the truck. I was hoping they had a spare set of gear. My only real thought was to get into the building one way or another, because I didn't want to be stuck at the command post. They had no gear.

We started to walk down Church Street in the direction of Liberty. We were at the corner of Liberty and Church just below Four World Trade Center when the second plane hit.

Q. So you saw the second plane coming in?

A. We heard the second plane. We couldn't see it because it was blocked by the buildings.

We were actually still on Church Street. We heard the plane briefly, the earth shook, the buildings shook, a tremendous fireball overhead. I thought there was a bomb or an explosion. A tremendous fireball, flaming debris, pieces of the airplane, fuselage, landing gear, pieces of the building.

People started running. We started running down one of the streets.

Q. You're still with Chief Nigro at this time?

A. No. Chief Nigro was in Chief Ganci's car. Captain Sudnik, myself and Chief Nigro's driver. We started running down one of the little side streets, Courtlandt or Dey. There were people dead in the street that obviously you couldn't help them. There was flaming debris coming down all over. It was just a matter of who got hit with the debris.

I made my way to Broadway, came back around the block. I knew I had to get to the command post. I knew I had to get firefighting gear. When I got back to Church Street, instead of heading to the south and across Liberty to West Street -- at that point we knew the post was being set up over on West Street. So rather than go south around the Trade Center complex, I went north up to Vesey Street.

On the way around, I saw a bunch of rigs hooked up to stand pipes. At the time they appeared to be abandoned. I didn't see chauffeurs, at least two rigs. I was able to get different gear. I was able to get bunker pants. I was able to get a mask. I managed to get a bunker coat at some point.

Q. Did you have a radio?

A. I got a radio a little later on. I got a CO meter, carbon monoxide meter.

When I got I believe over to the corner of West and Vesey, I saw a chauffeur. I think it was Engine 21, but I really don't remember. The rig was on the corner of West and Vesey. I told him I needed gear. He gave me some of his gear, with the idea that I would return it later on.

I saw a high rise unit, a Field Comm. unit, whatever it was. I was able to get a radio from there. So by the time I got to the command post -- I went under the pedestrian bridge, the north walkway bridge. At that point I had a full set of gear, a carbon monoxide detector, a radio and a mask.

I reported into the command post and asked to be put to work. At this point both buildings were burning. They were setting up a command post. Chief Ganci was there. I saw Chief Downey. I'm trying to think. At one point I saw I believe the Fire Commissioner.

Q. Was this the command post by the Winter Garden?

A. It was by the Winter Garden, right.

The command post was set up. There was underground parking garage, and there were two ramps leading down to the parking garage. There was a guard booth in front of the parking garage. The command post was set up in those ramps, in that area, directly in front of the entrances to the two parking garages.

Companies were starting to respond in. I remember seeing Eddie Geraghty, Chief Geraghty. I remember seeing a lot of other people. I asked to be put to work. I wanted to go in. Basically Chief Ganci told me he had other jobs for me.

Chief Cassano gave me a job to do. Chief Cassano was the first one -- and this was early in the operation. He said: "Mike, if these buildings come down, we're in a terrible spot. We're right under these buildings." He said: "What we've got to do is get one of these buildings, one of the World Financial Center buildings, open." He said: "Find me a building with a large lobby and a view of the World Trade Center, but we've got to move this command post." That was early on. That was one of the first jobs they gave me to do.

I found some building personnel. On the facade of the building it said Deloitte & Touche. I don't know which building that was. I kind of think it was Two World Trade Center, but I'm not sure. It said Deloitte & Touche on the face of the building.

I got a guard. It took some time for the guard to go around with the keys and open the lobby. In the meantime the jumpers started jumping. Companies were responding in. Finally the building personnel came around, opened the doors.

I went back to Chief Cassano and said: "Chief, I have a building. I have a building for you." Chief Cassano said: "Great. We're moving the command post."

We went over and spoke to Chief Ganci, who was heavily engaged in deploying men. Chief Ganci looked around. He saw that there were companies in the process of staging. He had, I would say, between 30 to 50, maybe 60 men there.

John Sudnik was organizing the engines in groups right in front of the parking garage entrance, trucks on the other ramp in front of the parking garage entrance.

Q. These are all face-to-face communications you're having?

A. Yeah. I talked to Chief Cassano. Chief Cassano went over and speak to Chief Ganci directly. Chief Ganci saw that there was no way we were going to be able to move the command post. There were just too many people. It just simply wasn't going to happen. He turned to Chief Cassano and said: "No, we're not going to be able to do this."

Chief Cassano turned to me and kind of shrugged like it was a good idea and it was something we should have done, but it just wasn't going to happen.

With that I looked for another job to do. I ran into a man who was in charge of all the building systems in the World Trade Center, and he was in the staging area, the command post area, with us.

He made the points to me that -- he was in a green shirt, fifty-ish. He made the points that if we were going to make an attack on this fire to actually fight the fire, there were certain building systems that had to be controlled.

He said that the high-pressure steam system would have to be shut down. That was at B6, basement level six or basement level two. He also said that we would have to do something with the eight track systems. He said he was capable of doing that from the basement of the World Trade Center.

I offered to do that job with him, to go into the basement with the radio, shut down the building systems. Somehow we got lost in the shuffle on that as far as -- that never happened.

With that I'm still trying to get into the building.

Q. You're still at the command post?

A. I'm still at the command post. I'm trying to get into the buildings, but I don't have a company with me.

I saw my friend Timmy Stackpole. I worked with Timmy for five years in 290 and 103. Timmy was driving with Dennis Cross, a chief from the Bedford Stuyvesant section. I asked Tim if he was going into the buildings. He said yes. Chief Cross was getting his orders. He was over at the command post. He said: "Mike, that's fine with me, just go ask Chief Cross, just let Chief Cross know."

I went over to Chief Cross, and he said: "I'd like to have you come with me," but he would have the nozzle if we went in. He made a little joke. With that he said: "Come on, we're going." He had just gotten his orders. He never really got to tell me what his orders were. I think later on I found out that he was going to Two World Trade Center, the south tower.

So with that we started walking off, and Chief Ganci called me back and said: "Mike, don't go with them. I have another job for you." And off Dennis Cross and Captain Stackpole went. Unfortunately they went to their deaths.

Chief Ganci gave me the job of monitoring all the radio transmissions in the south tower. Because the operation was so big, he needed people to listen. So he had me take my radio, go to Channel 3 and monitor all radio transmissions.

Q. Were you able to hear the transmissions on the radio at that time?

A. Briefly. I say only briefly because I had to get a list of all the companies operating in the south tower, and then I had to start writing down all the critical information, responding to when they called the command post.

That gives us automatic time frame thing, because I only did that for about two minutes when the south tower started to collapse. So I was standing at the guard booth in front of the parking garage monitoring radio transmissions.

Q. You were around the Winter Garden or Two World Trade Center?

A. Right, just south of the pedestrian bridge where the ramps for the parking garage is under the buildings. Whether it was the Winter Garden, Two World Trade Center, I'm not sure what building.

Q. Who was with you at that point?

A. At that point John Sudnik was there, Chief Cassano, Steve Mosiello, Chief Ganci and all the companies that were staging, all the companies that were lining up to go to work.

Anyway, with that I was listening, and there was an incredibly loud rumbling. I never got to look up. People started running for the entrances to the parking garages. They started running for the entrances. I started running without ever looking up.

The roar became tremendous. I fell on the way to the parking garages. Debris was starting to fall all around me. I got up, I got into the parking garages, was knocked down by the percussion. I thought there had been an explosion or a bomb that they had blown up there.

The Vista International Hotel was my first impression, that they had blown it up. I never got to see the World Trade Center coming down.

I got into the garage, knocked down, buried by the debris, buried in the dust, laying there in the parking garage about 40 feet in and just waiting for the roof of the parking garage to collapse on top of me.

I would say there were about 40 or 50 people in there with us, because all the people that were staging were there. After a minute or two, we all started to get up. We dug ourselves out of the dust and the debris. We thought we were buried alive in there because there was no light. There was no visibility. We thought that the entrances had been sealed and that we were buried alive.

Somebody said these are parking garages under a building. So we came to the conclusion that there had to be a stairway out, that there had to be an escape there. So we started searching for that. I called for a set of tools in case we found doors that had to be forced open.

Q. You still couldn't see down there; right?

A. You couldn't see anything. You could just barely make out a flashlight from about two feet away.

Somebody found a hallway. The hallway led to a staircase. The hallway was lit. Guys were fumbling around. This is all the staff chiefs and everything and all the companies staging, fumbling around all parts of the garage.

I had the mask, I had the CO meter, so I was able to take hits from the mask. I could see that the CO readings were relatively low. They were only 34 parts per million. I decided I would stay there and lead as many people out as long as I could stand it rather than have them bumping around in the dark and the dust. So I had the advantage of having a mask and CO meter. I led out I would say 20 or 30 people.

Q. So you were communicating with the people in the garage?

A. I was yelling in: "I have a way out. This is the way out." I would say 20 or 30 people came by me.

When I thought we had gotten everybody out, I went up the stairs. Somehow we ended up on Vesey Street. I don't know how that quite worked out. We were on the corner of Vesey and West. I headed back to where the command post had been under the pedestrian north walkway bridge. It was still standing at that time.

I went back to where the command post was to find a deserted stage and all the debris. I could see that the parking garage entrances hadn't been completely sealed. It was just that the dust was so thick. We could have walked out the way we walked in. It was so dark that you thought you couldn't go out that way.

I got back. Nobody was there. It was in complete disarray. There was no command board. There was really nothing there.

Shortly thereafter Steve Mosiello, who was Chief Ganci's executive assistant, came to me and said they couldn't find Pete. They couldn't find Chief Ganci, and they had to go back in the parking garage to look for him.

So I started back in the parking garage to look for Chief Ganci. He was on his way out as I was coming in. Chief Ganci was on his way out. He was very disoriented. I brought him over to Steve Mosiello.

Chief Ganci made a remark that we had to move the command post north and we're in a bad place because that was the south tower that came down. After the north tower came down, we were almost directly under it.

Q. So you knew the south tower came down? You knew it collapsed?

A. No, you couldn't see it. I thought the Millennium Hotel had been blown up. In fact, it took me a long time before I could accept the fact that even after you could see that the tower wasn't there you said it had to be there somewhere. You couldn't believe that it had come down.

So Chief Ganci made the remark we're moving the command post north. Almost immediately everybody that had come back to that place had started north to West and Vesey. When we got to West and Vesey, there was a tall blonde hair -- I believe was a chief. I don't know who he was. He said we were re-forming down by the river. We were going to re-form -- we were going to walk west on Vesey Street and regroup by the river.

Q. North End Street?

A. Yes.

Q. North End and you go to the river there.

A. With that we started walking down towards the river. When we got all the way down to the end of Vesey Street, there was really nobody there. There were none of the command chiefs there.

We turned around, started walking back, got about halfway between West Street and North End. So it was between three and four. That's when the north tower came down.

Q. Who was with you at that point?

A. At that point I think there was Jimmy McMahon -- he was a captain also -- and John Sudnik, but basically we were straggling along.

Again, I was able to duck into a doorway. The dust cloud, the debris, came past us.

Q. Is that the same thing, the rumbling?

A. Yeah, the whole thing.

Then after that, after it settled a little bit, I made my way back. I was trying to go back to where the command post had been. When I got back to West Street, I saw that the devastation was incredible. The north pedestrian bridge, the north walkway bridge, was down. There was a tremendous amount of debris on West Street. You couldn't even make out that West Street was a street.

The strangest thing was that area south of Vesey Street between the pedestrian bridge and Vesey Street, that area was completely deserted. There was heavy dust in the area. It was like after a blizzard when there's nobody out and everything is very quiet and you can't really see. The visibility isn't good.

Q. You really didn't see any civilians going by?

A. There was nobody. There was nobody. It was like Hiroshima after the bomb, not that I know what Hiroshima was, but just a eerie stillness. There was nobody. I said I have to start searching this area.

I saw one guy from 41 Engine, and he said we have to start searching this area. He was as disoriented as I was. The two of us, we went into what I believe was Three World Financial Center. All the windows were broken. We went in and we started searching in there. We didn't find anyone.

Then he went off one way, and I continued searching the street area on West Street from just south of Vesey to the pedestrian bridge. I searched there for, I would say, 20 minutes to half an hour, and I didn't see anyone. I found a lot of masks and equipment all laying on the ground. Rigs were buried; rigs were destroyed. Cars were on fire. Buildings were on fire.

I searched there by myself for about 20 minutes, half hour. Then a couple cops started showing up, and then a couple of photographers started showing up.

Q. Were you able to do any radio transmissions or was any radio transmissioning you or did you hear anything on the radio?

A. No, I didn't. I really didn't. I think something happened on my way there because it never worked properly after that. I would get certain transmissions. I had been on Channel 3. Channel 3 was the south tower. I think most of those guys were dead, the guys that were on the same channel with me. I never thought to turn it back on until later on. The radio never really worked well again after that.

I searched there for a long while. Then I saw Patty McNally show up. I saw Chief Cruthers and another chief. Chief McNally was running the operation at West and Vesey. What struck me about Chief McNally was he was the only one that seemed to really have his head on straight.

Chief Cruthers told me that they had formed another command post up on Chambers Street. At this point there were a couple of floors burning on Seven World Trade Center. Chief McNally wanted to try and put that fire out, and he was trying to coordinate with the command post up on Chambers Street. This is after searching for a while.

He had me running back and forth trying to get companies to go into Seven World Trade Center. His radio didn't seem to be working right either because he had me relaying information back and forth and Chief Cruthers had me --

Q. So everything was face-to-face? Nothing was by radio?

A. Yeah, and it was really in disarray. It really was in complete disarray. We never really got an operation going at Seven World Trade Center.

Then at some point after that -- a bunch of things happened after that. I just can't remember what happened. I ran into people that I knew that were missing, knew that they had family in there. I saw Jimmy Boyle briefly. I saw Mike Hampton from 290 whose son was lost, Jimmy Richards. I started doing different errands like that.

Then later on I had a chief ask me -- they found Pete Ganci's body, and they had me go out in the ambulance with his body. They didn't want any photographers. Chief McCann, who might be good to talk to too, he and I guarded the ambulance so that none of these photographers would take a picture of the chief of department's body in the ambulance. We did that for a long time because they weren't going to take him to the morgue until they had gotten Commissioner Feehan's body out. So we guarded the ambulance for a long time.

Then after that I tried stretching hose lines. I hooked up with a friend of mine from 54 Engine and tried to stretch hose into the pile so that we could protect guys that were searching the pile for survivors.

Then about 10:00 at night I went home. I had to go home and see my kids.

Q. At no time you called home or anything?

A. What happened was when I was searching this area and the photographers, I remember the cops telling the photographers they had to leave the area. I offered to escort them out of the area, with the idea that I knew they'd have a cell phone on them, the photographers.

The one photographer tried to place a call for me and couldn't get a signal out and then took my number on her arm and called from wherever later on and told my wife -- I guess about 11 or 12:00 she told my wife I was alive. I was able to call later in the day at different points.

As bad as the destruction was here, it was ten times as bad like south of the pedestrian bridge. When they talked about ground zero, I always thought they were talking about this specific spot because this was just the absolute worst.

And that was it.

MR. CUNDARI: Any questions?

MS. QUEVEDO: No.

MR. CUNDARI: Thank you for having this interview with us.

CAPTAIN DONOVAN: Okay. Good luck. Pretty overwhelming; right?

MR. CUNDARI: It's 2418. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

SUPERVISING FIRE MARSHAL ROBERT BYRNES

Interview Date: November 14, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. CUNDARI: Today's date is November 14, 2001. The time is 1320 hours. I'm George Cundari. I'm here with Murray Murad, Fire Department, City of New York. We are conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command.

A. Robert Byrnes, B-y-r-n-e-s. I'm the Supervising Fire Marshal and I'm assigned to the Bureau of Fire Investigations Special Operations Command.

Q. Sir, can you tell us the events of that tragic day of September 11th?

A. Okay. Originally I was scheduled to have a vacation day. I happened to be in the area. I am assigned a beeper from Skytel which gives information regarding the job. I got a beep in my personal vehicle that there was a plane crash into the World Trade Center.

I happened to be on I think the intersection was Bedford and Flushing. I thought that somebody was actually playing a joke because you can type individual messages in here. I said you got to be kidding me, right? I happened to look up in the sky and I saw a plume of smoke crossing I guess it would be south, away from Manhattan.

I immediately rushed to my office. I went upstairs to the fourth floor, my offices. The phone was ringing off the hook. My boss was on the phone. He said, Bobby, can you get over here right away? We've got a plane crash.

I looked out the window. I could see the smoke blowing off the World Trade Center. Several moments later I noticed a second plane and I commented to myself, look at this nitwit, he's so close, and before I realized it, he had crashed into the side of the south tower.

At that time I ran downstairs. I grabbed some fire gear. I got a department vehicle and I responded with Mike Kane, who was my tech services guy, and Michael Starace, who is another Fire Marshal who works in my command.

We got to the location. We came over the Brooklyn Bridge and went south on the FDR. We came up West Street and we parked just outside the entrance to the Battery Tunnel. I'm not sure of the name of the street, but we pulled the car in right behind the building. From that point we started to walk up to the command post where Assistant Chief Fire Marshal McCahey was. On the way up there I noticed parts of bodies, legs and feet with shoes on, and I realized that this was more than just a small aircraft that hit these buildings.

I checked in at the command post at that time and decided to go back to the vehicle with Fire Marshal Kane. He wanted to get a camera. I also wanted to get my blue windbreaker which identified me as a Supervising Fire Marshal. We walked back to the vehicle which was parked on West Street and whatever street is just outside the Battery Tunnel.

Q. Trinity?

A. It may be Trinity.

Q. Trinity Place?

A. Right at West and Trinity.

I grabbed my jacket. Mike Kane got the camera. We started walking back north on West Street towards the original location, which was right under this pedestrian bridge in front of the World Financial Center.

As we were walking up there, I was around between Albany and I thought it was Carlisle or Cedar. We were right in the middle of the street and I happened to be looking up at tower number two and thinking to myself, how are they ever going to put this fire out? It's probably just going to be a rescue operation until the fire burns itself out.

As I'm looking up at the building, I hear a loud noise and I see the south side of the building collapse. I see the south upper third of the tower start to pitch in my direction. At that point I yelled to Mike Kane, Mike, it's coming down. I turned around and I ran south on West Street.

I actually ran towards the building line so that I could get adjacent to the building because I figured it would protect me from any falling debris because in my mind I thought the building was actually toppling. I didn't realize that it actually tilted and then came down straight. My perception was it was toppling southward.

Q. So you ran south you said?

A. I ran south on West, but I ran adjacent to the buildings figuring it would protect me from any falling debris that may come this direction.

Q. This is the south tower collapsing, so the first collapse?

A. Right.

I ran until I could no longer see and I had to slow my pace down. The cloud of smoke and the debris was coming around me. There was a lot of dust. There were little pieces of debris coming down that were bouncing around me, glass, small pieces of concrete. Nothing hit me.

I don't know how far I went, but I was able to find a bus. I got into the bus and we were able to breathe in the bus because the bus had fresh air. There were several civilians in the bus. There were two or three windows that were open in the bus as well as the ceiling vents. I remember walking through the bus closing the windows and pulling down the ceiling vents. I got back to the front of the bus and the bus driver asked me, should I start the bus and try to drive away? I told him, no, don't start the bus. Let's just stay put and hope for the best.

I stayed in there until it got dark. You couldn't see. It was pretty dark in there. A few moments later it lightened up. At that point I came out of the bus and I started to walk back up on West Street. As I'm walking back on West Street I'm thinking to myself that I'm going to see the bottom two-thirds of the building still standing there. I'm thinking that just the top third came off. But you couldn't see up because the cloud of dust was still there.

As I'm walking back up West Street, I'm seeing lots of papers. There had to be maybe several inches of debris in the street, like dust and powder, a couple little fires I saw burning, like papers and stuff burning. I hear a rumbling again. I realize that this is the other tower coming down. At this time I turn around and I make my way back down West Street. I wind up down in Battery Park, where I ran into I believe it was Dr. Prezant.

I had my Fire Marshal 800-megahertz radio. I was trying to reach out to people. There were no communications. I could hear some radio transmissions between the Fire Marshals, but for some reason I couldn't transmit. I think my battery had gone low by this point.

Myself and Dr. Prezant were down by Battery Park at this point. There were several firefighters and several other Marshals around. There was a mobile command post there. I went and I spoke to the communications worker and I asked him what's going on up there? He says, absolutely nothing, and I have no communications going on. I'm getting no feedback.

I was able to change my battery at this point in time. He had some spare batteries. I was with Dr. Prezant and he and I basically tried to get that mobile command post to move further away because we didn't know what else was going to transpire. We didn't know if there was still going to be additional attacks or anything.

There was a police -- not a scooter but one of these little I call them cop-in-a-box. Those little square boxes. It was right in the road where we were trying to get the mobile command post to move down further into Battery Park. Me and several civilians tried to lift this little cop-in-a-box out of the way and it was much heavier than we thought. We could only move it several feet and it dropped to the ground again. It was locked and the keys were locked in it. There was no police officer around.

Pretty much that's it. At this time I was able to reach out to some other Marshals and we decided to mobilize down at Battery Park and from there draw a battle plan. Pretty much that's it.

Later on we made our way up north to I believe it was Manhattan Community College and we established a command post up there.

Q. Your original command post that you went to, who was there?

A. Originally, I went to Assistant Chief McCahey, there were several Fire Marshals, I don't remember specifically who. Fire Marshal Kane and Starace were with me at that point. When I returned to the car, it was only myself and Fire Marshal Kane.

Q. And then you saw a lot of victims coming down the street?

A. Well, there were a lot of people coming down the street. I mean, when I ran, I wasn't really looking behind me. There were other people in the street, and I basically ran until I couldn't run any more or I couldn't see to run. Then I got into a bus and I was able to breathe. Actually, that helped us breathe and get some fresh air for a period of time while most of the debris came down. Fortunately, nothing large came down in that area and nothing large hit the bus.

Q. After the first collapse, did you hear firefighters around you or paramedics?

A. I was in the bus. After the first collapse, I made my way down West Street. I couldn't tell you if there were other firefighters. I was basically running south on West Street. When I got into the bus, there were no other firefighting personnel on the bus. It was myself and maybe four or five civilians as well as the bus driver.

Q. So it was very quiet around you after the collapse?

A. Well, there were people coming down. Some people were running past the bus. Other people got on the bus. Then you couldn't see outside the bus because it got to the point where it was just really dark and you couldn't see what was going on outside, and we basically weathered the storm in there until it got brighter again.

Q. When you switched batteries to the 800 radio, was there any improvement in communications?

A. I was able to transmit at that point. If I remember, it was intermittently. There was a lot of radio traffic. People were stepping on one another. When I talk about the 800-megahertz radio, that's specifically for the BFI. That's not for the field units on that frequency.

Q. I just want to check. It was Mike Kane that was with you?

A. Yes.

Q. And who was the other Fire Marshal?

A. Mire Starace.

Q. How does Mike spell his last name?

A. S-t-a-r-a-c-e.

MR. MURAD: That's it.

MR. CUNDARI: I'd like to thank you for coming and conducting this interview with us. At this time it's 1330 hours. This is the end of the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF MEDICAL OFFICER KERRY KELLY

Interview Date: November 15, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MS. ROM: Today's date is Thursday, November 15, 2001. The time now is 1630 hours. This is Patricia Rom of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm here to conduct a World Trade Center interview. I'm conducting the interview with the following individual: Dr. Kerry Kelly, Chief Medical Officer assigned to the Fire Department of the City of New York.

Q. What we'd like to do, if you can tell us when you first learned about the World Trade Center disaster and then describe the events afterwards therefrom.

A. I was at Staten Island University Hospital making rounds on my patients and I got on my beeper that an airplane had crashed into the World Trade Center. I was in the room with a lady by the name of Mrs. Murray. When I saw the beep, I thought, oh, this is going to be bad. I didn't want to frighten her, though. So I just said, oh, all right. Have a good day. I've got to go. Then her neighbor in the room said, oh, my God, a plane hit the Trade Center. And she said, oh, my goodness, my sons are firefighters. I said, oh, they'll be okay. Don't worry. They'll be fine. I said have a good day, and then I left the hospital right away and jumped into my car and headed for Manhattan. I made great time getting in because I had the emergency lane. So I got in and through the tunnel, I would say, before 9:30 in the morning.

As I came up West Street, I went and turned left on Albany Street and I found a place to park. I was so happy that I got a place to park. So I got out of the car and I looked back, and on West Street there was this molten car there that had just been burnt and was just sitting there. I thought, oh, my goodness, this is bad. These cars are just being destroyed.

A fire captain came up to me, Captain Hank Cerasoli, and he said you've got to take care of yourself. He said there's stuff falling down here. Where's your helmet? I said I have my turnout coat, which I put on, but I can't find my helmet in the car. So he said, well, we'll go over to Ladder 10, they're right around the corner, and we'll get you a helmet. So I said okay.

So we walked up by West Street and Liberty Street, and as we walked along Liberty Street there, it was just awful. I mean, people were coming out windows and there were just body parts all over on the ground and it was just a horrible scene. You could see the smoke billowing out of the tower.

I don't think I was really aware at that point, because I hadn't checked my beeper again, that both towers were on fire and that there were two plane crashes. I only knew about the one plane crash. I didn't realize that there was more than one tower on fire. I really wasn't looking at it and I wasn't sure which tower was which.

So I went into the firehouse with him and there were civilians there who had been injured who were sitting there looking dazed. I talked to the captain there and said I've got to go to the command center. Normally my job is to take care of injured firefighters, and I would normally go to the command center to find the injured firefighters and direct where they should go or do some immediate treatment. So I said where is the command center? They said I think they're moving out of the towers.

I couldn't get through on my phone, so I tried to use the walkie-talkie part of my phone, the Nextel phone, and I was able to get ahold of Commissioner Tierney. I said to her where are you? I said I'm here at 10 and 10 and I need to find the command center. She said, well, we're leaving the tower and we're going across the street to the World Financial Center. So I said all right. I'll meet you over there.

As we were leaving the building, and I had my helmet, we walked to the back of the firehouse. The captain said you can just go up there by the civilian bridge, and I thought, I don't want to go back on that road because I knew all the bodies were coming down and there were body parts and I thought this is too dangerous. As I came out of the back of the building, the television was on and they mentioned the Pentagon being hit, and that's when I realized that this was a terrorist attack.

So we crossed through a building and ended up on West Street again, and as we came out on West Street --

Q. "We" meaning?

A. The captain and I. The captain had stayed with me the whole time.

As we came out, some of the firefighters recognized me and they said, doc, come over here. There's a guy injured. I went over and it was Danny Suhr, and he had been hit on the head and his whole head and skull had been sort of crushed and he was bleeding profusely.

So we got him onto the ambulance and we started to do resuscitation of him. And he clearly wasn't doing very well. So I said all right, let's get the ambulance going. Just get him right to the hospital. There's nothing more we can do right here. Let's get him to the hospital. Some of the firefighters said are you going to come? I said no, I've got to go to the command center. I said a few of you go with him, but get him to the hospital.

So I got out of the ambulance and continued to cross the street, and I was crossing the street then, so I'm now on West Street between, I guess, right around Cedar street there. As I crossed West Street and came up, it's like a little grassy-type hill, I see what looks like the command center to my left with the white table with a few of the guys there, and I end up seeing a patient of mine. I said I'm looking for the command center. I said what are you doing here? He said you'd better watch out. You're going to get hurt. He said take care of yourself or whatever.

Then I could see people start to run, and the captain says come on. The building is falling. I said what building is falling? And I looked back and I could see sort of the top of the building and it looked like there's a lot more smoke.

So we stood in the facade of 1 World Financial Center. There's like a little, tiny facade there and he pushes me in, and the two of us are like hugging each other. I pulled my helmet down and my coat up, and I just thought I was going to die. I mean, everything started coming down and it turned black and there was just this noise of everything coming down. I was pretty closed in, and the back of my left leg was, I guess, a little exposed, so I could feel stuff hitting the back of my leg. I just thought, I'm going to die. I thought this is it.

You just sort of waited to die. You think of things like Timmy Stackpole always used to say 40 and out to get out of the job, and a lot of people would leave after 20 years. I would think that's not the right attitude. You should stay. And I thought, I have 20 years. What am I doing here? Then I thought, no one even knows I'm here. This is so strange.

Then it just seemed like, as each sort of second or moment passed, I kept thinking, well, I'm not dead yet, I'm not dead yet, I'm not dead yet, and then there was silence and it finally stopped falling. But it was pitch black and there was all this stuff in the air, and I thought, oh, now we're probably buried. This will be the final thing. You'll survive but you'll be trapped.

Then we waited a few minutes and waited a few minutes, and then it got a little bit lighter, so you could see that you could at least put your foot out. So we went out and there was a thick layer of debris. Again, it's still pitch black and the air is just thick with paper and materials and you cannot see more than a foot or two ahead of you, and we're just covered with all of the stuff.

Then the captain says we have to find Gerard and Chris. These were the two firefighters who had been with us. He said we have to find them. We have to make sure we find them. I said we still have to find the command center. So we headed off and he's calling Gerard and Chris and we're walking along. Again, it's like going through a snowstorm, and I have sandals on, so my feet are like I just can't walk in these sandals.

So as we come around Albany I said, look, I've got to --

Q. Did you see any people around at that point?

A. No. Because you could only see like a foot or two ahead. You hear maybe some muffled sounds, but it's a really silent kind of feeling, like after a snowstorm. But you know how in a snowstorm everything is illuminated and bright? This is a snowstorm where everything is black and dark, so it made it extra dark. I mean, you would think it was the middle of the night in the middle of a blizzard, and it's still going on, because the air is just so thick with material and papers.

As we're walking, I said I've got to go to my car. I have got to get sneakers. I cannot walk in these things. So I see my car there, which is covered with stuff, and I pull open the car. The captain says we've got to find Gerard and Chris. I said don't worry. We will find Gerard and Chris, but I cannot walk in these sandals.

I have now a blue shift dress on. So I said I have just survived death. I'm just changing on the street. I've had it. So I put on shorts and a top, I put on my sneakers, and I put my coat back on and my helmet, and I said okay. I think I got rid of my pocketbook at that time. I can't even remember.

Q. Where was the last place that you saw Gerard and Chris?

A. They were just ahead of us as we started running. So they must have made it further around the side of the building.

We now see someone on the street who is injured and someone says we need help. So we take this person and we help carry him around, and there's like a parking garage on Albany. It's right off of West Street on Albany. There's a parking garage right here, I guess, right in here.

So we put this person in the garage to at least be out of the debris and everything, and he is bleeding and he's complaining about his abdomen. He's complaining about his right lower abdomen, and it looks like part of his finger has been sort of sliced off, and he's really complaining. I said we've got to get him some help because he might have some sort of an injury to his abdominal cavity, a perforation or something, so we've got to get him some help. Let's put him here until we can find some help.

Then there's another guy who comes around who is bleeding from his head. So we put him in there, too, and we said sit down, and I think we got some water. One of the guys, Mike Sheppard, takes off his shirt and he dipped that in water and we put that on the guy's head for the bleeding, and we had the other guy lay down. We were able to find sort of a -- it wasn't a gurney exactly.

Q. Mike Sheppard came from where?

A. He just sort of came. He was there.

Q. Is he a firefighter?

A. He's a firefighter. He's a firefighter who was off duty. He came in to help out.

So we then said we needed supplies. We needed to see if we could find an ambulance to help transport this guy because I knew he had to go to the hospital. So I come out on the street again. Now, again, I'm on Albany Street.

Oh, I saw Chief Lakiotes around that time, too. I think when I was changing I ran into Chief Lakiotes. He was looking around for people.

Now, across the street I could see people coming out of like a garage underneath the World Trade Center, but I couldn't make out who they were because I could just see forms in the distance.

So we go into this office building, again, that's off of Albany to get supplies because there's a dental office there. So I go in there to see if we can get some supplies thinking they might have bandages or something to help this guy, and the place was locked up. So we come out again onto Albany Street and we're walking.

Now we're on Albany by Washington Street and all of a sudden there's like another loud noise, and Mike Sheppard says something about the building falling and he drags me in, I mean, pulls me in to a revolving door, and a bunch of other firefighters jump in there, too. So now there's about eight us of in the lobby of this building, and you hear the whoosh of everything going by the street, and the second building has now collapsed. But, again, you don't really realize that's what it is. You just know another building has fallen.

Again, more black stuff coming down the street and visibility is bad or whatever, and we are now in the lobby and there's no electricity. So it's pitch black in the lobby and you can't see outside because everything is pitch black. So we open up a door and we find all these civilians that are like hidden away in like a stairway of the basement, and we're looking for lights or flashlights. We can't find anything. Still no supplies. So I go out again in the building and the captain is there, and he says where were you? I was worried. I lost sight of you. I said, no, I'm okay. I said Mike here helped me.

So we're now able to go around, and now you're like so jittery because you're saying what is going to happen next? How many more things are going to fall here? We were able to get an ambulance. So we were able to go over, and I don't know if we got a gurney. What did we get? We went over and got what was almost like a coat rack on wheels. We went over and got him on that and moved him over to this ambulance. We then got this guy whose name was Kevin Shea. This is a firefighter who has been injured. I remember the name because at the last World Trade Center, one of the men who was severely injured and ended up retiring from it was Kevin Shea. The name of the gentleman or the firefighter with the scalp and head injury I can't remember at this point. But we get him on the ambulance and then we close the door of the ambulance, and now we start heading over toward the river.

As we head over to the river, it's amazing. It's like light. You can see that it's daytime and you realize that it is still a blue sky. We walk over by the river and now the police boats are coming up, and the same ambulance that we put the guy on has turned around and is now going to unload the same people we put on, this Kevin Shea and the other guy. So now we help with the gurney and get them on the police boat to put them on.

I said where are you taking the guys? He said we're taking them over to a staging area, I think they said on Ellis Island, and I thought to myself, they're attacking our country. The next thing they're going to do is attack the Statue of Liberty. How can we send people over so near what could be the next target? But they were taking them off.

So we walked down by the river. As we walked down by the river, I came by the Brooklyn Battery area. I asked several people, I said, do you know where the command center is? Do you know where the command center is? No one knew anything and nothing was working. My radio and my phone weren't working. I had nothing on my beeper. So I didn't know what was going on.

So I go to the Brooklyn Battery, the park there, and I see Chief Nigro, who I was so happy to see, and I saw Dr. Prezant, who I was so happy to see, and I saw this Fire Marshal, a Supervising Fire Marshal. I'm trying to think of his name. Brown hair, tall. What is his name? I remember his wife's name.

Q. Brown hair, tall.

A. McCahey.

Now, there is an operations command center there, but none of their phones are working. There's no communication now. So we said we've got to go back up to the World Trade Center area to find the command center. So we head up, a group of us.

Q. Who is with you at this point?

A. Chief Nigro, myself, Dr. Prezant. I think McCahey was with us. He had a few aides with him, Chief Nigro. And it just felt like we were the last survivors because there was like no one around. As you head back up, you've left the daylight and you're heading back up to this dark area again because it's still pitch black up there.

As we're heading our way back up, most of the other people are kind of leaving the area, the few people that you see, the civilians, and you still can't make out anyone's features. They're covered with the white and the chalky material. My eyes, everything is just burning and you're still choking and I just could not see. My eyes were so irritated.

So we get to a flower shop that's there, which is open for business like nothing has happened. It was one of those Korean grocery things and they're putting everything out like business as usual, and I'm thinking are these people crazy? So I took their hose and I'm like hosing down my face and my head just to get free of all the debris.

Now, as we walked our way up, there is a little hardware store that says phone calls and bathrooms. We said we've got to go to the bathroom and we've got to use the phone. So we went in and I was able to call my mother and say I'm okay, I'm alive. Tell my husband. Tell the kids I'm alive. Tell Dr. Prezant's wife. We gave her the number. You know, we survived, we're okay.

So then we headed back up. They now have a new command center set up right below City Hall Park on Broadway. Chief Haring is there and he is bringing the new troops in to go back into the World Trade area. There is a Duane Reade right there that we took over and made a triage center. So we were able to sort of take over that place. There was a little smashing of windows and stuff, doors. But we were able to put together supplies to set up a triage center in that building.

Then the other medical officers showed up. Dr. Ortiz was there and Dr. Feirstein showed up and Dr. Maloney was there and Dr. Garvey was there, who are our medical officers, plus other doctors who we didn't know showed up and some nurses and all. So we were setting up equipment in the Duane Reade and the neighboring area thinking all the injured would come in.

Then someone came over and told me that Father Judge was dead and that he had been brought into the church right around the corner. I guess it's St. Paul's or St. Peter's right around the corner there. They said that he's on the alter there of the church.

So a few minutes later some of the friars from his rectory came because they want to now remove his body. I said I don't know if you should be removing it right now because he's in a safe place where he is and I don't have available gurneys because I'm expecting all these injured to come. And, of course, no one came. We didn't really get any injuries. We got a few eye irritations but really no injuries, and we're still expecting injuries to come from the field.

When you'd walk outside, you'd see faces that you knew of different firefighters who were coming in from home or other units arriving and they were pulling people together, and you were just so struck, too, by the lack of communication. In order to talk to people, they would have to send someone, you know, give them a message and say now go run over there, tell them, and then come back with the message. So it was like this primitive means of communicating. Then we heard that this Duane Reade was a problem. It was an unsafe area.

Oh, I know. We realized at this point, when we're in the Duane Reade, that this was actually the building of the UFOA, the union building. So one of the girls came down and said do you need to use a bathroom. So we went upstairs and got cleaned up a little bit and told the people who were there what had happened and then went back down.

Then we had to move because the Duane Reade, they said, wasn't safe because building 7 was really roaring. So we then found a new triage center over in Pace. We went into the Pace auditorium and took that over and set up a new triage center there. We were there most of the day and, again, there were no injuries coming in. Very few. Eye irritations. So about 9:00 o'clock at night, maybe 10:00, we decided it was silly to keep the place open.

In the meantime, people are starting to arrive telling us about who had died. We found out about Chief Feehan dying and Chief Ganci dying, and we were starting to understand that more and more people were missing and presumed dead. So there was really the feeling of sadness. That's why we weren't getting any injuries because people were essentially dead.

Q. Did you see Chief Ganci or Chief Feehan while you were on the scene at all?

A. No. I had not seen them.

Oh, I know. I saw Steve Gregory. Commissioner Gregory was there. He helped us out in the garage. I was happy to see him because he was a familiar face, too.

It was funny. It was just, when you saw people you knew, you were so happy they were alive. There really was a sense, when you saw people, of thank God, they're alive. There was a feeling of happiness that, you know, I felt very happy to be alive.

Q. And Gerard and Chris?

A. Oh, we found them and they were fine. That was good.

Q. Where did you find them?

A. Somewhere along that street, I believe. I know. When we were over by the river, we found them over by there, if I'm not mistaken. We were putting people on the ambulance.

The captain was one of the people who went back up with us to the command center, too. He really was great. He stayed by me, by my side, and then throughout the day he would come back and check on me to see that I was okay. He also helped out Dr. Manner. The orthopedist had come to help out and he made sure she was okay. He checked on her.

We were just so lucky to see people that we knew and that took care of us. I can't complain. I'm lucky to be here.

Q. The command center that you thought you saw when you were first on the scene, where did you say that was and what did it look like? Was there anybody that you could make out who was there?

A. Let's see. It was in front of this 1 World Financial building, and there was like a big, green fence, and it was in front of a green fence. I mean, the command center, it's like a card table sort of.

Not really. But it's a card table with a white board like that and then on the board they put the different companies that are there.

So I think Steve Gregory was at that command center, and I think he's one of the people that I saw out of the corner of my eye prior to everything falling, and he's certainly the person I saw after. Chief Lakiotes might have been at that command center, too. I don't know. But those are the two that I saw after the event. I think that was the command center for tower 2. I never found the 1 World Trade Center command center.

When you go to these events, you don't even know which World Trade Center is which. I didn't really know that the two planes had hit both buildings.

Q. You said you had a radio at some point. What was that radio you were using when you were able to get through to Commissioner Tierney?

A. Well, I have a phone. I have a Nextel phone, and one part of it is a regular phone and there's another part that's a walkie-talkie. I'm always terrible at technology, so I usually never use the walkie-talkie because I've never quite mastered it. That day I was desperate because I couldn't get the phones to work, so I got the walkie-talkie to work. For once it worked and I got hold of Lynn Tierney and she answered back to me that she was there and where she was. So it helped me at least know to go across West Street.

But when I heard World Financial Center, again, I didn't realize there was a 1 and a 2 World Financial Center. So I was heading across the street and ended up at 1 World Financial Center, and I gather she was up by 2 World Financial Center.

Q. During your time there, did you notice where fire apparatus vehicles were or where anybody was lined up?

A. Well, I knew on West Street there were a lot of ambulances around there and I saw fire engines there, but I don't really notice those numbers too much. I just know when I saw that first car that was just molten, I thought, oh, my God, if something happens to this car, I am in big trouble. This was a brand-new Department car and I kept thinking they're going to kill me if something happens to this car.

Q. This car you saw was a private vehicle, the car?

A. You couldn't tell.

Q. You couldn't tell?

A. You absolutely couldn't tell. But it was sort of like that was the first sign that this was not an ordinary day. When you look across and see this car and your mind goes from great parking spot to, oh, my goodness.

Then I think seeing the bodies and seeing people coming out of the buildings, that was really one of the worst parts, at least visual-wise, that was one of the worst parts of the day. Then the feeling that you were going to die was a terrible part of the day. But then once that had happened, everything was so covered over that you really couldn't see anything after that. Your vision was so limited. It really was like a winter snowstorm. That's how it felt. It was as though all the weather and all the summer, everything was shut off, and it was suddenly a snowstorm blanketing all of Manhattan, only a black snowstorm. It really was.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to include as part of this interview?

A. No.

Q. I think you summed it up.

A. I probably did more talking than I should have.

MS. ROM: All right, then. I'd like to thank you for your time.

THE WITNESS: Thank you. This is wonderful.

MS. ROM: Thank you for taking the time to do this. I'm going to conclude this interview. The time is now 1700 hours. It's still Thursday, November 15, 2001.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF STEPHEN KING

Interview Date: November 21, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. McCOURT: The date is November 21st, 2001. The time is 1142 hours. My name is Tom McCourt from the New York City Fire Department. I am with --

MR. MURAD: Murray Murad with the New York City Fire Department.

MR. McCOURT: We're conducting an interview with --

Q. Give your name and rank, sir.

A. Battalion Chief Stephen King.

Q. What command are you with?

A. I'm with the Safety Battalion.

Q. Chief King, could you describe the events that took place on September 11th, 2001?

A. Okay. On September 11th, I was the Safety Chief on duty. I respond to all second or greater alarms for the entire city. I came into work about 7:00 o'clock that morning, and I was with the off-going Battalion Chief. We were in the kitchen having coffee.

Q. Do you remember who that was?

A. Yes. It was Battalion Chief Brian O'Flaherty. We came back around into the office. I work out of the Brooklyn Navy Yard. We respond out of the Marine Division building of the Brooklyn Navy Yard. When we walked back into the office, we have a picture window that looks right out on lower Manhattan. Chief O'Flaherty walked in the office first. I was right behind him. As soon as he walked in the office, he said, "Oh, my God, look at that." We saw the building was on fire, the Trade Center building. The north tower was on fire. I didn't know what caused it.

I was the Chief on duty. The second I saw it, I turned around to my aide, who was right behind me, Bobby Crawford, who is missing in the building, and I said to him, "Let's get going, Bobby." Normally we would wait for a ticket to respond like any line unit. I certainly knew that I'd be rolling in on that, so I didn't even wait for a ticket to respond. I told him let's just get in the car and get down there.

So we immediately went down to the car and proceeded to the site. We went over the Brooklyn Bridge. We were in there very rapidly, well before the plane hit the second tower.

When we pulled up to the scene, there was an awful lot of debris coming down from the north tower.

Q. Do you remember how far in you got, where you were parked?

A. Well, you know what? I don't know what street we came in on. We got fairly close to the building. We were pretty close in. We stopped the car. There was so much coming down that it was falling around the car. There were some jumpers. There was a lot of debris coming down. We responded and we were not dressed in fire gear yet. We would normally get out of the car and put our gear on at the rear of the car. I was concerned that we could get struck in the street.

So I saw a building off to the side that had a construction shed around it, a sidewalk construction shed, and I had told the aide, Bobby Crawford, I said, "Bobby, pull the car over there so we can get out and get under the shed while we get dressed." So we pulled the car over to where the shed was and we got out and got dressed under the protection of that shed. There was, again, a lot of debris coming down. There were jumpers hitting the street. I literally had quite a concern that you could get struck just trying to run from where we were into the building, which I would say was about 100 feet away.

Q. Do you have any idea what street you were on?

A. You know what? I don't. I wasn't paying attention. Unfortunately, there was so much going on with radio communications on the mobile radio that I was trying to take in and looking at the building that it was kind of overwhelming. I didn't pay an awful lot of attention to which street we were on when we pulled in.

Q. Were you aware of what happened, what the circumstances were?

A. No. I did not know.

Q. They didn't come over the radio with what had happened?

A. No. I've been tossing and turning with this for a long time. I don't believe that it was clear to me that it was an airplane at all. I certainly could see that I had a major event. I mean, it looked to me like there was fire on eight to twelve floors. I know in my own mind I thought it was some sort of an explosion, that to get something going that rapidly, you know, to cover that many floors, something dramatic had happened. But I don't believe I understood at that point that it was a plane crash.

We ran into the lobby. Literally, you had an impending feeling that it was not going to be a good day. As a matter of fact, I think I said to Bobby on the way in something to that effect. I said, "Bobby, this is not going to be a good day." There was just so much happening. You could see right away that the magnitude of this event, though I never expected that a tower might collapse --

Q. You never thought that?

A. No, I don't think I ever thought that. I know I didn't think that, not understanding that it was an airliner full of fuel. It was so much easier watching on TV later and people telling there were so many thousands of gallons of fuel, et cetera. When you hear all of that, you can start saying to yourself this building could fail. But, no, I don't believe I ever thought about that. I knew I had a very serious fire and I wasn't anticipating building failure at that point at all.

Anyway, so we got into the lobby, and when I got there I saw Deputy Chief Hayden and I had seen Chief Callan. I don't remember if I saw him right away or when I came back to the command post. But I checked in with Chief Hayden and there was an awful lot going on. It was obviously extremely busy. The handie-talkies were almost overwhelmed with the amount of transmissions going on.

Q. Was there radio communication; it was working at the time?

A. Yes, there was radio communication, handie-talkie communication. It was working. I asked Chief Hayden if we were using a command channel and he said we were using a command channel and I switched over to the command channel. I asked him what he wanted me to do.

Chief Hayden and I go back a long way. He was a Chief of Safety immediately before me, so we've worked together, and he knows a Safety Chief's job inherently because, like I say, he was Chief of safety for a couple of years.

He said, "Do me a favor, Steve. Just check out if we have any elevators that might be usable. Check out the stairwells. Just give me an idea what's going on." I said, "Okay."

I left with my aide. We walked around the lobby trying to get an idea if there were any elevators. There were no elevators. We just wanted to see if maybe something looked like it might be able to be put back in service somehow. We looked around at the elevator banks. Nothing was in use. We went around to the escalators. This is in the north tower. We went to the escalators. They weren't functioning.

We walked up to the promenade level, visiting level. I'm not sure what they call it. I'm not overly familiar with the Trade Center buildings. As a matter of fact, the last time I was in it was the '93 event.

We got up there. We started checking out the stairwell. When I say we, it's my aide, Bobby Crawford, and myself.

Q. Just the two of you; nobody else was with you?

A. No, nobody else was with me. We walked into the first stairwell and walked up one flight of stairs. There were people coming down. We were trying to get somewhat of an assessment of, you know, were there any panic situations, which one might be better for firefighters to access to go upstairs, et cetera.

Q. What was the demeanor of the civilians coming down; how were they acting?

A. I would say that there was no panic. Probably shock but quite orderly. I believe it was four staircases. I was in three of the four stairwells. They all seemed to be pretty much the same. I didn't see pushing, shoving, anything that resembled a panic. It seemed to be just people rather orderly coming down.

As a matter of fact, when firemen were going upstairs, the civilians coming down tended to hug to the right and the firemen were going up to the left side, passing them, and some of them were patting them on the back saying God bless you and that sort of thing. But, really, at least at these lower floors, and I was only at the lower floors, but it was quite organized and working very smoothly at those lower levels. I have no idea what the conditions might have been up higher.

Q. What was the condition of the stairwells themselves; smoky, hot, anything you noticed?

A. No. Once again, not at these lower floors, of course, remembering that the impact was way above that. At my level there was virtually no smoke. Everything was clear. There wasn't a problem with any of those sort of conditions at all.

Q. There was lighting? Regular house lights were on or were there emergency lights?

A. There were emergency lights that I recall. I believe they were the emergency lights.

We went to the second floor in the first stairwell. We actually went in the hallway. We walked down to where the elevators were on the second floor, second level, looked around. Then we went to the next stairwell, checked out conditions. They were kind of similar. We walked around some more and went to the third stairwell and started going up to the third floor.

As we started going up to the third floor, people were coming down the stairwell. There was a large woman coming down the stairs, and I'm a big guy myself. When I was trying to pass her, she had bumped into me and caught me off balance. Anyway, I ended up kind of falling backwards. I put my foot down and caught a step about two or three steps down on my left foot. I popped something in my knee anyway at that point in time. I did something to my kneecap. It felt like I popped a ligament or whatever it might have been. I got like a piercing pain in my head.

MR. McCOURT: We're stopping the interview at this time for a second.

(Pause.)

MR. McCOURT: The time is 1154 and we're continuing the interview.

A. Anyway, I had done something to my left knee at that point and ankle. After that we started to go up to the third floor and it became very clear to me that I could not do stairs very well. My left foot, between the knee and the ankle, was killing me. That woman literally probably saved my life as things turned out.

We got up to the third floor and I turned around to my aide, Bobby. I said, "Bobby, I can't go up the stairs. Whatever I did to my knee, it's done. There's no way I can go upstairs. We're going to have to end up heading back down."

So we start going back down the stairs. I get to the second floor level again and there's a woman there that's having a little problem breathing, having a little difficulty, and I stopped to talk to her for a minute.

My aide, Bobby, by the way, has like 31 years on the job. He's been with Safety Battalion since it was formed in 1981. He's a very checked-out individual. But anyway, he said, "Chief, I'm going to look in the hallway here at the second floor level again." I said, "Okay, Bobby." I said, "I'm just going to help her out for a minute."

So I was talking to her for a minute. She looked like she was just having difficulty breathing. I talked to her for a minute and I told her, "You've just got like one more floor to go down and there's EMS personnel in the lobby and they'll be waiting to assist you." I said, "Go over to one of them and have them check you out. They've got oxygen. They'll take blood pressure, et cetera." There were people coming down the stairs and I had asked one man that was coming down the stairs, I said, "If you'd just assist her getting down the stairs." And he did. That probably took one or two minutes.

At that point I went into the hallway where my aide had just gone a minute or two earlier and I opened up the door and I looked in there. I didn't see him. I walked down that hallway, a very long hallway. There's no smoke or anything. It's completely clear. I'm looking for him and I'm calling out his name and I don't hear from him. The handie-talkie is kind of overwhelming to call him on the handie-talkie. I'm still on the command channel. He's on the tactical channel. But I'm not the least bit concerned. We're way, way, way below the fire. It's not even a problem. I don't see him.

So I'm kind of like, you know, I don't know where the heck he went. Did I miss him? Did he go upstairs? I literally said I'd better go up. Maybe he went up to the third floor again. I went back upstairs, which was extremely difficult for me to do.

Q. Because of your injury?

A. Because of my injury.

I went back up to the third floor and I poked my head in that hallway. I don't see him at all. I said to myself, well, I know he's not going to go upstairs without me. He must have gone downstairs. I'm going to check the second floor.

I went back down to the second floor. I poked my head in again. I don't see him. I continued down to the lobby command post and I expected that he might well be down there by the time I got down there. But he often would take off on his own for a little bit and kind of look around, and it's basically what we do. He's a very checked-out individual. At an average fire, at certain times, like outside the building, normally we would split up.

Q. He would survey the area?

A. Yes. He might go around to the rear and survey, et cetera. In the building we tend to stick together. But this is a very different kind of building, you know, everything that's going on. In other words, you're not in any immediate danger at all. We're way below the fire.

Anyway, I report back in. I see Pete Hayden at the command post and I said, "Pete, listen, my knee. I did something to my knee. I can't even walk." And he says, "Okay, Steve." They were by the command center. He said, "Just stay by the command board with me." I said, "Okay." There was a Battalion Chief there from the 1st Battalion, I think, Pfeifer.

Q. Pfeifer?

A. Yes. He was there and there were several others. There were probably six, seven, eight individuals there. I don't know them all. I saw a couple of EMS personnel. Chief Gabriel, who is an EMS Chief, I spoke with him for a second. I had seen Father Judge pretty early on.

Again, so many events are just confusing in that I don't remember the time frame. I think I might have seen Father Judge in the lobby before I left to go upstairs with Crawford. I remember at one point a fireman came in to the command post and he said, "Father Judge is dead." And I said, "What are you talking about? I was just talking with him," meaning five, ten minutes ago or whatever. And he said, "He's dead, Chief."

Q. Was this before the collapse?

A. Before the collapse. Definitely before the collapse. Absolutely. And I couldn't believe that. I was just like, oh, my God, I can't believe this is happening.

Q. When you saw him, how was he? Was he all right? Did you talk to him at all?

A. He was fine. Yes, we talked for a quick minute. He knows me. I know him. I said, "Hello, Father," and he said, "hello, Chief, God bless you," or something like that. It was a very quick conversation.

When I came back down, I know at one point I was talking to Ray Downey. Ray and I know each other for many, many years. We live a couple of blocks away from each other. Our kids grew up together and everything. I saw Ray at the same time. We talked in the lobby there. I believe that was after I came back down. But we talked in the lobby for a minute or two and he was running around doing his thing and that was the last I had seen of him.

Anyway, I'm around at the command post there. I was talking with Chief Pfeifer a little bit and basically just kind of taking in everything that was going on, you know, listening to the transmissions. I talked with Chief Gabriel for a little bit about what his men were doing, his personnel. I didn't see Fireman Crawford. I was starting now to wonder where the heck he went. Now I'm getting a little concerned.

Q. This is your aide?

A. My aide, who, again, has been missing since that day. But now I had a little concern. I'm not worried about him being in danger. In other words, we're so far from the danger area. But now I'm just like, jeez, it's been a little while. I'm surprised he hasn't come back down here. It wouldn't be like him to just, in other words, be gone upstairs by himself. So I'm kind of wondering, wherever he went, I figured at some point he's going to figure out I must be at the command center. He knew I couldn't do stairs. You know what I'm saying?

Anyway, pretty much I'm at the command center and I had the Scott mask on my back all this time but, of course, I wasn't using the face piece because there wasn't any difficulty breathing. At one point I took the Scott pack off and I put it under the desk there at the command center because my knee hurts and I'm lugging this extra weight around for nothing. So I put it under the desk.

Nothing much else I can remember, until at some point I hear a transmission about the building coming down. I don't even remember the exact words, but something, the building is collapsing or the building is coming down. I hear that. Now, I think it's my tower.

Q. Did you know there was any incident going on with the other tower at that point?

A. Oh, let me tell you. I guess I left that all out. Yes. At some point when I'm at the command post, I hear something about an aircraft has struck the other tower, the south tower. I'm at the command post at that point.

Q. You're in the north tower?

A. I'm in the north tower. I hear something about an aircraft just struck the south tower. And I don't know that a plane has hit the north tower.

Q. You still don't know that?

A. I still don't know that. I don't believe I know that. If I do, then I was in more shock than I thought. Even though I heard a plane struck the south tower, I mean, I didn't hear anything like an airliner. It was just I heard a plane struck the south tower. I remember saying how is that possible? In my mind, I'm thinking it might be a news helicopter. I'm thinking that, you know, when we have an event like this in the city, how you get one of those helicopters in there very quickly. So, literally, although they said an aircraft, I'm thinking that maybe it's some idiot in a news helicopter circling, you know, filming this event in the north tower and somehow he plowed into the south tower. Or else, I'm saying to myself, if it isn't that, maybe it's -- I'm a pilot, by the way. I'm a commercial pilot for 30 years. I flew in the Navy.

Q. Fixed-wing pilot?

A. Fixed-wing. I've flown some helicopters. But fixed-wing. And I flew in the Navy.

But anyway, the other thing I'm thinking is what they call a VFR corridor that runs up the Hudson River right alongside the Twin Towers. It goes up the Hudson River. VFR, visual flight rule, private plane type, they can go up and down that as long as they stay under 1100 feet AGL, above ground level. So I'm saying to myself the other possibility is some light plane. But I'm never thinking airliner. I don't hear that at all. So I'm saying to myself we've got a major thing going on in the north tower, something struck the south tower, and I don't envision this as a terrific event going on in the south tower. Anyway, that early, that's not what I understand. But getting back to where I was then, that's what I had heard.

I have to say one other thing. If I'm not mistaken, at some point after that I believe I heard -- and I'm not clear as to how I heard it, but it was at the command center. I heard something about there's a report of a third aircraft inbound, something to that effect, and I don't even know who said it.

Q. You don't know who said it?

A. I don't know who said it. I'm not even clear if it was on a handie-talkie transmission or if it was something verbally said at the command center. But I heard something to that effect.

When I heard that, then all of a sudden everything kind of clicked and I said, literally, holy shit. We must be under some sort of an attack. That was the first time that it registered, whoever said something about a third aircraft inbound.

Q. That was after the second aircraft?

A. Oh, yes. It was definitely after the second because they said something about a third. And then I said, whoa, you know, we've been attacked or something. Something major is going on. That's the first time, at least in my own mind, that I remember it really clicked.

At some time after that, and I have no concept of time here, I remember hearing something to the effect that the tower is collapsing or coming down. I hear that and I hear a rumble. I remember a terrific rumbling, getting louder. Now, I believe -- and I did for two days after this -- I think that my tower that I'm in, the north tower, is collapsing. This is the south tower collapsing.

You had to be there to envision this. The noise becomes deafening. I can feel the ground shaking. I remember saying to myself that -- there's like a big archway behind me, more or less to the back of me, but when I was talking with Chief Gabriel, I was pretty much standing under it. And you know how you always hear this, I guess we're kind of trained, you know, look for an arch or something, if there's a collapse. I remember kind of instinctively running back there. As a matter of fact, I think I hollered out to the guys that were along with me, "Come back here under the arch."

It's amazing what happens in a few seconds, but I remember going under the arch. I remember just hearing the noise. You know it's coming down. I mean, I know my tower was coming down and that this is it. It's all over. Absolutely got to be. I remember being under the arch and saying to myself this is a joke. I'm going under an arch. I've got 110 stories coming down. It's over, Steve. I literally remember that. And I remember having been in one of these subbasements in '93 with the other event, and in a couple of seconds, I just remember saying I'm going to get driven down to the eighth subbasement of this building and that's it. They'll be paving the street. I'm dead. There's not a chance in the world I'm living through this. And it comes down.

The next thing I know, I'm getting buried in debris. The windows are shattering. Again, I think it's my tower. I'm not exactly clear how it's coming down, but it's coming down. You can't miss the noise. You can feel the air pressure building up. I mean, literally, it blows the windows in.

Q. The windows were blown in?

A. I guess everything came in because the next thing, we are covered in white. So you cannot breathe at all. I remember I had -- you know the hoods we wear? I had taken my Scott mask off, if you remember. Now, there's so much of that powder mixed in with smoke, I guess, but the second you took a mouthful or two of it in, it dried your mouth and throat and you were gagging. It was like holy shit. I remember now I pulled the hood over my face to filter out some of that. I noticed guys next to me were alive and I'm like -- I'm in shock.

Q. Do you remember who was next to you?

A. Yes. I'll tell you in a second.

I just remember kind of like I cannot believe we're alive. There's no way we could have survived this. But I'm alive. Now, I know Pete Hayden is with me, Joe Callen, Chief Pfeifer, and there were others, maybe a couple of the aides. I'm not sure of who all the people were. There was an EMS fellow there. I would say there were maybe six or seven or eight of us.

We can't even see each other. We're blind. We're kind of gagging. I know everybody is absolutely in shock. I mean, everybody was kind of quiet for a while. We're sitting there. I remember now saying I can't believe that I've lived through this, but now I can't breathe. I mean, it's really difficult breathing. Now I'm like, oh, my God, we're going to get asphyxiated in here. We're going to die. I remember saying to myself, literally, that I would rather have been crushed to death instantly than the worst nightmare. I mean, I've done a lot of investigations, and the ones that run out of air, you just know that, you know...

Anyway, I have this vision now that, if I don't get out of here pretty soon, I may well asphyxiate in here. I remember there was a Port Authority cop that was with us somewhere in the area. Now I'm saying to myself which way is even out? I know where I came in and I don't want to go back out that way. I know it's a distance to get in. I thought there was a way to get out behind me more or less. I remembered that cop, and I said, well, he works in the building. I said, "Is the cop still around here?" And he says, "I'm over here. Yeah, I'm here." I said, "Which way to out of here? We've got to get out of here." And he said, "I think it's back here." I can't really see this guy, but he's behind me. And I said, "That's where I thought it was, that direction."

Q. Was it still smoky and cloudy in that area so you couldn't see?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. Just a couple of minutes after the collapse?

A. Well, it wasn't very long. Yes, within the first couple of minutes, because we didn't hang around there very long.

Anyway, I got Pete Hayden and Joe Callen and we're holding onto each other's coats more or less. We can't see anything at that point. And I think I said something. I said, "We've got to get out of here before we suffocate." So we all started working our way in that direction, and I remember we came to the escalators.

What gets sort of interesting and confusing here is there's a videotape that was taken by, I guess, a department photographer that was in that lobby with us, and I had the opportunity to see some of that recently, I guess last week, and I'm in that videotape quite a bit. Some of the events I remember are a little bit different than when I'm watching myself.

To give you an idea, when I say that this has been a very stressful or confusing event for me, literally, if you would have asked me to do this interview without seeing that tape, I would have said that I remember the escalators distinctly and that I thought I walked and continued past them and got out. However, on the videotape, we go up the escalator and I go up the escalator with them. Then at some point, when we get up there, I think, we separated and that cameraman stayed with Chief Pfeifer and they went a different direction.

Anyway, we work our way out of the building. I remember getting outside the building. There were definitely a few guys with me, Joe Callen, Pete Hayden and others. There was somebody that was unconscious that a couple of the guys were carrying with us. I don't know who that person was. He wasn't in bunker gear or fire gear. I don't know that he was a firefighter at all.

But we get outside the building. Now we're hugging the building, and I still don't understand that my building is standing. We were out in the street --

Q. Where did you come out?

A. I don't know. You know what? I don't know. But I believe it was by Vesey Street. For some reason I seem to think -- I don't see streets on here, but I believe it was somewhere along here.

Q. Vesey?

A. I ended up coming up here somehow. But I'm not even sure of that.

Q. Towards West Broadway, right?

A. Right. Exactly, yes. I don't know. Everything was white. I remember trying to find a street sign. But first we hugged the building. There was so much debris coming down and still jumpers and stuff, and I can only speak for myself, although I'd say we stayed together, in a single line, hugged the building and walked along the building for quite a ways. We were almost -- I'll speak for myself -- afraid to leave the building. Your chances of getting struck by something were good, and I could not run or do anything. I was having difficulty walking. There was no way I was running.

We stayed together for quite awhile, but at some point, and I don't remember any of the particulars, I'm by myself. Again, I'm not clear with a lot of this. I ended up walking up -- I believe I walked along Vesey and went to West Broadway and I was walking north up West Broadway. At this point I'm by myself. I do not know where everybody else went. I don't know how we got separated or what led to it.

A week or two later, I saw Joe Callan. As a matter of fact, it was at Chief Ganci's funeral. I saw Chief Callen and I said to him, "Joe, I don't remember how we got separated that day." I said, "I guess I left you guys. I'm sorry. I don't remember what was going on." And he said to me, "Steve, you didn't leave us." He said, "You couldn't walk almost." He said, "I ran." He said, "I did the 60-yard sprint for two blocks." He said, "I left you." He said, "At that point it was every man for himself."

Anyway, the next thing I know, I'm walking in the middle of the street. Everything was white. I'm sure you've seen pictures of it. I'm at least somewhat in shock. I don't think I had a very clear focus of what I was doing. I remember saying to myself I've got to get away from the building. I can't believe I'm not getting hit getting away from the building. There was a lot of stuff coming down. Keep in mind that I absolutely believed that I was in the tower that collapsed.

I'm walking north. I'm looking to see any sort of a fire truck, a Chief's car. I figured other units have got to be coming in. I'm going to see one sooner or later. As soon as I see one, I'm going to kind of flag them down and say, you know, all right, what's going on, where's the command center, try and get reformed. I'm thinking about, did everybody get out? I haven't seen my aide. Now I'm really worried because, in my mind, he was in the building that collapsed and I know he's still in there.

I walk about I'll say two blocks north. I'm guessing. I don't see any fire units at all. So now I'm starting to say, well, wherever they're forming, they've got to be forming another staging area or command post outside the building. I said I'm going in the wrong direction. So I stopped and I turned around and I said I'd better start heading back down there again. So, literally, I turned around and I started going back towards the Trade Center.

I get about a block away. I'll say about one block away. So maybe I walked back about one block. Now all of a sudden I hear people are starting to run and scream. And I said, "The other tower is coming down." I looked up and the tower is coming down and I've got to get buried in the debris. I mean, it's like it's got to hit me. Now I'm back to the same thing. In a couple of seconds, I'm saying, holy shit. I got out of the first one and now I'm going to get killed by the second one. I'm looking to see where am I going to go now?

There's a subway station right alongside me. I don't know what station. I dive down the subway stairs. I get down to the bottom of that first set of stairs. I turn the corner. I sit up against a wall on the floor and the building comes down. It goes down the stairs. I thought the sidewalk was going to collapse. I'm buried in that smoke again. I've got to pull the hood back over my face. I'm gagging. I'm going through pretty much the same things that happened to me after the first tower came down.

Q. Were you alone? Was anybody with you?

A. I was by myself. I kind of sat there. I don't even have any clue how long. I do not know how long. From this point on it gets kind of vague, I guess. I do get out of there. I don't remember coming up. I don't remember how I got out. I get up to the street.

At some point I was interviewed on TV, you know, a camera, not for very long. I have not seen this interview, but everybody in the entire United States has. It was on for two weeks straight every day. It was on America's Most Wanted. But I had people from all over the United States calling me up. I sit on a lot of national committees, the NFPA and other things. But they're all calling me up, "Steve, I saw you on TV," and I don't ever remember speaking to anybody on camera at all.

I remember now, when I came out of there, I started walking away from the Trade Center again. I remember seeing a civilian in the street who said to me, "Are you okay?" I said, "I'm okay." He had a cell phone in his hand and I just remember telling him, "Would you mind calling my wife at the house? She's probably not home." I didn't know what time it was. She works but comes home for lunch. I said, "Just leave a message if you get an answering machine. Just tell her your husband is okay. I saw him. He told me to call you." And he said, "I promise." I remember for some reason he was from Detroit. I just remember he said, "I promise I'll call," and he did end up calling.

I know you don't want to go much after this.

Q. That's okay. I'm just checking the tape, that's all.

A. Anyway, I kept walking. At some point a doctor from St. Vincent's Hospital, I guess there were ambulance teams dispatched out to the street, et cetera, but a doctor from St. Vincent's in a blue gown comes over to me and he says, "Are you okay?" And I said, "Yeah, I'm fine. I'm fine." I'm walking. I'm just going to leave him. I'm just walking down the middle of the street. And he says, "Hey, I want to check you out. Come over here." He says, "Take your jacket off. I want to check your blood pressure." I said, "I'm okay." He said, "Let me check you out."

Anyway, he checked my blood pressure and it was 100 over 90. I remember him saying, "100 over 90." I'm saying, "100 over 90? I never heard of a number like that." He says, "Let me check your other arm." And he does it and he said, "100 over 90," and he said to somebody, there was an ambulance by him, in fact, and he said, "Get this guy to the hospital."

There's something else. I left something out. At some point I went to a firehouse. I think Engine 9. When I'm walking the street, I end up at Engine 9 and there's guys there and I walk in and I was the only Chief around, I guess. I walk in and there's a lot of guys that are coming in from home and didn't know the things going on and they're kind of like, "Chief, where do you need me?"

Q. Where is Engine 9? Do you know where that is?

A. I think it's on Vesey Street. I'm not sure. Anyway, there's firemen, and there's a lot of activity and they're like, "Well, there's a Chief here. Chief, we're going to go down there. Where should we go? What should we be doing?" I said, "Listen, we can't have guys just running down there." I said, "Do me a favor, then." I said, "Get a clipboard. Get some paper. I want to know everybody that's here. I want to know their name, what unit they're assigned to." I said, "Let's get that done first so we know who we've got. If we're going to send a team down there or anything, I want to know just who is going in and then we'll try and do it somewhat organized."

At one point I remember Chief Blaich, Billy Blaich, 1st Battalion, come running into quarters. He was like in a panic. I know Billy for a long time. I said, "Billy, what's going on?" He said, "My son is working." He said, "He's in there. I've got to get down there." And he quickly grabbed gear and ran out.

Q. He came from home or he was somewhere else?

A. I'll assume he came from home, but I don't know that. It was so quick. He was obviously extremely concerned. He knew his son was responding and was in there, and he ended up being okay. But anyway, I saw him quickly, he grabbed something and ran out.

I also remember, and I'm not sure of the sequence, but when I was walking down that street, there was a captain that came up to me, I'm pretty sure he was from 252 Engine, if I recall, and he was going down to the Trade Center. Again, he wasn't on duty. I don't know how he was there, whether he was recovering or not, but I'm almost positive he was from 252 Engine. He had all his gear with him, but he didn't have a handie-talkie, and he saw me and he said, "Chief," he says, "could I use your handie-talkie? I don't have a handie-talkie. I'm going to report in." He could see that I was just covered in white. I guess I must have looked like death to anybody that saw me. I think he saw clearly that I wasn't going back down there. Anyway, I said to myself, if he can help out, I gave him the radio. I gave him my handie-talkie. I said, "Here, take the damn thing." I said, "252, right?" Because I wanted to remember who I had given it to. Anyway, so that was that. I handed him my handie-talkie.

I think that's before I got to that firehouse. As a matter of fact, I totally forgot this until I'm doing this interview. Things still come back very little at a time. I was at that firehouse for a while and I think at that point, somewhere along there is where I saw that doctor from St. Vincent's.

The next thing I know, they transport me to North Shore University Hospital out in Forest Hills, Queens. I thought I'd be going two blocks away or something. But for whatever reason, they brought me out there. I think they thought there were going to be an awful lot of very serious injuries or whatever. I don't know what their problems were. But I got in an ambulance. I didn't know where I was going at all. I just remember the ride was like, where the hell are they taking me? I ended up at Forest Hills.

Q. Was there anybody with you in the ambulance or you were the only patient?

A. I was the only patient in the ambulance.

Q. Okay.

A. I got to North Shore. They were treating me for symptoms of a possible heart attack. I guess with that blood pressure they didn't know what was going on. I had difficulty breathing. I had ingested an awful lot of that smoke/debris down there.

That's basically it. I was in the hospital I think five or six hours. They did cardiograms and blood tests and chest x-ray, knee x-ray, ankle x-ray, things like that, and later that day or that evening they released me. They took me. One of the ambulance guys that was off duty brought me back to the Brooklyn Navy Yard, my headquarters, on his own, which was nice of him, so that I could get my car, and I got in my car and I drove out to Deer Park.

I knew Ray Downey was missing and I didn't even go to my house first. I went straight to Ray Downey's, the family house, and I went over there and I saw Ray's wife and the kids were all over and I talked for a little bit and I told them that I had been with Ray earlier and that I knew he was missing, and I know they knew and they were obviously extremely distraught. I remember his wife saying, "You know Ray's alive, Steve, right?" She said, "You know how smart Ray is. I know he's just waiting for us to come get him." I said, "Roe, I certainly hope so." I said, "I know if anybody could take care of themself, it would certainly be Ray." And it was just terrible.

Then from there I went home and that was it.

Q. Any further news on your aide, Bobby Crawford?

A. No. To date he's still missing.

Q. Anything else that you can think of? Anything you want to retract and go over?

A. No. I know there's things missing and it's frustrating to me, particularly having done a lot of interviews, you know, it's so frustrating when it's not clear, and it's the first time I've ever sat on this side of the fence. [redacted] I've been telling this story about 15 or 20 times and it seems like each time I tell it just little bits still come back. Like that captain I just talked about from 252. This is the first time that it ever hit me that I gave that handie-talkie to him, and I haven't said that yet. I had just kind of forgot about it until today. So it's different. It's still coming back in bits and pieces and a lot of it, unfortunately, is kind of chronologically difficult for me, maybe out of sequence, and time references are difficult. So it's frustrating to me.

Q. All right. If at any point you remember anything else and you want to get back to us, we could always add to your interview. We'll make an addendum onto it?

A. I don't know if I'll get involved in doing some of these interviews myself, but you find out more, of course, as you talk to other people, and I haven't talked to an awful lot of the other people that were there. I've been almost avoiding it in a sense. But when you do, people remind you of things that you say, oh, that's right, I do remember that myself. So, obviously, that's part of it. I know when I viewed that videotape that I mentioned to you last week, I only saw parts of it, but it certainly looked a lot different. Some of it is different from what you remember. It's amazing. It really is.

MR. McCOURT: Okay. The time is 1227. As a matter of fact, we conducted this interview at 9 Metrotech on the 4th floor. Thank you very much, Chief.

CHIEF KING: Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT-P KATHY ZARR

Interview Date: November 27, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is November 27th, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg with the Fire Department, City of New York. The time is now 0656 hours. I am conducting an interview with --

EMT ZARR: Kathryn Zarr, paramedic, Battalion 22, Station 52.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is being conducted regarding the events of September 11th, 2001. Also present for the interview is --

MR. SAMOJEDNY: Eugene Samojedny, Fire Department, City of New York.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 22.

Q. Kathy, if you can start from when you were assigned to the job.

A. We're stationed out here in Staten Island, and when the first plane hit they mobilized some of the units to go out to Manhattan. I guess that's part of their preplan for MCIs.

While we were in the tunnel on the way there, the second plane had hit, and we didn't know it until we pulled out of the tunnel and somebody had advised us later on that the second plane hit.

They told us to put our vehicle on Liberty Avenue right by West Street, right on the corner there, and set up a secondary triage area because they were expecting burn patients and everything else. So we parked our vehicle, and behind the building there was an alcove. We set up all of our equipment as far as a triage area.

So after that was done, we were just hanging out, waiting to see what was going to happen next or when we were going to get any patients.

I know Chief Grant was there from Battalion 22 on that corner with us. His aide was there. There was some units also here from Staten Island, but they were the voluntary units. I think one was from Bayley Seton and one from St. Vincent's, I believe, and a Richmond County ambulance, one of the private ambulettes out here. For some reason they sent a truck up there as well.

Once that was done, like I said, we were just hanging out, not really doing much of anything. We were watching the buildings and watching the people jumping from the buildings. The next thing you know, we heard this rumble, we looked up and tower two was coming down.

We were able to run maybe half a block before we got overtaken by the debris cloud. I lost my partner and most of the other people there, and I got thrown into one of the alcoves of the building from the wave.

After a few minutes of hanging out in blackness, I figured I had to start walking to try to get at least oriented. I found a fireman. He was nice enough to give me a couple hits off a Scott pack to try to get some air at least. I don't know if you were there during any of this.

Q. No, not that morning.

A. It was like breathing sand. You couldn't catch a breath at all.

Once I got that, I turned around, found my ambulance again. I had to turn back, and you actually had to be on top of the truck before you could actually see any of the numbers. That's how black it was. You couldn't see your hand in front of your face.

I took all the respirator masks we have M-95s. I took them all out of the truck, put one on myself and just went back out and trying to find everybody again and just pass them out to whomever you could find.

I found one captain. I don't remember her name. I started finding the people that we went down there with. Just handed out whoever didn't have a mask, handed out masks. As we were trying to find out equipment, get everything reorganized again, the next tower came down.

We got overcome by the debris cloud again, wound up at the end of -- I'm not sure if it's West End Street where the water hits it. I wound up down there with a whole bunch of civilians. I took out whatever O2 tanks we had from the truck, put it inside one of the buildings that they opened up for us, and just started treating the asthmatics or whatever else found their way down there.

Then they evacuated the area because of the gas leak, and they started dumping everybody on harbor boats.

Q. Right.

A. Well, they wanted to take us over to Jersey. I knew there was a triage area over in Manhattan, the ferry.

Q. Right, Battery Park.

A. Yeah. My brother happens to be a harbor pilot, so the guy was nice enough to transport me to the ferry instead of to Jersey.

So we made our way over there with whatever O2 tanks we could carry, and I wound up over at the south ferry, treating whoever came in over there. I don't remember what time I got there. It was well after the second collapse and after they started evacuating people for some sort of gas leak.

Q. Who was your partner that day?

A. Mark Harris.

Q. Mark Harris.

When you went into Manhattan, you said you went through the tunnel. You went through the Battery Tunnel?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember how you came up?

A. We made a right-hand turn, and all you saw was airplane parts and body parts in the street.

Q. You were coming up north on West Side Highway?

A. Yes. We made a left onto Liberty, and we ended up I believe it was right here, because I remember the street that we were on. They parked us on the corner on Liberty, but I remember the street we were on. We drove down the street to get away from anything else that might have happened as far as the debris cloud and stuff. It was a dead end. We drove ourselves into a dead end, and that's where the water was.

Q. Okay. That was probably coming down here South End Avenue?

A. Yeah.

Q. So your staging area was on Liberty between West and South?

A. Right.

Q. You said you had seen Chief Grant.

A. And his aide Mary.

Q. And his aide. Do you remember seeing any other EMS personnel at that triage area?

A. Yeah, but I don't know who they were. They left me to set up the area while they were doing other things, because it was a secondary area and they knew they had another one set up I think in front of the building or in the lobby of the building itself. So what they were going to do was use us as the secondary point. So they left me with --

MR. RADENBERG: The interview is paused.

(Interruption.)

MR. RADENBERG: The time is now 0827 hours. We are resuming the interview. All parties indicated at the beginning of the tape are present.

Q. So triage was here on Liberty between South End and West. When the tower collapsed or the first tower two collapsed, do you remember which way you went at that point, who was with you?

A. I had one of the girls from Richmond County ambulance with me. Where everybody else went, I have no idea. Everybody just started scattering. I had to stop because she had fallen. I picked her up. As I did that, that cloud just came around the corner. So I think we were running on End Avenue. Which end?

Q. That's South End.

A. South End. We were running this way.

Q. South.

A. Right. I made it not even half a block before that cloud caught up. She wound up diving under a city bus, and there was an alcove. The pressure of the cloud pushed me into the alcove. So that's where I wound up.

Q. Do you have any idea where your partner was at this point?

A. None whatsoever. None whatsoever.

Q. When you first arrived on the scene and was setting up the triage area, was he still --

A. Yeah, he was driving that day, so he was positioning the ambulance and stuff while I was positioning all the equipment. I guess I had most of the techs from the different trucks, whatever the techs were that day. We were all setting up inside with the chairs and stuff. We were trying to set up in case we got a lot of patients and stuff.

Q. So basically as far as you know through the first collapse Mark was still at the vehicle?

A. Yeah, I had no idea where he was after that first collapse. I had no idea where he went. After the collapse, like I said, it took a minute for me to find where everything was. But I went back to the vehicle to get those masks, and there was nobody there. The back door of the vehicle, it was open. So there was like soot and debris and stuff all inside the truck and everything else.

But I had no idea where he was. It took a while for the dust to settle, literally for the dust to settle, for us to even see and to try to find everybody. After a while I did find him and see him and then lost him again when the second collapse happened.

Q. In between the two collapses when you found him, where were you?

A. Trying to find all our equipment. We were back to where --

Q. Back at triage?

A. Back to where the triage was. We went back to try to find all the equipment. Because the first building came down, I didn't think the second one is going to come down. I don't know why we didn't think so. I guess we didn't want to believe it would come down.

We were trying to find everything to reset everything up, because now definitely there are going to be a lot of people hurt.

Q. Right.

So you found Mark back at the triage area. Was he injured at all?

A. No. None of us were. None of us were, which was a surprise. It felt like I had a sunburn. It looked like I had a sunburn from all the cuts, just the force of --

Q. The dust?

A. -- the dust and stuff. You felt like you had glass all over you. Everything was all itchy and stuff. It must have been whatever was in the cloud.

Q. Now, when the second building came down, do you remember which -- I guess you and Mark split up again or?

A. No, he jumped into the vehicle. He had a fireman with him in the back of the truck, trying to get the vehicle out of there. We caught him just before we took off with the vehicle.

So I had somebody else who had escaped, one of the guys who had escaped from the first collapse. He worked in that building. He was also -- I teach EMTs out here on the island. He was one of my students, so I knew he was an EMT. He wanted to help. I said, "Okay. Stay with me. I don't know what's going to go on." He got into the back of the truck, and we ended up down by that water.

Q. This way?

A. Yeah, down here, which was only like two or three blocks. I didn't even realize it was a dead end. That's how much I know Manhattan. We ended up down at the end of the dead end.

Q. The south end of South End Avenue at South Cove Park is where it dead ends.

Mark was with you? He was driving the truck at that point?

A. Right there, yeah. At that point he was there.

The cloud caught up to us. There was no getting away from that. But I took whatever oxygen tanks we had there, and there was a building that they had, they were doing construction on one of the buildings, and the guy opened it up.

So all of the civilians and stuff that had congregated around there went into the building, whatever had to have their eyes washed. The guy was very nice. He just opened everything up for everybody. We threw some oxygen tanks in there. We had a couple of asthmatics that were having asthma attacks. We were treating them with whatever equipment we had left.

Then they started evacuating everybody because of a gas leak, and that's where I totally lost Mark and I don't know where he went. It was just weird.

Q. So it was from this area, from South Cove --

A. South Cove.

Q. -- that you got on the boat?

A. I got on the boat on the Manhattan side of the ferry terminal where the triage and treatment area was.

Q. The firefighter that was in the back of the truck -- there was a firefighter with Mark?

A. Yeah.

Q. But you don't know who he was or what company or anything like that?

A. No, no.

Q. When you made your way down here to South Cove now, do you recall, aside from you and Mark, any other EMS personnel being down there?

A. Yes. There was a Staten Island University Hospital ambulance there. It was Mitch Powell and Danny Frazier. They emptied out their O2 tanks and gave them to me too. Like I said, we only had the two that were left from the truck because all our gear is buried now wherever the treatment area was all the way down by the towers. So they gave us whatever they had to try to help us out, and they were there. I don't know what happened to them after that.

Q. Going back a little bit, before you got the job, you had mentioned a female captain. EMS captain?

A. EMS captain.

Q. PD?

A. It was a female EMS captain. She was in that area. I don't remember her name.

Q. That was at the triage area when you first got there?

A. Yes, when I first got there and after the first collapse I saw her. I didn't see her after the second collapse. I didn't see anybody after the second collapse.

Q. Do you remember what she looked like at all?

A. I just saw her again too, and I don't remember her name. I'm bad with names. I don't remember her name. She was a blonde, I guess in her forties.

Q. Captain Deshore?

A. That's it. She was just at that function in Manhattan at the hotel.

Q. That's pretty much if for questions I have at this point. Anything else would like to add? Opinions? Comments? Anything of that nature?

A. There's no comment. I don't know what to say about this.

When did you guys start doing the interviews? Just recently you started with all this?

Q. A couple weeks ago.

A. Because I've only been back to work for two weeks.

Q. Yeah. A couple of weeks ago we started, probably about a month, actually, maybe a month and a half.

A. Yeah, because I was out sick. I was out sick for two months.

Q. Actually the beginning of October, somewhere around there.

A. I didn't come back to work for about two weeks.

Anything else?

Q. No, no.

MR. RADENBERG: The time is now 0837, and the interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT RICHARD SMIOUSKAS

Interview Date: November 27, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. McCOURT: The date is November 27th, 2001. The time is 9:03 hours. My name is Tom McCourt, New York City Fire Department.

MR. MURAD: Murray Murad, New York City Fire Department.

MR. McCOURT: We're currently interviewing --

LIEUTENANT SMIOUSKAS: Lieutenant Richard Smiouskas, S-M-I-O-U-S-K-A-S.

Q. Lieutenant, could you tell me the events that took place from your perspective on September 11th, 2001, please.

A. Yes. I was in the office in the morning, and I was sitting at my desk doing TPRs when I received a beep.

Q. Where is your office?

A. The second floor of headquarters, Room 206.

I received a beep, and the beep said that a plane had crashed into the World Trade Center. I immediately turned around -- I had a TV set in the office, but I keep the sound off so I didn't hear anything. I turned around and looked at the TV set and saw at least ten stories of smoke coming out of the World Trade Center. I said oh, my God.

I went to the back. I grabbed 20 rolls of film. There was a photo bag. I grabbed the photo bag, threw a couple cameras in there. I responded to the scene in a Fire Department suburban with lights and sirens over the Brooklyn Bridge. They had a lane open on the Brooklyn Bridge for emergency vehicles.

Q. Did you go alone?

A. I was by myself. We don't have anybody on duty in the forwarding unit until 11 a.m. So I covered the car from when I come on duty from about 7:00 until 11. So I was the only one on duty at the time.

I went, lights and sirens, over the Brooklyn Bridge. Just as I was reaching the end of the bridge, there was a loud explosion and I saw a fireball come across the sky, realizing that the south tower --

Q. Did you actually see the south tower?

A. Yes. I could see it from the bridge. I saw an explosion and fireball and thick black smoke just going across the sky. Then I realized we were being attacked. I didn't know if it was missiles coming in or another plane.

I got to the base the Brooklyn Bridge. I made the turn that goes around I think Centre Street right by City Hall, and I took that to Broadway. I had to be very careful there because there were thousands of people in the street running across the street, streaming across the Brooklyn Bridge. There was terror on their faces. There was some people I noticed that were covered with black smoke. They were probably maybe in the building.

As I'm coming down Broadway, there were people running across the street. I almost hit a few people, by the way. I parked the car just south of Vesey Street on Broadway. I parked there because I knew this was going to be a long, involved fire, and I didn't want to get blocked in by other vehicles.

In my experience I go to fires, and parking too close to the fire building you get jammed in. So I knew this was going to be a long and prolonged operation. So I parked just south of Vesey on Broadway.

I got my camera bag, and I went to Liberty that Engine 10 and Ladder 10 is on. So it was just south of Liberty Street.

Q. Liberty and Trinity?

A. I was about Cedar. That's where I parked the vehicle on Broadway, Broadway and just south of Liberty. That's where I parked the vehicle.

Q. Mark it on the map.

A. I walked across, and I'm looking up at the fire and taking some shots and photographing while I'm walking. As I got to the quarters of Engine 10 and Ladder 10, I glanced in there real quick. The apparatus were out. But I saw some guys putting jackets and bunker gear on.

I continued down about a couple hundred feet. I looked on the ground and I saw what I thought was a roasted pig. I've seen them at weddings and things like that, roasted pigs. I looked at it again, and it was actually a torso. I saw a rib cage. I looked up and saw body parts, feet, a hand with a ring on it, a face with a mustache and eyes and part of an ear.

Just a face, no head, just a face. I saw like the window of an airplane, one of those small plastic windows.

As I'm walking down, I'm looking up, watching people jump, I'm watching the fire. I get to just Liberty and West Street where I ran into Jerry Barbara, Chief Barbara. Citywide was talking to him. He turns around and said: "Richie, this is not good." I said take care. I took a shot, a photograph, of him with the building behind him. I believe it was Engine 279 the lieutenant came up behind us and asked the chief where did he want him, and the chief said just stand fast. I said: "Jerry, take care, be careful."

I left and made my way to the west side of -- I was standing right next to the hotel, just the hotel. I took a few photographs there. Then I made my way into the Two World Financial Center, and I tried to get to the roof of that building. There was nobody there that would allow me up to the roof. So I went into Three World Trade Center, and I found an engineer. We walked back to Two World Trade Center, and he got me up to the roof.

I was photographing the fire from the roof. I had a long lens on the camera, and I had people in the windows. It looked like they were being -- they weren't actually jumping. One or two people I saw, they seemed like they were being forced out by the people behind them. There was half a dozen faces. In between the smoke you could see people.

I guess they were all trying to get air, and this guy was actually standing in the window, standing in the frame with each hand on each frame and he kind of like got nudged out. I'm sure the people were jumping -- I took about maybe half a dozen shots of people actually falling. I said that's enough of that.

I brought my way down the elevator. I went across the Winter Garden, and then I went over the pedestrian bridge by Vesey Street. That bridge goes directly into the Six World Trade Center. At the time I didn't know it was Six World Trade Center.

I went into the mezzanine, which is about maybe 25 feet north of the north tower. In that mezzanine I saw Father Judge. He was praying. I looked out the window, these large 15 foot glass windows. I glanced out, and I saw the people hitting the pavement. I could still hear what I think was people hitting the roof. You could hear explosions or thuds on the roof.

Q. Overhead?

A. Overhead, landing on the roof of Six World Trade Center.

I turned around, and where the glass was clear I heard another explosion and I turned around and looked at the glass and there was just chunks that were splattered with blood. There was actually chunks of I guess human flesh was just dripping down. I looked and the person that just landed there just exploded like a watermelon. The largest piece I saw of the person was maybe a hand. They just splattered like a pancake.

I took a few photographs. I turned around. I told Father Judge be careful. All of a sudden there was this groaning sound like a roar, grrrr. The ground started to shake. Father Judge started going out the revolving doors. I said don't go outside. The last time I saw him, he went out the revolving door.

I turned around and I started going back towards West Street. It looked like an earthquake. The ground was shaking. I fell to the floor. My camera bag opened up. The cameras went skidding across the floor. The windows started exploding in. I just rolled into the corner to protect myself from the glass.

The next thing I knew, it was pitch-black. You couldn't see in front of you. You couldn't breathe. Every time you took a breath, you were just swallowing -- you were gasping. I took my shirt off and wrapped it around my head so I could breathe.

It felt like an eternity getting out of that building. I was disoriented. I knew the general idea of where I was. I was actually thinking about going out the windows where the glass was broke, but I figured people were still jumping and I didn't know exactly what was going on outside. I'm thinking maybe the building snapped in half. I'm thinking maybe a bomb blew up. I'm thinking it could have been a nuclear.

I didn't know what was going on.

I went against the wall, and I felt the wall and I just kept going in the direction that I came in. I kept banging into things. I came to another wall, went through a revolving door, and I found myself back on the bridge, the pedestrian bridge. From there I got back into the Winter Garden.

Q. What was it like outside at that point?

A. Pitch-black.

Q. Still pitch-black?

A. Pitch-black.

Q. So you didn't stay in the building long; you just got out as quick as you could?

A. It felt like an hour getting out of there, but I would estimate it to be maybe eight minutes.

When I got into the Winter Garden, it was very clear in there. Just a couple pieces of glass were broken. They came crashing down. I was looking up and watching that. It was hazy, just a haze in there.

Then I went out the back door where the marina is, the North Cove Yacht Harbor is, that area, and wasn't black, it was just like real, real hazy and dusty. I went south around Two World Financial Center, and I looked and what I could see is the north tower was still burning, the south tower wasn't there. I said oh, my God, the whole thing came down.

I went back around where I came, and I went a little north of the Three World Trade Center and went to the corner of Vesey and West Street. There was a lot of chaos. I'm looking up and saying this building's going to come down also. There had to be about a hundred people in the street looking up.

I remember yelling: The microwave tower is bending over. I saw it leaning over. I said the microwave tower is leaning over. The antenna was leaning over. At that point everybody started moving north.

Q. Did you see anybody that you recognized or anybody you knew at that point?

A. No. There were some cops, there was some firemen, there was EMTs, there was a lot of civilians, there was photographers, but nobody I recognized, no.

I don't know if I went to Warren Street or Murray Street. I went up the next block and went over to the West Street area. I was standing on West Street and Murray with a whole bunch of people, and all of a sudden the north tower started to come down.

Everybody started running north, and this huge volume like ten stories high billowing, pushing black smoke and like a glitter. I guess it was glass that was glitter that was in the cloud of smoke. I saw everything flying around. I looked back, and there was this thing flying, coming at me.

I started running north. I got to the corner, and it was engulfing all the buildings around, maybe 50 feet away from me. I tried a couple of doors, and then I went into a bodega on the corner and shut the door. There were maybe ten people in that bodega. I held the door shut and it just kind of blew by like a hurricane, all this debris and paper, thousands of paper in it. Then it got pitch-black again. It was midnight again.

I waited for a few minutes. I took some water out of the bodega and was dumping it in my eyes. My eyes were burning. I started drinking water and spitting up. I waited a few minutes and went outside. There were papers burning in the street.

As I made my way back to the scene, there were cars burning, a bus was burning, it was dark. There were other buildings on fire. I made my way back, and there were people just milling about. I just saw the devastation, The carnage.

I went back around towards the south tower. There was really nothing to do. People were being helped by people holding other people. I couldn't even take any photographs. My cameras were lost in the building.

Q. You don't have the cameras?

A. No. I had shot about maybe eight or nine rolls of film of the initial events. I was groping around for the camera. I couldn't find anything, and I said let me get the hell out of here. I don't know what's going on.

Actually when I was in the building, I knew the building had a little overhang. So I'm thinking if this building comes down, the way it overhangs and something hits it, I may have a void, thinking about a void.

Q. It was self-preservation?

A. Yes. If I have a void, it's better I stay in here than go out with the buildings falling down. I knew I had about six stories above me of that building. I felt I had protection.

Q. Did you get hurt at all?

A. No. Just rolling on the floor, my right hip was bothering me a couple days, like a little bruise or something. I felt painful for a few days, but that's about it, just getting up. I was coughing for about two weeks.

Q. Anything else you can think of that you want to elaborate on a little more or reflect on?

A. No. It was pretty horrible. Emotionally the terror on the people's faces in the windows. You could see the poor souls hitting the pavement. I saw maybe 12 people actually fall.

I remember digging out a little bit. Really there wasn't that much you could do because the steel was these huge beams of steel 15, 10 stories high level. The steel was up two, three stories laying against the building. The north bridge that I had walked across on the second collapse, the north bridge was destroyed.

It kind of shook me up a little bit when you figure you were there maybe 15, 20 minutes before the collapse. I was just worried about getting out. That's all. My biggest fear was I was disoriented in the darkness, and it was a pretty big mezzanine to find your way out.

That's what my main concern was. I said let me find the exit so I can get the hell out of here. And I was afraid I was going to get lost in there and not know what was going on, on a personal note.

That was my story.

MR. McCOURT: The time is 9:20. That concludes this interview.

Thank you very much.

THE WITNESS: You're welcome.

MONTEL WILLIAMS SHOW INTERVIEW OF BC RICHARD PICCIOTTO

INTERVIEW OF

BATTALION CHIEF RICHARD PICCIOTTO

ON SEPTEMBER 17, 2001

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Today we're going to dedicate our show to all those who worked so hard to help the many victims, the survivors of the attack on America. Our country should be proud because we have so many heroes among us, and I'm just in awe of the fact that I have the opportunity to sit beside a true, true hero. First please welcome at home the battalion chief from the 11th Battalion in New York City, Mr. Rich Picciotto.

These people at home that are looking right now, Rich, they see the dark glasses. You were originally up in your battalion headquarters? Where were you at?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: I arrived way after the second plane hit, but we rushed down just real quick.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: You were sitting in your office and someone came in and said to you, Rich, you need to look at this.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Yes, turn on the TV, a plane hit the World Trade Center.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: And as a firefighter, and you've been a firefighter for what, 28 years?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: 28 years, yes.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: So in 28 years, immediately your wheels start spinning, correct?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: My wheels are spinning super. I was one of the first firefighters at the initial World Trade Center bombing. I was there and I knew the building and I felt I had to be there.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: What did it look like when you hit the bottom of the two of the taller buildings in the world? You pull up. What did you see?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: I rushed into the lobby. I see the commander, a chief higher than me, he's going insane. He's overloaded. So there's companies waiting to be -- you know, what do we need? What do we need? We don't just run in. It looks like we run in, but it is a command structure. And I get a couple companies to the side, I go to the chief in charge, what do you need? And he tells me what he needs. I take my companies and we go.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: And when you say you go, you started running up those steps?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Not running. We start going. You have to realize, every fireman -- I have a light load because I'm a chief. I just have my bunker gear, my tank, a flashlight and a bullhorn, which is the first time I ever carried that bullhorn. It saved countless lives. The firemen have that plus an extra tank, hose, tools. I'm carrying, I don't know, approximately 50, 60 pounds. They're carrying an additional 30, 40 pounds on top of that. So we're going up the stairwell. We're not running up the stairwell. And at this point we're going up and people are coming down.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: People are coming down and, of course, you're trying to orchestrate that traffic flow.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Right. And that's where the bullhorn came in handy.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: You made it up to the 21st, 22nd floor, correct?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: That was my initial assignment, people trapped on the 21st and 25th floor.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: I'm going to do this. I have to take a break, but before I take a break, there were some things that we talked about before the show.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Right.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: We want to talk about a couple of them. Let's do one right now and we'll take a break and we'll come back. You wanted to make sure everybody out there was aware of what?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Okay. A couple things that I want people to know. This is a massive tragedy for the Fire Department, for everybody, for the Fire Department in particular because we've been hit so hard. The formal organization that we usually use to take care of our members is not there, they're overloaded, the informal network also, the members in the firehouse helping their fellows in need is not there. Some firehouses are wiped out. The ones that are not wiped out, they're working, they're digging through the rubble.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: So many firefighters in New York City have been lost that there aren't enough people to go around and see and counsel the wives and the families and there are a lot of people out there right now and it's not because -- just out of necessity, they're just not getting services that they need.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Right, exactly. We're relying on family and friends, go to these wives, stay with them, even though they say -- some of them are in denial. I've been visiting some of them. They're in denial. Oh, I know my husband is safe. I was in the building when it came down. As far as I know, there were eleven survivors out of both buildings. I'm one of them. We were trapped four hours. So I'm going to these people saying, yes, there is hope, but the hope is very slim.

What I need is just neighbors and friends who know these people, there's millions of volunteers and they would all go, but these wives and these families don't need strangers; they need support from neighbors. There's no support from the formal Fire Department, there's no formal support, very little, excuse me, very little support formally and very little support, especially the heavy-hit houses. It's very little support because the houses are decimated, the firehouses, and the people that are not missing are down there looking for the people that are missing.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: I'm with you.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Thank you.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Again, Rich, you and your team, you commanded the guys, you got up to the 21st floor of Building 1, you started getting people to move. Just tell me what you saw when you hit 21.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Okay. Basically, my initial assignment was 21st, 25th floor, there's people trapped in need. We got up there. There are already other firefighters there. Once our initial assignment was done, I told the command post that this is okay and I'm going further up.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: You made it up to what, about the 35th, 36th?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Somewhere in the 30s. When I talk about floors and when I talk about time sequences, they're guesstimations.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Of course.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: I'm up in approximately Tower 1 somewhere in the 30s and this rumbling starts happening. By this time all civilians – civilians stopped coming down when I hit about the 16th floor, 20th floor. Again, that's guesstimations. They were already mostly down. So the ones above that were just firemen, you know, cops, emergency workers, mostly firemen.

We hear this noise and everyone just freezes, and it's a rumbling, a sustained rumbling. I've heard many people describe it different ways. To me it was indescribable, you know, it was the first time anyone heard this noise.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: 50, 60 trains coming at the same time.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Yes.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: The noise of ten tornadoes.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: And I go into the hallway. Everyone freezes and we're trying to -- what is this? The building is shaking. Now, this is the building that's not falling down. This was the other building.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Building 1 is shaking.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Building 1 is shaking. Building 2 was falling. We don't realize that. Sustained. You tell me how long it took that building to fall.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: I'd say 30 seconds.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: That's my guesstimation, 30, 40 seconds. And then it stops and there's an eerie silence because, like I said, we're all firemen up there and we're professionals and everyone is waiting. So it's an eerie silence. The radios stop. We have different channels. They stop and everyone is, you know, what was that?

MONTEL WILLIAMS: And you're thinking immediately, my God, we just lost a command center.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: No. I didn't realize that the building came down. I didn't know what that was. I'm thinking maybe elevators broke loose and elevators are falling through the -- you know, different things are crossing my mind. Maybe elevators. Maybe another plane hit. Maybe there was a collapse up above and it's just a partial collapse.

So I'm calling on the radio to try to find out what happened. Finally I get a response. The tower went down. That still doesn't compute to me. The tower went down. Was it a water tower? The radio towers? Because I can't see. And then someone says the building went down, the whole building. Now the people around me, the firefighters are looking at me and, you know, what are we going to do? So I'm trying to call the command post, I'm calling, I'm calling. I'm getting no response. No response. Everyone is looking at me. You know, at this point, if I said keep on going up, we're professionals, they're going to do what I tell them, keep on going up.

Then I'm thinking, when I know the building came down, no one is listening to me, possibly there I is no one to give me directions. They may be wiped out. Like I said, basically there's no civilians left in my building because I reached them about the 16th floor. I figured by this time they're out. So the only people in building Tower 1 now are firemen.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: And everybody in the floors above --

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Are firemen. Our first priority is to save life. We define life into two priorities, civilian life first, and then, second, firefighters' lives. I have to save firefighters' lives also. I'm getting no response. So I take it upon myself to call for an evacuation. I have that bullhorn. I call on the radios, we're evacuating, we're getting out, drop your tools, drop your masks, drop everything, get out, get out, get out. My thinking was either -- I thought a bomb hit the other building and brought it down, and if there's a bomb in that one, there's a bomb in this one. At that point what I'm thinking of is this building is going to come down also, the second building, so I call for the evacuation. The evacuation, you know, it's an orderly evacuation. It's not --

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Chaotic.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: It's not chaotic. We're professionals. We're filtering up the building, everything stops, and now we slowly are filtering down the building because no one comes on the command channel to tell me otherwise.

As we're going down, now I'm hearing someone from the command post that is a voice I recognize, who ordered this evacuation? What's going on? Who's in charge? And I'm saying to myself I did the wrong thing here. So it's amazing. They give the order from the command post stand by.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Meaning stop the evacuation?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Stop the evacuation. I relay that order, and amazing as that is, these firemen, I can't say enough, we basically stop. Everyone is waiting to find out what we're going to do. Car 4 Charlie, who I think I know who that chief is, says -- time span I don't know -- continue the evacuation. This is less than a minute this whole thing happens, probably less than 30 seconds. And so the evacuation continues and now we're going down.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Rich, you had just gone and yelled up each one of the stairwells and you're hollering, and I've got to ask this question. There's so many people who have wondered this. When you looked up into those stairwells, could you see?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: No.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: You couldn't see? It was all filled with smoke?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: No. I'm in the first building. The fire is above us. The first building that I'm in, I don't know, approximately the 90th floor that the plane hit. There's smoke filtering down, but I'm only on the 30th floor. We're treating burn victims that were there coming down, people coming down with their clothes burnt off, and we're removing these people. Some people are treating them and some people are going up. Sometimes you have to look at the bigger picture, you know, you have someone hurt but you have to literally almost step over them to get to hundreds of people hurt and hundreds of people alive.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Right. And these are just real raw, just realtime decisions.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Yes.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Okay.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Basically, we're evacuating. We're going down. We get down approximately somewhere in the teens, 15, I don't know what floor, everything stops. Again, it's mostly firemen, you know, a few stragglers but mostly firemen. It stops. So I have the bullhorn, you know, what's happening? Keep on going. What's going on?

What happened was the two -- it's hard to describe. There's three stairways. The two stairways A and C are facing the south tower that came down. When the debris came down, it went all over, it went into the lobby, filled those stairways up. So people could get down but they couldn't get down --

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Into the lobby.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: -- into the lobby. So all of a sudden we started backing up in the stairways. A and C are clogged. I know the building layout. I checked the B stairway and the B stairway is clear. So now, again, this bullhorn was amazing, I'm using that and I'm directing everyone to the B stairway. We're going down floor by floor by floor, hitting every floor, until we get to one floor that all of a sudden I look at an office and there's a bunch of people sitting there. You know, what are these people doing here? I tell them we've got to get out of here.

What it was, was these people were the last people in the building. They were mostly -- well, they were wheelchairs, infirm, walkers. They were real slow getting down. Everyone else got down except them and the people helping them. There was approximately, I don't know, ten, twelve infirm people and, I don't know, 50 people helping them.

So I have a lot of firemen there. I tell the people who were helping them, you leave. Go. You have to remember that everything is clogged with firemen leaving now. Pull everyone to the side, get these people out. The firemen part the way, we're letting the people that could walk, go, you get out, directed them to the B stairway. Then we take the wheelchairs because they're relatively easy, just roll them right out. It's the people with the walkers, the people very slow, very large, they're the people that we're having a bit of a problem with. I'm trying to get chairs, you know, put them in a chair. I'm running all over the place. So these people are walking with their walkers and chairs and I tell the firemen grab them, pick them up and grab them. And that's what we're doing. You can't carry them down -- again, I say the 12th floor. It could have been the 10th floor. I don't know what floor this was, but we're carrying them down slowly. We're getting these people out. Guys are relieving each other, you know, carrying them down a landing, a half a landing, then you take over, and then this other team goes back, and we're moving them, we're moving them. I basically have two teams on every person and everyone else I say go, you know, get the firemen out, we don't need 300 people doing this, we need eight people per person, four people carrying and another four. So everyone else I push out.

We had this one woman, I found out later her name because I was trapped with her for a few hours, Josephine. She was a big lady, a big African-American lady. We couldn't get a chair for her. All we could find were these little steno chairs with no arms, you know, nothing that we could sit her on and pick up. So she's taking up the rear, but we're having a slow enough time and guys are helping her. I'm basically taking up the rear and I get down to -- again, I don't know what floor. I tell people 7, you know. I know it was no lower than 5. It was higher than 5, but I say 7. I don't know what floor. And then that noise, that first-time-in-history-anyone-heard-that noise and I said it was a very unique noise? It starts.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: You started hearing it again?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: So I hear it again. Our tower is coming down. Our tower was shaking before.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: The entire building was shaking.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: The building is shaking and, again, I was on whatever floor I was on, 7th floor.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Were you in the middle of the floor or were you in the stairwell?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: We were in the stairwell. Everyone was in the stairwell. We were in stairwell B and that's the only stairwell that could be used because A and C were clogged, and by this time everyone is filtering. It's just the tail end of the people that I got to. I mean, there were people above that probably never heard it, still were fighting this fire.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: And that rumble got louder.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Louder. The rumble got louder and, as you see it, you know, I don't know, I know what I felt, I know what I saw, but I knew it was coming and I knew I was dead and I just said, please, God, please make it quick, you know, I want to die fast.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Because that building collapsed with you and a lot of other people in it.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Yes.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: And miraculously, Rich, you sit here after being buried for four and a half hours.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Well, yes. And it was miraculous, yes.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: You know, I think half of my viewers at home, as I just said it to you right before we came up, I don't know what I would have done. I would have been out there trying to get people out, but if I had been in that stairwell and the next thing you know I started hearing that rumbling again, I don't know. The 7th floor? I might have figured out someplace to go jump. But then again, I don't know if the jumping would have done you any good.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: There's no place to jump.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: There is no place to jump.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: It happened so quick.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: So it did happen so quick? So it happened so quick, next thing, you hear that noise, and then did something hit you in the head?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Yes, something hit me in the head, knocked my helmet off, knocked me down, knocked my helmet off, and I tell people -- the word I'll use is I was annoyed. I was super annoyed. Because I wanted to be dead. I just wanted to be dead. I knew I was going to be dead. I just wanted it to happen.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: When you woke up?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Even before that, I got up and then the landing I was on just gave and then I fell and that's the last thing I remember until I'm just laying in debris and black.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: And you must have fallen at least five stories, possibly four to five stories.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Later on I found out I was on the 3rd floor, where the third floor was. There's no more stairwells. We're in the stairwells, but there's no stairs. There's rubble. Again, I try to just -- you know, I land on 3. I was anywhere from 5 to 7 when it happened. We were bringing up the rear, our company was with this woman, like I said, her name was Josephine. They grabbed her, we grabbed her, I mean, we tried to just beat it, trying to run out, you know, run down five stairways, seven flights, before I was hit. But literally I got hit, got banged, we got steps.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: And you woke up on the ground and you realized my arms are here, my legs are here, I can feel them, it's okay, I'm here. Then what?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: I really don't even know if I was knocked out. I think I was just stunned momentarily type of thing. I don't know. I'm coming to and it's black. I lost my light. I lost my bullhorn, I lost my helmet, and I'm just coming to, and a short period of time -- like I said, time sequences just...

Next thing I remember anyway, it's black. I say is anyone else here? Is there anyone else here? And in a short time, yeah. Almost like I can't see them but I know that he's -- I'm not buried. I'm covered, but I'm not buried. I'm covered with debris all over. So yeah, yeah, I'm here, too, and then there's another voice and then like two voices below me initially and then a voice above me. So we're all just getting our wits about us and, you know, anyone have a light? A lot of firemen, thank God, you know, a lot of guys carry their lights in straps around themselves. One guy had a light. So he turned the light on and it's dusty and tremendous -- like if you saw that dust, we're in it. Talk about ground zero? That's it.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: But, Rich, I hear you talk and I know exactly how you did this. Now, having been with you for an hour, you didn't wake up and say I'm entombed, you didn't wake up and say, you know, holy you-know-what expletive.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Yes, I did.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Good. But then after you did that, it was still back on the case.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Yes.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Where are the men? Who is alive? Who is here? Did you try to use a radio and call --

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Yes, yes. Well, initially we tried to find out who was there, find out what tools, lights, you know, who's here, and then we started calling. We started calling. Nothing. No response at all. I know what happened. I knew the first tower went down. I knew the second tower went down.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: And you knew you were in the one that went down.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Yes.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: At this moment does it hit you, okay, wait a minute, I'm on the third floor and 107 stories are on top of me; there's 107 stories around me?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Montel, about two months ago, just a real quick story, two months ago three firefighters in Queens from Rescue 4 were in a building that collapsed. They were in a two-story building. They were alive in the basement. We had radio contact. I don't know if you remember, but they had the funerals. Harry Ford. They were in a two-story building that collapsed and we couldn't get to them in time. We just couldn't get to them. Because it's a hand operation, brick by brick. Even though I'm safe in the darkness, I know that there's 100 stories, 105 stories above me. I don't want to sound like a pessimist, but there's no way anyone is going to get to us. My prayer wasn't answered for a quick death.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: I'm sorry, Rich. So you're entombed and during that period of time that you're there, you're calling through, nobody is answering. It is dark. It is smoking. There's a ray of light coming in.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Not yet.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Not yet?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: I wish. I wish.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Tell us about it. How many people did you end up totally --

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: We were in a void. That's what we call it, a void, you know, just a pocket, everything is falling and there's a little pocket. We're not all together, but we're in a little void. Eleven of us I believe it was. Amazingly, one whole company, Ladder 6, which I didn't know this at the time because they were above me. I couldn't even see them, although I could talk to them. Below me there was an officer from 16 and a fireman from Engine 39. Also, there was Josephine, the woman I told you about, and there was a Port Authority cop. I believe his name was David Lim. Some of us can see each other, some of us can't, but we're in this basically 2nd story to 4th story -- it's not open. There's rubble, debris all over.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Just a little area where people kind of --

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Right. Exactly. And then we're trying to find out who's there. Basically, the people in our void were banged around, separated shoulders, concussions, but no life-threatening injuries. There's people below us that we can't get to. I mean, there is rubble, we just can't get to them.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: You're still thinking about getting to people and you're stuck in a void.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: There's people hurt. There's people in trouble below us.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: And you were hurt, Rich. You could barely see, right? Why don't we explain the fact that your corneas were scratched, burned, and you were still trying to figure out you need to save.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Excuse me just for a minute. It's 28 years, you know, people call us heroes and it's always like we're doing our job, we're doing our job. And we are doing our job, but I'll tell you, every single fireman is a hero.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Absolutely.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: I mean, police officers, everybody there.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Absolutely. And maybe you don't want to accept the title --

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: I mean, we are doing our job.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: -- but accept our thank you. Accept the fact that there are guys like you that are doing this because there's a lot of other people out here who don't want to. Let's move a little forward. So you're in here in this abyss. Again. You're trying to call out, nobody is answering, walkies aren't working. Did you actually think that maybe the command center, which was right outside the building, or very close, could have been completely decimated?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Oh, of course. Of course. Of course. Basically, it had to be, and in effect it was. Our Chief of Department Ganci, you go through the list, Father Judge, I didn't know it at the time, but they were all wiped out. I mean, our whole command structure was wiped out. And the people that weren't and all the people that were injured outside, and there were a lot of people hurt and injured and killed outside, the people that weren't are helping the people that were. So no one is listening to the handie-talkie. That's our radios. No one is listening to them.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: But, again, you're sitting there, you're inside this abyss, and did you not think, okay, let's marshal troops? How do we get out of this?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Exactly. Exactly.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: But then my next question would be how do we get out of this? I'm sitting under 110 stories worth of what must be rubble. If I pull one rock --

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Exactly.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: -- there's a void that actually could be filled.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Exactly. What I said once everyone started getting it, I told everyone, because we didn't see anyone, I said everyone don't move, stay where you are, just stay there, don't move because exactly what you said; a secondary collapse could have wiped us out in a second. Look around.

Look. Like I said before, we found a light and then we found another light. So look around, look around. Then you start taking your bearings. By me there was nothing. When we're doing the roll call -- I called a roll call, trying to find out who was there. 6 Truck, like I said before, is intact, the whole company. You know, who's here? Who's here? So two floors above me, or when I say two, I don't see them, but I hear a voice. A very, very good friend of mine, we studied together, Jay Jonas, he's the captain of 6 Truck. He was promoted yesterday. It's not a battlefield commission. He was on the list waiting to be promoted. I don't know if you saw the promotions.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Sure.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: He was promoted yesterday.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: You heard him?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: I hear his voice. Jay, it's me. Now we're having a conversation. Stay where you are. Look around. Let me know what you have up there. Because he's up. I have a light now and I look down and there's a couple of guys down there. I don't even know. Did I mention with the radios that I heard the guys? I don't know what I said, what I didn't say.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Originally you said the walkies didn't work. So you now they started working in close proximity?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Okay. I'll get to that in a second.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Sure.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Our first thing is we're calling, we're getting no one. There's a door down there. I can see a door. It's intact. There's rubble, I don't know, a foot, 18 inches high, but it's movable rubble. So I tell the guys let's move that, let's force that door, maybe it's a way out.

We get a tool from up above and we start working on this door. I tell them to stay there. I climbed down to them and we work on this door. We get the door open and it's just nothing. It's just, when I say nothing, it's everything, you know, it's all rubble, debris. We're not getting out that way. So I call up to Jay, Jay, any way out up by you? He says I don't think so. He looks around. There is nothing. So we're in here for a long haul. When I hit one channel, I'm hearing a voice calling Maydays also and he's hurt. I think I said that.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Yes.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: So every time I'm going through and I hit that channel, I'm trying to calm him down because I know he's not good and just every time I hit that channel I talk to him for a minute, calm down, don't call anymore, we'll call. He wants me to come get him. It's impossible for me to come get him. But I don't want him talking.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Right.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: He's confirmed. He's one of the confirmed. They recovered his body. I don't want to say the name.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Sure. Because you just couldn't get to him.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: So I'm doing the Maydays and finally at one point someone answers me, but then it goes away. I don't hear him. About a half hour later I'm going again through channels and another voice answers me. The Fire Department is a very small community, especially the chiefs' rank. Every chief just about knows every other chief. A guy answers me, 12th Battalion, the upper east side. I recognize the voice. It's a guy I consider a friend of mine, a good friend now, Mark Foran.

Mark, this is Richie. We're down here. We're trapped. I give him all the particulars. And I hear him talking to someone else who I also know but I can't hear him responding, so I'm hearing a one-way conversation, and I hear Mark talking and he says I got a company, Ladder 43. He tells Pat McNally, Pat, I got 43. I'm going to get Richie. And I could hear the determination in his voice, you know, they know we're here and they're coming for us.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Right there you must have --

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: It was reassuring, but also my mind is racing a thousand miles a minute. I also know there's 105 stories on top of us. I said even if they get right on top of us...

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Weeks.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: You know, they're not going to get to us.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Please welcome back the battalion chief of Battalion 11, the 11th Battalion of New York City's Fire Department, Mr. Rich Picciotto, to the show.

You know, yesterday, when we finished talking, and I think now all of America is sitting on pins and needles waiting to hear how come you're sitting here? A couple hours buried under 105 stories. Did it flash at you that maybe your wish you had of going quickly --

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Yes. Without a doubt. I'm thinking it's just physically impossible to get to us. Even though we're alive, it's physically impossible to get to us. One of my best friends, a guy I know for years, Jay Jonas, we still haven't seen each other, but we're in voice contact and he has his whole company up there. You know, a little bit, I see a couple of his guys, but I don't see him yet. But we're in voice contact and we're examining our options. We didn't have many options, but we're looking, you know, what could we do? What could we do?

And we could do nothing except call on the radio, and I contacted again, or he contacted me, Mark Foran, battalion chief, and he was coming to get us. And two hours, two and a half hours, I'm laying on my back, I can't look up because of the lights, but I'm laying on my back and it's black, because we're trying to conserve, and all of a sudden, I think it's an optical illusion, I see a little bit of light. I think I'm hallucinating and I yell to Jay, Jay, do you see that? And we're all going through the same thing. So all of a sudden, yeah, yeah. So I say what is it? And as we're looking at it, we're just staring at it, it's getting brighter and brighter.

What it was, was a small opening, but all that dust, that big cloud of dust that everyone sees, that hung there, and the smoke because the buildings were on fire. There was a small opening, but the dust and the dirt and the smoke was obscuring it. It was black for hours. But now all of a sudden --

MONTEL WILLIAMS: It starts to clear.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: -- the light shines. I mean, this is like a movie, but it's the truth. I say, Jay, you know, I call to Jay, Jay, do you think you could get to that? And his guys are banged up. But now I'm yelling to Mark, Mark, I can see light. I can see light. I'm shining my light out. The World Trade Center is a 16-acre complex. During the middle of the day, I'm shining a flashlight out a window. No one is going to see that. But my mind is going. I say great. Ten hours from now it's going to be dark, or eight hours, whatever, it's going to be. I don't know what time it is. It's going to be dark and then they'll see that light. So we're saved, you know, it's just a matter of time, but they're going to get to us.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: So, Rich, the light is shining through, you've notified people on the outside that you were at least seeing light, so they are probably feeling a little bit better and thinking that, okay, we have men down, but there has got to be a way to get to them, or what did they say to you?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: I'm notifying one person. A lot of people aren't hearing this. So I start climbing up, and when I get to that light, I get out that and then it opens up to a lot. I mean, I'm looking out on the rubble field. I'm looking out at a big area, almost the size of a football field, and, hallelujah, we're out of here. I mean, I got hurt people, you know. So I called Jay up, Jay, get up here, you've got to get up here, you know, we're out. We're out.

We're out, but if you looked at it, it just looks like a pile of rubble. There's piles of rubble all over the place. We're just a pile of rubble, but we're in this pile, you know, there's piles all over the place. From the bottom of the rubble field, we're about, you know, it's a guesstimate, 30, 40 feet high. So now I bring my siren up again, my bullhorn, Mark, I'm out. Listen to this. Listen. So he hears it. I said come get us.

Fifteen minutes later, no one is there. Over an hour, hour and a half later, we're in contact and, I mean, I could see an area, like I said, the size of a football field.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: And nobody comes.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: And not a single person.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: When do they finally get to you?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Mark and 43 Truck go through I don't know if it was 5 or 7 World Trade Center, a building that also partially collapsed but was burning. Now, there's no lines on this building, nothing to put the fire out, but they're coming through the building to get to us.

Finally, on the other side of the rubble field, I see one guy and, you know, I'm ecstatic. But I climbed down. It takes a long time and I eventually get to the rubble field. Like I said, the building that they came through is on fire. They're getting called back. You've got to get back now or we're not going to get through. The guys go. A few minutes later they come back. We can't get back that way. The way they came they can't get back.

The expression out of the frying pan into the fire? That building, the fire is intensifying. We're out in the open but acrid smoke is hitting us.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Heat.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Burning my eyes. The doctor told me that there's burns like peppered, there's little holes burnt into the cornea. He says it's going to be fine; it's just a matter of time.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Your wife is here. Debbie, come up here.

We're going to welcome Debbie to the show. You can have my seat. Have my seat. This is Debbie Picciotto, who is Rich's wife. Guys, give it up.

(Applause.)

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Debbie, this entire time this is happening, you know this man.

DEBBIE PICCIOTTO: Yes.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: So you know he's going to be one of the guys that went running down there as soon as he found out something was wrong.

DEBBIE PICCIOTTO: Actually, there's got to be something wrong with me. After 28 years of him being on the Fire Department, I have like this block and I don't think of him fighting fires. I don't know whether it's a protective mechanism or what. I think of him going in and being with his men and they're all friends, and I'm worried about my daughter, who goes to Pace down there. I don't worry about him. I think that he's not going to be there for a while. I didn't think that he would be there that soon. So I didn't know that he was trapped.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Did you try to call him?

DEBBIE PICCIOTTO: No.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: So during that whole four hour period of time --

DEBBIE PICCIOTTO: I kept saying to myself --

MONTEL WILLIAMS: You're calling your daughter.

DEBBIE PICCIOTTO: I was trying to call her. I said he must be very busy. He's directing people. I don't expect to hear from him. And she called me and said daddy's down there, and I said, no, Lisa. He's very busy. That's why he hasn't called us. You know, daddy's fine. But he wasn't.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: I would say I know you guys already recognize him as the hero that he is, do you not?

DEBBIE PICCIOTTO: He's unbelievable. I hadn't been able to really listen to the story start to finish until about five days afterwards because I just kept getting up and leaving. I couldn't believe what he went through. He's definitely an unbelievable hero.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Please welcome Rich's family, his wife Debbie and his children, Lisa and Steven, to the show. Lisa, you contacted your dad, right, or how did that happen?

LISA PICCIOTTO: No. What happened was I go to Pace University, so I was down there, too, and one of my roommates, her father is also a fireman. She heard from her father and I didn't hear from my father. So I was just waiting and I was evacuated and I was put on a boat to Staten Island. So I was in Staten Island. So I didn't hear.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: But for you, just like your mom, I mean, he's a battalion chief. You probably thought in the back of your mind, well, he's just busy, he's just busy, or did you think there was something wrong?

LISA PICCIOTTO: There was no doubt in my mind that he was there. I didn't know to the extent that he was there, but I knew he was there. And to be perfectly honest, I thought he was the first guy there because that's just the personality that he is.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: So, therefore, when you saw the image of that building coming down, what did you think?

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Not the image.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: You were there and saw it.

LISA PICCIOTTO: I was there.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: She saw the second plane hit and saw both buildings come down live.

LISA PICCIOTTO: Right. I think that my scariest thing is when I saw on the news they said 200-plus firemen are missing. That's when I just lost it.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Is that when it hit you too, Steven.

STEVEN PICCIOTTO: Well, I got sent home from school and I didn't know what was going on, and my mom was at work. So we were all in different places, none of us were together, and I was the first to find out everything. Someone came to the door and said that your father is out and he's okay and he didn't know anything else. So I was like, well, what do you mean, he's out? He's out of what? What happened? And he's like, well, I don't know the story. And this is at like 3:30, 3:45, and he's been trapped since 9:00 o'clock. So we knew nothing for that long. And I got a phone call from Mrs. Jonas and she told me the whole story.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: That's Jay, the guy I was with.

STEVEN PICCIOTTO: She told me the whole story, and then I called my mom at work and I told her.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: That's when you first found out about it?

DEBBIE PICCIOTTO: That's when I lost it.

STEVEN PICCIOTTO: That's when she first found out.

LISA PICCIOTTO: So I'm on Staten Island and I still don't know because I'm taking the ferry over.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: You've got to ask her what she did before she went because I'm very proud of her.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: What did you do before you went out of Staten Island?

LISA PICCIOTTO: Well, the thing is, before we were able to get out of Staten Island, we were so antsy, we had to do something. So my roommates and I, we wanted to go donate blood, but the line was just phenomenal already and downtown was being totally evacuated, so they kind of turned us away and that's when we were pushed on the ferry boats.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: You went ahead and donated blood later.

LISA PICCIOTTO: Yes.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Absolutely. It is a miracle that he is here, but I would venture to say America now realizes the hero that he was and is. I think, Rich, just your coming up out of that hole is what inspired so many people to keep working so hard because they realized there is a survivor, somebody survived, and I would say that's the double piece to your being a hero because there are people down there working so hard.

DEBBIE PICCIOTTO: So hard.

MONTEL WILLIAMS: Just because they saw you.

CHIEF PICCIOTTO: Yes. And I went to visit, you know, I lost guys in my company, I lost guys, I can't go to work because of my eyes, so I had to do something. So I'm going to visit these wives and all the wives out there, I'm trying to give them hope, you know, I survived, but realistically, you know, at this point, you know, there's still hope, there's hope, but I want people to be realistic that it's very slim. But you have to help these wives now. They need help.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

DEPUTY CHIEF MEDICAL OFFICER DAVID PREZANT

Interview Date: November 14, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MS. ROM: Today's date is November 14, 2001. The time now is 1608 hours. We're here to conduct a World Trade Center interview with Dr. David Prezant, Deputy Chief Medical Officer of the New York City Fire Department. We are located right now in 9 Metrotech on the second floor in the BHS conference room.

Q. Dr. Prezant, what I'd like you to do is if you could tell me how you first learned about the World Trade Center disaster and we'll take it from there.

A. I was at home doing some paperwork earlier that morning and on the TV heard that the World Trade Center had been hit by the first plane and then actually saw on TV that it was hit by a second plane. One of my roles as Deputy Chief Medical Officer is to respond to all major incidents where firefighters may be injured in a life-threatening manner and, of course, to assist EMS during major civilian operations.

So I immediately got into the car and drove down. I approached the area from the West Side Highway going south and came to the site and parked on West Street several blocks north. I would say, maybe four or five blocks north of where the command center was at that time. I then walked in my civilian clothes to the command center, which at the time was on West Street across the street from the World Trade Center. I guess across the street from the north building, roughly, by that underground garage where they evacuated to when the first tower collapsed.

I reported to the command center. I told them that I was there. At the time I saw Chief Ganci and Commissioner Feehan. I believe I saw the Fire Commissioner's Assistant, Captain Goldbach. I'm not a hundred percent certain of that. I saw Commissioner Fitzpatrick there. I saw several EMS Chiefs.

After about five or so minutes, I realized that I was not being of any help to anybody. At that time no firefighters had been injured. The building had not collapsed. I remember overhearing several Chiefs saying that a collapse was not possible. I then volunteered to the EMS Chiefs that I could be useful in helping them.

So the EMS Chiefs -- I forget his name. I can't remember whether it was Chief Gombo or Chief Goldfarb. I can't remember. They suggested that I report to Chief Welch, who was immediately outside the south tower on West Street, and set up another EMS triage site for civilians and firefighters that would be coming out of that tower.

I reported there. It was only a matter of walking about a block and crossing the street. I remember both during the time of walking towards the command center and then walking from the command center to my new area of assignment occasional noise from falling debris. One of these occasional sort of minor noises from falling debris wound up being a civilian. A Fire Marshal who was next to me remarked to me do you hear that particular thud? That's the thud people make. That's the noise people make when people hit the sidewalk. That directed my attention a little bit more that some of this debris might be people. I saw one or two people hit the sidewalk, obviously dead, nothing to do for them, so I did not direct my attention towards them.

I continued to walk towards the south tower. I was immediately outside the south tower on West Street when Chief Welch -- it could be Chief Wells. I'm not certain how to spell or pronounce his name.

Q. What did he look like?

A. An older gentleman, about my size or a little bit taller. He knows that I was there, so if he is interviewed, he would know my name. It's a personality problem I have with names. But I believe it's Chief Wells. Gray hair, cut short, I believe. He was in full EMS uniform, so it was hard to tell.

But he remarked to approximately six ambulances, most of them not New York City ambulances, that they should empty out their equipment and we would all walk to the middle of the West Street area, which is, as you know, approximately a six- to eight-lane street. So we were on the lane almost right near the sidewalk outside the south tower, and he said let's walk to the middle of the street. We'll get all of the ambulance equipment together. We'll pool it. I'm Chief Wells. I'm in charge of the EMS operation here. Dr. Prezant is in charge of the medical operation for this triage area.

As they were getting their stuff ready and we were all sort of walking very slowly to the middle of the street, I noticed that everybody in front of me all of a sudden started to run away from the south tower. We were not looking at the south tower. We were looking towards the river now because we were walking to the middle of the street. But everybody in front of me all of a sudden started to run. I remember the first thought in my mind was what a bunch of wimps. What are they running from? There's been a little bit of noise ever since we've gotten here and there will be a little bit more noise and a little bit more debris and we've got a job to do.

But within seconds, they were running and I started to run. To this day, no matter how I stretch my mind and no matter how many firefighters I talk to, what I think most about is a universal concept that there was not a lot of noise with this collapse. A little bit of noise. I don't know why that is. Maybe because it imploded inwards. Maybe because the noise was dampened by other buildings around it. It was not a lot of noise. It was enough noise for all of these people to start running, but not enough noise for me to be all that concerned. I have to say I ran because they ran.

Q. Who were you with when you first started to run?

A. This group of EMS people that were setting up this triage area.

Q. Do you remember their names?

A. No. And I wouldn't because I would never know any of those people. Those were non-New York City Fire. They were volunteer ambulances or non-911 or private ambulances from hospitals and I can't remember which hospitals.

Q. And you began to run in which direction?

A. So we ran away from the tower towards the river. We continued to run in the direction we had been walking in, away from the tower, across West Street towards the Hudson River. As we were running, I started to get hit by debris. I was hit time and time again by debris. A lot of debris fell on my head, on my back, on my legs, on my right leg, right knee and left hip.

As I was running, my goal now was to get across the street and to get underneath the most southern pedestrian bridge. There were three bridges that crossed West Street, one of them very north and then two of them right near the towers. On your map you only show the two that are near the towers. It was the most southern bridge, so I was outside of what you call here...

(Pause.)

A. I was on the corner originally of Liberty and West Street, not on Liberty but on West Street itself, right outside the World Trade Center buildings, the southern tower. Then I ran underneath that pedestrian bridge. By the time I was knocked to the ground, I was nearly entirely across West Street and I was under the pedestrian bridge, but I had not gotten past the street. I was still on the street itself.

I was completely prone, lying down with stuff still falling on me. Some thoughts came to my mind, perhaps as I was running, perhaps when I was finally lying down flat. The first thought was that I had come here to help people and I had helped absolutely no one yet and what a complete, total waste of my time to get killed here. The second thought was that I wondered whether my wife would know whether I was here or whether anyone would know that I was here to find me. The third thought was that it was taking a long time to die and there was a possibility that I was not going to die and what I should do is to emulate firefighters.

I should digress for a moment to say that I'm not a firefighter. I have no experience with collapses. I'm not a mind worker, anything like that. But as a medical officer here, I often talk to firefighters and I speak to them about their smoke inhalation events.

Somehow, in the back of my mind, I have heard firefighters say that you really have to find an air pocket and that's a main goal. So I had this crazy idea that I should create an air pocket and that, if I'm lying completely flat, there is no air pocket. So I used all of my strength to get up on my hands and knees in a sort of doggy position. I had this crazy thought, like I was saying, that underneath me in this area that I was protecting in this doggy position would be a pocket of air that I could then breathe off of.

Now, thinking back, this was a pretty stupid idea because construction material would be filling in that pocket, but that's the thought I had at the time.

So I worked to get into that position and things were still falling and I struggled to maintain that position. Then ultimately the collapse stopped and I was buried completely in construction material. Now my goal was to, obviously, get out of this position.

Unknown to me while this was happening but now obvious to me is that there were two large plywood sheets that had created a sort of roof above me. I was coughing tremendously. I was gagging. There was all sorts of particulate matter in my throat and in my eyes and my eyes were burning. My throat was burning. I was coughing. I was choking.

Then I felt or saw or pushed these two plywood boards. Luckily, by moving them, I actually really did not have to spend much time digging myself out because by moving those two plywood boards I was able to have enough space so that I could get out of this debris and I could stand up. I was surprised that I could stand up. My right leg was hurting me a lot; my left leg a little bit. I had a lot of minor bruises on my back that were bothering me. I had like some bumps on the back of my head that I sort of felt.

But the main thing was that, when I got up, it was completely black. It was blacker than midnight. I could not see the sky. The air was like syrupy charcoal paste. Again, coughing, gagging, eyes irritating, hard to breathe, and the only thing that I could think of at the time that could explain this was that I was still buried. I felt that the street had not collapsed underneath me, so I knew I wasn't subterranean. But I felt that the only way that all this particulate matter could be creating this total blackness is that a roof had been created, so that maybe the collapse had created a tunnel above ground, a sort of mine structure above ground.

So I had one goal now, which was to walk in the opposite direction of the Trade Center, to walk downtown. I had not lost my orientation. I knew when I stood up that, although I couldn't see, I knew that to the left of me was downtown and to the right of me would be north and behind me would be the World Trade Center and in front of me would be the Hudson River. I had a full sense of that orientation.

Q. Were there other persons around you?

A. I'll get to that.

So I got out of some more debris, I started walking, and my goal was that I would walk downtown, walk away from this area and get to wherever this tunnel ended and then I would start digging and making noise. I was 100 percent convinced that, if I made enough noise, firefighters would come and rescue me.

While walking, almost immediately after standing up and walking a few feet, I came across several individuals. I came across an EMT who was a New York City Fire Department EMT. I don't know his name. But he knows me and he's seen me since then and has remarked that we survived this. We found to the left of us a civilian with a broken leg. To the left of us would be a little bit towards the tower; to the right of us would be a little bit towards the river. To the right of us was a civilian with apparently an injured arm.

Both of these people we found by accident. I'm not trying to say that we did anything heroic. It was we found them. We tripped over them practically. We offered them the assistance of helping to stand them up and to evacuate as a group rather than as individuals. So we focused their attention on following us and we helped them, certainly the broken leg guy to walk, but it was not our goal to rescue these people and it was not an act of heroism to rescue them. It was rather, we were walking out; we might as well take them with us.

We then came across, as we walked maybe a half a block or so, a hysterical civilian, an overweight woman, I think she was African-American, crying, screaming, wanting to sit down on one of the concrete embankments on the side of West Street that's closest to the river. Again, not doing anything heroic -- someone else might have stopped and comforted her -- I had my typical approach to her, which actually worked, but not to any credit of my own. I told her that she has one choice; she can get up and follow us or we're going to leave her behind. We had to remind her of her one choice on several occasions, but she complied. As a group, myself, the EMT, the two civilians plus this third hysterical civilian, we were able to walk several blocks down West Street towards what would be the ferry.

Within a block or two walking, we came across a supervisory Fire Marshal. Again, I don't know his name. He remarked that he had survived by jumping underneath a car and that the car had been completely flattened, but he was able to crawl out. So now this group of three civilians, one EMT, one Fire Marshal and myself, we continued to walk. I was still under the concept that we would walk and make noise and firefighters would rescue us.

I can't tell you how many minutes. It certainly wasn't hours. It certainly wasn't 20 minutes. It was minutes. I can't tell you how many blocks. It wasn't ten blocks. I can't tell you the blocks. Two? Four? The black sky that I had only envisioned could be possible with a mine or a tunnel that had been created, the black sky became gray, and as we continued to walk it became less gray. It never turned to white, but it became gray, and it became obvious for the first time that we were never in a tunnel, a mine; that this blackness was just by the collapse. It was that thick of particulate matter.

I haven't seen any videotapes on TV or any videotapes that the Fire Department has that have captured that. The videotapes show that gray cloud; sometimes it looks like a whitish-gray cloud. But if you were there, you saw that it was completely black. I saw one videotape that some doctor took on CNN. I don't know why any doctor would have a video camera with him, so I've always wondered about that. But anyway, there's a moment in that videotape where it goes black and you sort of think he dropped the camera. But having been there I know that, if you stayed at ground zero, you were completely covered in an area that looked black.

That's important to me as a lung physician, knowing what I inhaled, how it affected me and how it affected the members. If I can take anything positive out of this experience, it was being able to experience it firsthand and survive.

Anyway, we continued to walk down West Street and about halfway between -- and this is just an approximation, but about halfway between the collapse and the South Ferry, we came upon a mobile command unit, Fire Department, and they I believe had approached from Brooklyn. None of their phones worked. Their radio barely worked with headquarters but not with any of the other command centers. I was convinced the entire command center was dead and was very worried that I would be one of the more ranking Fire officials left because I have no fire experience whatsoever and wouldn't know what to do or what to tell anyone.

But I did have good enough sense that this mobile command center should not sit where it was. So I directed them to follow us. Some of us got in; some of us continued to walk. I believe I continued to walk. We went down to the ferry hoping that we would meet other people.

We did meet other firefighters and officers, one fire officer, a captain. Again, I don't know his name and never will.

Q. Can you describe him?

A. No. Older gentleman. I really can't describe him. But he had grouped together maybe ten or 20 firefighters and told them that they would get whatever tools they could find and they were going to progress up West Street and find whatever they could and start to dig, and I thought that that showed a great command presence.

He went and did his work. I stayed with the command center. Then civilians were all around the South Ferry area. Everybody was coughing, gagging, irritating, trying to get some water, rinse this out, rinse that out.

Then, from another direction, I can't remember where, Chief Nigro, Chief of Operations at the time, who we would find out later was the surviving highest-ranking Fire officer, approached this area. I can't begin to tell you the sense of total relief knowing that a high-ranking Fire officer had survived and that somebody would know what type of commands to give and what to do.

I also saw Dr. Kelly approaching. I can't remember whether she came with Chief Nigro or whether I saw her at the same time. There was a captain with her.

Q. They were approaching from what direction?

A. I can't really remember. I can't remember. It was great to see Dr. Kelly and find out that she had survived. I had not known that she was even there at the time because I had not seen her when I was at the command center. I had not seen Chief Nigro at the command center. He had not been at the command center. He had been at the peripheral command center or had been walking around. I think he told me later he was walking around the towers to see it from another angle.

So once Chief Nigro was there, obviously, he's in command. He knew what to do. He told us that we would walk back to the Trade Center. He directed the mobile command center to go in whatever direction he told them to go in because their phones were still not working and their radio was barely working. We walked, Dr. Kelly, myself, Chief Nigro, his aide and the captain that had helped Dr. Kelly. We all walked uptown but not up West Street. We walked sort of towards the Brooklyn Bridge a little bit and then made a left and walked sort of almost up Broadway. In fact, maybe that's what we did do to approach the World Trade Center by Broadway.

As we did, we then made a decision that we, Dr. Kelly and myself, would set up a triage center. Interestingly enough, it was selected as being the UFOA headquarters, which I believe is 254 Broadway or 225 Broadway, something like that. But we decided on the lobby of that building because there was a pharmacy, a Duane Reade, that we could use for supplies and to set up a triage center.

I've got to interrupt you now because I've got to go to this meeting. I have a 4:30 meeting. I have to go.

MS. ROM: Okay.

DR. PREZANT: I'm happy to restart again tomorrow.

MS. ROM: All right. What I'm going to do, I'm just going to identify myself as Patricia Rom from the Bureau of Investigations and Trials. We're going to conclude this interview at this moment so that you can go to your meeting. The time now is 1637 hours and we'll regroup and we'll redo this interview at your next earliest convenience and we'll just pick up from where you left off.

DR. PREZANT: I know this story well because I've given it several times. That's why it's so well rehearsed. So I'll know to start at the time we were at the UFOA building and started to build this triage center, which is an interesting story in itself. So I look forward to it.

MS. ROM: Okay.

DR. PREZANT: Thank you very much.

MS. ROM: Thank you so much.

DR. PREZANT: I'm going to apologize for having to leave.

(Interview adjourned to November 27, 2001, at which time the interview of Dr. Prezant continued as follows:)

MR. CUNDARI: Today is November 27, 2001. I'm George Cundari with Patricia Rom. We're here with Dr. David Prezant, Deputy Chief Medical Officer, for a continuation of the interview that they had on November 14.

Q. Dr. Prezant, can you just tell us the continuation of what happened that day?

A. So we had gotten to the point where we were setting up a triage center in the lobby of the building where the union, the UFOA has their headquarters upstairs. It wasn't selected because of the union being in that building. It was just an interesting concept. It actually was selected because there was a Duane Reade in the lobby, which we were able to open and utilize many of their supplies. Our concept at that moment was that we would be having a very minimal medical intervention, just bandages and that type of stuff, and then move them to whatever emergency room had not been overwhelmed by this event.

As the moments progressed, and it probably was within less than a half an hour, we were joined by several other medical officers, Dr. Garvey, Dr. Ortiz, Dr. Maloney, and within an hour, by Dr. Manner. These are all Fire Department Medical Officers who came in to help out with what we thought would be an overwhelming number of injured firefighters, EMS, civilians, et cetera.

Also, within that hour, one of the advantages of New York City, at least on days like that day, is the tremendous number of physicians that tend to live and work in the area and nurses as well. Our goal had been to set up a very minimal, stabilize-and-then-move-on-to-an-emergency-room-type triage center. But happenstance would have it that there was a convention of surgeons a block away who then joined us and we wound up with, you know, estimated numbers, six vascular surgeons, four orthopedic surgeons, four general trauma surgeons and nurses.

So we had the staff to actually set up a true MASH unit, and we had no idea what we would be seeing. We had all of the surgical personnel, so it seemed like a waste to not utilize them. But we had no surgical supplies. We called one or two of the nearby emergency rooms, who, although they had not seen a lot of patients yet, were also worried that they would be overwhelmed. So they would not give up any of their supplies.

One of the surgeons who was there worked out of Special Surgery, which is far north of this event and which also doesn't have a very active emergency room. They tend to be a sort of tertiary care center. So he used a working cell phone to call that hospital and have supplies brought to the lobby. We sent an ambulance up to get them. The ambulance got back and we had tons of surgical supplies.

We then separated out the lobby into sections where we would have a surgery area, a psychological area, an area for cardiac events, and an area for eye irritation, asthma, smoke inhalation and that type of stuff. As doctors always do in these events, we set this up so that there would be a tremendous amount of room for surgery. You need a lot of room to do that stuff and very little room for eye irritation because how much room do you need and it's not really all that interesting. Dr. Feirstein, the psychiatrist from the Fire Department, joined us shortly and he was in charge of the psychological area.

It wound up that we didn't have many injuries at all and we, like many of the emergency rooms, all the emergency rooms, with the exception of the first few injuries, had no injuries. The reports that you hear about on the radio and TV like St. Vincent's saw a thousand patients, they saw a thousand people with eye irritation, and we were the same way. All of the space we had for surgery was completely unutilized and the small, little area that we had for eye irritation was overwhelmed.

Q. How big an area was this in the lobby?

A. The lobby was not large because this lobby was really just a feeding area for the Duane Reade and for a series of elevators that took you upstairs and for a back restaurant. We converted the back restaurant into the psychological area and a surgery area. We used each one of the elevators, I think there were four or six elevators, as a separate patient examining room. Then we used the sort of feeding area in front of these elevators for the eye irritation and the smoke inhalation. There was a shoe store which we ultimately opened as well which we were going to use. It wound up we didn't have a lot of patients.

Q. Had the second tower collapsed at this point?

A. Oh, yes. The first and the second tower collapsed within minutes of each other. This evacuation that we did, walking down to the South Ferry and then meeting Chief Nigro, all of that was after the second tower collapsed. Tower 7 had not collapsed. So this would be late morning, early afternoon. That's an important thing because that moves me to my next point of where we are.

We started hearing some noise. There were tons of firefighters, by the way, outside. They had set up one of their command centers, not immediately outside but maybe like a block away on Broadway. So there were tons of firefighters there. That's where they were doing a staging area where the recall was happening and firefighters were reporting there. But it was more than just that noise. It was some noise, some rumbling or something. There were rumors that were circulating. People, you know, the doctors and nurses would go out of the triage area to take a break, even though we didn't have a lot of patients, just to sort of walk around the street in front and see what was going on. So maybe that was a source for rumors.

But anyway, more to the point, a rumor started to develop that tower 7 was going to fall on us or nearby us. Having just lived through the collapse and having Dr. Kelly just live through the collapse with both of us getting buried, this was not a very pleasing feeling. It really does make me understand a lot about psychological stress that can occur in these events because I would not have had the same worry about this if I hadn't just come through one of them.

We went outside to speak to the Chief, the head Chief. His name is Chief Haring. Great guy. But he said, you know, it's not going to be a problem. Tower 7 may collapse. It's not going to be anywhere near here. It's not going to be a problem. But we were really concerned about this.

On the other side of Broadway maybe a block or two north is this park by City Hall. So some of the doctors got it in their mind that they would not want to be stuck in this building if there was a collapse. They didn't quite believe that there wasn't going to be a collapse and it wasn't going to fall on us. I really couldn't prevent them because I was a little worried about this myself. They decided and we sort of all decided that we would take half the supplies and move out into that park.

By the time we were about done with this, we interacted with Chief Haring again. He basically was incredulous and said: "What are you crazy? You've moved into the collapse zone, and if this collapse occurs, the dust cloud is going to knock out that entire park. You're going to be useless there. You've made it worse."

Q. Are we talking about the park by the Winter Garden?

A. I'm talking about the park in front of Pace University.

Q. So this is where you are, Liberty?

A. No. We're on Broadway now.

Q. City Hall Park is over here.

A. This is City Hall Park. It would be right there.

Q. At City Hall Park?

A. Right. That's what we moved into. Pace is right here. So we're somewhere around here. We moved into this park. We now found out that we've done a stupid thing, but we are too nervous to move back to that building. So we convince Chief Haring that he needs to assign us to a different building. He sent some officers with us and we found that a place that would be very useful for us would be Pace University.

So we got everything up out of our building and out of the park and we moved into Pace University. It actually made a much nicer triage area because, A, there was a lot more space, and, B, we had learned about this eye irritation and so we gave more space for the eye irritation area. But these are all volunteer doctors and nurses that set up the first triage area, picked up everything, carried it themselves to the second area and set up the second triage area.

About midway into setting up physically the second triage area, hanging the IV bags and everything, a tremendous noise occurs, and it's so loud that everybody rushes to the rear of the Pace University building, all the doctors, all the nurses. When the noise was over, we went to the front. The dust cloud from tower 7, just like Chief Haring said, wiped out that park. If we had had any supplies there, any doctors there, they wouldn't have been killed. I mean, it wasn't that massive the debris that fell on the park, but they would have been useless. The dust cloud went all the way up to the door of Pace University, up the stairs, across the street, right up to the door, the lobby door.

We stayed there waiting for patients and very few showed up. Around 8:30 we closed up that area and then were available just going around in the car to see firefighters and et cetera. I'll tell you just one other interesting anecdote.

We're getting ready to close and a lot of doctors and nurses sort of -- one of the problems with these events is volunteers. I mean, they're fantastic and they really mean the best, but a lot of times they'd be better off going to their hospitals rather than coming to the scene. One of the benefits of a triage area is at least it gets them out of the street where they might be utilized and at least they're safer. We had a lot of people and it was really beautiful.

But anyway, as we're closing, a young woman in surgical scrubs comes rollerblading into Pace University, into the auditorium where we were, and she says I'm here. I'm ready. I'm ready to go. I said to her, I'm sorry you came all the way down here by rollerblades, but we're getting ready to close. There are unfortunately a lot of dead but not too many wounded. I'm happy to have you here and I'm glad you made the effort to be here, but there just aren't that many patients and I'm really sorry that you had to come down. I'm just trying to be nice to her because she's done all this effort.

She says no, no, no, no. You don't understand. I'm not a physician. I'm a veterinarian.

So in the back of my mind, and I'm certain she saw it on my face, I'm looking at her and I'm saying to myself, oh, this is some liberal nut job veterinarian who has come to save the parakeet and we've got thousands and thousands of dead people and she's here to save a parakeet. I need this like a hole in the head. But of course I don't say that to her. I say, well, you know, we're not in charge of the parakeets and we're closing and I'm sorry you came down here.

She said no. I'm not here for the parakeets, all right? This is a catastrophe. They have rescue dogs here. There's a federal mandate that, when there are a certain number of rescue dogs on site, there has to be a veterinarian present to keep them working for a long period of time; otherwise you have to take them off every whatever.

Now I felt like an idiot and I realized that she was of tremendous value and I sent her over to the ESU police force, who I'm certain were able to utilize her services.

Q. So, really, after you moved to Pace, you didn't see many civilians walking by you and not many people at all?

A. It was just like a few.

Q. A desolate area?

A. There were tons of firefighters and police officers and civilians, most of them coming in for an eye wash or to get out of the dust area for a while, but we didn't really deal with any wounded or any chest pain or any significant smoke inhalation. The same was true for the emergency room that was very nearby, which is...

Q. Downtown Hospital?

A. Downtown Hospital. They really were empty.

Q. So basically you were protected from the dust clouds?

A. No. I was buried.

Q. You were buried?

A. I was buried. You missed tape 1.

Q. Sorry.

A. No problem.

No, I was buried. I looked like a definite walking wounded. Definite. My pants were ripped to shreds, blood all over me. It didn't help my hairstyle, which is usually stressed to begin with.

Q. It sounds like a very good triage area you set up there.

A. Yes.

Q. It seems like you had everything going for you.

A. Yes. It's just...

Q. Unfortunately, there was nobody to treat.

A. Yes. Also, there was a very interesting triage concept when the building first collapsed, which was unknown to us, and I think, you know, I don't know, but I think unknown to EMS. That is that a lot of people were evacuated to Staten Island and to Jersey City, including many of our firefighters. So we had nearly -- I don't have the exact number in front of me right now, but 12 or 15 firefighters that were actually hospitalized at Jersey City Medical Center, two of them critically ill. They've both recovered very well now. The others with just fractures also are recovering well. There were tons of civilians brought to Liberty State Park, which then was manned by the Jersey City Medical Center, and to several areas in Staten Island because ferries were just picking up wounded and taking them and some fire boats and some police boats were as well.

Rather than taking them around the bend to Bellevue, which, if somebody was to sort of think about what would have been happening, that would have been the way you would have thought boats would have been dealing with this; they would have gone around the bend to Bellevue or around the bend and then up the river to New York Hospital-Cornell. One would never have imagined them going to Staten Island or Jersey City. I believe that that was based on just the total concept of the city is being attacked. Manhattan may not exist for long.

Q. Besides a face-to-face with Chief Haring, did you have any radio communications with any other Chiefs? Did they know where you were?

A. No. We had the communications with the mobile center, which we were unclear of how much communication was going on from them due to technical difficulties. We had communication with Chief Nigro, who left us when we got to Chief Haring, and then our communications were totally with Chief Haring. But everybody knew that this triage center existed.

Q. It was known?

A. Yes.

Q. But most of your communication was face to face, not over the radio or anything like that?

A. The way Chief Haring communicated I'm not too certain.

Q. No. I'm talking about you.

A. Ours was all face to face.

MR. CUNDARI: I'd like to thank you for sitting in on this interview. The time is 1332. This concludes the interview.

DR. PREZANT: My pleasure.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT LINDA MCCARTHY

Interview Date: November 28, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. CUNDARI: Today's date is November 28, 2001. I'm George Cundari, working with Murray Murad. The time is 12 noon. We are here interviewing Linda McCarthy.

Q. Please state your name, rank and command for us.

A. My full name is Linda McNer McCarthy. That's my legal name. My shield is 2259. I'm an EMT and I work for communications as a dispatcher.

Q. Linda, can you please tell us what happened in the events of that tragic day of September 11.

A. Well, I had finished up my 16 hour shift at communications at approximately 8 o'clock in the morning. Then I went outside, said good-bye to some people, got a coffee from I guess the local little -- I always get a little coffee in the shed, the little hut they have there. I went over to Flatbush Avenue where my van was parked.

Now I don't normally go home when I'm doing mutuals. I stay in the city with a friend or wherever. Go over to my old station or wherever. So this day I was heading up to East 9 Street in Manhattan to park my van, alternate side of the street parking, and then figure out what I was going to do for the afternoon.

I got there probably -- must have been about 9, in the area, maybe quarter to nine or 20 to nine. I'm not quite sure when, but I didn't notice any -- first I see the first tower was 8:48. I didn't see that going on coming over the Manhattan Bridge, so maybe it hadn't happened yet. I think I would have noticed it.

Q. You were going to Manhattan?

A. No, I was probably in Manhattan at that point, coming up Allen or whatever comes off the Manhattan Bridge, up to 9 Street and First Avenue. I parked my van and I puttered around and was waiting, you know, you can't just leave your car parked. I heard a boom. I said gee, that's a pretty loud manhole cover. I saw people on the corner looking up. I said that was pretty close. I can't really leave my van there. You are not supposed to leave it until you have moved it back to the empty side, whatever.

So I went down anyway. I saw the smoke. I said that looks like the World Trade Center area. Someone said that is the World Trade Center, a second plane just hit. I said oh, my god. I was still in uniform. I said I have to go. I have to go down there. I parked the van on the -- where you are not supposed to park it until 10:30, 10 o'clock. They move it over. I just parked it and I said I'm going down. I just said oh, if they give me a ticket they give me a ticket. I'm going towards Second Avenue. Maybe I will get a cab or something.

I hitched a ride with a Beth Israel ambulance. The people on it I didn't recognize. I know LoriAnn Wienerman. I know different people. No, that's -- Beth Israel is 4 Charlie, but I didn't recognize these people. They weren't the young guys I see sitting by Tompkin's Square Park once in a while in 14, I think it is, 14.

I hitched a ride and a Firefighter jumped on too, still putting on his gear coming off duty. They drove us down there to Church.

Q. You can use the diagram to --

A. We climbed down off their ambulance at Barclay, yes, Barclay and that's not West, West Broadway, and ran down towards West Street. I don't know where the Firefighter went. He went off into the crowd, but we ran together down there. I stopped on the corner of West and Vesey. I looked at the burning buildings. I said I just have my uniform, my helmet and my outer coat, you know the one with the shiny reflector. I said I don't even know where triage is in those two buildings. I wouldn't know where to go.

But I remember the last bomb when I was an office aide at Woodhull, before I became an EMT, I put on my little buff coat and went down and there was right across the street a triage. I said I'm going there, because I know there is probably going to be a triage.

Q. Upon your arrival did you see a lot of injuries, a lot of people coming up to you, was there a lot of activity going on around you, a lot of ambulances?

A. I was on the side street and I did see a lot of ambulances parked up on Barclay, when we ran down Barclay, a lot of -- parked at angles, but like Hunter and -- you know, different. It wasn't all FDs parked there. Right away. I saw people injured but not severely injured coming towards me and around there people were taking care of them.

There was a lot of bustling right there on that corner. I just had tunnel vision. I said I have to get to where I can get some equipment, so I went straight there into this building, which is 3 World Trade Center. Right in the front door.

Q. By the Winter Garden?

A. Yes, right to the right of the Winter Garden. Right there in the front, there was a triage and I said I'm here off duty. I wanted to check in. First of all I wanted someone to know I was there and I wanted to be able to get an oxygen tank or a stair chair or something to help.

Some people were out front writing a sign. I guess they were putting triage or something. I heard within 3 minutes or something, this rumbling. Someone said the building is going to come down.

Q. Could you see the towers where you were? Were you able to see the towers?

A. I was right across the street from the towers. I couldn't see two, the south tower, very well. It was kind of blocked by one. Do you see like that?

Q. Uh-huh.

A. So when that one went down. I thought the plane was exploding, or another plane hit. I had no idea it was coming down. But I couldn't see it gone, because I couldn't see it really in the first place with all the smoke. But I saw debris flying at me like a hurricane. So I didn't know what it was. I heard like an earthquake. I said run for your lives, run.

Everyone that was around me looked up and we all just immediately ran into the building. We were running through the hallways, afraid that whatever it was was going to blow through the windows and blow down the hall. I mean we didn't know (inaudible).

Q. Who was in the command post at this point?

A. Nobody that I worked with before.

Q. No Chiefs, nobody?

A. Chief, but there was no Lieutenant at that point. There were EMTs and paramedics right there. Because I was looking for one. Where is the Lieutenant? They said well, he's not here right here this minute. I'm like okay. What do I do. Count 4 by 4s. No, you just kind of like see what's around and see what you can do with it. Until someone gives me direction I didn't know where they wanted us to go.

So we ran through and we came out the side right here. There was -- oh, once I saw it wasn't flying through the glass at us, we had run down the hallway, I saw some people coming from the stairway, so I just kind of stood in front of the stairway and said to the right, to the right. I was like totally petrified, but I was directing them around to the right to where the door was that we were all going out.

So there was a lot of people -- obviously there was a triage on the second floor in the front. They were coming down and this was about 20 people. So I took them out the side.

Q. When you said they, what do you mean, civilians or --

A. Civilians and EMTs. We had a triage on the second floor too. Then it turns out the door right here was open, but maybe it was better they were inside for the extra 3 minutes they were walking, because they were breathing fresh air, because when they got outside it was like snowing.

But the initial 5 pounds of stuff that came down, 5 inches or -- that was only -- they had a few extra minutes of breathing in the air that was inside. Then I was walking around here, Vesey and West. I had a stair chair, an oxygen tank and one mask. I had a little respirator I had put on. I was wearing my helmet. I was just kind of walking around, looking for patients to direct them up Vesey towards the river.

I don't know what happened here, but I just knew -- like I saw my friend Pedro, who is a cop at the 9th precinct, covered in dust. Covered-- Velasquez, Officer Pedro Velasquez. He had a partner in there too, somewhere that he was, somewhere near him, but it wasn't -- he just asked me where do I go. I said wherever you go, don't go towards those buildings. Stay away.

He said okay, so I think he wandered up that way, but you know, there was so many people running and I didn't keep in touch, so I was up here. I had a bunch of firefighters on the floor. I was cleaning their eyes with -- I had wheeled someone up to, you know -- someone else took over the 225 pounds of patient, going up this hill in this thick stuff.

Q. Just speak a little louder.

A. Okay. Then I was helping some firefighters rinse their eyes on the corner when I heard the next rumble. I said oh, it's happening again. I don't know what is happening. Run, run, run. So we all ran right in front of -- there is a building here.

Q. North End Street that you are pointing to?

A. Yes, there was a building but it's not there. That's what we ran into, this building, but we stood outside for a while, because there was a lady outside whose pacemaker kept kicking out, kicking off.

She said I have to go that way. She is pointing towards north, towards the school, the high school, and there is a big cloud of something coming around. I said Miss, I don't think so. You won't be able to breathe. In one minute that cloud is going to hit us, wrap us up where we are now. We should go right inside, don't you think. She said okay.

So we went right in the lobby here and other people came in and then they started -- then it was enveloped with this next cloud of smoke, debris and dust. But they started bringing in patients. That lobby, for us, became a triage area away from the front site. I don't remember names, but we had some triage tags, so I was -- eventually when we got all these people on the oxygen trees. They brought the 10 and 12 oxygen hook ups to it. Some people in them, some people rinsing eyes. We had a fire Chief in there with a shoulder and a leg injury. We had a journalist, who had -- I don't know, I can't remember whether -- maybe it was an ankle injury and a civilian that was helping her. A lot of firefighters and police officers. Maybe about 22 patients in there at one point.

Then they said the building is going to blow, the gas line. So everyone has to move on. They said anyone that can walk has to walk, so these people (inaudible) got up, they were walking, we had to wheel the fire Chief. They were going this way, and we had one man that kept fainting. He said he had escaped being killed and the Firefighter next to him had died, was killed. He wasn't hit or anything, but he was, I guess it was psychogenic shock, because he kept -- even lying down he was fainting. He was syncopizing.

I ended up with just him on a stretcher, with him on an oxygen tank, nobody else, everyone was going forward and piling equipment on stretchers and giving oxygen trees to try and get more and they wheeled the fire Chief away and I had this one young man that just kept going in and out. I said I have to get him to the hospital. He won't last going up. I don't know what's going to happen to him.

So I called out to a paramedic from Cabrini. His name is Slice. I don't know what his real name is. I said Slice can you help, he said what's going on. I said I'm pushing this guy through this thick stuff. I don't have any help. We need to get him to a hospital. Can you help me. He said sure, I will drive, you tech, we will get him to a hospital. So we jumped in -- he had lost his partner in the commotion.

He didn't know where his partner -- his partner is Andy, big guy. Andy was lost, but this man kept fainting. I said please, I don't know what's going on with him.

So we took him and another patient we picked up on the way to Long Island College Hospital. I saw thousands of people walking across. I was busy teching when we were in the -- but coming back, I saw thousands with arm injuries and nothing like life threatening right there, but totally bewildered coming over the bridge. That was cool the way you just went across the bridge. I would have gone to St. Vinny's, the places I know, but it was right there. He said well, yes, that was the closest at that point.

We went back to the scene and we picked up two more, two Port Authority police officers that had been in the mall area directing people. It had been an hour, hour and a half since they -- but it took them an hour to get out. One had an arterial bleed on his arm. That was, you know, controlled or whatever. The other one was, I can't remember his injuries, but we took them to St. Vincent's.

Q. Just a question for you. You started with the rumbling. Did you actually see the north tower come down?

A. All I saw was -- so much debris was just obscuring my view of the north tower. No. The north tower, I was up here, the second one, right?

Q. Right.

A. I was up at Vesey and I didn't even look up. I know it was the scariest thing. It was like an earthquake and I didn't take the time to look up to see it, because I saw all this debris again. I just said run, run. People were saying people are jumping. Well this little building on the end was obscuring my view at one point from the people jumping.

Once I saw a little something hanging over the side and it looked like a foot, but that's not something I wanted to see. But this building here actually obscured my vision from people jumping, because of the angle I was. It's an 8 story building. It's not a small building, so it was between the fire and that, I hadn't seen (inaudible).

Q. I'm sure it was a very long day for you that day.

A. Right. That's all I did. Around 11 o'clock is probably when we ended up taking the patients up to -- I stayed there all day and all evening too. That's when we took the patients to St. Vincent's, the two Port Authority police officers. I guess that would be around 11, I'm not sure, approximately. He did find his partner, up at 23rd Street, Chelsea Piers.

Q. Did you ever notify anybody that you were actually operating on the scene that day finally at some point?

A. Yes, I did talk with Sammy, who works with Chief Diggs. This was in the afternoon though when I was trying to get back to do a mutual tour at 4 o'clock. Sammy made said no, you have been here all day, stay here and this will become a straight tour, so the next two tours became straight time for me, so I didn't do a tour 3 and a tour 1 the next night. I just did an all day tour 2 and tour 3 and went home or did what I did.

MR. CUNDARI: All right. Thank you for keeping this time for this interview. This concludes the interview. It is 1220. Thank you very much.

MR. MURAD: Today is November 29, 2001. The time now is 1410 hours, and my name is Murray Murad of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with --

LIEUTENANT MOORE: Lieutenant ROGER MOORE of EMS Division 5.

MR. MURAD: This is regarding the events on September 11, 2001, and this interview is being conducted in the home of Lieutenant ROGER MOORE at 146 Sharet Road on Staten Island.

BY MR. MURAD:

Q. Lieutenant Moore, can you give us your events perspective on that day?

A. At that point, at approximately just five minutes before the job originally came in, we were all at the academy for a refresher, and I was with Chief Randy Hirth and Grace Cacciola, lieutenant. We had heard that there was something going on. It came over our pagers that it was a plane.

We went into the administration wing of the academy. Someone had a television on, and we saw it, and we said we should probably go. Chief Hirth was, like, why don't you come with me, because they are probably going to bring everybody from the academy anyway, and this way they can use you, and we proceeded to get into his car and responded to the scene.

We went down the LIE through the Midtown Tunnel and up onto the west -- no, east side drive. FDR Drive, excuse me. At that point at 42nd Street the police had closed off, so we had to -- a free ride all the way down and could get a bird's eye view.

The second plane had just hit. We continued on, pulled up by -- came up West Street and stopped at the tunnel exit to the Lincoln -- to the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. We figured that would be the best place to park, because there were so many trucks we didn't want to get blocked in, and a lot of emergency apparatus still responding, so we parked there.

I got a helmet from his trunk and proceeded to walk to the command post, which was located at West and Vesey Street. While we were walking, we noticed three blocks away from the Trade Center that there were body parts scattered all over the roadway, and that there were police officers trying to safeguard the body pieces.

Q. Were they civilians or you think they were from the aircraft?

A. Unknown.

Q. You don't know?

A. I mean, you really had to look to see these -- these looked like hunks of meat. People were torn apart, so we decided to go across the street on the water side and continued up to the command post.

Q. Which was located where?

A. At West and Vesey, the EMS command post. I reported -- the chief, myself, and Grace reported to Chief Gombo, who was in charge of the command post. They had given Chief Gombo -- Chief Gombo had given Chief Hirth an assignment, and they took off.

I was waiting for my assignment. Chief Nigro came over and was talking, along with First Commissioner Feehan, and a few minutes went by. They said, "We are going to give you an assignment." I said, "Okay, I'm here ready to go." The next thing I know, I heard Chief Nigro yell, "Look out, look up."

We all looked up, and the building was on its way down, so we immediately dropped what we were doing and proceeded to run towards the water. That was -- there was a loading dock from the American Express building about 40 feet away.

As we were running, I managed to trip just outside of the loading dock and came down on the ground and hit the curb, taking out my knees and my left elbow. I was now trying to crawl with one arm. I managed to roll a little bit, and a fireman grabbed and pulled me in. At the same time Lieutenant -- Captain Sickles landed on top of me, but at this time -- and the building was now hitting the ground outside --directly outside.

Essentially, I thought I wasn't in far enough, but at that point, you know, it was -- you couldn't see any more. It was a black, black night, and dust, and dirt and everybody was choking.

After approximately ten minutes went by, you could start to see flashlights and people starting to talk and moving around. They came over to me, and asked, you know, let me help you up, and I couldn't get up. Both legs and the arm were shot. I figured they were broken. They said, "Don't go anywhere."

Commissioner Frank Gribbon came over and said, you know, he was dressed out in his uniform, in his turnout gear, and he said, "I'm going to get a crew, I'll be right back." Two firemen that were there said, you know, "We're not going to leave you," and they saw a stretcher over here, let's grab the stretcher. They put me on the stretcher, and said, you know, the best thing to do is probably go out through the loading dock into the building and out the back of the building where it's safe.

They said okay. So they wheeled me down to the loading dock, put me up on the loading dock into the building. Just as we are getting ready to get onto the elevator, we heard a high pitched whine and wind and heard thundering crashes. It turned out to be -- we thought -- we originally thought it was the building that we were in was coming down, but it turned out to be the other tower.

Q. That was the north tower?

A. Right.

At that point, the power went out in the building. They switched to their flashlights. After a couple of minutes, the emergency generators, I guess, kicked in or the emergency batteries. Some lights came back on, and they are, like, we need to get out of here, and I said, "Well, I can't walk." They said, "Well, we're not leaving you either," so they got on their radio and managed to get a couple of people that were upstairs. They came down the fire escape inside the stair building. I think it was Stairway F or G. The five of them carried myself and the hundred pound ambulance stretcher up four flights of stairs.

They had said, you know, "My name is Steve and my name is --" the other guy's name is Gary, and, you know, "We are going the help you." Listening to them talk on the radio, I was able to come to the conclusion that they were from Truck 6. They were saying Truck 6 to whoever, and they were, you know -- those people came down.

They then proceeded to get me up the stairs. After about ten, fifteen minutes they got me up to the top, and they wheeled me out. There was a battalion chief there. I couldn't see his name.

They took me out the side door of the American Express Building and wheeled me down to the marina. The same time, there was a police launch pulling up, so they wheeled me down to the marina the rest of the way and put me on the police launch.

At that point, I was still basically in shock and sort of like in a daze, and they then took me -- took a few other people. They said, "We are out of here." They backed away, and they went to Ellis Island. I had asked them if they could take me to Staten Island, but they said, "No, no, no, we can't do that."

We got to Ellis Island. The New Jersey EMS was in the process of setting up their command post and their resources. They helped me. They carried the stretcher off of the boat onto the ground. They switched me on to a Jersey stretcher, put the other stretcher back in to go back and get more patients. At that point, I was triaged by the Jersey EMS, and they triaged me as a yellow and -- excuse me, as a red, because I was still having some difficulty breathing with all the stuff that I had inhaled.

They then put me into an ambulance and took me to Jersey City Medical Center. There they traumaed me and, you know, did the whole trauma workup, where I was then admitted, and so on and so forth.

Q. So they did the surgery in Jersey, right?

A. No, they did --

Q. Just stabilize you?

A. They stabilized me. [redacted]

[redacted]"But we are going to have to admit you anyway for the legs, because you can't move. The x-rays don't show any broken bones, however, it looks like you've torn the muscle. We are going to have to get MRIs to do it."

They then wheeled me up onto another floor that they had just opened to -- for this disaster, and I was medicated the rest of the afternoon.

That night, PD showed up. New York City PD was going around taking names and information from all the patients that were there. At that point, I asked one of the officers if he could try and contact my wife, and they were, like, well, the phones are out, so he says, "Let me try something."

He switched on his radio and was able to hit the Staten Island dispatcher, and they sent the car to my address.

Q. That was very nice.

A. However, she -- when she -- my wife saw the incident, she was off that day. She went in to work to help in the ER. So that night she comes home at about 11:30, not knowing where I am and knows that I always call and was quite concerned. She comes in, and neighbors come in behind her and tell her, well, you know, the police were here.

So at that point she finally got ahold of Division 5, and she found out where I was. My neighbors drove her and some other friends to the hospital at one o'clock in the morning, and then I saw my wife.

The next day, they treated me and ruled out the hip fracture that they thought I had, which I didn't. I said I really want to get to Staten Island because I want to be able to contact my wife. I couldn't call anybody because of the phones being restricted, because of the hospital, you know, policy. They only had two or one, so it was next to impossible for me to try and contact.

I had made it known, and the next thing I knew I was transferred that night, Wednesday night, around eleven o'clock. Jersey EMS took me to Staten Island Hospital, where I was admitted. At that point they took over my care, and my regular physician, Dr. Carl Andersen, along with orthopedics from Staten Island Associates, took over my case. They requested MRIs of both my legs, and they continued treating my eyes, and my breathing, and my arm and what not. Then I had the surgery on both legs. They told me that the MRIs showed that my left leg was completely detached, the muscles completely detached, along with the ligaments and the tendons, and retracted. The right leg had a partial tear in the muscle and tendons. The tendons were torn.

So they reattached everything. They put my left leg into a cast that I had to have on for six weeks. They -- the right leg with minimal work, they put a removable splint on.

After a couple of days in the hospital, they then moved me in the hospital to inpatient rehab where I spent the next two and a half weeks. Then from there I was released on October 12. I came home, and I am now going to outpatient rehab at Staten Island University Hospital.

MR. MURAD: There is nothing really I need to ask of you, so at this time, this will conclude the interview.

I'd like to thank you, Lieutenant Roger Moore.

The time now is 1425 hours, and this concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT JOSEPH CHIAFARI

Interview Date: December 3, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is December 3, 2001. The time is 1355. This is Battalion Chief Arthur Lakiotes, assigned to the Safety Command of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with --

LIEUTENANT CHIAFARI: Lieutenant Joseph Chiafari, Safety Command.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Regarding the events of September 11. This is taking place at headquarters on the 7th floor.

Q. Joe, would you tell me what happened, where you were when you were notified about the World Trade Center and the rest of your day there?

A. Okay. It was the morning of the 11th, it was shortly after I reported to work that we realized what was taking place at the World Trade Center. I heard Chief of Department Ganci from his office yell out oh, shit, a plane just hit the Trade Center. From there a group of us left headquarters in passenger cars. I was driving Chief Turi that day when we left the building and we headed over the Brooklyn Bridge.

At first we thought it was a high rise fire, not knowing if it was valid, if the plane had hit it or not, but en route there, there was confirmations that a plane did strike the building and there were several floors of fire that were definitely visible from the Brooklyn Bridge. It was a very clear day and you could see how much smoke was billowing from the building and visible fire coming from it.

Once we got at the scene, we got out of the car and started to put our bunker gear on when people from around us were yelling out --

Q. Where did you park the car?

A. Parked the car at the corner of Church and Fulton, alongside of the cemetery. People were yelling out that people were jumping from the building. We didn't visibly see that at first, because not seeing people coming down. Again, we are putting our bunker gear on to prepare for going over to the building itself.

We locked up the car, started heading across Church Street when we heard a roar of a jet engine, as if it was taking off in flight and we couldn't help but look into the sky to see exactly what it was and yes, it was a plane, just prior to striking the building and the engines were revved up fully. From that you saw it actually piercing the wall of the building with a large amount of fire coming from it. Of course, our immediate reaction as well as anybody else's in the street around us was to run and get the heck out of where we were.

So we ran back into Fulton Street away from the Trade Center. At this point when we first turned around, we were pretty much at the center of Church Street and did an about face and headed back as the street was showered with debris from the building as well as from the plane. You could hear stuff actually landing into the street area. We took a position along the sidewalk area along where a group of stores were.

We waited maybe about a minute or two and then we headed back toward Church Street, again toward the building and you could see the aftermath of what was in the street, along with some airplane parts, which were definitely very visible and identifiable what they were. So we had to make our way into tower one, which is where the lobby command post was for the incident. Our best thought in getting over there was to walk along Vesey Street. We walked along Vesey to the front part of tower one area.

We kept, of course, looking up to see if anybody was possibly jumping down. Again, we didn't see any jumpers at that point, but being aware of possibly people coming down. We came across some, again, some airplane parts that were actually smoking and it was very real to us what had happened. Still not believing what had happened, of course.

We were walking up the walkway to the front of tower one. We were met by a couple of firemen that said watch out, people are jumping, advised us that people were coming down the front of the building in the front of the building, and it was evident that at that point you could see body remains, not fully intact of course, they looked like hunks of meat, just laying on the walkway and roadway itself. We made ourselves quickly into the front of the building, wound up in the lobby.

There in the lobby command post there was Chief Hayden, who was in the Division that day and later we had Chief Cruthers there, along with the Fire Commissioner, Von Essen, Tom Fitzpatrick, Donald Burns was there. I'm trying to remember who else. Everybody was staging at that one point. We were trying to get an assessment of what had gone on. They were already aware that a plane struck the other tower. When Chief Turi and I went into the building, he advised them of such and they were very well aware of it. Richie Sheirer, the Commissioner for OEM, he was there. He was making recommendations that maybe they move the command post into where his building was operating out of. I think it's number 7. He was telling us his place is up and running and he said move it over there because there was a discussion taking place that we have two buildings on our hands. We have to put ourselves in a place where we could monitor this whole thing, for what was going on. The decision had been made to move the command post to the west side of West Street, which we later took up space over there, to monitor both towers.

While we were in there, a pretty big concern was the condition of the elevator cars, whether they were operating or not, and that if the cables would fail, if they come crashing down into the lobby area and then blow out into the lobby where most people were congregating. They wanted to get everybody out of the lobby areas themselves.

I didn't know what it was at first. I thought it was guys venting from above, but it wound up being the breaking of glass taking place and you didn't know what it was and it wound up being the glass canopy out in the front of the building there. There were actually people that were plunging through the glass as you actually were standing there hearing that taking place. So it was very evident that, what is this, you know, it was the walls of the building, the lobby area, which had tiled walls, a lot of it had been cracked off already from the vibration probably that took place up above and severely broke them off the walls.

Again, I was concerned about getting people out of the lobby area, even though that was the lobby command post for that tower. They wanted to move people out of that. So okay, what we did was Chief Turi and I then, after -- we were most likely in the lobby no more than ten minutes. At most. More than ten minutes. I should really state my arrival times.

From the time we left the building here, we left shortly after the plane hit, which was just about a little after quarter of 9. And we actually arrived at where we parked, again, it was prior to the plane crashing, so I estimate it's maybe just about 9 o'clock or a minute after nine when we arrived at the spot where we parked the car. From the time we put our gear on to the time we actually got to the lobby, it took us definitely ten minutes to walk around to the other side. Like I said, we were in the lobby itself for approximately ten minutes, so here it is now maybe like 20 after nine. We are walking across to West Street to where we are going to set up the command post.

Again, not knowing who is up above jumping. You took a quick look, but our big intention was at that point, let's just run across the roadway and just hope we don't get struck by somebody. Rather than just looking up, because it was difficult to walk away and look up at the top of the building to see people, if they were coming down or not. Again, a lot of glass in the street. Actually, the car port area in the front. Pieces of people that were broken up. Of course, there were a lot the rigs out front that I couldn't readily identify who was parked where, but there were a lot of rigs out front.

So we went across West Street, across the roadway. Directly across from tower number one, which was a parking garage ramp. I believe it was part of the Winter Garden parking area. On the ramp where the command post was set up, field comm. had their van there. The board was already set up with the field comm. officer. Chief Ganci was there, along with Chief Downey. There were companies that were coming in to stage at that point, and expressively they were, I think, very much concerned about where people were standing. Chief Ganci had mentioned that he didn't want anybody really standing on the sidewalk area. He made it a point that he wanted guys to stand at the lower part of the ramp toward the parking garage. He didn't want anybody to be struck by any debris that might have been falling down.

We were already just, again, we left the lobby, must have been around 20 after nine, so a couple of minutes to get across the roadway, so I would say definitely by 9:30 we are up and running. What's going on across the street. Trying to get a heads up of what's going on, but a lot of radio contact, guys trying to make their way up the stairs, having difficulty getting up the stairs because people are coming down the stairs.

One report was given that it took -- I don't know which unit gave it. That it took them approximately 30 minutes to go up ten floors, with the amount of people that were coming down. I think it was a single file, from what I understand, that was going up, but it took that amount of time, 30 minutes to go ten floors.

They were trying to make contact in there,

Chief Turi asked me what we could do. They had a tactical and a command channel already established, but because they had two buildings going and I think Chief Ganci's thought was let's get two tactical frequencies going. Let's get two command frequencies going and treat this as two separate incidents. I had conferred with the field comm., what available frequencies there were and gave them back my suggestions for two tacticals and two commands. He tried to put those into place depending -- and he announced them, but you got the staff Chiefs definitely on the command channel for tower two, which were at that point still coming in. Trying to let them know what was going on with that.

He expressed everybody to get on, with operating tower two, to get on to the new tactical frequency. I don't think there was really a verification of who actually switched over. At that point the Chief, he made it a point to verify what the air presence was. There were a lot of reports coming back of people trapped on the upper floors. Field comm. was getting them from the Manhattan dispatcher.

They were saying how people were reporting in a conference room. 30 people in a conference room on such and such floor, which was definitely above where the fire floor was. Of course, we were just fielding those reports and we really couldn't get companies up in those areas to tell them where they were, just accepting that.

Visibly from where we were standing, I estimate that I probably saw about a hundred people jumping to their death. Some looked like they were in pairs, but most of them were singly, free falling, to such a degree that they were doing tumblesalts in the air and forcibly landing to the ground, or very impactly landing on top of that glass canopy, which seemed to be like almost like individual skylights that were -- they were breaking through. Very noticeably you could hear them like pounding, almost like a bomb going off, a small bomb, like paum, paum. And so there was a lot of glass breaking and a lot of hearts being shattered by watching that thing.

So again you seen that. From the location we were at, we were directly opposite number one, but you got a good visual on tower number two and you could see what was going on there. Later understanding that because of the wind direction, it was more noticeable, more impressive probably from the opposite side with the smoke that was coming out, even though you could see -- you knew what the problem was, it was more intense from the opposite side of the street.

Again, it was a lot of fielding there of Chiefs at the command post. Again, it was -- at the command post was Chief Ganci, Chief Turi. It was Ray Downey, Chief Cross, he was acting Deputy that day from the 11th Division, along with, I think he had a Captain with him.

Q. Stackpole?

A. Stackpole, yes. Stackpole was in that day. He was at the command post as well. I remember they needed a command post company to help the field comm. out. I had grabbed the officer of Engine 34 and told them they could be used in the command post, even though they were not command post trained, but we needed an engine company to help the field comm. at that point, so we grabbed them and put them in touch with the field comm. officer and tried to work with them. Knowing what was going on.

There was talk about not knowing the stability of the building. I heard that being mentioned and not knowing where that report came from. It's like somebody was questioning the stability of the building. In fact, that was coming from Steve Mosiello, the executive assistant for Ganci. I think somebody asked him and he mentioned to Ganci. Somebody mentioned about the stability of the building. That happened to be shortly before the building did come down. Like I said, we must have been at the command post a good half an hour at that west side of West Street, just standing at that one location doing all that.

There was a time where he did -- actually standing there, you heard actually what sounded like another plane flying overhead. I remember even asking one of the guys from Con Ed that was happening to stand there. I didn't know if they were blowing off any steam from the building or blowing off any residual gas or anything, but it sounded like the roar of a plane, and most likely we learned that that was like military jets that may have been flying overhead to monitor what was going on in the harbor area. But that was very noticeable and you couldn't help but look up again to see what was going on.

There was -- it must have been almost like instantaneously with your eyes focused on what was going on with the two towers that all of a sudden you start to see peeling away from tower two, the facade of the building. That's what I really thought was going to be happening. I was thinking in my mind, gee, if the thing was going to collapse, how it was going to collapse. I was thinking more well, if it's going to weaken itself, most likely where it's burning at, it's most likely going to tip over and the remainder of the structure is almost going to like remain intact, so you had a good amount of like 20 or 30 floors that would maybe tip over on its side.

But what looked like the facade just starting to peel away from the building and everybody shouting out at that point watch out, it's starting to go, and everybody is like duck for cover, and we all as a group of us, you couldn't help it. Not like we had a stampede but a group of us all was running into the garage area down to the lower level of the parking garage from where we were first standing. It was good that the companies that were standing fast there were at the whole part of the ramp because they themselves starting to go in, because they were leaving probably a lot more congestion that we probably would have had if everybody was at the sidewalk area. We probably would have been trampling on each other trying to get through.

I did stare at that building briefly, curious about how, if it was collapsing, was it collapsing or was just the facade peeling away. I'm realizing that I'm watching both taking place. The facade is coming away and it looked like the upper part of the tower was starting to crash down into the other floors. I said -- maybe curious what it was going to look like, not realizing that the shit is going to start falling where we are standing, but I looked back and I said let me start heading down this ramp.

I'm about halfway down the ramp when you could start to hear stuff hit the sidewalk area. You could start to see behind you an envelope of dust start to come down the ramp itself. Not having with us any SCBA, we just had our bunker gear on and running down the ramp, I'm thinking, okay, here we are, we are going to a lower area and we are going to suffocate in here. We have no air, we are going to be suffocated by the fact that the dust cloud is just going to take us over.

I happened to go down to the lower area, down to the lower part of the ramp and it was very clear and visible there. I mean it started to get dusty. I wound up going into an office area, which was right at the bottom of the ramp. Must have been the office for the garage. I don't know. At the moment I happened to see a telephone there. I picked up the telephone and I felt the need to make contact with my wife and just happened to call up and let her know my whereabouts. I think I was on the phone not even 30 seconds and just said hello and kind of like sent a little love and hang up the phone and get back to what we were doing. We were lucky that the whole area where we were, it was pretty visible. It was not overly taken like I thought it was, but it's like okay, let's find out what's going on outside.

This thing had happened. You could see that the top of the ramp there was still dark and everything was quiet. Everything had fallen already, everything was quiet, so you wanted to get up on the ramp, but it was dark and I'm thinking that because it was so dark that that area outside us was piled with debris. We weren't going to be able to get out. There were guys looking for an alternate way out, we were looking for a stairway to an upper floor, which some guys did go up. I didn't follow them. I stayed by the ramp area, thinking we are going to try the way we came back in, rather than trying to search our way through this building and try to find another way out if it's not necessary.

Let them -- they found a way and maybe they will let us know about it. So I don't know if and what way they did finally get out, whether they hit that back courtyard or not. We made our way up the ramp. It looked as if when we first got out, it must have been a good five minutes I was down below. After those five minutes I came up to the top of the ramp.

Initially I was met by Chief Bob Ingram, and Steve Mosiello, those being two people that were at the command post when we first started this whole thing. It looked like -- the first impression I got -- it looked like winter. It looked like it had just snowed and the whole area just covered with white stuff all over the place. A lot of debris all over. The van for the field comm. was still on the ramp, although dented at the top, not crushed. One of the fellows that was working the field comm. that day was dispatcher John Traverso. I met him, he told me he remained in the van when everything came tumbling down. He said he crawled underneath the desk. He felt very uneasy of the whole situation not knowing if he was going to get crushed in the van or not, but he survived that.

Along with others, we started to almost like regroup what was going on. People started to reappear. I don't know if they were guys that fully made their way back up to the sidewalk that were in the garage area with us. I know there was, in fact, there was one dispatcher from the field comm. that initially we didn't know where he was. I remember somebody did ask me after the second collapse, they said to me, where was he. I said I remember him being in the garage area with me, but after that I don't remember where he was. He was later found along with a group of other people that wound up going on a ferry boat over to Jersey with a group of injured people that wound up in a hospital over on the Jersey side. So that was his last whereabouts. I saw him. Later found out he was okay.

So we were regrouping on the sidewalk. Again, the radio was very quiet. There was not a lot that I thought was taking place. I said this is too unusual or awkward. What's going on here. I heard some guys on the radio, one of which was a familiar voice, I heard the voice of firefighter Bob Crawford from the Safety Battalion. He made two notification calls to the Chief that was working that day. He called -- he just very briefly. He didn't sound -- sound very calmly. Would not say he was in trouble. He just said, safety alpha to safety and he just said that twice and that's the last I heard of Bob Crawford, realizing he didn't make it out of where he was.

Again, I didn't make any radio contact with him. It didn't sound like he was in any kind of trouble. I guess I thought he was just trying to get the Chief.

I also heard one of the Lieutenants that I knew from Engine 217, Tom McGoff, who did get injured that day. He lost a couple of his members with him. I'm not sure their exact location, but I did hear him and he was trying to call his control man on the radio, who did answer him. He was trying to get him out of where they were, later found out that they were in tower one. I believe Tom told me he was out on the street and his control man was inside. They even told him I heard him. Heard him trying to get him out of the area. I think it was almost evident that realizing that tower two had came down, tower one was almost evident to come down, but not knowing when. It would have been understandable that tower one would have came down first, being the first one to be hit, but tower two, surprised us very suddenly to come down.

There were people on the street, some firefighters being very disoriented of where they were coming out of. Some were parking themselves underneath the overhead ramp, not the overhead ramp, the overhead walkway that goes over West Street and I almost had to pull them out of where they were. I said listen, don't sit here. If this thing is going to come down, we don't know the stability of this overhead walkway here. If anything, just go down a block a bit and sit down below. A couple of guys were helping themselves down there.

There were some firefighters that were walking back south on West Street, looking for their company. A decision had been made at that point to evacuate anybody out of West Street, head them north. I had met up with Chief Turi and he said this is what we are going to do. Head everybody out of West Street, and start heading everybody up north and get them out of this area.

So I met a couple of firefighters, I directed them back up north. They later saw me after the second collapse and thanked me actually for directing them in that direction, because they were looking for their company, who they didn't know what the full whereabouts of them were, but they later were intact, but didn't know.

I remember trying to direct a Lieutenant from Engine 65 who also survived this, but he was looking for a member of his company, which I understand was also found alive, but pretty wall banged up. I think he was a chauffeur. I think his chauffeur's name was Armando. I think he was all banged up, but he was looking for him. He didn't know where he was. I said, listen everybody is heading up north. I said it's a good idea for you and your guys to head up in that direction too. He says don't tell me, I'm going to look for my guy. I'm not going to stop. I said I got no control over that. I am just giving him a suggestion. Like I said, we tried to get everybody out.

Chief Turi having to commandeer a bull horn. I don't know if he had gotten it from one of the cops or who he had gotten it from, but he was making a very large announcement over the bull horn in the street, you know, having all people in the street head north of Murray, I think we were trying to get, because that was a couple of blocks north of where we were. We were trying to set up another command post now at Murray and West. He wanted everybody north of Murray Street. That's what we were trying to do. Anybody we saw, we started heading them in that direction.

I had ran over to a rig that was parked in the middle of West Street, actually on the east side of West Street, probably just about even with Vesey. I don't know what rig it was. I got in the rig, the rig was running and I got on the PA and made announcements over the PA, the same thing. Any people in the street there start heading north, everybody get heading north and make an announcement that way to get them out of there.

I had found a -- this is when I had come out of the garage ramp. I had found a loose mask laying on the ramp. Most likely it was from the unit that was staging, from one of the guys that was staging and didn't grab his mask on the way out. I picked it up, not knowing if I was going to need it and took it along with me. We were trying to get people out of the area. Remember we were running into people in the street.

Briefly, Chief Turi was trying to look for, you know, some of the Chiefs that were with us. I don't know if he made full contact with everybody. It was still very confusing what was going on. It was, like I said, the whole street was all littered, what was going on.

We got to pretty much to -- I want to say we got to West and Murray. I want to say we got to West and Murray. We parked ourselves right by a police car. I think this was where we were going to set up this command post. I felt comfortable at that location, so what I did was I took the mask off my back. It was -- I said let me take this thing off. I'm not going to need this right now. I don't think I put the mask down for all of 30 seconds when you start to see tower two peeling away just like -- tower one peeling away, just like tower two did. It was almost evident again that it was coming down.

Our best alternative what to do was to just keep on heading north. A bunch of us, not all together, of course, started running north and you ran until the visibility started to reduce itself. You didn't want to run into a parked car or a tree or whatever the case may be. You just ran to a point. I did run behind a parked car. I wound up being back there with maybe like five other firefighters. I didn't even know who they were. I think a couple of them knew who they were.

We were all huddled and hugged together underneath -- behind this parked car. We were as low as we could be. Here comes the dust cloud. You know, it was almost like being in like a dust chamber. Your visibility was down to nothing. You are sucking this stuff in. You are choking, you want to hold on to something to filter the air but, you know, you're just trying to be light. We are in darkness.

I remember my throat, my nose, all being plugged up with this stuff and you just wanted to survive, that's all you wanted to do. You were hoping that you wouldn't -- you heard stuff falling down around you, but you were hoping not to be hit by anything. I didn't know what was coming down.

One fireman, we were all huddled together, decided to say the Our Father and I guess he got all of us saying the Our Father at that point, thought it was probably our last time on being together. We didn't know what was going to be going on. I think we were behind the parked car for what seemed like maybe four or five minutes. Stuff started to lift.

Again, the visibility in the street was next to nothing. All of a sudden you got some kind of resemblance of what it was. It started to almost look like -- sort of looked like a bad fire that you have been to, when the street was like all filled with smoke and you could just about make out what rigs are parked where. Or a real foggy day. It started to lift. Actually most likely, the stuff started to really accumulate on the ground is what was happening, the heavy stuff anyway, the dust.

We were looking around for each other. I'm trying to see familiar faces. Like I said I didn't even know the guys I was with. I still don't even know who they were today. After running twice from this whole thing, I think I had just about had it as far as what was going on. I think a lot of us did. We didn't know the structure of the command any more. Who was where, who was doing what. Later I did see Chief Turi again, who I was with. I found him again. I found him in the middle of West Street.

And then there was -- Chief Butler was there. There was some other people that he was conferring with. I think they wanted to get a sense of what had happened and how we are going to handle this whole situation. I think we were more -- we wound up going almost more north of where we were. To get out of where we were, we almost wound up walking almost to Chambers Street, to where that overhead ramp was by Chambers Street.

Q. Stuyvesant High School?

A. We parked ourselves. We had to take a breather. We took -- I remember taking my bunker coat off, took my helmet off and it was amazing. That was not even my gear. I was wearing the other fellow that works with us, Eddie, who has a size 12 foot. Here I wear a size 6 shoe and I was wearing twice the size I normally do. I can't believe I ran in his shoes, but I did.

We took some time there. We were totally devastated by what had happened. We had to get our thoughts together. We didn't know who was where. Our concern was how many guys did we really lose. It was almost inevitable that we would lose a lot of people. Initial estimate was maybe we probably lost about 200 guys in those collapses. Nobody had heard at that point from Chief of Department Ganci. We didn't hear from Chief Nigro or Chief Cassano. It just seems like what happened to the structure of who was there earlier?

There was very little radio contact going on. It started on the radio to hear Chief Cruthers talking. It seemed like he started to converse and get some kind of command going on again, but he wasn't at the location that we were at. I don't know where he wound up. I heard his voice on the handy talky a couple of times.

We were probably at that location, this is now after 10:30, after the second collapse had taken place. We were probably at that location a good 15 to 20 minutes, maybe more. I couldn't say. We definitely -- again, we were -- didn't know the whereabouts of where people were. I remember seeing Steve Mosiello there, who was with Chief Ganci right before the second collapse. He expressed that he didn't know his whereabouts and it was very important that -- we wanted to know where he was, his last location was known by Steve and he expressed that to Chief Turi and I think we were -- ummm -- concerned about let's try to find him and see where he might be, because we know the location where he was last.

We had gotten two truck companies that were staging at that point. Companies were starting to stage. I think one of them was 144 from Queens. I don't remember who the second one was. We started to -- tried to head back on West Street, put our bunker gear back on. I remember there were two truck companies, Chief Turi, myself. We started to head back toward -- on West Street. Back to the collapse area.

We wound up in an area where we couldn't get too far and because of the debris, we knew where we wanted to get to. We wound up going into a lobby of the financial -- I think it was the Financial Center. Yes. We went into the lobby of the World Financial Center. Building number 3. I remember going through that and what we wound up doing is going out the courtyard of that building. Actually the entrance where we went through was between number 3 and number 4 I believe.

We went through the courtyard, into the back of the Winter Garden area. I remember seeing the harbor area there. We walked around the entire park. We wound up walking around side along where the number 2 World Financial Center. Where the Merrill Lynch building was. We pretty much wound up down along -- I want to say we wound up down by Liberty Street. Down by Liberty Street.

It was there a group of us couldn't go any further. There was so much debris in the street. The whole area was littered. Our intention was to get back on to West Street and the whole area was littered. I remember across the street from where we were, there was a high rise apartment building. I remember seeing a fire on the upper floor, the fifth or sixth floor that was burning pretty good inside the apartment building. It didn't look like anybody was there. There was a pumper that looked like it was starting to -- maybe if anything, hit it either with a deck gun from the street side, but nobody at that point was involved with the fire.

This is -- I mean at this point here I couldn't say exactly what time we were there. I remember we were trying to get our way on to the other side of West. It was just too littered. We couldn't get through. So what we decided do was walk back to where we were and we entered at -- I almost want to say we were in the World Financial building. We wanted to get into the parking garage to get us into the ramp to get us back into the West Street side. I think it was number 2 World Financial Center, the Merrill Lynch building.

We went to the courtyard entrance from the harbor side down the stairs into the garage area. We went up the ramp, but the ramp was littered with debris. We couldn't go any further. It was just too hard to get to that area. I remember there was a search line in place on that ramp. That ramp was filled with water. I don't know if it was from a busted pipe. There was just water flowing in from the street side or whatever. But that was pretty much flooded with water. I remember doing that and coming back out to the courtyard area.

Unfortunately, because of the size boots I was wearing my feet were aching me. I was getting blisters on my feet, trying to keep up with everybody and their walking. Everybody was pretty much tired too, from running and all. We took a short break. We were in the courtyard and we decided we are going to go back out onto West Street, back to where we were, back to Vesey and West and try to get into where Chief Ganci might have been from that point on.

A lot of what I was doing after that point was primarily spending time at the command post, because the way I was walking, I definitely couldn't have been no use in continuing in the debris area. I felt it was not a good idea. I said okay, I'm going to go back to the command post and I'm going to work with field comm. Chief Butler was at the command post and we are trying to get some semblance of a staging area for companies that were already in and coming in. Trying to coordinate equipment coming in and trying to handle communications and helping them out.

Q. Before the first collapse, you said you saw Chief Cross and Captain Stackpole. When did you notice they weren't there any more or did you not?

A. I want to say it was -- these are people that aren't there now. Stackpole, Cross and Downey, they were at the command post. I want to say that shortly before tower two collapsed, is when they left the command post. I believe when Chief Ganci sent them, they were talking about going in to the -- I don't know if they were going into tower one or tower two, but they definitely left the command post. They went up to West Street. I don't know where they actually went.

That was shortly before. That was almost to -- they were at our presence almost five minutes before, maybe ten.

Q. Commissioner Feehan, was he there at all?

A. Commissioner Feehan, I saw him in the lobby of tower one when we first had gotten there. I remember seeing Tom Fitzpatrick, Feehan, Von Essen, again in the lobby of tower one. It was almost like converging. I was alongside Chief Turi, but he was talking directly with Chief Hayden, Fitzpatrick, Von Essen and Feehan in those areas.

Q. You heard Crawford's transmission after the first collapse?

A. After the first collapse. I heard him, I want to say approximately a quarter after 10 is when I heard him. Again, very calmly, unknown where his location was. I almost wanted to ask him where he was and tell him what was going on out in the street, but because he was so calm about his transmission I felt he had a grasp of what was going on and realized what his need had to be done. I remember even seeing -- oh, here is another person I saw at the command post who later did not survive, a guy I previously worked with Ray York, who, from my understanding, he came from the fire zone over in mid Manhattan. I think he was on light duty. He saw me. I saw him. It was almost like a wave type of thing.

I'm saying in my mind, what is he doing here. I know he's not with a fire company, but I saw him there and then later on realizing that he didn't make it. It's amazing how you see a face and knowing their whereabouts afterwards, that they weren't there.

Q. You saw him at the command post?

A. At the command post on the West Street side.

Q. Not at tower one?

A. No.

Q. On West Street?

A. Yes, in other words this is before 10 o'clock. This is, I want to say a quarter to ten, 10 to 10 that I first saw him. He was amongst people that were there that showed up at the command post. That was at the ramp. I can't think of anybody else that I saw initially that I know is not here, except, of course, first seeing Chief Burns, who I later knew went over to tower two, the lobby command post of tower two. He was in the lobby command of tower one.

Again, Chief Ganci, I saw him at the ramp, because he was with us up until the point of that collapse.

That's it.

Q. That's it. Okay. This concludes the interview at 1450.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF LAKIOTES

Interview Date: December 3, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 3rd, 2001. The time is 1340 hours, and this is Battalion Chief Stephen King, Safety Battalion, the Fire Department, City of New York.

I'm conducting an interview with --

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Chief Art Lakiotes of the Safety Command.

CHIEF KING: This interview is taking place in the Safety Command office on the seventh floor of Nine Metrotech. There is nobody else present in the office during this interview, and we're speaking in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Art, you can begin.

A. Okay, Steve. I responded from home. Let me get the time line again to orient myself to when I got there. It was before the tower collapsed. The tower collapsed 9:55. I must have been there maybe -- oh, I guess 20 minutes, maybe half hour prior to the collapse. I got there about I guess 9:25.

I went through the Battery Tunnel. I parked my car on the Manhattan side of the Battery Tunnel. I put my bunker gear on, walked up to West and Liberty. At West and Liberty I ran into a command post with Chief Jerry Barbara and Commissioner Steve Gregory.

I spoke with Jerry for a few minutes, looked at the situation. It was kind of weird, surreal, almost. Jerry informed me that it was going to be a staging area for Brooklyn companies coming in from the Battery Tunnel from Brooklyn.

He said to me stay here, take command of the staging area. He was going to go to the command post in tower two, in the lobby of tower two. He suggested I keep his aide with me until the 32 Battalion had come on the scene and then to send his aide with them. Jerry then left to go to tower two.

During the interim a few units came in. We kept them in the staging area, made sure that West Street was open to the Battery for ambulances. Steve -- Commissioner Gregory was taking information from I guess communications about the companies that were coming into this staging area.

32 Battalion showed up approximately I would think ten minutes before the collapse. I let them know what we had as far as the staging area situation. It was obvious that it was a very volatile situation with the towers burning and unfortunately people jumping out of tower one.

After briefing them I guess for about ten minutes or so, I turned to Jerry's aide, whose name escapes me right now, that he would tell Jerry that companies were coming into the staging area and to be in contact with us via handy talky for any resources he might need.

Before I could finish that sentence, we heard just a loud noise and looked up and tower two was starting to collapse. With that everybody just started running. I ran down West Street, made a right on Albany before it caught up to me. It knocked me down, blew me over. Obviously it was a pretty scary situation.

The smoke clears, we regroup and go back. I ran into Dennis Oberg from 114 who had come on the scene prior to the collapse. He started running roll calls on the units we thought we had in the area. It was pretty chaotic.

I noticed one or two of the fire trucks and some of the ambulances were on fire. We thought about possibly putting them out. I don't remember the time frame except for this time line when tower one came down, and that was approximately a half hour later.

Most of that half hour was taken up running roll calls, orienting ourselves to what had happened. Probably it was a good 15, 20 minutes before the smoke cleared or the dust cleared where we actually could start operating again to some degree of efficiency.

Tower one now comes down. Same thing but this time some of us take off straight down West Street, because we realized later on, subconsciously we wanted to be near buildings. We all thought it was secondary explosives or more planes or whatever.

I went down West Street again. The blast caught us and I guess halfway down going through the Battery. Same thing: heavy dust, smoke, whatever. It took about 15-20 minutes, I would guess, to have everything clear.

Again, regroup, go back. Almost all the rigs were on fire, the ones that were close to Liberty. I sat up stress lines and started trying to make rescues and run roll calls and do everything else for the rest of the day, really. That's about it.

Q. When you went back there, who were you with when you went back and regrouped the second time?

A. It's tough. It's tough. Without being out in the field for a while as far as knowing -- I think it was a chief and the name escapes me right now from Staten Island was there with me. The chief from 32 I know got banged up. I had seen him I don't know if it was before the collapse of tower one or after the collapse of tower one. He was banged up. He was going to go to the hospital.

I think almost everybody I saw in our area prior to the two collapses made it out okay, except certain people like Jerry who went into tower two or headed over in that direction.

It was just a matter of trying to get yourself together the whole day and try to assess the damage to our units. I don't know how much more I can say.

Q. That's fine.

CHIEF KING: The time is now 1349 hours, and the interview is completed.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF FRANK FELLINI

Interview Date: December 3, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is December 3rd, 2001. The time is exactly 1700 hours. This is Chief Lakiotes, Safety Command of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with --

CHIEF FELLINI: Chief Frank Fellini, operations.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: -- regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Frank, would you tell us where you were as you were responding to the incident.

A. I was home. It was an off tour for me. My wife called me down to look at the TV. A plane had struck a tower, the north tower, of the World Trade Center. As I watched, the second plane hit. Almost exactly the same time, the phone rang. It was Pat Cotton, my aide. I told him, "Let's go." He picked me up. Prior to getting to the house, the first tower came down.

As we were responding, we were just about at the point where the Brooklyn-Queens Expressway and the Long Island Expressway meet, we saw the second tower come down.

When I actually got to West Street, Chief Callan was there, Chief Turi was there. I was told that everyone else was dead. At some point after that, Chief Nigro and Chief Cruthers arrived where the command post was. It was agreed that they would handle the command post and I would take over the operations post on West and Vesey.

The major concern at that time at that particular location was number Seven, building number seven, which had taken a big hit from the north tower. When it fell, it ripped steel out from between the third and sixth floors across the facade on Vesey Street. We were concerned that the fires on several floors and the missing steel would result in the building collapsing.

So for the next five or six hours we kept firefighters from working anywhere near that building, which included the whole north side of the World Trade Center complex. Eventually around 5:00 or a little after, building number seven came down.

We just started organizing things on the north side of the north foot bridge to remove apparatus that was moveable and recover the bodies that we could locate and remove -- in the meantime the job was sectored with Chiefs Blaich, Visconti, Hayden and Haring, having different sectors of the World Trade Center complex. Blaich, Hayden and Visconti were all working south in the north tower, the north bridge. Chief Haring was by City Hall Park on the Church Street side of the operation.

At some point in the afternoon prior to number seven coming down, Chief Nigro, Chief Callan, Chief Cruthers, Chief Meyers, Chief Butler and I had a meeting in the auditorium of the high school that was located around Murray Street.

Q. Stuyvesant?

A. Yeah. We decided how we would break up and handle the situation as far as who was going to stay and who would go back and go home and return at a later time. That started the shifting and the way we shifted personnel at the command level at the World Trade Center.

All I can remember is speaking to one person every, it seemed like two minutes who had a problem or wanted to do something or needed something, or had something to offer. It was just continuous for 15 or 20 hours at a time dealing with one individual after another.

At that time my major concern was to get through the north bridge so that we could unite the whole site along West Street and start working where we would support each other and the heavy equipment could move.

Fairly quickly, within a day or two, we had the north side of the north bridge cleared. By the end of the week, we were through the north bridge and had connected West Street. We could move equipment and trucks.

That was to me the key to the whole job was the trucks. If we could keep the trucks moving and take debris out of there and material was searched and removed, the site became that much smaller.

It was probably 48 when we started. We knew that the footprint of the World Trade Center was 16 acres. Within three or four weeks, we were within the footprint. Now the work was concentrated at the two towers, the bathtub area, which was basically 200 by 800.

That's it. I can't --

Q. What you're saying is arriving after the collapse you have no knowledge of where anybody was sent or what assignments were given out up to that point?

A. No. I consider it a gift from God that I got there after the collapse, not just because of the physical aspects but because of what the people who were there earlier saw. They're going to carry some of this a long time.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: This concludes the interview at approximately 1710. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT GARY WOOD

Interview Date: December 4, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is December 4th, 2001. The time is approximately 11:20. This is Chief Art Lakiotes of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with --

LIEUTENANT WOOD: Lieutenant Gary Wood, Ladder Company 131.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: -- regarding the events of September 11th, 2000.

Q. Gary, I explained to you the purpose of the interview. Just take us through your response and the events of that day as far as your experience.

A. We were in quarters, and we got a ticket to respond to the toll plaza of the Battery Tunnel. This is after the first building had been hit by a plane. Leaving quarters, we could see the building. Debris was in the air.

We went to the toll plaza along with maybe eight or ten other companies, and we were in the toll plaza when we saw -- some of my guys actually visibly saw the second plane hit the south tower.

At that time all the computers went off, and we were directed to respond onto I think it was West Street and -- is Vesey the one that's on the corner of the north tower?

Q. Yes.

A. Vesey. West and Vesey.

We started to go through the tunnel. There was a delay in the tunnel due to a car with a flat tire, we found out.

We came out. After about five minutes, we went north on West Street. We were directed by officers in the street to continue to the pedestrian overpass that was just north of the north tower. We parked our rigs there. I remember parking right behind -- I think it was 101 I parked behind.

We got out and we were told to now walk back south on West Street on the opposite side of the World Trade Center. So we watched these people falling and saw the whole disaster unfolding. We went down to the corner of Liberty and West Street, and there was a battalion chief there. I don't know who he was. I never got his name. Dr. Kelly was there at the same time.

Apparently there was some type of debris that was now coming off the building prior to the collapse. So they told us to move down Liberty Street on the west side of West Street. There was another building down there that has another overpass, and they wanted us down under that.

We went down under there. There must have been the chief, maybe a couple, three, four companies at that time. Whatever the condition was, it resolved itself. They said, okay, now cross West Street and go to the corner of West and Liberty opposite the Marriott Hotel; and look up, make sure nobody the falling, and run into the Marriott Hotel; and there's a battalion chief in there, deputy chief in there, that will direct you further.

We went across Liberty into the Marriott Hotel. There's a small restaurant called the Twelve Shippers Restaurant I think someone told me. Go in there, up two flights of steps, two steps of stairs, into the carpeted lobby of the Marriott. We came in there. The lobby is narrow and long. You could see it go up into the distance. It took a little angular turn. There was a desk and bank of elevators.

When we first came in, apparently they had been setting up the staging area there for a long time. There were tables along the walls with bottles of water on them. Companies had already stacked up their extra cylinders and their hose links against the wall.

I talked to my guys just to wait right there. There was a little I guess you would call it a conference area, lounge area right there. Other companies were already there. I told them to just stay right there, I'll go down and check in.

I went down maybe 50, 60 feet, and I found a chief surrounded by another group of officers and told him who I was. He said either stand fast or stay put till you hear from us. I went back down the hallway, found my guys, was in the process of telling them to just buddy up, stay together and we're going to be used shortly, when one of my guys who was facing me -- I had my back to the window. One of my guys facing me said, "Look." I didn't get a chance to turn around, but apparently all the firemen out on West Street on the other side, following the same path that we had taken, had now started to run because the building was collapsing.

There was no place to hide. We just hit the deck wherever we were. The windows on the West Street side all blew out. The sound was just like freight trains coming right over your head. Dust, smoke, debris falling from the ceiling. It lasted maybe 25, 30 seconds. It seemed like forever, though.

When it finally stopped, I got up, made sure we had everybody. We looked around, to the extent that we could, to see if there was anyone else. There was a couple civilians, a janitor, a woman who I believe was maybe a cafeteria worker or something. She had some kind of uniform on. It was hard to tell, it was all covered with debris.

We looked for our tools which we had placed down on the ground, and they were covered with debris and covered with dust. We couldn't find anything. We made another quick survey. We reversed ourselves to find the door that we had come in, and we found that an overhead door had fallen. It was a door we presume was used to close off the restaurant from the lobby of the hotel. We don't know. A couple of my guys lifted it up. We got it up about four feet, where it stayed. We went under that, got out into the restaurant itself, which was pretty demolished.

We made our way through the restaurant -- it was a narrow restaurant -- and out into the street. There was a crater maybe 30 feet wide, irregular shape. We had to go down one side of that and up the other. The guys did it -- I did it on my fanny over pieces of steel and back and forth.

We got on the other side. I had another roll call, and I discovered that one of my guys, when he went through the crater, came up on the other side, had been grabbed by someone -- he doesn't even know who, it turns out; he's a fireman or policeman or EMT -- and put in an ambulance because we had abrasions to his eyes, which we all had but he had them very severe. They took him away.

He heard me calling on the radio, but apparently he was going faster further than I could get him. So we thought that he had fallen back into the debris for a while. We couldn't find him. We looked and couldn't find him. Then someone had said -- I had sent one of the guys down to the corner. I said maybe the building's down that way. Go down to the corner.

So one of my guys had gone down, I think had gone on Liberty Street on the other side of West Street, where we had originally come from. He was calling for him on the radio. Nobody was answering. Nobody was -- there was nobody there. There was nobody left. But he said he had heard him briefly. He had heard him trying to get back to us. So now we were certain he was alive, but we didn't know where he was.

Right at that moment we heard the second tower start to come down. We had found a Daily News photographer in the interim with a broken leg, so we were dragging him with us. When the second tower started to come down, one of my guys said look in there, there's a doorway we can get through, a doorway to a deli or superette. We ran in there, hit the ground in there. The second tower came down. We heard the debris hit the streets.

We got out of there, made our way south and east, tried to get to the water to get some air. You couldn't see, couldn't breathe. We made our way down maybe another quarter mile until we found an area where EMTs were treating people. We had them treat us. We had numerous injuries: back, eyes, everything.

Then two cops came running out of the building that we were in front of and told us there was a substantial gas leak and they were evacuating the pier. It's like, okay. We got on the boats, and from there two of us wound up in Staten Island, two of us wound up in Lutheran, and two of us wound up in someplace in New Jersey. We found Shawn Halperin during our trip too. We took him with us.

That's about it.

Q. That's it?

A. That's about it.

Q. Do you remember any of those chiefs that you ran into or any firefighters?

A. I don't remember anyone in the lobby.

Q. Do you know who was giving the orders to do what in the lobby?

A. No, never got -- his back was to me, so I never saw -- like I said, he was surrounded by other guys. I figured I would get his name off the back of his jacket later for the report.

Q. Was there anybody in that lobby that you might have picked up a name or anything that you know now did not make it?

A. No, I don't know -- this is strictly assumption. I assume that 279 was in that same building maybe a minute or two ahead of us. Maybe 101 was in that building maybe a minute or two ahead of us. I don't know.

The area where I had gone to check in with the chief was completely destroyed. There was a wall of debris there. So it was literally 30, 40 feet difference between what was left of the building and what -- I think 122 -- this again is conjecture because I didn't see them. Someone told me they were in that same area with us, although I don't know that. I don't know that for certain.

I saw the chief of department on West Street shortly after we parked the rig. I saw Battalion Chief Grezlak maybe halfway -- equal distance between the World Trade Center, also on the west side of West Street. Just strictly saw him, but I recognized Joe from --

Q. 204.

A. Yeah.

Dr. Kelly was one of the individuals that was with us on Liberty on the west side of West Street under the overpass when they thought the debris was falling.

That's it. I really don't remember. There were names that I had gotten then --

Q. You don't remember. You didn't recognize them?

A. No, I didn't recognize anybody. There was a lot of confusion.

279 we think was in that building because their engine company was relatively close to that intersection of Liberty and West, because that's where we found the chauffeur from 279 later. Their rig was right on a hydrant right there. So we assume that they took that hydrant and went into that building, but we don't know for certain.

Q. So you came out almost the same way you went in?

A. Came out -- we had only been in the building -- I don't think we were in the building more than five minutes.

Q. You went back past the south pedestrian crosswalk?

A. Yeah, right, we came out -- we had gone in -- we couldn't have gone further into the building than -- well, I went further than the guys did because I told them to stay put, stay in one place. The whole company as a whole when the collapse occurred, we weren't more than 20 feet into the building. So we knew exactly where the exit was and we went back out.

Q. You said there were a lot of guys around that particular chief that was in the staging area.

A. It was a chief.

Q. Can you give me a figure? 15? 20? Plus?

A. You couldn't get to him. You couldn't even shoulder your way in to him. So there had to be about ten guys around him. He had about ten guys around him in a semicircle. He was facing them. He was in the process of giving one of them instructions, which I assume he was telling him to take a certain stairwell and perform a certain function. He was just about to talk to another one when I said, "Chief, 131, we're here, we're in the lobby." He said either stand fast or stay put or something.

I would say maybe eight to ten. They might have all been officers. There might have been a couple officers with their men. I don't remember.

It was hard to pick out anyone after the collapse. You couldn't tell the difference between -- you were there. You couldn't tell the difference between daytime --

Q. I can't remember if I saw you there.

A. When we came out of the building before the second collapse, we didn't know we were outside the building until we ran into a light pole that had a walk/don't walk sign on it. Then we realized we're outside. We didn't know. We didn't know.

Q. Fortunately the wind was blowing off the water and was clearing it up a little bit on the south side, on the west side a lot faster than it probably did up towards Church.

So I guess that's about it; right?

A. Yeah, I wish I could be of more help.

Q. No, no, no. You have been a lot of help, a lot of help.

So you were actually in the lobby of the Marriott in the staging area?

A. The lobby of the Marriott, right off the corner of Liberty and West.

Q. Right, the south side of tower two.

A. And they were using that as a staging area because there were cylinders, Scott cylinders, and hose links had been deposited there.

Q. So you came out the same way you went in?

A. That's correct.

Q. So that lobby or that west side of tower two was still intact after it came down, to some degree?

A. Right, after the first collapse -- now,

I'm not certain how many floors remained, because I only saw it up close maybe a week later when we went back. I know that at that point a week later only maybe two and a half stories remained.

Q. We don't know what the second collapse did to the Marriott.

A. You don't know. You don't know if there were 10 floors left after the first collapse, 15.

Q. I think there was a lot more left of tower two when it cleared, but there was a lot less after tower one came down.

A. I think that's probably correct. I know a lot of stuff hit the street. When we hid in that deli during the second collapse, there was a lot of stuff hitting --

Q. Where was this deli?

A. I'm not really certain. I think it was off of --

Q. Here's a map. You can orient yourself a little bit better, maybe. Now here's the Marriott.

A. Yeah, I see that. We came out. Depending upon what street we were on, I would bet the deli was on West Street here in the vicinity of Cedar, I would think.

Q. Right, okay. There was nothing left here. This was all messed --

A. Maybe it was on the end street. I can't really tell you.

Q. Okay. That's fine.

A. We made our way out, and I guess we made our way down here somehow.

279 was right around here somewhere, right around Cedar, maybe Albany. That's where I think they were.

Q. Yeah, that's true.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Okay. This concludes the interview. It is approximately 11:35. Thank you.

LIEUTENANT WOOD: You're welcome, Chief.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MARK RUPPERT

Interview Date: December 4, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is December 4th, 2001. The time is 11:45. I am Lieutenant Chief Art Lakiotes here at the command of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with --

FIREFIGHTER RUPPERT: Mark Ruppert.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: -- Firefighter Mark Ruppert regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Mark, if you would, just take me through the time you got on the rigs, responded and what transpired during this event.

A. We got to the box about 10 to 9. We went to a staging area outside the Battery Tunnel with about five other companies that met us there, 101 being one of them, and 202 and 205.

We were watching the tower burn when the second one hit. We actually saw the second one hit and the plane burst into flames. Not even a minute later we were sent in to the box. So we went through the tunnel.

After we got through the tunnel, we pulled up right in front of the building, weaving in and out of the other trucks. We got a spot out in front there. We got out and we said, you know what -- the chauffeur pulled the rig around the corner. There were so many rigs there already.

We went across the street, across West Street, and we were waiting there. As we were waiting there -- well, you don't want to know about the bodies jumping. You know all that.

Q. Whatever you feel like talking about, just tell me.

A. We were there for about 15 minutes, 10, 15 minutes. Then we got orders to follow up. So we went under the overpass. We crossed Liberty, went under the overpass and then proceeded into the lobby of the Marriott, crossing Liberty.

As we entered the lobby, we entered it through the bar area. Then we went into the lounge area which connected, from what I understand, to tower one and tower two.

We were told to get comfortable because we were going to be there a while. Some got real comfortable. I left my bunker pants on and took them off when I -- I think I left my coat in there. I took my coat off because it was hot, took the tank off, put our tools down. I went to use the bathroom, got something to drink there. They had water set up. There was a lot of companies in the lobby there.

Q. What time was that? Do you have any idea how many guys were in that lobby at that time? 10? 20? 30? 40?

A. I would definitely say between 75 and 100, I would say. It was full. The whole lobby was --

Q. Full of firefighters?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Lieutenant Wood went to the command post staging area for instructions?

A. Yeah. Let's see. He took a walk down there, down the lobby, and came back and said -- actually when we went that way, he told us to go to the bathroom, try to use the phone, which I tried but I didn't get through on my phone call. We used the bathroom, whatever.

When I got back, he was back. He said, "All right, we're going to go down to --" I thought he said we're going to go to work. I thought we were going to go relieve companies up there. He said we're going to go to a staging area down in the other tower, the north tower.

Basically just at that time I had my -- I got my coat back on. I had my mask in my hand. I was about to put it on my back and --

Q. You started hearing a noise?

A. No, no. Looking out the window -- I was facing the window, and I saw everybody running.

Q. Gary said the same thing. You knew something was going on.

A. I yelled. I said, "Everybody run. Something is going on." We were basically looking out and you saw everybody running. Then you look up. You hear rumbling. You hear something. So you look up and we saw the reflection of the building across the street. We knew something was coming down.

Then we just said hit the deck. Everybody was running towards the back of the lobby. We ran into an area where we were -- we were running kind of towards the bar area where we came in. So I guess instinct tells you to go the way you came in, so instinct.

You felt it all coming. You felt the rumbling. You heard it hitting the floor. Then it was just that hit and the wind came and was blowing us. Back into the bar area is where it blew us. Somewhere along the line a rolldown gate came down between the lobby and the bar, and we realized that was the only way out after a few minutes of being in there. We didn't know what was in there. We lifted the gate up to get out.

What were you going to say? You were going to say something?

Q. I was running down Liberty. I was one of the guys you saw running, because we could see it actually happening. We looked up -- see, I'm surprised -- what was in my mind and I could never forget it is the noise it made.

A. Yeah.

Q. It was like a train --

A. A freight train.

Q. -- going over my head. When Gary said that you thought you heard something, it really was incredible. He didn't hear what we heard. We knew he was right under it, but we heard from the outside.

A. Did you hear the snapping on that? Did you hear the floor snapping? After the first one came, we wound up going across the street. We wound up -- we were going where the windows were. We were going out that way. We didn't realize we were out of the building until we were in the middle of West Street, basically. There was a crevice that we were climbing down and all this steel --

Q. What was the visibility like?

A. It was very hazy, very thick. But you could see. You look back and you couldn't really see the building -- anything. But once you were across the street, you look and you see the structure, steel sticking up still.

Then when we were across the street -- as we were going, there was a guy in a bush. He might have been a reporter of some kind. David something. I grabbed someone else and said, "Let's get this guy." We pulled him across the street, and we took him with us into -- there was a deli over there. We put him in there.

Then as we said what are we going to do now, what are we going to do with this guy, what's our next move, that's when the second building -- I guess 10 minutes later? 15 minutes later? I don't know. It seemed like that much.

But then we saw the other one coming down. Part of you wanted to keep looking because it was like holy cow. You could hear it going "kachoo, kachoo, kachoo." Now outside it's total hysteria, and you had time because it's this big building. You had -- I don't know, how long did it take? Looking at it we said we better get in.

We started running. We realized we've got to get cover. We all started diving into this store, pushing each other in, pushing a guy and he's pushing you. You get in there, and it's basically the same thing. That wind was blowing and debris messed that building up. All the windows were broken in the front of the building. We thought we were buried in there. Somebody started panicking, and somebody took over and told them to shut the hell up.

Q. That bad?

A. Yeah.

Then somebody walked outside and said let's see if we can get outside. It was clear. You couldn't see anything, but we could walk out and we weren't buried. The dust was settling.

We grabbed that guy again and we pulled him down West Street to the water, and they took him in the boat. Then we walked along the water to where they were evacuating people. We got a bunch of people on. Everybody was standing around. Finally officers said, "You guys, we're going to go now."

That's basically it.

Q. You don't know how much time you have on the job? I asked your chief about it, but I don't remember.

A. I have like three years.

Q. Okay. So don't know of anybody you saw in the lobby except for your own company?

A. I remember seeing guys from 101.

Q. You do?

A. Yeah.

Q. At what point in time do you remember seeing them?

A. I saw them on the outside of the tunnel when we met there. Then we pulled into 101. I know the faces. I think it was a guy from 122. I saw 122 in there. 101, I'm pretty sure they were down in front. We were in the lobby. They went down further, and we were on this side.

Q. You were more towards the Liberty Street side?

A. We were more towards Liberty, yeah, and they were in front of there. There was dozens of firemen. I don't know why at that point -- I know after we came down and I was walking out and I couldn't find my helmet and my tools. I was kicking a helmet, so I shook it off, I put it on my head, and I went out, thinking it was mine.

A guy when I was outside, he said, "You're from 58?" I said, "No, I just found this helmet." I didn't even know what number was on it. He said, "That's my helmet." So whether it was or not, he got his helmet back. So I know 58 was in there.

Q. You didn't see anybody from 101 after that?

A. No, no. After that it was who was with us there. Basically it was guys from our company. There was a pedestrian or two. That was about it, really. I can't hardly remember. I know it was us from our company. There were a few other firefighters, that guy there from 58. That's it. I can't remember anybody else being with us there. There weren't too many with us. There were about 10, 12 guys there, maybe. That's it.

Q. Your memory is better than mine, believe me.

A. Part of you starts searching, thinking you're going to find tools, find my helmet, any other guys. It was just such a mess.

Q. How was the visibility?

A. They said we're going out, everybody out, grab people and we're going out.

Q. How was the visibility in the lobby of the hotel after the collapse?

A. It was settling. It was like a thick smoke. It was thick. It was a thick dust. You could see. It was settling. At first you couldn't see a thing. I was worried about breathing. I couldn't see. I had my hood over. Good thing I had the hood. I had that over my mouth, and I was breathing through that. You're kicking a lot of dust and dirt and papers. Everybody looked like a statue. All you could see was the guys and the mouth.

Q. The eyes were all red.

A. Yeah. It seemed like everybody was going "blah" with their mouth and spitting. We went to the guy across the street and we kind of tried to towel up, get the junk out. It was bad, but you could see. It was like a thick fog. You could actually see to get to walk. You could see in front of you.

I wish --

Q. You did fine.

A. I'm pretty aware of when I go to jobs I look at different companies that are there.

Q. Sure.

A. I just wish I would have a little more --

Q. Let me tell you, it was traumatic for everybody that was there. A lot of us don't remember a lot that went on.

Okay. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER EDWARD DAVIS

Interview Date: December 4, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is December 4, 2001. The time is approximately 11:10. This is Chief Art Lakiotes of the Safety Battalion, New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER EDWARD DAVIS: Firefighter Edward Davis.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Who was assigned to Battalion 32. Regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Eddie, just take me through your response to the World Trade Center and what transpired after that.

A. Responded to the World Trade Center with the 21 Battalion. The 32 Battalion car was at the rock. Responded with them, arrived about 2 minutes prior to the first collapse, which I believe was the south tower. Upon that collapse, was upon the scene also for the second collapse, and conducted a search and attempted rescue from that point on.

Q. Did you see anybody else that was there that may have not made it, can you think of anybody?

A. Can't think of anybody that didn't make it. Ladder 101 was there, but I hadn't seen any of them prior to my arrival other than being in the fire house before the start of our tours.

Q. Everyone you saw in that area, myself included, you saw afterwards?

A. That's correct, sir.

Q. There is no way of telling where anybody was that didn't make it at that point?

A. That's correct.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Okay Ed. Thank you.

FIREFIGHTER EDWARD DAVIS: Okay, Chief.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: This concludes the interview at approximately 11:15.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ERIC BERNTSEN

Interview Date: December 4, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is December 4, 2001. The time is 1300 hours. My name is Battalion Chief Art Lakiotes of the Safety Command. I am conducting an interview with --

FIREFIGHTER BERNTSEN: Eric Berntsen.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: -- Firefighter Eric Berntsen regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Eric, would you just mind telling me in your own words, from the time you responded, exactly where and what and how the day unfolded for you.

A. Okay. We heard the explosions from the kitchen. We went up on the roof and got there just in time to see the second plane hit the towers. So we figured we would be going on that. So we ran downstairs. By the time we got down to the apparatus floor, we got the ticket. It was about five after 9:00. I jumped on the rig. I was an extra man. The dispatcher came over and announced to bring the extra man. I was supposed to be detailed to 205, but I called to quarters and they said they were out, so I jumped on the rig.

We went down to the Trade Center. On the way there, we experienced a lot of traffic. We went over the Brooklyn Bridge, came down Church Street, made a right onto Liberty, and parked near 10 and 10's quarters, on the opposite side, on 10 and 10's side of Liberty. We grabbed the rollups and an extra bottle and walked down Liberty towards West Street. When we got to the corner of West Street, we made a right and I ran into the Marriott. We stopped underneath the pedestrian bridge where a lot of guys were using that for shelter, so we didn't get hit by anything coming down, bodies, et cetera.

We ran into the Marriott and stayed by the security desk there. The officer went off, got orders from a Chief, and we were told to go to the 74th floor of the south tower. He came back, told us what we were doing. We gathered the company together, started heading north through the Marriott. Then we made a right and went down the ramp to get to the concourse level.

We headed eastbound in the concourse level to where it first turns up to the left, where the mall turns up to the left, up north, and we got to that corner and the officer told us to wait there. Instead of carrying the stuff all around, he was going to try to find a staircase or the best way we could get up.

He walked away. He went west in the concourse and talked to a security guy. He was, I guess, about 100 feet away from us, maybe more.

That's when we heard the building start shaking. I looked up into the Marriott, because you could see up into it from where we were standing, and just saw black, like dust. I saw stuff falling off the ceiling and I saw just black dust coming down. I turned and I ran a couple of steps west, a couple of steps east, and then we turned up north, up into the concourse, because I didn't see anything falling in that area at that time. So I felt that was the safest direction to go. I jumped into a corner. The lights went out. I jumped into a corner under an archway. I thought maybe that might provide some better support. I just held my helmet. I figured we were going to get like a pancake collapse on top of us.

After the building stopped shaking and there was no rumbling noise any more, Vinny Picciano of 212 regrouped the company by saying 212, regroup, get back. 212, where are you? We all got back together. We all turned on our lights. We talked to the civilians, told them to keep quiet, to stay calm, don't yell or scream, everybody stay calm, we are going to get out of here. We asked if anybody knew how to get out. Me and this guy who was with us, he said he knew how, but he couldn't really see too much. He looked like he was blinded by the dust. We just walked store to store. He was asking us what store do you see? We told him all the stores and we just headed north through the concourse and came out in between the PATH and the number 1 and number 9 line. There is an exit there that comes out into building 5. It comes out on the exterior of building 5, which leaves you off in the middle of Vesey Street, between Church and West Broadway.

We got out, myself and Jimmy Murphy, who was detailed to 212 from 220 Engine. We chocked the doors outside, went back in, told all the people this is an exit. We had about 50 civilians with us. We told them to exit out that way. We made kind of like a chain with lights, with flashlights, so they could see where they were going to get them out. Once everybody was out, we went back in and we started searching.

We tried to give a Mayday for our officer because our officer wasn't with us. We couldn't find him. We went back in and we searched the stores, searched the PATH. There were some more people still in there. I remember a guy from the GAP. He was the manager. I asked if anybody was in there. He said no, he was the last guy to leave. So we got him out. We found a guy, probably in his mid 40s, bald head, or short crew cut hair, under the concrete. We picked him up, put him in a chair and carried him out.

When we got out on to Vesey, there was a Port Authority cop with us and he said that they were given reports that the second building was going to come down. So we made a decision we'd better leave. We came out of the door on Vesey Street. We were exhausted from carrying this gentleman who was pretty heavy, we estimated about 300 pounds, 275. It took six guys to carry him. We were all exhausted. We were changing. We didn't know if we could get him out of there before this building was going to come down, so we put him down for a second, took a breath, and made a decision to just go for it and pick him up. We made it a couple of steps and then we heard the rumble and we knew the second tower was coming down. Everybody let go of the guy and ran. There was no talking, no looking. You just went.

Q. What direction?

A. There was a cop, NYPD, I'm pretty sure it was an NYPD guy, and Vinnie Picciano were in front of me. We were facing north. We didn't even reach the sidewalk. We didn't even get off the sidewalk in front of building 5. I saw them run forward, north, heading across the street.

Q. Up West Broadway?

A. Across Vesey Street from where building 5 is. Directly straight across Vesey Street towards the Federal Office Building, the Post Office. Vinnie and the cop jumped under a car. Vinnie Picciano jumped up on top of him. There was no room for me there and I thought I could make it a little bit further than that. So once I hit the sidewalk on the Federal Building, on Vesey, I turned right, which had me east on Vesey Street, and I started running. Then I looked up and I saw a dark cloud and I grabbed my helmet.

The force knocked me down, blew me. I don't know how far I went, but I went forward pretty far. It knocked the wind out of me. I got covered with debris and just kept my hands on my helmet. Something pretty big hit me and knocked my helmet off. I felt a blast and just a lot of pressure when it hit me. So I had no helmet. I put my hands back on top of my head and I felt debris hit me. I felt weight piling up on my back and I figured I was going to be under what I thought was about 10 feet of rubble.

When it all stopped, I said what do I do now? I said, well, I can't breathe. Let me get my mask on. I got my mask out. I didn't realize my bottle wasn't on. So I couldn't reach it because I was face down, and I kind of gave up. Then I was still laying there. I said I can't just lay here. I said let me get out of here. Let me see how deep I am, see what I can do. I remember saying I have no radio, this fucking job, I can't get any kind of radio.

When I pulled myself out from this debris that was on my back and my legs, I was up against the wall of the Federal Building, and then I realized it was still pitch black. I said I must be in a big void because it was pitch black and I couldn't see anywhere.

Then, as it started lightening up a little bit, I started using my light. I was able to see over the top of the debris around me. I could see up the wall a little bit. I realized, holy shit, I'm free. I'm not buried. I got up. I took a step and just collapsed because I had no energy. I got up again, took two more steps and collapsed. Then a cop picked me up and helped me walk up to Church. I made a left on Church and there was a car on fire on the corner.

Maybe 50 feet, 100 feet up Church, I saw Vinnie Picciano, who was under the car with that cop. He was stumbling around. He had a bad gash on the back of his head. There was blood coming out from the back of his turnout coat. He was a little dizzy and disoriented. He asked me to look at his cut. I told him it's all right. You will be okay. I didn't really think so, but what are you going to tell him at that point? I said you got a good cut, but you're going to be all right.

We walked up Church, made a right on to Barclay and dropped our masks and continued up to Broadway and got to I guess it was Park Place maybe and Broadway. We got into the back of an ambulance and got Vinnie's head checked out. Then we left the ambulance because there were secondary collapses. I was hearing secondary collapses and I didn't know how far away we were. I didn't know how much of the building came off. I said I want to get out of here, as far away from this place as possible.

We headed north and got to Duane Street. I said, oh, the 7 and 1 is over here. We made a left and we walked into the quarters. Three guys that were in the company, Jimmy Murphy, Joe Galasso, Danny Walker, they were all standing there.

Q. What company are they in?

A. 212. Same company. Me and Vinnie thought they were dead because we were the only two that walked in. We only saw each other on Church. They must have came out before us, after us, you know. What happened is they ran back into World Trade Center 5. Me and Vinnie and the cop ran forward. So they were okay, but they got beat up with the debris. They got tossed around, blown off their feet. So we had everybody except the officer and the chauffeur. We didn't know where the chauffeur was because we were on the complete opposite side now.

We saw a Chief. We let the Chief know that these guys were missing. So we regrouped and from 7 and 1 we took an ambulance to Jamaica Hospital, Queens. That's most of my recollection.

Q. The Lieutenant and the chauffeur?

A. They were alive. The chauffeur got blown down I don't know what street. Somewhere.

Q. He was with the rig?

A. Yes, he was with the rig. The officer made it out with some of the guys from 238. I don't know how they got out. I don't know which direction they went in.

Q. I'll try to get an interview with him.

A. Yes. But he made it out and he was with Lieutenant Glenn Wilkinson. They were trying to come back, to get back into the building, because he knew we were in there, and they were trying to get a mask. By the time they got masks for each of them, they lost it after the collapse. They were tangled and stuff. They dropped it. I don't know about looking for my officer.

Q. What was his name?

A. Neil Brosnan.

Q. Did you notice any other companies in the lobby of the Marriott when you were in there?

A. No, I didn't. The only person I saw that I recognized was Chuck Margiotta and he was asking everybody if they had an extra mask for a Chief.

Q. His unit is?

A. I don't know what unit he was working in that day. I believe he was assigned to 85 Truck, but I don't know where he was working that day.

Q. You saw him in the lobby?

A. I saw him in the lobby.

Q. Do you remember how far down in the lobby off of Liberty, off the staircase? A hundred feet down?

A. About 100 feet down. I saw him there, but then he left. I don't know how far he went, but I saw him headed north.

Q. Towards tower 1?

A. Right. Towards the north tower. I saw him headed that way.

Q. How many guys do you think were in the lobby at that point when you got there; 20, 50, 100, crowded?

A. At least 50. Probably over 10, maybe 15 companies, 12 companies, something like that. There were Chiefs. I saw a couple of Chiefs who were just kind of walking through. I don't remember who they were.

Q. What happened to the rig? Did the rig survive?

A. The rig survived. It got beat up, the windows blown out, a little fire damage, not that much.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Okay. Very good. Excellent. This concludes the interview. It is now 1320.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER VINCENT MASSA

Interview Date: December 4, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is December 4th, 2001. The time is 4:44. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the safety battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with Vincent Massa, firefighter first grade of Engine 64.

Q. Tell me what happened on September 11th.

A. I was working that day. It was regular code work fire house. I saw on the news that the planes had hit, and about five minutes after the second plane hit they sent us to a staging area at 35 Engine and home with a rig. I had the control position. I had a radio.

We got on the rig, gathered everything we thought we would need, flashlights and extra clothes and stuff, because we knew it would be crazy and we'd be there at least a day. We went down Bruckner Boulevard towards 35 Engine, which is in Harlem. You could see the towers burning while driving down the Bruckner.

On the way down there, we were listening to the radio. I believe we switched over to the Manhattan frequency. As we were going down the Bruckner, you heard the dispatcher -- it seemed like a Manhattan dispatcher, unless he had us on citywide -- talking to the units that were at the scene. You heard different things going on.

The dispatcher announced that elevators were dropping. I remember them saying at first to stay out of one of the elevators that serviced the 44th floor. Then less than a minute later they said not to use any elevators. This is as we're driving down the Bruckner, things we were hearing on the radio. He said to stay out of all elevators because the elevators were dropping. We knew that there was something crazy going on.

As we were approaching closer to Harlem, we got out of sight of the buildings. I remember hearing different things. I remember hearing "major collapse" on the radio. That's one thing that threw me about the whole thing was that when we got to the scene we didn't know what had happened exactly.

To jump ahead a little bit, when we got to the scene, we got there between the two collapses. We had no idea that the first building was already completely down. All we heard on the radio was major collapse, and we figured the top fell off. So we heard elevators are dropping, then we heard major collapse, then we heard the dispatcher calling out for anybody and nobody was answering. A few minutes later we heard a chauffeur from one of the rigs screaming, screaming that he was trapped and screaming, and then it cut out. [redacted]

We got to Harlem, and we joined up on the ticket -- we went on the fifth alarm, one of the fifth alarms; I don't remember which one. We went with five or six other Bronx engine companies that were meeting with 35 Engine in Harlem. There was 35, us, 64, 83 Engine, 68 Engine, 94 Engine and 50 Engine. We all met up with 35 Engine. We were there. They were gathering tools up. We were waiting for the other engine companies to come in.

Once everybody got in, we started aligning like, it's a funny thing but we ended up leading the pack. It was a convoy. I figured 35 would end up leading the pack, but we ended up leading. Circumstances brought us to put our rig in the front, and we ended up leading.

So we were waiting in house 35. You could hear everything that was going on. They were calling us. They were trying to get like a roll call of us, exactly what companies were there. They said they were waiting for other companies to show up before sending us and telling us where to report to down at the site.

Once everybody was there, they got everybody accounted for, we started heading down. It turns out we bought ourselves some time which probably saved our lives because our chauffeur was leading. Instead of going right to the West Side Highway, because he could have gone right around the block to the west side, we shot straight down. I remember him telling us on the way there that the west side was wide open. He had gone down Third Avenue and down through Central Park and through construction. It bought us like ten minutes.

Once we got down there, we got down to the West Side Highway. There were other companies behind us. Some of the companies split off and pulled ahead of us. We had a covering officer that day. He told us to park in a certain spot, and it was maybe about four blocks north on West Street. We were to report to the command post on West and Vesey or the West Street command post.

We got all our stuff, got out of the rig and were getting ready. Our chauffeur didn't have a mask, so the boss told him to stay behind, to stay with the rig, in case he needed to move the rig to use it for anything.

At this point, like I said, we didn't know that one tower had come down. We were all there trying to see what was there, and we couldn't tell. We thought it was there, but we couldn't see it because of the smoke and the dust and everything. It turned out it wasn't there. The second one was still standing, the north tower.

So we got our equipment and we started walking down, and we got to somewhere between three-quarters to a half a block away, within a block, when the north tower came down. We were walking down with the companies we were with. 94 Engine was there. I remember seeing the guys from 94 with us. They all made it out.

So as we were walking up, we had our rollups and stuff. I don't know what we planned on doing with them, but we figured we were going to go operate somehow. We were supposed to report to the command post.

As we got like a half a block away, you could hear a gigantic rumble. It sounded like a jet flying overhead. Everybody immediately looked up, and you could see just a big cloud of dust coming down to the ground. I didn't see the actual top of the building coming down, but you knew what it was.

So we looked up, and there was probably about a 30-story tidal wave of crap coming down West Side Highway. As soon as we saw it, everyone stopped, looked for a second, and it took everybody a couple seconds for it register what was going on and that we had to get the hell out of there.

We were standing there -- we were fairly close, not as close as other guys. We had our masks. I had a radio. We had our masks. I had tools in my pocket, what I thought we needed to hook up with, like gloves, a monkey wrench, an adapter that was going to carry the whole thing up 80 flights.

We were standing there, and somebody yelled "run." We were all looking and whatever guys were in the street, it was like a sea of guys from all the companies that were down there. There were a few civilians down there. We just turned around and were just running down West Side Highway as fast as we could, running, looking over your shoulder. We were watching this cloud of shit chasing us down the street.

I hit the ground after running maybe a block, probably not even, maybe half a block. I remember I got past the last intersection. We walked a block, and I ran and I crossed through that intersection that was a block away that was in between there until -- I remember looking before it hit us to see where I was, and I was like close to another intersection.

I went to my knees, put my mask on, and the cloud of shit hit us, like little bits of rubble. There wasn't anything big at that point because we were far enough away, I guess. I had stuff hitting my helmet, "dung, dung, dung." It just got pitch-black. It went from a sunny day to just total blackness.

I was wearing my mask. I figured I was going to make a right and go behind the buildings. I wasn't near anything. A couple guys jumped behind cars. I wasn't near any cars or anything. I figured I'd make a right. It was pitch-black. Literally your hand could be on your face and you wouldn't see it.

So I stopped, took a few steps, made a deliberate right turn and then started walking straight to try and get behind the buildings, wearing my mask. I got about ten paces after making the turn to go to the right, and another fireman kind of like jumped on me, screaming. He dropped his mask. I think he was from 9 Engine. I'm not sure. 9 Truck or 9 Engine. I think it was 9 Engine. He had forgotten his mask. He had dropped his mask, and he was flipping out.

So I grabbed him. We walked a couple of paces. I had my hand out in front, trying to find something, just to get down some kind of protection or something. I brought him to the ground, and I started giving him my mask. We were sharing my mask. We were sitting on the ground, and I let him take what he needed, I'd hold my breath and he gave it back and we were just going back and forth.

I'd say after about maybe a good five minutes it started lightening up. As it started to lighten up, he got up and was like, "Thank you, thank you, thank you. What's your name? What's your name? Where are you from?" Blah, blah, blah. I was like, "Yeah, yeah, yeah." I had to go. I have to find the rest of my guys.

Everything was covered with gray, everybody. Two, three inches of dust and crap on the ground, papers everywhere. I don't remember hearing anything on the radio all that time, nothing at all, really. Going down there I'm trying to remember if I remember hearing anything while we were walking towards it. I don't remember. Nothing jumps out that I remember hearing anything coming over the radio.

Q. Did you see anything, like the building, anything that -- a sign that it might be coming down or anything like that or no?

A. As we were walking down?

Q. Yeah.

A. No. Some of the guys that were walking were looking up. As it was coming down, I must have been looking straight ahead or down. I heard the rumble. By the time I looked up, it was just a big cloud of shit. You saw a cloud of stuff coming down, and almost like it turned a corner and was coming down the block.

We stood there looking at it -- you look at it to judge to see am I too close, am I all right here. If you could see it diminishing, then maybe you'll be all right, no problem, I'll be all right. But it was just getting bigger and bigger. Everyone just like "ah," and ran.

There was a lot of chaos on the radio after the dust lifted and it started getting light out. I remember listening out, and I made some calls to my officer, because I remember which direction they went in. Before we ran and split up, we all ran in a general direction. We all ran north.

After a while I was monitoring the radio to hear from him, and I called him on the radio. I heard other things, people calling other people. I don't remember exactly. Nothing stands out. We hooked up together -- he told me where he was after I got him on the radio. He was underneath the overpass at Chambers. There's that overpass on West Street. So we met up over there.

Once we all got together, we started walking back in because we all wanted to try to get in and do something and get to a command post and see -- we had no idea what had happened. We figured there was still a command post. We figured we would go to the command post.

As we were heading down, everybody dropped their shit. We dropped all our rollups. I dropped my gloves, my wrench, everything. I had nothing but my mask, my helmet and my bunker gear. So I was concerned about if we're going to go in and we're going to do something, I've got to get a pair of gloves on.

I was scrounging around. There were tools and stuff all over the West Side Highway. It was completely covered with tools and gear and shit just everywhere. I scrounged up a pair of gloves. As we were going in, we passed some rigs, we grabbed some stuff. I grabbed a halogen. I found the search rope.

We were just grabbing everything we could get our hands on as we were heading back in, because we figured we were going to be doing something with all the work.

As we started walking down, we figured we would try to find the command post. I remember we were walking down and we got to almost where we were when it came down, like within a half a block away or so, and I think Stuyvesant High School is on -- as you're walking south on West is on the right side by the water there.

There were reports coming over the radio that there was a secondary device in Stuyvesant High School, that there was a major gas leak and to evacuate the area. Everybody turned around and started heading north again. We were like, Jesus Christ, what the hell is next? Everybody was shell-shocked. We figured this building is going to explode now, you know.

So we started walking north again, and we were still concerned about finding a command post. We stood there for a minute or two and we were like -- I don't know, this is bullshit, and let's start heading back in.

We started heading back in. We changed our bottles on the west side. Another reason we changed our bottles, we were trying to find a command post and there was none. I remember the officers all calling, trying to find out where to meet up. But there was no command post, so there was kind of chaos. Nobody knew where to go.

As we were waiting on the west side for something to do, I remember two fire marshals came up the block. They must have been close. They were totally covered with crap. Their pants were ripped. We had a box of flashlights. We sat there with them and put batteries in a couple cases of flashlights for them.

I'm trying to think if there's anything else worth noting. I can't remember. We helped them. We hung out. Then they came up with the command post at West and Chambers near the underpass. So we started heading back there.

When we got back there, we hooked up with -- they gave us an assignment to stretch a line from the water -- there was a marine boat on the water at Vesey Street. They wanted the line stretched -- I think two or three companies -- they were looking for engine chauffeurs. I'm an engine chauffeur. They were looking for engine companies to help stretch lines to manifold them to satellite off the boat close to the debris at the intersection of West and Vesey.

We rode with them. We took a rig. We drove down to the water and Vesey. There was already a rig backed in that dead-end street to the water, 3-something. Maybe 320-something. I don't remember. We had a spare rig that was like -- it was a spare rig or reserve rig. We stretched three and a half from there up Vesey to West, and we fed 33 Engine, I think. We supplied it to them. From them they fed it manifold, and they fed I think a satellite.

It was a mess. I remember thinking this is ridiculous. It's taking us forever just to stretch a line because everything was just chaos. There's lines all over the place. Nobody knew where this line ran, this and that.

Everything was all over the place.

There were a couple officers that did a good job keeping everybody together and saying hey, just do this, get this done. Everybody had their own ideas of what they should do, and everybody was doing what they thought they should do, and it was all different things. It was hard to accomplish simple tasks.

Once we did that, there was a long wait. We went in. We got that hooked up. We helped them. We were going to stretch some hand lines in, but they said to hang that. They kept backing everybody up and then bringing them in. Now at this point everybody was gathered on Vesey by West and wanting to go to work. Everybody was hanging out. This must have been probably almost an hour after the second tower came down.

We were over there. We tried to do what we could. Our officers tried to get us to work. We hung around for a while. I think they were more letting rescue do it and they were letting whoever had their rigs who was on the ends of any place supplying any kind of water. They were more interested in trying to supply water, and there were some guys searching.

But they weren't letting guys too close. At this point Seven World Trade Center was going heavy, and they weren't letting anybody get too close. Everybody was expecting that to come down.

We hung out for hours. We went into the American Express building. We looked around there. We searched around for a while, but you could see guys were already in there. We pretty much did that on our own because we were right there and the door was there and we just walked in.

I remember later on in the day it was getting close that they were more concerned about seven coming down. We had no idea what was going on on the east side. We were all on our side. On the west side it was pretty clear. The wind was blowing from west to east, I believe.

I remember later on in the day as we were waiting for seven to come down, they kept backing us up Vesey, almost like a full block. They were concerned about seven coming down, and they kept changing us, establishing a collapse zone and backing us up.

At one point I remember the chiefs gathered all the officers in the street. They put all the engines on one side of the street and the truck guys on the other side of the street, and they gathered all the officers in the center of the street to try to come up with some kind of plan, try and get some semblance of organization. They wanted everybody's riding lists. They wanted everybody to be accounted for to make sure that nobody was missing, just trying to get their bearings.

I remember being concerned about 47 Truck that went with us. They were relocated down to 6 Truck before we went down. So they were down there a lot earlier. Maybe their guys will tell you their story.

I remember trying to listen to the radio, hearing for anything on 47 Truck. I remember hearing the officers say something once, and I remember hearing 47 was on B call on 47's roof, but the roof not answering. We were concerned that some of them might be missing.

We had no idea what they were going through on the other side or wherever they were, but we knew they were there because we heard on the radio. We were sure that they were there because they went back to 6 Truck, early.

After they got us in the street, I remember Chief Salka from the 180 was one of the guys that took charge. He kind of kept everybody in line. Him and I think Visconti had a plan of attack.

The whole time while we were waiting -- there were hours that went by. Seven came down after 5 in the afternoon. I remember listening to the rescues that were going on. They got 6 Truck out of the stairwell. I remember hearing all that, what was going on, Three or four different rope rescues going at the same time. Different chiefs talking to different crews, guys that were going in to try and get 6 Truck out.

Other than that, we were surprised that there wasn't a lot more going on on the radio. It was actually -- considering what was going on, it was pretty quiet. Plus it was like -- it must have been hours later when we realized both the towers were completely gone. It was just like holy shit.

I remember somewhere during the hours of waiting there was a proby from 18 Truck that hooked up with us because he knew one of the probies that was with us. He didn't know whether he could find his company, so our officer told him just stay with us. So we latched onto another guy we had extra guys with us. I don't remember his name.

I know we were waiting in the street. You had the engines on one side, the trucks on the other, the officers were in the middle.

At that point I guess it was about 5 in the afternoon or so. That's when seven came down. Seven World Trade Center came down, and that was like two blocks away. As soon as it came down, everybody got up and tore ass west down Vesey Street.

Everybody was trying to get into this building. I remember there were 150 guys trying to get through two revolving doors with full gear. It was like (sound). Everyone is screaming. Guys were trying to smash the glass with their halogens to get through and ended up freaking out. The stuff gave way and we all got out. You can laugh it off, like Jesus Christ. Everybody was shell-shocked.

That's when Salka came up and he said all right, now that seven was down you can start getting closer and down things. There was no collapse threat anymore. Salka wanted three engines and three trucks because he wanted to go into the Verizon building, which is on the corner of West and Vesey.

He wanted to search the Verizon building to make sure that there was no fire in there. He wasn't as concerned about people because he figured everybody was out by now because it was hours later. There wasn't much fire in there, but there was some. We didn't want to lose that building too. We're not going to stay away from it and let it burn because there wasn't much fire.

Everybody is jumping up. You had 300 guys that wanted to go to work, and he's looking for three engines and three trucks to go to work. Our boss got in there. He wanted companies that all had masks, companies that had radios, because a lot of guys had radios because they came down alone.

It turned out because we scavenged we had our masks and we had radios that were working. We still scavenged in those hours for fresh batteries for the radios. I had that search rope. He needed a search rope. I gave Salka the search rope. He had gotten one.

So he ended up picking us to go. I'm trying to remember the truck company we went with. We went in with three chiefs. We paired up into teams, each one with a chief. I can't remember the truck company we went with. I want to say 13 Truck, but I don't think so.

Q. That's okay.

A. So we went in. What he wanted to do is we split up into three teams, and each team searched ten floors. We brought floor ropes with us in case we found fire. There was a rig right in front of the building. We each grabbed a length of hose and what we do to hook up, and we went in.

We had to force the door to the stairwell. We walked up -- I don't remember the chief's name we went with. We went up to the tenth floor, and we searched from 10 to 20 looking for fire. We were looking for people too, but we were more concerned with fire. We had fire and there was damage, holes in the walls, big holes in the walls. Actually we were with 54 Truck. 54 Truck was there.

That was pretty much it. Then we came downstairs. By the time we came out, it was dark. We were shot. We were heading out. More people were showing up. There were hundreds and hundreds of guys there.

We came over to try and get another assignment at the command post. We saw 47 Truck there. And we picked up things that we were missing. We went to the command post. We saw Chief Didomenico to try and get another assignment. He took one look at us and said, "You guys been here since this morning?" We said, "Yeah." He said, "You better get the hell out of here." It was like 10:30 at night at this point. He told us to get out of there.

So we took our stuff and walked back down to the rig. We were trying to find our chauffeur. Actually I remember as we were walking past 47 Truck's rig, there was a civilian going through it. He was wearing one of our guy's coats and one of our guy's helmets. I recognized the helmet. We grabbed the guy, "What the hell are you doing?" He said he was retired. He wasn't retired. We grabbed the stuff and told him to get the hell out of here.

We went back over and picked up our chauffeur and came back, back to quarters. We got back to quarters sometime shortly after 11.

That's it.

Q. That's pretty good. All right.

CHIEF KENAHAN: It's now 5:10 p.m. This concludes this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT WARREN SMITH

Interview Date: December 4, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

CHIEF MALKIN: Today's date is December 4th, 2001. The time is now 1523 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion. I am conducting an interview with the following individual:

Lieutenant --

LIEUTENANT SMITH: Warren Smith.

CHIEF MALKIN: -- Warren Smith of Ladder Co. 9 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001. Also present in this room is Fireman Michael Bosco of the Safety Battalion.

Q. If you'll speak in a clear voice and regular tone since we'll record everything and just tell me what you remember.

A. Basically, we received the alarm to respond a little before 9:00, right around 9:00, actually, and just before that we actually heard the first plane hit. We heard it go over, of course, and then hit the building. One of the guys ran out. Guys were yelling what was that, a sonic boom? Guys went down to Lafayette. A couple of guys ran out. If you look down Lafayette, you can see the World Trade Center. You could see what happened. They came back. Shortly after that 33 responded. Shortly after that we responded.

While we were on our way down Broadway, just about near the World Trade Center, there were reports that the other building was hit while we were responding and conflicting reports. You couldn't tell. The angle we were coming, we were heading south. The planes hit on the southwest corner, I believe. We were on basically the opposite corner. Then just before we got off the rig, I heard them transmit a fifth alarm, a second fifth alarm for the other building. I heard Hazmat on the radio say the building was hit. So at that point we did know it was hit. We still didn't realize whether or not -- you couldn't believe the first one, and when the second one hit, you obviously couldn't believe it even more, but you didn't really think that it was an attack at that point. It was just this is crazy.

So I parked the rig not directly in front of the building because I saw all the debris in the street. I told my chauffeur, I said, "Listen, there's a lot of stuff falling down." At that point I didn't know how much of that building was going to come down. Obviously not the whole thing. But we parked I believe at the cemetery and the church there. We parked over in that area. As it turned out later, it did save the rig from being crushed. We lost the rig because it burnt up. Some debris came down and flew over there and landed on it and lit it on fire. But it didn't get crushed.

Anyway, we had to walk a couple of blocks to the entrance on West Street. We walked in there, went into the lobby, saw the lobby command post, reported to the Chief. Chief Hayden was there. The Commissioner was there. I recognized a few other faces. But basically all the Chiefs were there at that point.

We stood fast for -- time is difficult to comprehend at this point. After the fact it was hard to put everything together, how long everything took, but generally it was probably about 30 seconds maybe that we stood fast before we got an order to go up the stairway. I believe it was stairway B. No specific orders or anything like that, just go up, see what you can do, basically. I think everybody was pretty much overwhelmed at that point because just shortly before that the other plane had hit, so you could see the confusion and everything else at the lobby command post.

So we went up. I talked to my guys while we were standing fast. On the way in I told them to look up. You could see the bodies were falling around us. I said, "Make sure don't get hit by a flying body when you look up," you know, "don't get hit," and none of us did. You could hear them landing.

We got into the lobby, stood fast for a short time. I paired the guys up. I said, "Listen, try to stay together. It may not be possible." But I paired everybody up. I tried to put seniority with less seniority and everything else.

Working our way up was slow going because we had civilians coming down. We were telling them to stay to their right, trying to calm them down, let them know they were out of harm's way, basically, and I'm sure all those people got out, unless they stood too near to either one of the buildings. For the most part I think all the civilians got out. A lot of civilians got out of the north tower. Working our way up was slow, again, because there were civilians, a lot of firefighters going up, catching up to engine companies with roll-ups, they're not moving as quickly. 33 actually responded a couple of minutes before we did and we ended up catching up to them. We got up to I guess about the 31st floor.

I also received reports while I was walking up from an FBI agent that there were more planes up in the air unaccounted for. So I passed this on to my guys that were near me. Radios were very difficult to use. But I passed it on to everybody and I had to pass it verbally, actually, that there were more planes up in the air unaccounted for, stay away from the windows.

At that point we knew. He told us, "Yeah, they're attacking us." That's when we really found out that we were being attacked, and this was probably somewhere in the vicinity of the 15th through 20th floor, whatever.

We got up to about the 31st floor, I believe it was the 31st floor, and met up with Engine 33. They were hearing reports on the radio, jet fuel on the upper floors, odor. I was trying to get ahold of some of my guys on the radio. I finally got ahold of a couple of guys that were on the 25th or 26th floor, heavyset guys who weren't making it up as fast as we were. There was me and a couple of younger guys, thinner guys. So I said, "All right, let's regroup here. Let's get everybody together."

While we were there, I saw a Chief down at the end of the hall. I was making my way down to talk to him to find out what we were going to do. There were a lot of guys on the 31st floor trying to figure out what was going on. Guys were resting. We were hearing a lot of reports on the radio from guys needing oxygen, firefighter down, just guys trying to go up too quickly. So as I was making my way to that Chief to find out what was going on, the other building went down. We did not know what it was. Because I had received reports from the FBI guy that there were other planes, I thought it was another plane hitting our building because it just shook like we were in an earthquake.

We were near a stairwell. The guys that were near the stairwell went up the stairwell. The building stopped shaking. The lights went out. The Chief was near me. I asked him, "What's going on?" He didn't have an answer just then, but shortly thereafter we got the order to evacuate. That was on the command channel, which I believe was 6. I heard them switch to channel 6.

We passed that order on to everybody that was with us on that floor. I know Ladder 8 was with us, Engine 5, some of their guys were in the vicinity, Engine 33. I don't know who the Chief was. Like I told guys afterwards, if you knew the guy who you saw in that building that day, if you knew him, you didn't work with him, you just knew who he was personally, you remembered him. But if you didn't, with all the shit going on, you just couldn't put the face and then later on see the name. They just didn't go together. There was just too much shit going on at once.

So we started making our way out. The evacuation was orderly. There was no panic. We didn't get a report that the other building went down, just to get out. I've worked in Manhattan my whole career in high-rises and everything else. I worked in midtown. When you get the order to evacuate a high-rise building, you know something's fucked up beyond what we can handle. Usually we just regroup on a lower floor, sometimes just a floor below. So my sense of urgency was pretty good to get the hell out of there. But there was no panic. Guys were calmly getting out.

In retrospect, would there have been panic if they would have told us the other building collapsed? It's hard to say really. I personally don't think so. I would have liked that information because -- I don't know. I mean, I made a lot of decisions that day and five out of eight of us got out. But if I had that information, would I have gotten all eight of us out? Again, it's really hard to say. I'm just glad five of us got out of there.

It was slow going on the way down. A lot of firemen we were picking up on the way down didn't know that the order to evacuate was given because I think, if you weren't near a Chief, from guys I talked to, you didn't get that order, at least not as quickly. I think it came over later. I didn't hear it myself. But the order to evacuate was given on channel 6, and channel 1 just may have been so bogged down that it may have been impossible to get that order through. I'm sure they tried. It was very slow going. Just doing the math, it was probably a minute per floor, because I know it took us about a half an hour to go 31 flights.

We got down to about the 11th floor and it just stopped completely. We were in stairway C at this point, and guys are like, come on, come on, let's go, let's go. Again, no panic. We found out later that the reason that that stairwell wasn't moving was because there was debris at the bottom, at the base of the stairs, because that stairwell was facing -- I don't know if you know the layout of the building, but from what I gather, that stairway was facing south.

That was full of debris that came into the lobby, and stairway B was facing north. We were basically pretty close to the door leading to the 11th floor and a firefighter -- I don't know if it was a firefighter. It was dark and I didn't shine my light up at him or anything like that, but he just said, "Let's try these other stairs. I think they're clear." That's basically what he said to me.

So I turned to all the guys that were in the vicinity of me. A few of them were my guys, a few of them were Ladder 8. I don't know who else. But the guys that heard me switched over and the other guys passed the order on to everybody else that was in that general vicinity. As I found out later, the guys who didn't switch at that floor -- because, obviously, if you're below and you're evacuating, you're reluctant to come up and go out. So they switched over at either the 10th or the 9th.

I actually spoke with Captain -- it begins with a T -- from Engine 7, who did speak with Engine 33's officer, Pfeifer, who did make it out on the 9th floor, and he said, just talking between the two of us, you know, the sense of urgency, he didn't see it as much in him as that he had it himself. That was the whole thing. If you realized that you just had to get away from that building, it may have saved your life. I don't know. It depends on where you were in the building and everything else.

But there definitely were firefighters that we were picking up on the way down that had no knowledge, some that we gave them that knowledge that the order to evacuate was given, and they were like they didn't believe us. Guys were forcing doors and carrying roll-ups. We would say, "Listen, forget about that. Drop your roll-ups. You can get them later if you want. Just get out."

But like I said, I just felt like we had to get the hell out of there and all my guys were I knew on their way out. Like I said, if I knew that the other building went down, I probably would have made more -- it was difficult to stay together as a unit. There's no doubt about it. But if I had that knowledge, you know, I don't know. I don't know what would have changed. It would have been difficult to do, but would I have tried harder? I don't know. Because you just felt like, once you got on the lower floors, you were basically safe, you know, you had to get out.

So we did move to that other stair and a lot of guys came with me. It was difficult to tell who. I know a couple of my guys came because I could see them, but then I saw the other guys were passing that order on and guys did switch over at the other floors because, like I said, I spoke with Engine 7. He switched over at the 9th floor. It was slow going in that stairwell also, stairwell B, but not as slow. So we made better time going down that stairwell.

Once I got to the lobby, I saw the debris, obviously from the other tower, but you still couldn't fathom -- it didn't register that that building had collapsed. I was thinking maybe there was a partial collapse maybe above the plane. But there was no one there that said, "Get your ass out of here. The other tower collapsed." It was just we got down there and we saw the debris and we just went, "What the fuck is going on here?" basically.

When I stepped out of the lobby onto West Street, the sidewalk leading to West Street, there was a Chief out there with a bullhorn. Again, I didn't know him personally. I don't remember who he was. I don't know if he's alive today. But he basically was yelling at everybody, "Head north." Obviously, the reason he was telling everybody to head north was because heading south you were going to come into a pile of shit. We didn't know that. The angle that we came out of, we were facing it. So I'm just looking around, but you really had to look around a bend to see the south tower anyway, whether it was there or not. You could see all the debris, obviously, but, again, it still didn't register that the whole thing went down at that point. But I knew it was definitely not just another plane.

So what we did was we were going to wait there for all our guys, but I knew that they were below me in the stair. Between that and the Chief saying -- you know, we were sort of like slowing down. He's like, "No." Basically, he was just telling us, "Get the hell out of here. Get away from this building." He didn't say this building is about to come down or anything like that, but you just saw he definitely had a sense of urgency about him. So I told my guys, "Listen, they were in front of us. Let's try to reach them on the radio. We'll hook up a couple of blocks away and we'll get everybody together and regroup and figure out what the hell is going on." At that point I'm thinking there's some sort of staging area or whatever around the block.

So we start making our way up West Street. I got about two blocks. Two of my firefighters were sitting on the median, just sitting there, dazed basically, tired, confused. I said, "Listen, guys." I didn't see a lot of other guys around yet. I didn't see a staging area or anything yet. So I said, "Let's keep moving." Again, I don't know what really made me think that being two blocks away wasn't safe. I have no idea to this day what made me realize that. But all the debris I saw, like I said, you just knew you had to get away from it.

So they did get up and keep moving, and about within the next ten or twenty seconds, the building came down. I guess we were out of the building somewhere around a minute. It came down and even then, you looked back, all you see -- you know how fast those buildings came down -- all you see is the dust and the debris and, again, it just doesn't click that these buildings can come down. I mean, I wasn't working in '93, but I was there the next day and I saw what happened, the damage, and you just couldn't believe that those buildings could come down. You just saw everything and it's like, oh, my God, what the hell happened? Did another plane hit? Did part of the building come down? What's going on?

But you knew you had to do something. I wrote in there that you had a few choices. You could either run into a building, dive behind a car, jump into a car, under a car, whatever. I still had my mask on my back. You could stop to put it on. That was another option you had. I said let me just run. I can run, I know I can run, that's what I'm going to do. One of the guys from my house was right near me. The other guys were slightly behind me. We were basically just running for our lives, not knowing what was going to happen in the next 20 seconds to a minute, whatever.

So I saw a clearing. I was in the middle of the street. I wasn't near a car or a building, so that definitely helped make my decision easier to run. I saw a clearing. I ran. I stayed straight. I didn't run into anything. The cloud caught me. It was pitch black. I kept running, obviously a little slow because you don't want to run into something, and I guess in about 20 to 30 seconds everything settled down, you started seeing some light, and I just kept moving. One of my guys that was right near me was still near me.

The other two weren't. We talked to each other. I grabbed a guy from Engine 214, Toby, who lost all his guys I found out later, or most of them, and we started walking up trying to contact guys on the radio, 33, Ladder 9. There were a couple of guys from Ladder 9 on the radio. At this point now the radio was pretty open because there weren't a lot of survivors really. Guys ran in different directions. It had a lot to do with the choices you made, which direction you ran, what you decided to do, how close to the building you stayed, your sense of urgency, all of those things.

When we got out of there, there were ambulances lined up along West Street, West Side Highway, people throwing water at us, giving us water, giving us cell phones to talk to people, and I said, "Let's just keep heading north." There were five of us that got out of there, and I either visually or verbally spoke with them as I was going up West Street. A couple of guys needed minor medical assistance, eyes. Our eyes were fucked up, but we just had water splashed in them and they weren't too bad. I just told my guy that did need the medical assistance that was with me, and we kept the guy from 214 with us, "Let's try to find the staging area."

So I'm trying to contact guys on the radio and, as you know probably from talking to guys or whatever, there wasn't any kind of staging area or anything at that point. It was just mass confusion. It was the guys coming in on the recall that were going to take control of the situation. I didn't realize that. Even at that point, I knew in my mind that firefighters were killed or injured in the last 45 minutes or whatever during what happened, but I still didn't realize the scope of it.

We got up four or five blocks at that point and I said, "All right. We can't get ahold of anybody on the radio." Except for the guys that I just mentioned from Ladder 9, nobody from 33, no Chiefs, I couldn't get anybody on the radio really. We may have started to get out of radio range as far as anybody right next to the World Trade Center. But seeing what just happened, we just knew we had to get away from there and try to regroup and figure out what the hell was going on. So I said, "Well, all right, we're not getting anybody on the radio. Let's go to the nearest firehouse."

Ladder 8 was the nearest firehouse. We went there. A couple of the guys from Ladder 8 that I mentioned that were in the vicinity of the building with us were there. They were missing their officer at that point. They were shaken up just like we were. I said, "Well, what's going on?" We were listening to the department radio. I was going to call the dispatcher, but I was already in house watch. So I said, "Well, let's turn on our TV and see what's going on here." That's where we got a lot of the information, the fact that the buildings completely came down. You really saw the carnage then because obviously they kept showing it over and over again at that point.

So, listening to the radio in quarters, I heard that there was a staging area up at Ladder 20. Again, thinking that there were a lot of survivors, we're all going to get up there, regroup and do what we've got to do, you know, find out that all my guys were up there, you know, everybody got out. But that's when I started to realize how many guys were injured seriously or hurt, actually more guys killed than injured, talking about the Chiefs that were missing, because guys were coming up there and, like myself, we were outside the building near Chiefs and reporting that those guys were missing or whatever.

Basically, I just stayed there for a couple hours, a few hours, waiting for word of all my guys, and I sent one of my guys to the firehouse because I saw what Ladder 8 had done. They went to their firehouse after everything. I said, "Well, maybe they went up there. Get up there and see what's going on. I'll wait here." He called me from there and no word, and I just told him to stay there. I stayed at Ladder 20, Division 1 Quarters a few hours, and that's when we just got dribs and drabs of what was going on.

That was pretty much it. As the next couple of days went on, that's when you just realized the scope of it.

Q. So you lost track of the guys from your company on the way down? You had them all together?

A. Yes. Unfortunately, when the order to evacuate was given, when the other tower went down, I was in the process of gathering all my guys, because two of the guys who were a little heavy, they were not making it up the stairway as fast as we were. What was going through my mind was we're going to get up as high as we can get and we're probably going to come upon people who were burned, who were on the periphery of the crash, we're going to help them out. I didn't see anybody put the fire out. I mean, you could see it from the outside. It was eight floors, whatever the hell it was. That wasn't going to be put out any time soon. Maybe you were going to put out fires in certain areas where there's other people on the other side you can rescue. Who knows? You just really didn't know. So that's why I said on the 31st floor we had 33 with us. I spoke to their officer. I said, "All right, we'll work together. We'll go up the rest of the way together."

Unfortunately, like I said, when the other building went down, all hell broke loose. I was able to contact my guys on the radio, the two heavier-set guys. They did know that the order to evacuate was given. They also happened to be near a Chief and they started working their way down. Between them and the guys that were with me, I knew that all of us had gotten the word and we were all on our way out. So that much I knew. Between the fact that we were five floors apart, other firefighters were jumping in on stairwells as you were going down, we were strewn out. Ladder 9 and Engine 33, in the process of evacuating, got spread out. You may have been like this at first, and then more guys jumped in and you just became more and more spread out in the staircase. But, again, you just felt like you're going to get out of the building, you know, we'll regroup in the lobby. Once you got to the lobby and saw the damage, you knew you weren't going to stay there. At that point, then I said, "All right, we'll regroup a couple blocks away."

That didn't happen. For some of us it did, not for all of us. Like I said, I know 33 did have the knowledge to switch stairs. At some point they did switch stairs. They didn't do it as quickly as we did, obviously, or they hung around too close to the building, or they came upon someone that needed help and they helped them. You just have no way of knowing. That's what I tell the families. I tell the families that in all probability they came upon someone that maybe needed their help, firefighters, civilians, whatever, and they helped them. There's no way of knowing whether 30 seconds too long in that building was 30 seconds too long.

Q. Handy-talkies on channel 1; overloaded? How would you characterize traffic?

A. Very, very, very difficult to get a message to an individual. You were hearing messages on there. I was trying to monitor different things. A guy had asked me if I heard Captain Brown from Ladder 3 gave word of a partial collapse at some point. I heard somebody mention that to me, "Did you hear that?" I didn't hear that. But I did hear lots of messages on the way up, definitely clogged with a lot of guys in need of oxygen, CPR, firefighters down. I saw a lot of firemen on the way up. Civilians were giving us water. I just told my guys, "Listen, you don't want to be useless when you get up there. Don't run." You're not going to run up the stairs with 100 pounds of gear on your back.

Q. Pace yourselves.

A. Pace yourselves. We tried to the best we could. That's why I wasn't going to try to urge those heavier-set guys along too much. They would make their way up at their own pace. Like I said, at 31 we were trying to get them to catch up to us, and at that point I think I was just saying to myself, all right, from this point on, we're going to stay together.

Q. By the 31st floor, you knew that it was going to be really difficult. It must have been really going slow. I know how I am with the bunker gear. I can get about five floors and then I'm really hurting, with a mask, and these guys are carrying roll-ups. So you guys, by the 31st floor, you must have been dying.

A. Yes.

Q. And you knew you had another 40 or 50 to go if you were going to reach the fire, right?

A. Yes. You didn't know how long it was going to take you to get there. I don't know how long it took us to get where we did. I would guess, doing the math, we got there at 9:00 o'clock, probably got to the 31st floor at about somewhere between quarter to 10:00 and 10:00 o'clock, in that range. Because I guess the other building, the first building went down five to 10:00 or thereabouts, right?

Q. Let's look at the record. It's somewhere in that range. South tower collapses 9:55.

A. So that's pretty much what it took us, 55 minutes, probably 50 minutes to get 31 floors.

Q. It was a slow go.

A. Definitely a slow go. The guys, like I said, we even stopped on a couple of floors just to take a look and see what was going on and see if anybody needed our help, get water. Civilians were giving us water.

Q. The civilians that were giving you water while you were going up, these people were told to stay in place, you think, on the floors, or they had no sense to evacuate themselves, that there was a need to evacuate themselves, or what do you figure your their attitude was?

A. I think that you had probably -- they looked like, if I had to make a guess now, I never really thought about it, but now that you mention it, they looked like probably fire warden kind of people who maybe they should be the last ones to leave that floor, like make sure everyone else is out of there. Because I didn't see too many people on each floor. I might have stopped on two floors on the way up. They definitely looked like responsible-type people who were making sure that their floor was evacuated.

Q. When you got down to the first floor, did you go through the lobby to exit or did you exit like directly to the street?

A. No. We went through the lobby.

Q. Who did you see in the lobby? What were the conditions in the lobby as far as the command post?

A. I remember seeing the lobby command post still standing. No one was manning it. The Chief I saw on the way out -- I didn't really see anybody milling about. I think once everybody got down to that level and saw the damage, they just realized it was a good idea to get the hell out of there. That Chief was still there at that point. I don't know how long he stayed, but he was there when I came by.

That's pretty much it, unless you have any more questions.

Q. When you went through the lobby, had the windows been blown out in the north tower? You were exiting the north tower lobby. Was the lobby full of debris? Was it full of the dust from the south tower having collapsed?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you see your way out? Were things that bad or --

A. If I had to guess, it's hard to say. You could see your way out. There wasn't still a lot of dust or anything in the air. It was just a lot of debris strewn about. The fact that we walked to where the doors were would lead me to believe, thinking now, that the windows were mostly intact because we went around them. As you came out of the stairwell, you had this little lobby and then you'd come out and the windows were here and the doorway was over here. So the quickest way out, if the windows weren't there, we would have walked straight through those. But we went over to the doorway, so that would lead me to believe that most of them were still probably not fully intact but at least to the degree where you couldn't go through them.

Q. Who did you see outside when you were going north on West Street? Did you see the command post? Did you see Ganci, Feehan, the chaplain?

A. No, I did not. No. The only one I saw was that Chief, and most of the firefighters I saw were listening to that Chief and heading north. I know some firefighters also headed west, because at that point I was making the decision should we go north, should we head towards the water, where would be the best place to go, and I just made the decision to go north.

Again, I don't know who that Chief was. I didn't recognize him personally. But him and that Chief on the floor with me and then whoever tapped me on the shoulder and told me to switch stairs, they had a lot to do with the fact that I'm sitting here talking to you, especially the guy that told me to switch stairs because, as it turned out, the guys who switched stairs at that level that he was at, a lot of them survived, as far as I can tell, and the guys who switched below, it could have just been the time it took them to get from where they were below the 11th floor to the 10th floor and then switched over and were slightly behind us. I know guys who were like 30 seconds out of the building, Engine 7 being one of them. I can't remember who else. I can't remember if it was Engine 4 or somebody else down there who said that they were out of the building about 30 seconds and some of their guys survived because they ran this way and other guys ran another way.

I remember passing guys. I saw a guy's name on the list who was by his rig that was parked pretty close to the building, and I remember patting him on the butt because I knew him personally and said, "Come on. You'd better keep moving." I saw his name on the list as one of the firefighters. Definitely, the sense of urgency was a huge factor in your ability to get out of there. I don't know what you could attest that to. Experience? Knowledge of the fact that the other building went down; did you have that knowledge? I don't think a lot of guys did. A lot of guys I spoke with did not.

Some guys took the time to look out the windows to see what was going on. The fact that I got the reports from the FBI guy that there were more planes in the air unaccounted for, I told my guys to stay away from the windows because, obviously, that's not the place you want to be. At that point, the two planes that I did know of hit on an upper floor, so once you got into the lower floors, the thing that's going through my mind is planes are hitting this building higher up. So once you got down to where we were, you just felt that you were --

Q. Probably safer.

A. -- relatively safe. The one thing that goes through my mind all the time is would things have been different if we knew the other tower went down? That's something, again, it's purely hindsight, but it's definitely something that goes through my mind, would that have changed things?

Q. Okay. That's an interesting point.

A. Would it have induced panic? It's really hard to say.

Q. That's an interesting point. Panic may be good because it's fright to flight syndrome.

A. Yes. Another point, too, is that there weren't a lot of civilians left at this point. I'd say, of the people I saw evacuating the building, 95 percent of them were firefighters at that point. They were out. Civilians were out. All the civilian casualties from what I can piece together were either people that hung around too close to the buildings or were in the south tower and they basically had no chance, because I know I've heard and I'm sure you've heard that they got the order to stay in place, and if they did, they died, and if they just disregarded that and had time to get out, they got out. But the people in our building, without a doubt, they must have gotten the order to evacuate because the stairwell was full of civilians. They were all orderly getting out because the stairwells weren't full of anything. Obviously, the lower floors were clear.

Q. Were the lights on in the staircases?

A. Lights were on.

Q. Were there any communications going on like building announcements or anything like that, any kind of supervisory announcements encouraging people which way to go or just to get out? Were there any loudspeaker announcements or was it just word of mouth that you recall?

A. I don't recall any. They could have been there in the background. I was trying to concentrate on our radio as far as what kind of information I could piece together from there because, like I said, when we were in the lobby, you go up as an officer and you don't get an order to do something and both the towers just got hit by planes, obviously, I'm just thinking about -- at this point you're almost in a defensive mode, not quite, because you still want to get up there.

But like I found out from guys who saw it on TV, right away people on TV were speculating or themselves speculating these buildings have been attacked. This isn't an accident. So, if you're responding from midtown, you're already in a defensive mode. We didn't get into that mode really until we went to evacuate the building. So we were just doing what we always do.

The other part that's hindsight, too, something that I think about, and as a Chief you know that at regular fires you have that 20-minute rule. If this fire is out of control for 20 minutes, I've got to start thinking about getting my guys out of there because now, if the building collapses, it's going to become more of a factor than anything else.

Obviously, I think there was a little bit of Titanic mentality because of 1993. Everybody saw the damage that was done and that building didn't go down. I don't know. You hear reports there were engineers down there that said, "No, these buildings won't go down." Then you hear interviews of good engineers on TV that weren't at the scene but who were watching it on TV and said, "No, these buildings are going down. I knew these buildings were going to go down."

So, obviously, I had no prior knowledge that these buildings would go down. No one did. I haven't seen an interview with Chief Dunne yet, I don't know if you have, as far as what he knew. That would be interesting to know --

Q. I haven't seen it.

A. -- what thoughts were going through his head when he was watching it on TV, because I don't think there's probably anybody more qualified than he is as far as fires go. But I didn't hear things like jet fuel burns at 2,000 degrees, I-beams melt at 1,500 degrees. It's hard to say.

That's the thing that I think about as far as the Chiefs go. Listen. Everybody did the best they could, and I'm not blaming anyone because I didn't think those buildings would go down. But you say to yourself, God, I wish we just had that knowledge.

Q. But I don't know how they could calculate that. We know what things burn at and we know what things fail at but, number one, the life hazard comes into play, we're trying to save life, and the second thing is to what degree is the steel being affected, by how much? It's incalculable. You can't stand in the street with a calculator and know that. We can only guess at those things. Again, there's no history of these buildings falling down.

A. Hey, listen. I'm not blaming anybody. I know. But these are the things that go on in your head after the fact.

Q. Sure.

A. You just can't help it, just trying to figure out what the hell happened. That's the same thing that you were saying. The families of the victims, they want to know what the hell happened, that's all. They want to know where their son or father was when this happened, you know, why didn't he get out? They want to hear things like maybe he was trying to help someone. That would go a long way towards them living the rest of their lives.

Q. Sure.

A. It's important to us, too. I would love to know that Engine 33, hear from somebody, "Oh, they were helping somebody on the 3rd floor and that's why they didn't get out." Because I know they knew as well as I did that we had to get out of that building.

Q. Sure.

A. But they didn't make it. Did they not switch over quick enough? Because like I said, all it took was -- 45 seconds goes like that. It seems like an eternity sometimes, but in a situation like that, it's gone. If you were 15 seconds away from that building, you weren't living. Really. The odds were not good. We were a minute away, thank God, and the dust and debris weren't going to kill you. Things were pulverized so much that, the way that building came down, unless you were really close to it, you were going to get hit with dust and debris, which, like I said, wasn't going to kill you. It was going to scare the shit out of you, but that's about it.

That's why I think there was just so much death as compared to injury because, like I said, if you were two blocks away, three blocks, that was probably enough for you to just get hit with that shit, but you were going to live and you really only had minor injuries. If you were too close, they're never going to find any piece of you. Then you hear about Ladder 6 and Engine 39 being in the building when it collapsed and you just find that unbelievable.

Q. How did they get out? I know Ladder 6 made it out, right? They were the ones that were helping that woman?

A. Ladder 6 and Engine 39. I used to work in Ladder 16, so I talked to those guys personally about it. They were in the stairwell somewhere between 2 and 4 when it went down. If you were on the first floor, you were crushed, but if you just happened to be where they were, because of the way the I-beams fell or for whatever reason, and they were all rescued within three to four hours. But they didn't get out on their own. You hear stories of guys who got out of debris on their own, lifted an I-beam off of themselves or whatever it might be, and other guys who were saved by other guys in the vicinity. I'm sure those were guys that were probably a block away or something like that who were hit with larger pieces than we were.

But like I said, the counseling unit was here before. It was good. We got a lot of information that we didn't have. Every time they come, we get a little more knowledge. To me, the list that you have there of the survivors is a list that to me is important to look at for this job mental counseling as far as reaching out to them. Nobody's level of grief is higher than ours, besides the families of the victims. You see all these lists that are being put out. To me, families of the victims obviously come first forever, and then it's the survivors, and then it's the guys who went down into the pile too often.

[redacted]

[redacted]

Q. [redacted]

Q. Okay. Is there anybody else that you saw on the way out or on the way in that you can remember that we didn't talk about so far? Does anybody come to mind that you saw in the lobby or staircase? You mentioned 33 Engine. You mentioned --

A. Yes. Some of the companies I remember seeing were Engine 5. I know one of the guys was getting oxygen on one of the floors on the way up. Who did I see? Ladder 8.

Q. Also on the way up, that's where you saw him, in the stair on the way up?

A. Yes. Basically, I didn't see a lot of guys, and I'll tell you why, because the guys who were near me were my company and then some of the guys I just mentioned, and you're working your way up and you're just in that line of firefighters. So there could be a guy a flight ahead of you that you didn't see. On the way up, I only stopped at a couple of floors briefly. So, like I said, if you didn't know the guy personally, you really didn't remember him.

When I got to the 31st floor, that's when I started seeing guys. I saw Ladder 8 then. Engine 5 was in the vicinity I know, Engine 33. I saw the Chief who I didn't know. After the building shook, the lights went out. So on the way down, you couldn't see anything unless you shined your light in their face. So it was difficult. It seems like an eternity that we were in there, but basically we got in there at five after 9:00 and we were out of there at 10:30. But you didn't interact with a lot of firefighters because we're all spread out through 60 floors. It's just a matter of when you were assigned to where you were assigned, and since we were assigned to go up the stairwell, you could only see five firefighters at a time, basically. So we didn't really come across a lot of guys. On the way down, I didn't stop at any floors, just crossing over at 11. That's pretty much it, I guess.

CHIEF MALKIN: This concludes the interview. The time is now 1612 hours and I thank the Lieutenant for providing us with this information.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER FRANK CAMPAGNA

Interview Date: December 4, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: Today is December 4th, 2001. The time is 1431 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with Fireman Frank Campagna of Ladder 11, and we're in the quarters of 28 Engine at this time. This is the fireman's statement.

Q. Where did you respond from?

A. I responded from quarters, came up the FDR, showed up to the scene. The fire was blazing out. The first plane had hit. We pulled up in front, and we headed inside toward the lobby. On the way inside you saw the usual stuff like everyone else saw, things falling and stuff like that.

We got inside the lobby and we waited to hear from a chief or whoever what's going to go on, wait until we found out what's going on. What wound up happening is they teamed us up with 4 Engine, I believe it was. What it was is they combined us as one hose team pretty much. So they dropped half of their rollups and we kept half of ours, we kept one standpipe kit, and we headed up together.

As we were going up, they said on the lower level the second plane hit the other building. Me personally, I felt it on another level up, so I think the timing was off between everybody.

We just kept walking up. As far as we knew, there were no planes or anything coming in. There wasn't even a plane that hit that building. We just knew there was a fire up there. Any other explosions that we felt from inside were maybe extra machinery or something like that. Those were the words that we were getting.

So we just kept going up the stairwell. We got up to about the 17th floor, and we felt another pretty big explosion. At this time about every two floors, every three floors you'd stop into an office, get some water, take a breather. Guys were pretty winded. They had equipment on and carrying everything.

We're taking a breather, and I believe that's when the other Trade Center went down and everybody felt it and they didn't know exactly what it was. Everyone headed towards the stairwell, thinking it was a safer place to be.

After that happened, the building was still standing, everybody kept going up. So we kept going up, still stopping about every two, three floors. People still coming down. We were just telling them to keep calm and walk on the way down.

We got up to about the 28th, 30th floor, and we were taking another break. There was an office or we had a whole floor full of people. A chief came down from a floor above with another company and said everybody evacuate, everybody out now. We had to switch staircases. I believe the staircase we were in, there was no way down it anymore on the lower level. There was word that it had been taken out; we don't know what from.

So we switched to a different staircase. We headed down. We let the civilians go first. We showed them towards that staircase and started heading down, letting the civilians go first, and we walked our way down. We were up there with a couple of companies. I don't know the exact numbers. I know 4 Engine was with us. Everybody went down with us.

We got down to the lobby, and there's a lot of guys down there in the lobby itself along with 4 Engine. Everyone is standing there, waiting to hear what's going to happen next, what's going on. Guys were just saying it's time to go, this isn't safe to stay in here.

So I believe we headed out along the wall of the Trade, and I believe 18 followed us out. That was it. It came down on top of us. That's all I remember of who followed us out or I heard who followed us out. 4 Engine obviously didn't make it out. They were with us the whole time, so I'm assuming they were still in the lobby at that time.

That's pretty much it from that point on.

Q. What did you see when you left tower one? Tower two had already collapsed.

A. I didn't see it. Tower two we didn't even know went down. I had no clue it went down. When we were up on the 30th floor, guys were banging out the windows, saying, "Holy shit, this looks like a war zone."

Guys were saying stay away from the windows, something might come in, something might fall down and come in through the window. So I never got to see it. What they were talking about was the other Trade Center when it had gone down. The whole scene outside looked terrible.

On our way out when we left first World Trade, all we saw was -- it was like tunnel vision. All you saw was what was right in front of you. Things were still falling as we were heading out. The streets were all dusty. I was not really realizing that the other Trade Center had collapsed, because it was towards our left, I believe, which we were running towards the right. We were standing along the line, and it's just what's in front of me.

I wasn't really looking around to take a look. There's still stuff falling on top of us. So I still didn't know it went down. I actually didn't know until the other one fell down and I heard that the other one was gone while we were in there.

Q. Question: When you exited the World Trade Center, the north tower, you were going where? North on West Street? Which way were you exiting the area? Running away from the buildings, which street were you on and which way were you going?

A. We were on West Side Highway and we were headed up towards --

Q. North?

A. Yeah, north, toward Vesey. We were right there. Our rig was parked on Vesey, so we headed up that way. We were right under the walkway just about, and that's when it started coming, about there.

Q. Did you see the command post? Did you see Chief Ganci? Do you know Chief Ganci?

A. No.

Q. Did you see the command post with the command board?

A. I saw the command post. Actually I don't know -- I just remember seeing like there was a bunch of people over there past the walkway towards the water. There was just a crowd of people. I didn't know -- in that intersection there, that's all I was looking at was in that intersection there.

There was nobody in the intersection, nobody in the streets in general, everyone just saying come on, keeping coming, keep coming. That's when it went. I looked back. You see three explosions and then the whole thing coming down. I turned my head and everybody was scattering. From there I don't know who was who. I don't even know where my guys went. None of us knew where each other were at at that point in time.

Q. So you just kept running as it was collapsing?

A. Yeah, pretty much, yeah. Each and every person, pretty much.

Q. Then what happened? How did you regroup? Where did you go after that? Did you form up again or meet your guys again? What did you do after that?

A. After everything happened, we got engulfed by the whole cloud of smoke and everything, and guys were sharing masks inside that whole thing and trying to find our way out. We couldn't see anything inside there. I was right up on a cop van. My face was right against a headlight, and I could barely see that, because the lights were on on it.

Once we got out of there, I heard Mike Kehoe yelling, "28, 28." I found him, and from there we went looking around and we found Roy. He was up getting IV up somewhere. Then we finally found our lieutenant and Jimmy Ippolito who both of them I guess had ran towards the water towards where all the guys were at the command post area. I guess they ran towards that way. We ran down the West Side Highway.

The other guy we didn't really know where he was was our chauffeur. He was still out by the truck, I guess, when everything was going on. I guess when the second plane hit, from what I understand, he got blown back a couple feet and he got helped out and he got taken to a hospital. So he's all right. That was the only one at that point that we didn't know.

Then we finally all regrouped and whatnot and found each other. Around that time guys were coming in bus loads before we know it, coming in to help search.

Q. Where did you park your rig? Where was 28 parked?

A. He dropped us off right in front, right in front of the tower we went in, which is --

Q. The north tower?

A. The north tower, the second one that went down. He dropped us off right in front of there, and from what I understand he parked it right on Vesey Street. That's where we got off. It was right in front.

Q. What floor did you reach when you were climbing up? You said you were like on the 20th floor and then you decided to come down?

A. 28th or 30th floor, the 30th, around there, because we were going like every two floors. So it was around there. I remember seeing 28 on the wall, and then I think we went up again. I think it was around the 30th floor, we made it up there. From there that's when we went down.

Then a chief came down and pretty much said everybody evacuate, because nothing was coming over the radios, as far as everybody was still waiting. We were waiting with a bunch of guys at that point in time.

I saw one of the guys I knew from the academy. He was in 4 Engine. Another one I knew from academy, he was from 10-10. They were up there with us also. I don't know if you got details from someone else, but I'm pretty sure he was from there.

Q. What floor did you say you were on when you think the south tower fell down?

A. I would say about the 17th.

Q. You didn't have a radio that day. Did you have a handy talky?

A. Me? No.

Q. You were with the officer when you were climbing?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what was on the handy talky when the south tower fell down? Was there a lot of screaming? Do you remember radio messages or anything like that?

A. No, nothing like that.

Q. There were a lot of guys in the lobby, you said, when you came down to the lobby and hooked up. You don't remember anybody specific, companies or personal people, individual people?

A. No, like I said, it was real tunnel vision. I just wasn't being pretty much aware of anything around, who was around me and whatnot. Like I said, 4 and 18 are the only ones that stuck out in my head.

CHIEF MALKIN: Okay. I'm thanking the firefighter for the interview. The interview is concluded. It's now 1443 hours. This concludes the interview and also the chief's aide in the Safety Battalion, Michael Bosco, sat in on this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER BERTRAM SPRINGSTEAD

Interview Date: December 4, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: Today is December 4th, 2001. The time is now 1626 hours. I am Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with fireman first grade Bertram Springstead, Ladder Company 9. We're in the quarters of Ladder 9, and this interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001. Also present is fireman Michael Bosco of the Safety Battalion.

Now, Fireman Springstead, I have asked him to relate everything that he remembers from the incident on September 11th.

Q. Okay, go ahead.

A. September 11th I remember walking into the kitchen about 8:30 in the morning, sat down, coffee, paper. A little while later, I guess it was about a quarter to 9, somebody came in and said they saw the plane coming over quarters and then they said they saw it hit the Trade Center.

So we all ran to the corner of Lafayette and Great Jones, and we could see the big hole in the building where the plane had hit.

So we all went back to quarters, started getting dressed. We didn't get the call right away. 32 went on the first ticket. We were all sitting in the house watching, bunkering up. Then it came on the TV, and we started watching it on TV, wondering why we didn't get the call yet and complaining that we didn't get the call.

Q. Sure.

A. It was about 5 to 9, I guess, or a couple minutes before 9, I guess, I remember saying to the guys, "I wonder if they're holding this ticket until after 9." Sure enough, the ticket came in 090014.

Q. Get out of here.

A. And I made a copy of the ticket, and I stuffed it in my pocket, because I was like, "This is bullshit. I'm calling the union when I get back." We were watching people jump on TV from the building. I said how can they be holding this ticket. That was what was going through my mind the first time.

We get on the rig. We're going down. The probie, John Tierney, he was off duty before we got out. Something wasn't right that day. I knew something was wrong, and I turned to him and said, "John, do me a favor, don't take this run in. Just stay here. You're off duty, you're not getting paid, just go home, man, just go home." But who is not going to jump on the rig? So he jumped on the rig and he was sitting on a lap.

We were driving down, sirens the whole way down. We get there. We stepped off the rig, and I look up and I noticed that both towers were on fire now. We didn't realize at the time that another plane had hit. We didn't see it and couldn't hear it while responding. I just figured the other tower was on fire from stuff flying from the other building. So we really didn't know there was a second plane.

We parked on I guess it was the northeast corner of the Trade Center, which is right at Vesey and Church, I guess. Vesey and Church, Vesey and Church right there. We stepped off the rig, and there were plane engine parts and people yelling and screaming. We stepped off and noticed the two towers on fire.

We started walking down Vesey towards West Street. Our assignment was tower one, so we would go into the lobby. Just as we turned onto West Street, we were coming towards the entrance of the Trade Center and we saw a jumper coming down. We were like, "Oh, man, look at this." They were smoldering, on fire, smoking. So we were like, "Oh, man." Just a tremendous thump. The noise was unbelievable.

Now we're looking up as we're going in, and we go into the lobby and there's everybody. Von Essen's there. The Mayor's there. Everybody's at this command post, everyone in white hats. We were standing there at the command post, waiting for our assignment.

The probie still didn't have a mask. He had jumped on the rig, so he was on somebody's lap on the way down there. So I walked over to the command post and took one of the aide's mask and gave it to him and said, "Put this on because we were going up now." Ganci took us over to the stairs and said, "Call us when you get there." That's all they said.

Q. Ganci was with you in the lobby?

A. He showed us to the stairs. Ganci showed us to the stairs to take. We started walking up. I was taking my time, pacing myself, going nice and slow, taking it easy. Those guys were a little quicker than I was, and they kind of advanced a couple floors beyond me.

They were up a couple floors ahead of me -- I don't know how many -- and Don Casey waited for me I guess it was on like the 13th floor -- I forget exactly what floor it was on -- so that I wouldn't be alone. I was taking my time going up there. We were taking breaks here and there. I forget what floors we took breaks on.

There were a lot of maydays with chest pains on the radios and stuff like that. I don't remember who or what floor, but there were a lot of maydays. EMS was going all over the place with maydays with chest pains.

We got up, and then me and Don were kind of pacing ourselves. We pretty much tried to take a break on every floor that you had access to, because you didn't have access on every floor. So whatever floor you had access, we would go in, take a quick breather and then get going again.

I guess it was about the 19th or 20th floor when I said, "Don I've got to take a break." I was really hot. I said, "Don, I've got to take this coat off for a second, take a breather." They had water, and people had broken open a Poland Spring machine and there were bottles of water, so we would take a break. I took my stuff off, and I was pouring water all over.

5 Engine was there on the floor too. Derek Brogan from 5 Engine, he was miserable, miserable: chest pains, nauseous, on his knees. He looked terrible. So we were pouring the water over him. Real bad.

Then Don Casey, who I was with, starts staying his arm was tingling, he's getting numbness in his arm, in his left arm. I was like, "All right, sit down." EMS was there. Two guys from EMS were there. One was working on Derek, and the other guy started working on Casey with the oxygen and stuff like that.

I remember somebody said, "You think you're having a bad day? Take a look out this window." We looked out the Trade Center window, and there was the Vista Hotel, I guess it was there. I'm not really sure what building I was looking at, but I'm pretty sure it was the roof of the Vista. There had to be 30, 40 jumpers sprayed out all over the roof. I went, "Oh, Jesus, what the hell is going on here?"

As I was looking out the window, which is a total of five seconds, another jumper comes by, kind of like clipped the edge of the roof and just vaporized. The guy just disappeared. There was no longer a body, just a big cloud of red.

Q. Wow.

A. I was like, "I didn't need to see that." A total of five seconds I was looking out that window, total.

So I go back, and I was with Don and I was saying, "Maybe we should take you down, Don. Maybe we should start working down if you're getting --" He said, "No, I'm all right now. I'm all right."

The EMS guy was yelling at him. He said, "You guys, I've probably seen this a thousand times. You might be having a heart attack." But Don didn't think so. He thought his suspender strap was too tight, which turned out it was, because he was fine.

There was a time we were like, "Well, I don't know, Case, maybe we should take you down. Let's get out of here. How much farther? Are you going to make it?"

Then 5 Engine was there, the whole 5 Engine was there. Derek Brogan was miserable. He was terrible. He looked terrible. I was nervous about him. He looked really bad. So I turned to 5 Engine officer. They didn't want to leave him, but they wanted to keep going. I said, "Look, Lou, you want me to take down Derek?" I said, "I'm going to take Don down. Do you want me to take Derek down? I'm taking two," because 5 Engine didn't want to leave another guy behind. He said, "Yeah, maybe that's a good idea, if you're going down." I had a radio, Don had a radio, and this way they didn't have to lose another guy with a radio when it went up.

So maybe, I don't know, five seconds later, that's when tower two must have started coming down. The building started shaking, a tremendous rumbling. Light bulbs were falling out. File cabinets were tipping over.

We were in that corner of tower one that's kind of close to tower two where they kind of like point at each other there. That's the corner we were in. I don't know what the hell was going on, but whatever it was, it was right outside the window that we were standing like five feet from.

Some guys were diving on the floor. Some guys were -- I just took off for the other side. I said whatever was going on was on that side. I said I'm getting to the other side of the building. I started running.

We got to that side of the building. I didn't see Casey, but he told me he dove on the floor first. Then when he saw me run by, he said, "That looks like a good idea. Maybe I'll go with Bert and get to the other side." Casey got him to the stairwell. He said, "Let's get the hell out of here." I said, "Hold on, hold on, Case. I don't even know what that was. Let's regroup here. First we've got to go back and get our stuff."

We had taken our coats off. We don't have any tools. We don't have our masks. I said, "Let's go back, get our stuff." I said, "First of all, Brogan is still back there. We're responsible for him now." I said, "Let's go see if we can find Derek."

We get back there. It was dark. Most of the light bulbs had fallen off, so you really couldn't see much. I guess it was from the dust cloud outside there was no light coming in. We didn't know at the time. We just thought it was another plane or something, another explosion or whatever. We really didn't know what it was.

We got our masks and our coats, grabbed the halogen and started looking for Derek, couldn't find him, searched all over. He didn't have a radio. We couldn't call him. Then we got the word on the radio to get out of the building. I was like, "Case, I guess he's gone. There's nobody on this floor." We searched the whole floor. There's nobody there.

So we started going down. We made our way to the stair. Then it was just a slow walk down, as slow a 20 floors as you can walk. You took a step, you took another step, took a step.

You got to each landing, you opened the door, "Anybody else here? Let's go. Everybody out." You let a couple people in front of you, another step.

We just happened to be on the staircase with an FBI guy. He had an FBI jacket on. He turns around to me and goes, "We've got to get out of here." I said, "What are you talking about? We're getting out. Let's go. Everybody's walking out." He said, "No, you don't understand. There's more planes coming." I said, "What the hell are you talking about, more planes?" He said, "There's two more planes on the way for these buildings." "What do you mean, two more planes?" I didn't even know there was more than one plane at this point. We didn't know there was a second plane.

So then we started walking out. It didn't matter. You weren't going anywhere. It was slow walking. We got to about the 5th or 6th floor. It was getting a little smoky, dusty, whatever. Don started to put his mask on. I said, "Don, why don't you save it?" It wasn't that bad yet. I said, "Why don't we get down and see if we need it to get out of here before we waste it up here." So we just started covering up, and we made it all the way down.

We came to the lobby, and the lobby was a disaster. It never registered that the other building had collapsed. We came outside, and we walked the same way we came in. We went back to the -- you didn't go through the doors. All the glass was broken on the ground floor when we came in the first time, I guess from the elevators collapsing or I don't know. All the glass was gone.

So we were walking through the plate glass along the wall. We slowly walked our way out towards the sidewalk, making sure that no jumpers were landing on us. I don't know what it was exactly, but I wound up seeing Lieutenant Smith. We just happened to bump into him.

I radioed to him on the way down that me and Case were in staircase B, I think it was, and we were on our way down. He said, "Okay. See you out front." I said, "Do we have everybody?" I forget what he said. I don't know. Everybody was with me on the stairs. I don't see everybody.

But there were people -- there were guys all over the place. There were firemen everywhere, wandering around. So we started looking around to see if we could see the guys. I said, "Lou, they've got to be right here. So I'm going to go back inside and maybe they're in the lobby." He said all right, he's going to gather everybody up out here when I find our three guys. I said, "We'll get together up the street. We'll regroup and where are we going."

I still never realized the building had collapsed. In fact, I had my camera in my pocket, and I was taking pictures on the way out. Casey is yelling at me, "Let's get the hell out of here. What are you doing?"

Q. Did the pictures come out?

A. Yeah, they came out great.

Q. Have you got them here?

A. I have the negatives. Guys keep asking for copies left and right.

Q. I bet.

A. In fact, I get about six, seven copies made up at a time, and guys -- whatever it costs.

It costs me about $5 to get them made.

So I started my way back in underneath that foot bridge right on the corner of Vesey and Church, the same way we walked in. There were a couple rigs there. There was a guy with a bullhorn, a chief. I thought he was a chief. He had a white shirt on. I don't remember if he had a helmet on. But he had a bullhorn, a guy with a bullhorn.

He was yelling, "Clear the area. Clear the area." I really wasn't listening to him. I was kind of walking by. He stopped me. He grabbed me. He said, "You've got to get out of here." I said, "Chief, I'm missing three guys." He said, "Everybody coming out I'm sending this way. They're probably out already. Go up this way. Everybody is going up this way." I said, "Look, Chief, they might be right here." He said, "Get the -- out of here now." He had me by my shoulder and he kind of shoed me away.

All right. So now I'm doing the same thing. I'm looking around. There's firemen all over the place now. I'm looking at each guy and I'm going over to guys. It's not really registering. The street is a disaster. There's stuff all over the street.

I was just by the other side of that foot bridge, I guess. You heard somebody, turned around and looked up, and I saw a big section of the facade coming down, straight down. I said, "Holy shit," and I took off up West Street, north on West Street, just ran as far as I could, which wasn't too far before the dust cloud took you out and stuff was hitting you and banging off your mask and your helmet and, geez, what the fuck's going on, you know?

Then the dust cloud started coming, and I turned around and the cloud was coming and I turned my mask on and put it on. Then it was just dust and dark for it seemed like forever, darker than any fire I had ever been in. There was nowhere to go. You could see it swirling around you. I actually had to push the face piece onto my face to keep it out. It was forcing its way inside.

Then it was just wandering in the dark north on West Street, bumping into cars and barricades and whatever else I bumped into. I finally started coming out of the dust and finally started seeing a little light. I turned around, and now I'm missing all seven guys, the other seven guys that were with me. Now I don't know where anybody is.

So I started looking for guys again. The first guy I saw was the chauffeur, Warnock. He was miserable. He didn't have a mask on, so he must have dropped it and ran. I don't know what happened. He didn't have his mask on, so he was terrible. He couldn't see. He had stuff in his eyes. He could barely breathe.

I just scooped him up by his arm and dragged him over to an ambulance and was banging on the back. They opened up. I actually had to scoop stuff out of his mouth, it was so thick with dust and stuff. I told him, "Mike, make yourself throw up. Get rid of that stuff."

EMS was trying to hose him down and get the stuff out of his eyes. I was holding him down as they were squirting the stuff into his eyes to clean his eyes. They were clearing his eyes. It wasn't like dust; it was like rocks were in his eyes. It was bad. He was in a bad way. They laid him down. EMS was there, so I said, "Mike, I'll be back." I said, "Let me go see if I can find anybody else."

The next guy that I saw was I think it was Smith and Casey. Casey was hurting too. He had his mask on the way out, but he said he lost it to run. He said he figured you moved faster. So he was hurting too. I dragged him over to where Mike was. Lieutenant Smith seemed okay. He is a pretty fast runner. I don't even know if he got caught in the dust, because he's a jackrabbit.

That was it. I didn't see Mike. Then the other three guys -- Mike Maguire, I didn't know where he was. Casey and Warnock were in the ambulance. I kind of asked them not to go. I said, "Why don't we stay together, guys. It's chaos. Why don't we stay together. I don't even know where they're taking us. Why don't we just stay together."

They weren't that bad; they were just -- they were okay now they got their eyes washed out. They didn't seem that bad. I said, "Why don't we stay together. One of the guys said, "No, I just want to get away from this." They were like, "Okay, go ahead."

So that was me, Smith and I don't remember -- there was some probie there in an orange hat, and he couldn't find his company, he didn't know where everybody was, he didn't have a radio. I said, "Why don't you stay with us and listen to the radio." I don't even remember his name or his company. He stayed with us the rest of the day. He never hooked up with any of the guys in his company. I don't even remember what company he was. He stayed with us.

We walked around, and I started calling the guys on the radio, you know, "9 OV to anybody at 9 Truck." It was weird because there was no radio traffic. There was nobody on the radio. It's like I could clear as day call anybody that was on it. Nobody was answering.

Then I started with 33 Engine. Nobody was answering. I just kept wandering around. Finally Mike Maguire, who had the can, he answered me. He told me where he was. I forget what street. West Street and North End walk, something like that. So we had to walk a couple blocks to get to there.

We never found him. I didn't see him again until nighttime. I don't know, it was like 10:00 at night the next time I finally saw Mike. But I knew he was okay, though, so I really wasn't worried. I was more worried about the other three guys.

I kept wandering around. Finally somebody said, "Well, everybody who's been coming out, they've been sending them to a staging area north on West Street. I said, "All right, let's go up there. Maybe they're up there." He said they were sending everybody north on West Street.

So we kept walking north. We never saw anything. We hitched a ride to 8 Truck, and then they said they would taking guys to 20 Truck, anybody they found were going to 20 Truck. I said, "All right, let's go to 20 Truck, see if the guys are there."

We still assumed that those three guys had gotten out. We had gotten out, so we were like where the hell are they? They must have gotten out. We went to 20, and they weren't there. Then I told Lieutenant Smith, "Lou, I'm going to walk back to quarters. Maybe they'll try and call quarters."

I got back to quarters, and they weren't there. This was like 4 or 5:00 in the afternoon now, after we had been wandering down there for hours. Nothing. They never --

Q. Where did you last see those guys?

A. I saw them in the lobby going up in the stairs, probably the third floor going up. They were taking off. They were in much better shape than I was. They were flying up the stairs. I'm like I'm pacing myself. We've got 90 floors. I said I'm not going -- I'd be dead by the 20th floor if I ran up 20 floors. It was a nice easy pace.

I never saw those guys for the rest of the day. I was with Casey. I bumped into Smith and Warnock. When I saw those guys outside, it was right underneath that foot bridge. That's where I saw those guys. Then I turned around and went back in the lobby.

I saw Mike Maguire. I kind of just waved to him that, hey, be careful of the jumpers.

We were out there. He walked out and met up with those guys. Then everybody scattered when it came down. Guys went off in all different directions. Those guys were walking north on West Street when I went back towards the building to go back in to get the other three guys.

That's the last time -- I never saw Walz. I never saw Baptiste. I never saw Tierney. I never saw those guys. I figured they had to be in that lobby, though. I don't know, they must have made a wrong turn in the lobby or something or followed the wrong guy. I don't know. I didn't really see them, so I don't know what they did. I just figured they were in that lobby and I was going to go get them.

That was it. I got back to quarters. Answering the phone putting the family off then. That was pretty much it.

Q. Those three guys are lost?

A. Those three guys are lost.

Q. They never came back?

A. No. I thought for most of the night that we'd find them someplace, whether it was in a hospital. They didn't know where anybody was. I just assumed they got out. I just assumed that those three guys got out. I miss them.

Q. Sure.

A. That's basically it.

Q. I just want to ask you a couple questions that I jotted down while you were talking.

What position did you have? Do you remember?

A. OV.

Q. You were the OV. Okay.

Did you get any sense that the elevators were running at any time when you got there or at any time was there any talk about --

A. The elevator doors were blown off.

Q. Blown off?

A. Yeah. You could see they were a disaster.

Q. Was there evidence of fire or smoke in that area? Did you get the sense that fire had been in that shaft or was in that shaft, the elevator shaft?

A. No, no, I never thought -- I just assumed that they must have plummeted from being cut --

Q. I see.

A. The airplane just -- that's probably why the plate glass was blown off too. We didn't walk through the doors; we walked through -- all the glass in the lobby was out.

Q. Even when you got there?

A. Yeah. So we walked through the glass to get into the building.

Q. Wow. Oh, yeah, I could see that, the elevators coming down might do that.

How about the handy talky traffic? You were on Channel 1 the whole time?

A. Yes.

Q. You didn't switch over; right?

A. No. There was chaos, and then they said -- I remember somebody saying tower two switch to whatever number it was. I don't know what they switched to. But I was in tower one.

Q. Handy talky Channel 1 that you were on, was it chaos the whole time? There was a time that you were making some calls to people?

A. There were so many maydays going on.

Q. You did hear maydays, but what about getting through?

A. Maydays were left and right for guys with chest pains. There was a lot of guys with chest pains. After tower two collapsed, we didn't know it at the time but there was one radio transmission that came through that said the 65th floor just collapsed. But we didn't know what that was or who gave it. I heard on the radio 65th floor just collapsed. I don't know who gave it or for what building. It had to be our building, because we were on a different radio channel. That was it.

Q. At any time did you hear any announcements over like the PA system instructing people what to do, like the fire wardens making any announcement?

A. No.

Q. Did you get any sense? Do you have any recollection?

A. No, I don't remember hearing any.

Q. No.

A. Everybody was calm walking down. There was no problems. We were on the right. We were going up on the right; they were going down on the right, patting us on the back, handing us water, "go get them, guys, you're earning your money today," all sorts of stuff like that.

Q. When you came downstairs, you used the words "the lobby was a disaster." What did the lobby look like?

A. Just like dusty and --

Q. Dusty --

A. The lobby was empty. I was going back towards the command post. I figured that's where everybody was going to be. The command post was set up in like that northwest corner of the building there. There was no chiefs in the lobby. There was nothing there. I'm like now where do we go.

So we just started filtering out towards the street, because that's where everybody -- there was kind of like a line on the stairs. Thank God we went the right way. If you went left, I don't think you were getting out of there. If you made the right, that's the way we went into the stairs, so that's the way I went out. That was the way I was walking back to the rig, the same way I went in there. It was just a right lucky pick of the two.

Q. That's pretty much it?

A. Yeah.

MR. MALKIN: I want to thank you for your statement and cooperating. The time is now 1655 hours, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER EDWARD SHEEHEY

Interview Date: December 4, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is December 4th, 2001. The time is 3:23 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Kenahan from Safety Battalion from the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with Edward Sheehey, fireman first grade of Engine 91. There is no one else present.

Q. Okay. Start your --

A. We responded after the second tower was hit by the aircraft, through voice alarm. I guess it took us approximately, on the fifth alarm, between five and ten minutes to get down there.

We got off the rig on West Street and Vesey, parked the rig. We noticed numerous jumpers coming down. There were firemen across the street that called us over to the command post. We went to the command post. We were standing fast at the command post with other companies, waiting for an assignment.

We were there approximately maybe ten minutes before we received an assignment to go into the south tower subbasement. We were on our way in with an engineer, and he told us that if there was smoke in the building that he wasn't able to go. He had no mask, and he didn't have all the keys to the doors.

So a battalion chief, which I do not know who he is, stopped us and told us he was going to get us more men, and we sent the chauffeur back to the rig for tools, forcible entry tools. Within one or two minutes standing there waiting for him to come back, the south tower started to collapse, and we --

Q. Where exactly were you when the south tower collapsed?

A. We were proceeding across West Street. We were probably maybe 25 yards from the command post.

Q. South of the command post?

A. Straight across from it, going in towards the south tower. We were probably just at West Street, just at the street. Then the south tower -- we heard an explosion, looked up, and the building started to collapse.

We dropped all our tools and gear, and we turned around. There was a parking garage to the right of the command post, so we ran down into the parking garage. After being in the garage about five minutes, we got out through a stairwell in the rear out into a rear courtyard.

At that time we started looking for rest of the members of the company. We found one other member, Joe Meola. We then proceeded to look for the lieutenant and the two other members. I guess we made our way around back to the front after about five or ten minutes looking for them. It seemed like five or ten minutes. We found Tim Hoppey.

That's when the north tower started to collapse. At that time we ran down Vesey Street towards the water and then north through a construction site and basically started looking for the rest of the guys that we were with.

About an hour and a half later we found our lieutenant, Lieutenant Casey. We just stood fast with him for the rest of the day. About an hour after that we found our chauffeur. We found out he was in the hospital.

Q. Did you hear any emergency transmissions on the handy talky? Did you have a handy talky?

A. No, I didn't have a handy talky.

Q. Did you hear anything being next to anybody?

A. I heard maydays. As we were at the command post, we heard maydays. I couldn't make out what they were for.

Q. Was this before the collapse or after?

A. Before the collapse. Then after the collapse I heard -- we looked for someone with a radio, and we found a captain from another engine company. I couldn't tell you what company he was from. He was looking for the rest of his men, and he had a handy talky. He said if he heard them calling for us he would let us know. I heard a couple of maydays on his handy talky but couldn't make out who was giving them or where they were.

Q. Anything else you want to add?

A. No, nothing I can remember. That's what we did pretty much. That was basically our whole involvement in the collapse.

Q. Okay. Thanks for your help.

MR. KENAHAN: The time now is 3:28, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER KEITH FACCILONGA

Interview Date: December 4, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: 5:38 and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with Keith Faccilonga, firefighter first grade from Engine 64.

Q. Go ahead and tell us what you remember from September 11th.

A. I saw the second plane hit the second tower on TV. I tried calling my battalion -- I tried calling my company -- (inaudible) after the second plane hit the towers, I got in my car. I called the company and then I called my battalion and I called my division, and there was no answers.

I had my firefighting gear at home with me and started getting the gear together, figuring I was going to come into work. After getting all the gear together, I made the phone calls again. Still no answer at all three places, including 47 Truck, who has their own department phone.

I got in the car and drove down. in live nx. I figured I was close enough to get down there, report in to a chief and do something. I drove down on the FDR Drive. I was about halfway down -- I couldn't tell you where, probably in the mid 90s when I saw the first tower go down. I saw that from the FDR Drive.

I had my helmet in the window, and the police kept waving me through. I got down there pretty quick; I would say less than 15 minutes door to door. I parked my car. I pulled -- actually on the FDR Drive right around the Brooklyn Bridge, there was, I would say, thousands and thousands of civilians that were walking up in a panic, up the FDR Drive.

The smoke at that point was so thick that I couldn't even see, so I had to back up, make a U turn on the FDR Drive and get off, I guess underneath the Brooklyn Bridge. Somehow I made my way over to Park Row, took one look, parked on Fulton Street right next to the St. Paul cemetary.

I got out of my car. I got my firefighting gear on, my bunker gear, helmet and everything, no mask. I walked about half a block down Church Street and made a left. In front of me was Five World Trade Center with fire showing out of just about every single window of Five World Trade. The building was fully involved, the whole entire building.

I made a left on Church Street, and I continued walking and that's where parts of the first building were all over Church Street and all in between Four World Trade and Five World Trade it was all parts of, I guess Two World Trade Center was the first one to collapse.

I made my way to the corner of Liberty and Trinity, and I found a bunch of firemen that had come in the same as I did, on their own, on their day off and were in the same situation. We were going through rigs looking for Scott masks. That was the only thing nobody had and the one thing that everybody needed.

220 Engine was parked, it looked like I think on the corner of Trinity and Liberty, and the truck was there and he was telling me he lost his whole company in the first collapse. So a bunch of us got together with a lieutenant from -- I don't even know what company. I don't remember his name anymore. We told him you're in charge and he was going to lead us in and try to find the guys that the truck from 220 was telling us were missing.

We headed down Liberty Street towards the quarters of 10 and 10, and we made it just about that far. I would say somewhere across from 10 and 10 right in the plaza. We were making our way across the rubble, and it was real slow going.

We were crawling across the rubble, trying to find -- at this point I wasn't sure which building had collapsed. I know the area a little bit. We were trying to get towards Two World Trade Center, which was the building that went down already. We didn't know that. So we're trying to get in there, thinking that's where the guys are. We're thinking -- I'm not sure -- we figured we could find the guys.

So we're walking over there, we heard a big roar. Nobody really knew what the roar was until the chauffeur from 220 said, "Oh, my God, not again." We turned around and started running directly up Liberty Street away from the Trade Center, running east on Liberty. We crossed Trinity. On the way a couple of guys bailed out and went into some of the buildings. Some guys hid in Burger King. Myself, I kept running. I tripped a couple of times. I got pelted and half buried along the way.

I got over to the corner of Broadway and Liberty, and there was a truck company parked on that corner. We hid behind the truck, and all the stuff came flying by. A couple of guys got hit by stuff and hurt by stuff. Even guys that were hiding behind the rig were getting hurt. I noticed some windows were broken.

At that point I couldn't breathe anymore. But there was an officer. I think he was from...I would have to say 20 Truck who shared a mask with me. I never found out really who it was, but I think it was a lieutenant from 20. He shared a mask with me.

After a good couple of minutes of pitch-black total darkness, it started to clear up a little bit and I could almost breathe again and maybe you could see your hand in front of your face. I decided to then go back, because on my way running away from the building I knew I left guys behind that I really wasn't sure if they made it or not.

I made it back down there toward 10-10 where I lost guys. The rubble was so deep that there was no way we were going to dig something up. I mean, everybody knows it was real deep rubble, and we heard banging on the doors of Burger King. So we went over to Burger King. There were a couple guys in there. They thought they were buried alive because the dust and dirt were so thick on the windows. They couldn't see anything. So we pulled the doors open, and there were maybe, I would say around five, six, seven guys, maybe, came out of there, and they were surprised they weren't buried in a couple of feet worth of dirt. It was only thick on the windows. It made them think they were buried alive in there.

We all got together again and tried to make another trip to get in there. As we entered the plaza again the second time. Now, stuff that had fallen I guess whatever was...there big, hard pieces of, I don't know, big pieces that had been standing for weeks. Pieces were falling off there and landing and we were kind of worried about some landing on us.

We couldn't pass there on Liberty, so we made our way south. I'm not sure if we went up Albany or Carlisle. I'm not sure what street it was. We went around to the west side, and along the way different guys were trying to do different things.

We hooked up with a couple of different chiefs, a couple of different lieutenants and captains, and different guys would attach themselves to those bosses and try to do something with them. Because the wind was blowing from the west, I thought the best bet was to go to the West Side Highway and try to make an attack from that side.

So me and a couple of guys from -- I don't remember what squad, but one of the squads, we hooked up together and we found an officer. We made our way to the West Side Highway, and we tried to make a push into the rubble. Actually while we were doing it, there were some fires that they were putting out. I took some hose line straps. We helped stretch some hose lines, helped carry some pieces to the manifolds, some gates, stuff like that. We were carrying stuff along the way.

What else? At that point there were civilians up in one of the buildings. I couldn't tell you which building it was at the time. He was up in one of the buildings that was damaged but not knocked down. He was waving to us. We kept saying, "What the hell does that guy want?" It looked like he wanted to be saved originally, but then we realized he was pointing and he saw something that we couldn't see.

So we started walking. He was directing us towards the south pedestrian bridge. As we got closer to the pedestrian bridge, I saw something shiny so I called some guys over, and we started making our way towards where the pedestrian bridge came to the ground on the east side of the West Side Highway.

Right where the pedestrian bridge met the ground, I noticed a bunker coat. So I called everybody over, and we started digging frantic. Then we realized we found somebody for sure. We started finding that it was his whole entire bunker coat and his hand was still in the bunker coat.

We were digging, and there was no response from whoever was buried. We got him buried out as much as we could, but there were three motorcycles that were pinned on him. It looked like a river of debris had come in. He had hid under the pedestrian bridge at the point by the ground where it meets the ground. He hid there I guess when the building collapsed. I'm not sure which one. At this point we didn't know who it was. Now I do know it was a chauffeur from 65 Engine, and we didn't know until we got him out of there, and I'll continue telling you how we got him out.

So he hid under the bridge where the forty-five meets the ground, and he got dirt from both sides of the bridge. Stuff just came running like a river and just buried him. There were three motorcycles that had toppled over, and they were pretty much pinning him to the ground even after we dug him out.

So myself and one other guy got as close as we could to the chauffeur. We grabbed a hold of the motorcycles. He finally came to and he finally was talking to us. He told us he was the chauffeur from 65. He didn't know how long he was out. He was unconscious. He doesn't remember anything other than running and hiding under there and then waking up. I think he was out for at least an hour or two by the time we made our way to him. It might have been more. I'm not sure.

I was the closest one to him and I told him we were going to try to get him out of there. We picked up the motorcycles as much as we could, but it still wasn't enough. We got some more guys over.

There was some fire in the rubble pile that was getting pretty intense, and the heat was a lot for us. So they stretched more line to put out the fire while we tried to get him out. We got a back board in there, and somebody counted to three. On the count of three, about three or four of us picked up the motorcycle as high was we could. While another two, three guys pulled him out of the pile. He was still pinned. I think his leg was pinned in the pile.

So then I crawled underneath and tried to find out where he was pinned, his leg was stuck at. Probably his bunker gear was stuck under the motorcycles. So then we kind of finagled his legs. He was really tough. It was pinned pretty bad. The only thing we could think of was to pull him out. We got him free of what he was pinned under. We got a whole bunch more guys, maybe about five or six guys, to try and pick the motorcycles up on the count of three. I counted to three this time, and I told the chauffeur that we were going to pull him out on three. He was counting down and he was still pinned. I couldn't see where he was pinned. So we said we were going to do it and if it was too much, he was supposed to scream and let us know. On the count of three we picked up the bikes, and the guys pulled him out. They threw him on the board, and they got him out.

Let's see. After that I took a break for a couple of minutes. I got some water. I went and scavenged some equipment off of some rigs. I got a halogen, and I found a Scott pack off one of the rescue rigs that was parked right there, very close to the pedestrian bridge where Liberty meets the West Side Highway.

I got one of the Scott packs, and I put that on. Pretty much for the next couple hours we were inside the rubble pile, mostly from the west side. Since, like I said before, the wind was blowing towards the east, and it was a lot clearer coming in from the West Side Highway going toward Battery Park.

I concentrated my efforts towards One World Trade Center and Two World Trade Center. On and off during the day I hooked up with numerous firefighters and officers from lieutenants all the way up to battalion chiefs. We would hook up with teams and work as much as we could until somebody needed a blow and then they'd go take their own break and come back whenever they were ready and then hook up with another group or the same group. It pretty much went on like that until around 5:00. Let's see, it was around 3:00 I decided to take a break, and I made my way back towards -- I headed towards the command post set up on Broadway somewhere near Park Row. So I was pretty much spent at that point.

So I made my way over to Park Row where there was a command center where there were companies coming in. It was City Hall Park where I guess it was kind of a meeting point where people were coming in. I saw people coming in from "the Rock" I guess they sent their chauffeur school, that type of thing. They were all showing up there.

Checking in and I saw 47 Truck there, which is the truck that's in with the engine I'm assigned to. So I went over there and I reported to that officer who was Lieutenant Lowney. So I reported to him. I told him that I was going to be attached to him for the day. He's just about to sign in, I guess, and he was going to give my name. So I figured I would stay with them for the rest of the day. That was somewhere between 2 or 3:00.

At that point some fireman and some police were scavenging stuff from a hardware store, from a pharmacy for drops. My eyes were shot. I couldn't see anymore. We were putting drops in our eyes. We got some tools.

We finally got an assignment. We got on the rig maybe around 3:00 and drove around to see what was going on over by Six World Trade and make our way towards the rubble from that end. We were doing that for about two hours. Pretty much we couldn't get past the rig. So we carried as much food as we could. We made our way to the pile again. We were doing searches. Not much found. It was rough going.

At that point I was having trouble breathing. I couldn't even walk 20 or 30 yards without help. So they put me in an ambulance, gave me oxygen and they were talking about intubating me and they sent me off to St. Claire's Hospital. I stayed there pretty much through the night.

I got out of the hospital. That night I stayed at a friend's house in Manhattan. I came back down around 9:00 in the morning to get my car. My car was on Fulton Street. I got my car and went back up to the Bronx. I was supposed to be working that day and pretty much the rest was all responding with 64 Engine after that. You know after the first day.

So I guess pretty much that's my story. That's about it.

Q. Okay. Thanks a lot.

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 6:05 p.m. This concludes this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER DAVID MORIARTY

Interview Date: December 4, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is December 4th, 2001. The time is 5:17 p.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with David Moriarty, firefighter first grade from Engine 64.

Q. Please tell us the events of September 11th as you remember them.

A. On the morning of September 11th, I was working a mutual with Kevin Hansen. I was working a day tour here at 64 Engine. I was just finishing up getting shaved when we received from the news that a plane had struck the World Trade Center. I was looking at the television when we actually saw the second plane strike the World Trade Center while we were still in quarters.

Sometime after that we received a ticket to respond as an additional unit on a fifth alarm to the quarters of 35 Engine in Harlem, and we got on the rig and headed down to Harlem. While we were on the Bruckner Expressway heading down, you could see smoke rising from the area of southern Manhattan in the vicinity of the World Trade Center.

We got down to Harlem, and Lieutenant Brendan Whelan was working in 35 that day. He got promoted out of Ladder 47 here. They were in the process of gathering extra tools and stuff for their apparatus, and he had us stage our apparatus around the corner facing I guess east.

We were there for a short period of time, and other companies came in. I believe 94 Engine responded in, maybe 50 Engine was there and a couple of additional engines. I don't remember exactly who.

We were in quarters, like I said, not that long and the voice alarm went off, and the person on the voice alarm asked Brendan to read out a roll call of all of the units which were currently at quarters there. Brendan did that, and he had to repeat it a couple of times. You could tell the guy on the voice alarm was probably writing it down.

Shortly after Brendan read it out to him, he said -- the guy on the voice alarm, the dispatcher, said respond forthwith to West and Vesey Street to the staging area.

So we got on the apparatus, and somehow we wound up pretty much like in the lead heading south through Manhattan. In the area of 81st and Central Park West -- I don't know if it was the traffic conditions or what, but we were kind of delayed right there.

I told the chauffeur that I knew of an entrance to the West Side Highway at 79th. So what we had to do was we went one block west to Columbus, went south to 79th, made a right all the way across and got on the drive there at 79th and West Side Highway and proceeded south.

It was while we were in transit there that the radio traffic picked up on the citywide, and somebody put over that there was a collapse at the World Trade Center. The thing was, they never went into the extent of the collapse. We didn't realize that the entire south tower had collapsed while we were en route.

That transmission was somewhat garbled, and immediately after that we heard a member over the citywide frequency screaming a mayday. You could tell by his voice that he was pretty bad. He was in bad shape. He said he was trapped by debris, he was finding it difficult to breathe and "Somebody come and get me." The dispatcher got right back on and tried to calm him down and assure him that they had units moving towards his location.

Then pretty soon after that we arrived on West Street north of West and Vesey, several blocks north of the walk bridge that's at a college there or something. That's where our chauffeur found parking.

We got off the rig and we grabbed our rollups. We started walking south on West. Vinnie Massa, who had the control position, told us hold on a second. He wanted to just remove the basic items he'd need for a standpipe operation from the standpipe kit so he wouldn't be lugging the entire kit with him.

At this time there was units all over the place on West, guys walking south and throngs of civilians walking north. I mean, hundreds and hundreds of people were walking north on West.

Then we started sizing it up as we were walking. It was pretty bad. I mean, the north tower was burning pretty good. It was ripping on the upper floors. There was all sorts of debris in the air. We could see there was a dust in the air that we didn't really understand what it was. We thought it was smoke and whatnot. People were still streaming north as we were headed south.

I started watching the debris, trying to see the other tower. The debris that was in the air and stuff, I was watching that, trying to see around the north tower to see the south tower, how bad did it look.

As I was looking through the debris was when I first started seeing people jumping out of the north tower. I had thought at first -- I was walking alongside my probie, Billy Horel, and we were both kind of looking up at the debris. It was like, "Did you see that?" He said, "Yeah." I said, "Those are people jumping out of the building." There were enough of them that jumped while we were walking.

As we got closer, you could see debris, but there was a throng of firefighters and people still between us and Vesey. That's when I started noticing equipment on the roadway and masks and shit like that.

I had been looking up again, and suddenly somebody to the front of us -- I don't know if it was a civilian or firefighter or cop or what -- said, "She's coming down." We were within a half a block of the north tower.

It was my intention -- I was probably the senior guy on the back step that day -- that we report in to some command center down there. Our officer would report in and we would probably be going into the north tower or somewhere with an assignment for a high rise job.

But that shout went up, and the crowd in front of us suddenly surged towards us. Everybody turned and started coming back north. I looked up, and it appeared as if the north tower -- it almost appeared to be liquefied. The very top of it began to cascade out and down, almost in a rolling motion.

As I watched it, the street started to fill with this tremendous sound of just noise. It reminded me of a jet aircraft engine when a jet takes off. It was that loud. The debris started coming out onto West and down.

We turned. I yelled something, maybe

"Come on 64," or something. I grabbed my probie by his harness, and I took one last look. I could see now that the dust cloud was coming up at us pretty fast. We turned around and we started heading back north. We weren't running at a flat-out run, but we were walking very briskly.

I took a look over my shoulder. I realized we weren't going to outrun this thing. Still holding onto Billy, I said, "Come here." There was an EMS ambulance parked facing north in the southbound lanes. I said, "We've got to get down here." I got down in front of the bumper with Billy. I told him, "Mask up, mask up."

I looked, and I didn't know what was in this debris. I said to myself if there's any heavy stuff in this debris, we might not be in the best of spots, but at least we had some cover. Before I could get my mouthpiece, my face mask on, it was that quick. That cloud of stuff was up, on us, and over us.

I didn't know exactly where the other members of the company were, but I knew Billy was with me. He got his mask on. I cleaned mine out a little bit. It was very difficult to breathe. Everything became kind of encapsulated. You couldn't hear people yelling. Things weren't as loud as they would normally be on the street because of this dust that was all around us.

What happened then was the EMS ambulance was running. It was on. The engine was on. It started whining terribly bad. I realized it was sucking all the dust. I thought maybe we're going to have a car fire here. I told Billy, "Billy, we're going to stand up and walk north together out of this thing." Basically that's what we did.

There were other people. We did bump into people that were standing. We didn't encounter anybody laid out or anything like that along our path north until we got out of that cloud.

When we got out of that cloud, we regrouped. It was a matter of minutes before all of the members were accounted for, we had everybody, and we turned around and headed back south now.

It was at that point as we closed in on where the north tower had been that I really realized the extent of what had happened. There was a tremendous amount of equipment strewn across West Street, I mean partner saws and masks. I saw a case for a heat-seeking camera. I was clued in on that.

We passed a side street, and there was an engine. I think it was 16; I'm not sure. It was hooked up to a hydrant. There was debris burning around it, and it was a matter of I did a quick check, a cursory check, for the chauffeur to see if he could possibly be in among this stuff here.

It was on a side street away from like the heavy debris. There was all this stuff, and there were small pockets of fire burning around the apparatus. It was like is he around? We looked under the rig. We checked the interior of the rig. There was nobody by that rig, so we moved on. We moved south back towards the Trade Center.

We got to the corner of West and Vesey, and it was just very chaotic at that point. There was a lot of firemen there, guys looking for stuff to do, doing cursory examinations of the pile and stuff.

Shortly -- I don't know how long. You know, time kind of speeded up and slowed down depending on where you were. What we wound up doing is we assisted members of 54 Engine. They had been ordered to draft water from a marine unit in the river.

We assisted them in positioning the rig. We got a manifold, and we had I think four or six lines. Like they were eventually hooked up to this manifold in the area of West and Vesey. Those lines were operating. We didn't operate off of it, but other companies had them charged.

There were guys that had put up portable ladders towards part of the World Trade Center there and were getting up onto I guess it was a mezzanine level and doing a search there real quick.

But the command at that point wasn't really organized at first. Then I remember seeing like a few different chiefs at the corner throughout the day. They became very concerned about the condition of number Seven World Trade and where we were in vicinity to that. They kept announcing the collapse and who's moving, and we got pushed further and further west.

We took a blow in the vicinity of the American Express building. I heard that a police officer, the body of a police officer, had been recovered right where we were standing when we first got there to the corner. Guys were just making small examinations of the pile that was around us. But they weren't really getting guys get too deep into it because of the possible pending collapse of Seven World Trade.

We were staged there a good part of the afternoon until seven finally did collapse. It was shortly after the collapse of seven that -- Chief Fellini, I guess was the commander at West and Vesey. I know Chief Salka was at West and Vesey and there was another chief with them.

They wanted to get a primary of the Verizon building. They were asking for three engines and three trucks. That's all they wanted to commit to the buildings to do a cursory examination for possible victims and stability and building damage. 64 Engine was chosen to do part of that search.

We wound up entering the building. Three engines, three trucks teamed up, one engine, one truck, per ten floors. It was 6 or 9 Truck that we wound up with, and we did floors 10 through 20. We did have structural damage to the building, especially to the east side, and small pockets of fire set back there, but no victims within the building.

We came out, and we took a blow on West Street, reported back to the command center. Basically we were told that it was time for us to leave. We wanted to stay. The chief that was on duty then, he asked us what tour we were working and so on. We told him we were there from the day tour. The chief said, "I've got a thousand guys here to help. It's time for you to guys to take up and go home," which we eventually did. That's it.

Q. Very good. Thanks for your help.

A. Okay.

CHIEF KENAHAN: This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER TIMOTHY HOPPEY

Interview Date: December 4, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: It's December 4th, 2001. The time is 3:39 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with Timothy Hoppey, firefighter first grade, assigned to Engine 91. We're at the quarters of Engine 91 conducting this interview.

Q. Go ahead with any --

A. We cut through Central Park to get down there. Then we got over to the West Side Highway. The cops pretty much had it all cleared out for us, so we cruised right down to pretty near the World Trade Center. I believe we parked on West Street.

We got off the rig. It was myself, Ed Sheehy and Maureen Schulman on the back step. We took our rollups and started walking down West Street toward the command center that we were to report to, walked about 50 yards or so, and Maureen was actually carrying the standpipe kit and rollups. I went back and grabbed the standpipe kit from her to speed things up a bit.

We got down to the command post. As soon as we arrived at the command post, I noticed the jumpers were coming down there. I believe there were a lot more landing on top of the hotel, but some were hitting out in the street.

There were quite a few firefighters already assembled there. The chief of the command center told us to step back off of West Street so that we wouldn't actually see the impact of the jumpers. There was a parking garage there with a ramp. So by going down the ramp a little bit, you still saw and heard the jumpers, but you didn't actually see them hitting on the street. So that's pretty much where everyone was.

We took our masks off and dropped the rollups and stuff because we were assuming that we might be there a while waiting for our assignment and seeing how most of the other companies had done that also.

As far as the companies assembled there, I really only saw 34 Engine. I don't know. A lot of guys had their helmets off too and their gear stacked in specific areas.

While we were there, I went back into the parking garage, and one of the guys in the glass booth back there, I asked him where a faucet was. So came out and turned on a faucet for us so we had some water.

We were just hanging out there, waiting to be called, and eventually Lieutenant James Casey came back, told us to get our gear on, that we were going to head in.

So we went up to West Street. We were right by the command center at that point. We were kind of on the curb to cross West Street. Actually we were told we were going to go to the six sublevel. I'm not sure of what tower.

We were going to go in with an engineer who -- I guess they were having standpipe problems up there. We were going to isolate a standpipe or something. Not that we knew how to do it, but this engineer was going to tell us what valves to turn or whatever. As I said, I'm not even sure what tower we were supposed to go into.

We walked out into West Street maybe ten yards or so, and the chief called us back.

I'm not sure what chief this was. I know Peter Ganci was at this command center, but I'm not sure what chief this actually was.

The chief wanted to get a truck company to go in with us. He was figuring we would probably have to force doors getting down to these sublevels. At that point Lieutenant Casey had sent our chauffeur, Steve Connor, and Brian Russo, who actually had just gotten off the night tour but had ridden down with the rack unit, I believe. He sent them back to 91's rig to get forcible entry tools, rabbit tools or something like that.

In the interim while we were standing there on the curb at West Street, probably three minutes or so after he had told us to go in, that's when we heard the rumble. I looked up, and it was just a black cloud directly overhead.

At that point I was thinking it was a secondary explosion. It looked to me like it was much lower than where the planes had gone in. That was probably just a delay in looking up.

I turned around and looked to see what everyone else was doing, and everyone was running right down that ramp into the parking garage. So I just dropped the rollup and standpipe kit right there and took off running and made it into the parking garage.

As I was running down the ramp, there was a pillar on the left. I jumped behind it. I was going to throw my mask on, because I was assuming at the time that -- thinking that the World Trade Center -- I thought the top half of the building was falling off, and I was thinking of it falling outward, not really imploding upon itself like it did. So if it was falling our way, we might get buried alive or trapped down in that parking garage.

I was going to throw my mask on, but as soon as I jumped behind the pillar, there was just a black cloud rolling probably five or ten yards away from me, so I just kept running. I didn't know if it was the building or if it was just debris. I had no idea what was in the cloud.

By the time I got to the rear of the parking garage -- it stayed pretty clear back there. It wasn't too bad. There was a stairway up. There were a ton of guys on the stairwell. I know there was a delay in getting out the door. Whether they got the key or forced the door, I'm not really sure. I stayed down at the bottom there. I had my flashlight on directing people in there.

Once the door was forced or opened or whatever they did, everyone headed up and out the back of the parking garage. I went up there. We moved either a bicycle rack or some type of barrier to hold the door open up top.

While I was standing there, some captain -- I don't know what company -- he saw I had an orange flashlight on my jacket and he said, "Let me have that flashlight. I'm going to go down and search the parking garage." So I said, "All right." So I gave him the flashlight. I said, "I'm going to go down with you."

So we put on our masks and went down into the parking garage. He set up a search rope. The visibility was actually fairly good down there. You could see all the shapes of people. It seemed like everyone who had gotten in the parking garage was fine.

I walked back out to where the ramp met the air, but you really couldn't see too much at that point. You wouldn't see anyone walking around out there. I didn't really see much of anything out there at that point.

I went back out through the garage, back out into like a little park behind the garage. Walking around there, I met up with two guys from my company, Ed Sheehy and Joe Meola, who also had been relieved that morning but had come down.

We just started looking for our lieutenant and the rest of our company at that point. We walked through the park I believe to Vesey Street, and we were going to loop around to come back down into the Trade Center to see if our lieutenant and other members were down there.

I would assume we were on Vesey Street or West Street. I'm not even exactly sure. But a cop started screaming, "The north tower is leaning." We again started running. That came down a couple minutes after that. As I said, I think we were on Vesey Street at that point, but I'm not really sure.

After that it was kind of pandemonium. The U.S. marshals were saying a third plane was coming in. They said there were bombs in all the buildings around there. No one really knew where to assemble. Every time you tried to set up a spot, you were being told to keep moving further north. Eventually we ended up by Stuyvesant High School. That was pretty much it.

Q. Do you have anything else?

A. No, I don't.

CHIEF KENAHAN: It's now 3:48. This interview is concluded. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FATHER JOHN DELENDICK

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is December 6th. My name is Mike Tambasco with the World Trade Center Task Force. We're on the fourth floor of Nine Metrotech in the conference room, conducting an interview with Father John Delendick into the events of September 11th.

The time now is 1431 hours.

Q. Father, if you would just be good enough to tell us your story from that day.

A. I had just finished saying the 8:30 mass at St. Michael's in Brooklyn. The pager went off and said that a plane had crashed into one of the towers of the Trade Center. I called emergency operations center and said I was responding, and I left for the Trade Center.

I went through the Battery Tunnel. I parked my car as close to the Battery Tunnel as possible and walked to the Trade Center from there along West Street. I stopped for a few minutes to talk to Jerry Barber, who was opposite -- I guess we were standing on the corner of Liberty Street and West. I believe that's where I saw him. I then proceeded down further.

He told me that the command post was on West Street down in front of the Financial Center. According to this paper, it's Two World Financial Center, Merrill Lynch. They were set up in front of there with two huge garage doors which went underneath the Financial Center.

I spoke to Ganci briefly, told him I was there. I saw Bill Feehan, said hello to him. I stood there for a while talking to Timmy Stackpole and to Chief Ed Henry, both of whom left a few minutes later.

And Henry picked up his tack and said to me: "I've got to go to work," and he went across the street to the Marriott. Timmy Stackpole and I continued to talk -- in fact, people started jumping off the north tower at that point. We were watching that. I said to Timmy I think we should go back to the office.

I should mention that behind us a lot of different companies were staging. That's where they were waiting to move in. I said: "Timmy, we should go back and remind the officers to look after their probies because I don't think they're going to be able to handle this. I turned around with Timmy, and we both looked and then looked at each other, because no one was handling it, the probies or the veterans.

Timmy at that point took a group of guys -- I'm not sure who was with him -- and went across the street as well. I believe they went to the Marriott. Most people going to the south tower went to the Marriott and went through the Marriott to get there.

The top of the building kind of started to rumble, and we all looked up. It looked --

Q. Let me interrupt you for a second. Were you there when the second plane hit?

A. No. When the second plane hit, I was still in Brooklyn. I was trying to get through the tunnel on Hamilton Avenue. We saw the plane, but I never saw it hit. I remember saying to myself, boy, that guy is awful low in the pattern. I remember saying something really stupid like, you know, did he come down to see what happened with the first one? It never dawned on me that he was heading for the other tower, but that's where it was headed.

We heard a rumbling noise, and it appeared that that first tower, the south tower, had exploded, the top of it. That's what I saw, what a lot of us saw. We ran down underneath the Financial Center.

Q. The garages behind you?

A. The garages.

We were followed by that cloud, that dark black cloud. It was very difficult to breathe, very difficult to see.

I stopped running or I stopped going down when it leveled off. There was like a ramp that went down, and I stopped at the bottom ramp where it leveled off. Bill Feehan was next to me. Ray Downey was over there too, because they both started talking -- I knew it was them because they were talking, so I knew.

I remember asking Ray Downey was it the jet fuel that blew up. He said at that point he thought there were bombs up there because it was too even. As we've since learned, it was the jet fuel that was dropping down that caused all this. But he said it was too even.

Q. Symmetrical?

A. So his original thought was that he thought it was a bomb up there as well.

We then started walking up, back up. I was with Bill Feehan. I'm not sure where Ray Downey went. I understand Pete Ganci found a stairwell, went up a stairwell and went back to the lobby, back to the command post where we were.

Bill and I stopped a few times on the ramp going up. There were some firefighters who had fallen there. I don't know who they were. I didn't really get to see their faces. You couldn't really see much. You trip over them is how --

Q. You found them.

A. We would grab other firefighters to help them down further. They had apparently minor injuries. They were okay, but they had fallen or whatever. We got people to assist them to go down further into the building.

I remember saying to Bill at one point we had to be near the garage doors. I said we should be seeing daylight soon. Little did I know that we weren't going to see daylight. I didn't even think. He said yeah, you're right.

Next thing we knew, we were outside. There was kind of -- I don't know what to call it, like an island between two garages on the driveway outside that had flowers in it. We were right next to it, so we knew we were outside, couldn't realize. Couldn't see anything.

We didn't know the building came down. We just knew the top of the building exploded and didn't know what happened to the rest of the building. You just couldn't see anything. Things began to lift a little bit.

Just to take a step back, when I got out, we discovered we were outside, somebody said to me there's somebody hurt down on West Street. And I started walking south on West Street. That's when I began to notice fire trucks that were damaged and ambulances on the side and cars destroyed.

I stopped and said where am I going? Where am I looking for this guy who is injured? I have no idea where I'm going. I turned and went back to --

Q. Where the command post was?

A. -- where the command post was.

Ganci was there at this point, and I stood there a few minutes. Pete started yelling, saying to everyone that we should start moving north and we're going to re-form the command post up on West and Chambers Street.

A whole group of us started moving north again. I'm not sure who I was with. We just started moving north. When we got to the corner of West and Vesey, we heard that kind of same rumbling noise. And someone just yelled run, and we all started running. Some people ran north. I ran with a whole bunch of people going towards the river.

Q. West?

A. On Vesey Street, west.

I remember a cop running along next to me. I remember this. This is great. We were running along, and a cop is running next to me. He says: "Father, can I go to confession?" I looked and said: "This is an act of war, isn't it?" He said: "Yeah, I believe so." I said: "Then I'm giving general absolution." I gave everyone general absolution, and I kept running.

Q. You're covered?

A. Also I ran into a bunch of guys from the Secret Service, about 25 or 30 of them, all in their suits. I don't know the name of the street that's behind the World Financial Center.

Q. It might be North End or --

A. It must be North Avenue. They were walking along North, crossing Vesey, and they were going down further. I stopped one of them and I said where are you going? He said one of our members is in the building and we have to go find him. I remember saying to him I don't think it's a good idea going down there right now. He said no, we've got to find him. I said fine, go right ahead, do what you have to do.

I kept going. I walked along the river, and a group of us walked along the river. We walked past the high school, Stuyvesant High School. There's an alleyway between the high school and --

Q. The river?

A. -- the river. I'm not sure what was there. I think the river was there. And we came up to -- back to West Street. Then at that point we're all standing around. Where is everyone? Where's Pete? Where's Bill?

Nigro came a little while later. Apparently he had walked around I think he said South Street. He was down the other way, walked around somehow and found his way back to Chambers Street.

Things began to clear. We were looking, and we realized both buildings were no longer there. Many of us just walked back down West Street back to the towers to see what we could do.

Q. There was --

A. I learned Father Judge was dead, and I began to learn that so many guys were gone.

Q. Heck of a day, huh?

A. I found the worst part of the day was people coming up to me that I knew and there were guys who had sons on the job or fathers on the job or brothers on the job and they would be asking me: Did you see my brother? Have you seen my father? Have you seen my son? I had to tell them no. I didn't even know they were there. That made it very hard.

Q. Father, is there anything else you can think of that you might like to add just for the history, any feelings, anything else? Feel free. If not --

A. No, I think that's about it, I guess.

Q. In that case I thank you for the interview?

MR. TAMBASCO: And the time is now 1443 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER WILLIAM JOHNSON

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Today is December 6, 2001. The time is 1315 hours. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the New York City Fire Department conducting an interview with the following individual, Firefighter William Johnson, fireman first, assigned to ladder 147, detailed to the research and development unit. I'm interviewing him at 59 Page Avenue, regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Fireman Johnson, please tell me what happened while you were there?

A. The morning of September 11, I reported to the office of R and D, where on notification of the accident at the World Trade Center, we responded in the R and D vehicle. Along with Lieutenant Stein, Lieutenant Monachelli, Firefighter Stein and myself. We responded through the Midtown Tunnel en route to the World Trade Center. On arriving at Church Street and Vesey Street, we pulled our Suburban into the corner.

As we exited the vehicle, I noticed ESU units circling the area, who advised us to keep our rig closer to the corner, so in the process of backing our rig into the corner, as I looked up, I could at that moment see the first building coming down. In that instance, we all started to make our way back up Vesey and at that point I spotted a doorway. I jumped into the doorway and stayed there as the debris and rubble came down from the first World Trade Center.

As it cleared, or started to clear, I noticed a few civilians walking around and we escorted them into the buildings. After escorting the civilians into the buildings, we exited, regrouped at the Suburban, donned our masks, crossed the street going toward building 5, where we encountered who we thought was Father Judge.

As they brought Father Judge to us, we examined him quickly, noticing that there was no pulse and we left him in the hands of EMS. As we made our way into building 5 we were notified that there were a couple of hundred people trapped in the subway below. In an attempt to try to go down there, the second building started to collapse.

Again heading up towards Vesey, making our way up, this time I was unable to get to cover. I was struck by the cloud in the middle of the street. We stayed in the middle of the street, for a period of let's say 5 to 10 minutes until everything cleared again.

Getting out of that cloud, we regrouped back at the corner of Broadway and Vesey, where Lieutenant Stein began the operations of a command post. I started my way back down Vesey Street again, to look for Lieutenant Monachelli, who lost us. We lost each other as a matter of fact. We regrouped. I found Lieutenant Monachelli on the corner of Church and Vesey. From that point we started to make a couple of surveys and searches of the area. Noticing Ladder 119's rig, and a couple of members from that company and that's about all I can remember.

For an hour or two we stood there searching and then I was taken to Bellevue Hospital. I couldn't see any more. I had pretty bad eye problems, so they transported me to Bellevue where I stayed for I believe an hour and a half. I was treated, released and the health team brought me back home. That was it.

Q. Okay, when you say you were -- you saw the people that were with Judge, any ID, any unit IDs on them?

A. I remember seeing a court officer, an OEM person with an OEM jacket on and an EMS driver, I think think it was, but that's about the only people I can remember seeing.

Q. Okay. Before the second building came down or subsequent to your arrival, did you happen to see any other Fire Department units that you could identify at any place?

A. I saw Engine 226. I don't know exactly where they were located right now, but I remember seeing 226 on the rig. I think they were on that Church and Vesey corner.

Q. Other than the vehicle, you didn't see any Fire Department personnel?

A. No, I didn't see any Fire Department personnel.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Okay, that concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN MICHAEL STEIN

Interview Date: December 5, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF RONALD KEMLY: Today is December 5, 2001. The time is 12:45 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual: Captain Michael Stein of the research and development unit of the New York City Fire Department. The interview is being conducted at 59 Page Avenue at the R&D unit's location regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Captain Michael Stein, please tell us what you did at the Trade Center.

A. We responded to the Trade Center approximately 9:15 a.m. after loading our vehicle with life saving rope, belts, harnesses, rebar cutters, and other various tools, special tools that the units have. We arrived about 30 seconds before the first tower collapsed. We arrived on Church Street and Vesey Street, parked on the northeast corner opposite Engine 226. We proceeded to get equipment out of the back of our car when the first building collapsed. We retreated to a safe position, approximately hundred yards behind our car. I dove underneath the ESU truck that was parked behind us. The other members of research and development were Lieutenant Larry Monachelli, Firefighter Bill Johnson and Firefighter Paul A. Stein, also retreated to a safe location.

After the building came down, we established some sort of chain to help civilians into the open building that we found, 30 Vesey Street. We regrouped back at the vehicle. We donned our masks and our bunker gear. We proceeded towards 5 World Trade Center, where we met OEM representative Kevin Culley, along with a couple of Port Authority police who were carrying who we believed to be Mychal Judge on a chair.

We immediately checked for some sort of pulse, found none. We called for EMS. They responded with a backboard. We put Father Judge on a backboard and then we were preparing to proceed into building number 5, where we were advised that there were approximately 100 people trapped in the basement.

As we approached building number 5, the second tower began to collapse. We then retreated down Vesey Street to Broadway. We got as far as Broadway and Ann, where I proceeded to buddy breathe with two police officers and a reporter. After the cloud settled a little bit, we were met by Deputy Chief Haring of the Sixth Division. He responded acting the First Division, where I advised them that both towers collapsed and that we had set up a command post.

We set a command post up at Ann and Broadway and then he assigned me as a staging Chief, a staging officer, and I immediately set up a staging area at 225 Broadway for the incoming men, at which time I was met by Dr. Kelly, Dr. Prezant, who advised me that a triage had been set up in the Duane Reade on Broadway, where they assigned Dr. Garvey and Dr. Ortiz.

After reporting back with a list of all the responding -- the companies that were on the scene, I headed back to find my members, the rest of my members. I was with Firefighter Stein, Firefighter Johnson and we hooked up with Lieutenant Monachelli and we proceeded to do a search and rescue of the perimeter of the World Trade Center area. That's basically what we did.

Q. Prior to the second building collapsing and at any time before that, did you see any other units or could you ascertain their location? Even if you weren't with them, did you happen to see where they were?

A. No, we didn't see. The only unit that was on there was 226 and their rig was there and it was just a chauffeur was there, or who I believe was the chauffeur. He assisted us by giving us some Scott bottles, but the officer and the other members weren't there.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Okay. That concludes the interview. Thank you, Captain Stein.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT LAWRENCE MONACHELLI

Interview Date: December 5, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Today's date is December 5, 2001. The time is 12:15 in the afternoon. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual: Lawrence Monachelli, Lieutenant, assigned to the R and D unit of the New York City Fire Department at the R and D unit's location at 59 Page Avenue, Brooklyn, New York regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Lieutenant Monachelli will now give a description of his actions on September 11, 2001.

A. I was working my normal shift at the R and D unit, when we saw on one of the TV channels that a plane had hit the World Trade Center. We immediately began loading some of our equipment; life saving ropes, some of our life belts. We have rebar cutters, some hurst tools and portable lighting, in anticipation of going to the World Trade Center. We were loading the van when the second plane hit. We immediately geared up and put extra Scott bottles and proceeded through the Midtown Tunnel, via Lexington Avenue to the World Trade Center.

On arrival at the World Trade Center, we were putting our gear on, donning our masks, just about to walk over to building 5. We were on the corner of Church and Vesey, when tower two I believe it was, began to collapse. We ran up Vesey Street. I ran into the lobby of 20 Vesey Street and stayed there until the building came completely down.

After about 15 minutes waiting in the lobby, maybe 10 minutes waiting in the lobby of 20 Vesey, I went back to our vehicle, which was still parked on the corner of Church and Vesey, regrouped with the other members of R and D; Lieutenant Stein, Firefighter Johnson and Firefighter Stein, where we regrouped and immediately started to perform a search and rescue for members.

Some of the members didn't have their masks on. We went back and got bottles out of our van, proceeded to put our masks on and at this time, we were walking again down Vesey Street towards building 5 towards the tower, and the second tower began to collapse. We all ran for cover. I again went to 20 Vesey Street where the lobby door had been locked, but the glass was broken. Proceeded to go into 20 Vesey and waited until tower one collapsed. I was with civilians and a couple of police officers.

We stayed there for about 15 minutes again. Came back out. I couldn't get out that door. We had to go out a rear door because our entrance was blocked. We went out through the rear door of 20 Vesey and made our way down again to Church and Vesey, trying to look for some of the members of the R and D unit. We couldn't find anybody. I had a handy talky, but transmissions were -- it was impossible to get on the air at the time.

I proceeded down Church, where there were several reports of people trapped, but you couldn't find anybody. When I got to the Vista Hotel, there was a member asking for assistance with moving a Lieutenant from EMS in the basement of this hotel, which we went in. We found the member, he was a Lieutenant, again from EMS, I'm not sure what unit he was from. We put him on a backboard and carried him up the stairs and to a waiting police boat on the west side.

The police boat took him over to, I believe it was Liberty Island or one of the -- I can't remember what island it was at the time, but they had a hospital set up or a triage center set up over there. There was also a member of Ladder 10 on that boat. I took a ride over with the police to the other side and came back.

I proceeded up again west towards Church and Vesey where I met Lieutenant Stein and the other members of the unit, where we performed search and rescue, pretty much the rest of the day. We gave out as many search ropes as we could and rebar cutters and lights and lanterns and did whatever we could to assist in any search and rescue efforts.

We left the -- I guess the Trade Center about 9 p.m. that night. That's about it.

Q. This is Chief Kemly again. At this time I want to ask you some questions. When you say we responded from quarters, who did you respond with?

A. I responded with Lieutenant Stein at the time. Firefighter Johnson and Firefighter Stein, all assigned to the R and D unit.

Q. When you arrived you said you went to Vesey and West?

A. Vesey and Church.

Q. Vesey and Church. Is that where you wound up parking?

A. Yes, right on the corner there.

Q. Did you see any other units when you arrived?

A. I believe Engine Company 226 was on our corner. I'm not sure. We do have a few photos.

Q. Did you see any other units at any time besides that?

A. Not Fire Department units. Police units mostly were around us.

Q. Your actions before the second tower came down were basically finding your own men?

A. Looking for my own men and search and rescue, and anybody we could help out.

Q. Did anybody inform you as to where the command post was located to begin with?

A. Not at that time, no.

Q. Before the both towers came down, you had responded on your own and you didn't see any units other than 226?

A. At that time, no.

Q. What location did you see 226 at?

A. Right on the corner of Church and Vesey, opposite of Saint Pauls Church.

Q. Prior to the first collapse?

A. They had a hydrant, right.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: That concludes the interview. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PATRICK SULLIVAN

Interview Date: December 5, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 5, 2001. The time is 1:40 p.m. This is Firefighter Patrick Sullivan's interview from the World Trade Center. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns of the Safety Battalion.

Q. If you would Pat, please tell me about what you saw or heard on that day when you guys responded to the Trade Center?

A. When I first saw the plane crash on the news, I was getting relieved. I was coming off a 24 and I was supposed to be going home. I was actually in my civilian clothes. After the first plane hit, they had a voice alarm announcement and ordered everyone going home to stay and every Engine would be riding with five men. I don't know how long -- I changed back into my uniform. I don't know how long it was after that, 5 minutes, 10 minutes, we responded. A little after the 48 went.

We went through the tunnel as we were responding. We were going over into the Gowanus through the tunnel, we were supposed to go to the staging area outside the tunnel and as we were going, you could see the building, you could see the fire, you could see the flames and you could also see the smoke coming out of the building. There was also papers blowing as far as here, regular sheets of paper blowing through the air. I guess that's from when the plane hit.

We went to the staging area. We stayed at the staging area for maybe 5, 10 minutes until all the companies that were going on the ticket, everyone was there, they all grouped together and we went. I don't know all the companies that were there, but I know 201 was with us. I couldn't tell you what other companies were there at the time.

We responded and we went through the tunnel. We came up the West Side Highway on the right side of the divider and we were stopped by either a Chief or a police officer. We couldn't go any further because there was organic matter in the street and they were considering it evidence. There was a part of a body probably from when the plane hit.

So we got out of the rig and we started walking. We walked maybe 50 feet further and there was a Deputy Chief there. I don't know the Deputy Chief's name. He was there with his aide. He was an on duty Deputy Chief. He had an official car. There was another Deputy Chief there, I think he came in his private car, because he was there with the other Chief, unless they were riding with 2, which could have been two. Maybe they both took the run in when they got it.

Anyway he told us drop our roll ups, that we were going to walk up, we were going to go to the 40th floor. I think there was another staging area on the 40th floor, tower two, the south tower, if that's tower two, the one closer to the Battery Tunnel. We were going to walk up. He said it's going to take 40 minutes to an hour to get up there, to drop our roll ups and start walking.

He said watch out for bodies, bodies coming down like leaves from a tree. They were coming down all over the place. He said God be with you and we started walking.

As we started walking, I was looking straight up at the tower and I saw the top of the tower coming down. I saw the black smoke, sort of like pushing out, and I saw debris starting to come out from the building, probably from one floor depressing on the other, blowing everything out and I knew it was coming down.

I turned around and I yelled to the guys that were with me to run. They seemed to be just standing there, frozen. I don't know if it was disbelief or shock or what. But they snapped out of it and they turned around and started running. As we started running, we were right -- there's a, on the West Side Highway, there is a pass through. There is a concrete divider that goes between the two lanes, north and south, and there is a pass through right on the other side of the pedestrian bridge that didn't come down.

That's where we were, walking towards 2 World Trade Center. That's where we were when we started walking. When I saw the building was coming down, I turned around and started running back towards Albany Street. I was trying to get around another building and down the block. I saw tomorrow Tommy Dun was with me. He was in front of me. He was our proby, and another guy, Darren Jacobs, he was in front of me as well.

I didn't get as far as Darren and Tommy. Tommy must have been 30 feet in front of me and after the collapse he couldn't hear me. I was calling for him. Darren kept on running. I don't know where he wound up ending up, but Tommy Dunn was maybe 30 feet in front of me. I was right by a Suburban car.

As I was running, there was debris, I don't know what it was, rocks or part of the building, shooting over my head, hitting the ground and it was going through windows and taking cars out. I ran as fast as I could and as far as I could until the black dust cloud overtook me and I couldn't see any more. I knew that there was a car there because I saw it just before it blacked out. I went over to the car and I thought not to go under the car, because if something landed on the car it would crush me and the car. I thought I would just go next to it like a void, try to make a void and hope for the best.

I remember thinking that -- first I remember praying that I was going to make it out of there alive, but I didn't think I was going to. I didn't think I was going to make it out of there. I prayed that my family would be okay. My wife and my boy would be okay, and I waited for something substantial to land on me and I was hoping it was going to be quick. I was hoping I wouldn't be trapped for any period of time. I was getting pelted with -- it felt like soft balls. I couldn't breathe. It was like putting your face in a bag of cement and trying to take a deep breath.

I couldn't get any air. It was like holding your breath, trying to breathe in and breathe out. Nothing was going in and nothing was going out. So I tried to take my mask. This all happened in between maybe 15 and 30 seconds. I tried to take my mask and take a hit off my mask and it didn't work. There was no air coming out of it. There was a pile of dust inside so I shook it out. Shook all the dust out and tried to take another breath. It just wasn't giving me any air. I remember trying to turn the valve again, thinking that my mask wasn't on, but it was on. It just wasn't working. It was clogged up with shit in it. I banged it a couple of times. I finally got a little bit of a breath out of the mask and shortly after that, it started clearing up anyway. I could start seeing daylight through the dust.

I remember it being very very quiet, like being under water. I was calling out to my proby. I was yelling his name and I was yelling, you know, anybody in 240, because I didn't have a radio and I didn't know if anybody else made it. He couldn't hear me calling. He must have been maybe 30 feet in front of me. The sound must have been like not traveling through the air. It must have been stopping dead because it was so thick.

After that, I got up and I started seeing, I started hearing pass alarms going off. I started walking around. I started looking for my company. I couldn't find anyone from my company. I was on Albany Street. I went down to -- one more block and I turned around and went back to the rig. I figured maybe guys would go back to the rig. That's where I ran into John Winkler. And we tried to test the hydrant and hook up to a hydrant to put out car fires. There were a bunch of car fires right by the rig.

There was a Deputy Chief's rig on fire that was extended to 113's rig. There was a big ambulance, like a rescue company truck, but it wasn't a rescue company truck. It was a huge ambulance. It must have had Scott bottles or oxygen bottles on it. These were going off. You would hear the air go SSS boom and they were exploding. So we stretched a line and tried to put that out. He could only use booster water.

We would open up the hydrants. The hydrants weren't working. The water main broke or something. So after we ran our booster water, the rig was basically useless. 113's rig went up and we tried to get a line from the fire boats to supply one of the rigs so we could get some water.

At that point I had to leave because I couldn't see any more. I couldn't open my eyes. I had to rinse my eyes out quite a few times during the course of what we were doing. After a while I couldn't open my eyes any more. There was fiberglass or whatever the hell was in there. They led me. Two guys led me to the water by a rope and a cop drove me to an ambulance.

From the ambulance they rinsed my eyes out again. I walked to the tunnel and hitched a ride with a Port Authority guy to the other side and came back to the fire house. That must have been about 2:00 or so or 3:00 in the afternoon. I don't know if I left anything out, but that's basically what happened, as I remember it.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Great. Thanks, Pat. It's 1:51 p.m., this is the conclusion of the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOHN WINKLER

Interview Date: December 5, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF BURNS: Today is the 5th of December, 2001. The time is 1:25 p.m. This is Engine 240. My name is Battalion Chief Robert Burns, New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview of Firefighter John Winkler, Engine 240. This is in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Maybe, John, you can tell me in your own words what happened at the Trade Center from the time that you responded to the scene until you guys left the scene.

A. When we received the ticket, we were assigned to the Brooklyn side of the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. There was a staging area. We were the first ones there. On the arrival of the other companies, we received a ticket to respond to West Street, West and Liberty.

I was driving that day. I went through the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel, came up West Street. There was a chief at West and Albany who stopped us right on West Street and told us to remain right here.

Members of my company got out, grabbed their rollups, reported to the chief that was on the sidewalk on the west side sidewalk of West Street. This was after the second plane hit, before the first tower came down.

I was told to stay with the rig. I proceeded to put my bunker gear on when I looked up and I saw the tower falling, the first tower coming down. I jumped into the cab, put my helmet on and just ducked and just waited. It shattered the windows, shook the rig.

While sitting in the rig, I heard over the radio that "I'm trapped underneath the rig." So I responded -- I'm not sure if I responded on the department radio or on the handy talky -- "Engine 240 chauffeur coming to get you."

I climbed out of the rig, climbed over the rubble, got my mask and went forward and walked north on West Street. Right before the south pedestrian bridge, there was I believe it was one of our members stuck under an ambulance. There was another fireman with him. He said, "We have a guy under the ambulance here."

I gave a mayday on the radio that I'm 240 chauffeur, we have a guy stuck under an ambulance by the south bridge. I then proceeded to grab members from Ladder 14. We grabbed their air bags, went back to the ambulance. By that time the guy was already out. The member was out. So I left 113.

I went back south on West Street to where 240 was. At that time I was told by Chief I don't know who that we have to start putting these fire outs. There were numerous car vehicles on fire. There were also ESU vehicles on fire. I was told they have ammunition in them and we have to get them out.

Tested the hydrant; there was water. Connected to the hydrant; there was no water. In the meantime I put the rig in pumps. One of my members stretched a line with the help from other firefighters. While I was in pumps, I used that as a booster and was putting car fires out.

We tried to get another hydrant. Same thing: opened the hydrant; there was water. Connected to it, there wasn't enough water. While doing all of this, he ran out of booster line.

The best I can remember, we just got together. That's when the second tower came down. I dove behind a chief's rig, the two of us, and same thing. We were down there for a while. Mouth full of the dust, choking on it. Couldn't see for a while. Finally it cleared up a little bit to see.

We regrouped, got a couple of our guys. Everybody proceeded to walk down Albany to the water, where we started stretching lines to the fire boat. We continued stretching lines, lengths of hose, up Albany Street to West Street.

Pretty much the rest of the day that's what we were doing, taking lines from the fire from the water up Albany Street, down Albany to Washington, around, and just continued doing that most of the day. That's about it.

Q. Let me ask you a question, John. When you said you saw chiefs when you came in, do you know the name or the identity of the battalion or --

A. I know one of them that was on the sidewalk was Chief Lakiotes.

Q. Okay, from the Safety Battalion.

A. He was on the sidewalk. My company reported to him. There was another chief in the street that stopped me and said "Keep the rig right here." I was double parked right next to I believe it was 210, right behind Ladder 113.

I didn't catch his name, but I think he was the guy that was pretty much running this area, telling us to stretch lines, we've got to get hose, we've got to put fires out. I'm not sure of his name.

Q. Okay. Great. Okay, John, thanks for the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER OWEN CARLOCK

Interview Date: December 5th, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 5th, 2001. The time is 4:17 p.m. I am Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion, FDNY. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Owen Carlock, Ladder 122, detailed on the day of the incident to Engine 220. This is in reference to the events that occurred on September 11th, 2001.

Q. Owen, if you would, just tell us in your own words exactly what happened that day.

A. We took the Brooklyn Bridge, which was closed. We had trouble getting there from here with all the traffic. We took the Brooklyn Bridge, which was emptied at Chambers Street, a lot of traffic, obviously, in Manhattan.

We went to West Street, turned left on West. We picked up a straggler, John Jermyn, from the -- he used to be here in 122. He works in the Fire Department Museum. We picked him up and drove around to -- as near as I can figure out, I think it was between Murray and Barclay Street, where we left the rig on the southbound lanes.

We walked down the southbound lanes to I guess it was the command post. Captain Grabher went over there, and they told him to go to the south tower. So he said he wasn't going to take Liberty because of the jumpers.

So we went to some building on the corner of Albany and West Street that's under construction. It's being renovated. We went that way. We took Albany past Washington, and then we were on our way to Greenwich? No, it was at Washington when the tower came down on us. Somebody yelled "Oh, shit, here it comes." It was coming towards us.

So we dove behind the Deutsche Bank, and the five of us -- three went back, four went ahead, the seven of us. Four of us laid behind that building, waiting. We thought we were going to die.

After that we tried to take a window in the back of the bank. We did take a window, but behind it was a steel wall, corrugated tin or whatever. We couldn't get into the window.

They followed me. I had the light. They followed me, and we went into Deutsche Bank into the side entrance, got our wits about us, and we went across the street to get Eddie and George and Mike Schroeck.

Then we were going to make our way back to the command center when the north tower came down. We ducked into some hotel. I don't know what hotel it was. It was on West Street south of Albany.

After that came down and the stuff cleared, the officer said, "Listen, we're not going to go back to that area. We're going to come around, because we don't know what else is going to come down, what else could come tumbling down."

So we went over to the water, and from there we helped Marine 6 put it into -- I think it was Captain Fuentes. They dug him out. He was banged up pretty good. We helped put him on the boat.

At that time Captain Grabher told Eddie Plunkett and myself, "Go find a rig and back it up to the fire boat, Marine 9, which is already there." He said, "We're going to at least get water as best as we can to the towers."

Eddie and I found I don't know whose rig it was. We backed it up to the fire hose, took the three and a half off of there and went as far as we could. Then another rig came, and they stretched their three and a half off the rig we were on, and then they left.

I went back to find Captain Grabher, Mike Schroeck, George and Dean. They were nowhere to be found. Later on I found out they were on the ninth floor of one of the apartment buildings on the west side of West Street, fighting the fire on the ninth floor. That's why I couldn't find them. I had no radio. I had no clue where they were.

So I hooked up after a while with Chief Congiusta of 48. He and I went down with a couple other guys from 240 into the parking lot of the Vista to look for 6 Truck, which was missing at the time. We were standing there and waited for him to come out, and he never came out. He took an underground passageway and came out on Barclay Street.

After that I hooked up with four guys, recall guys. I hooked up with 220 and stayed the rest of the night until 11:30 and went to the hospital. I had my eyes cleaned out.

As far as the companies, somebody said 205 was right in front of us, and I don't remember seeing them. That's the best I can tell you where we were, where everybody is, that's what we did the day of the attack.

CHIEF BURNS: That concludes our interview. The time is 4:22 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER KEITH MURPHY

Interview Date: December 5, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is December 5, 2001. The time is 12:08. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion, Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Keith Murphy from Engine 47.

Q. Give me the events as you remember them from September 11, 2001.

A. Okay. I basically was in the fire house that morning and I will just give you a real quick synopsis of where we were at. We were in the kitchen getting ready for start of tour like normal. It was actually prior roll call because it was about 8:45, 10 to 9.

I heard the dispatcher queue up the voice alarm and it sounded like they were looking for a Company or a Battalion or something. It was just a weird thing, because it just sounded strange. Maybe like 30 seconds or a minute later, the voice -- they came over the voice alarm and said second alarm transmitted. I still remember box 8087, World Trade Center number one. I'll always remember his voice. It just didn't sound normal. Something just wasn't right.

We flipped the channel, we had the TV on in the kitchen. We flipped the channel. We saw breaking news on Channel 5 probably and we see the north tower, they flashed to it, the tower is burning. Naturally we were shocked like everyone else, no one knew what was going on and started to hear on the TV, people started saying it might be a plane crash. So a couple of the guys ran up to the house watch, put on the Department radio and I was still in the back by the kitchen.

Probably 10 minutes passed, maybe 15 tops. About 10. I'm watching the television and again they are showing the towers and all of a sudden out of the corner of my eye I see a blip go by, which I determined later was a plane. Then there was a huge explosion, second tower. I ran up to the house watch to tell the guys did you guys see that plane. I think another plane hit and before I could even get the words out, our dispatcher was saying report of a second plane into World Trade Center number 2.

Within maybe 5 minutes of that, I was thinking in my head we are relocating definitely. We are not going to be here for long. Within five minutes the voice alarm came on and we were assigned on the fifth alarm. We never got a teleprinter ticket, but we were assigned over the voice alarm on the fifth alarm to the second tower. So we were going to the south tower, the second tower that was hit.

We got off, stopped and grabbed extra flashlights, did everything we could real quick, jumped on the rig and started to respond. We are on 113 Street just off Amsterdam Avenue, so we came down 113 Street, we turned the corner at Broadway and the chauffeur went south down Broadway and then it turns, you bear to the right, I remember going down West End Avenue.

At this point we were making real good time. There was no traffic. We went all the way down the west side, till I guess -- I believe West End turns into 11th Avenue. Could be tenth, but I think it's 11th Avenue. Continued straight down to there and I believe we came into the West Side Highway, which is West Street really, about 23rd Street I think.

We turned down West Street, West Side Highway, and I was sitting in the jump seat behind the chauffeur, so I was looking forward. Just as we went a few blocks south, both towers came into view. I could see heavy heavy smoke and even from that distance as we got closer, we were still a pretty good distance away and I could see fire showing, visible fire throughout dozens of floors.

Naturally on the rig we were listening to the radio and gearing up and it probably was the toughest run I ever took in. We knew we had something pretty heavy in front of us. We were coming down the West Side Highway and the cops had closed -- I remember seeing squad cars and they had closed off to block traffic.

So at one point, it would be a guess only, we were south of Houston I think. Definitely south of Canal, maybe south of Houston, definitely south of Houston, rather, and maybe even as far as Canal, we saw the other side of the highway going northbound was open. The chauffeur saw that but I realized it because he then took the wrong way down and it was a clear shot. There were other -- I noticed other police cars, other rigs, I think there were other rigs behind us. I don't remember seeing them, but I remember hearing other rigs.

We continued south down the other side of the highway, which would be the northbound side. We parked on West Street. I would say my recollection is that we were a little north of Vesey Street but it might, looking at the map, that's here, we might have been as far as up as Barclay. I thought it was Vesey, but I'm thinking that from this map it might have been another block. It might have been a little north of Barclay and south of Murray Street, because we did walk quite a distance.

Now we arrive at the box. We had all our regular gear and we were thinking high rise and we were going to take the extra cylinders, but the officer suggested that we take our medical -- mask up, have all our stuff and then take some extra things. We took our medical bags, the O2, we took the hose drop roll and an extra hose and an extra -- spare. I believe someone took forceful entry tools too. It sticks in my head but I could be wrong. I know they were gone later, but it could have been the rig was raided. I thought we had those too.

We got all our gear together and we met in front of the rig and the officer basically told us to just stay calm, relax. We are going to stick together. And we are going to have to -- looking for the command post. We started to walk south on West Street and we had our roll ups of course. I felt like we walked a pretty good distance, probably a couple of blocks. At this point I started to notice a lot of other rigs, apparatus. I remember passing the hazmat company's big rig, so I guess they had to have been on the scene at that point. If I had to guess the time, I would think in my mind we probably took in the box around 9:10. We made great time down the west side. I couldn't believe how fast. So I would say at this point we pull up, it's probably 9:25 maybe. That's what I think, but I'm not a hundred percent sure on that.

We kept going south. I see a lot of other companies but I really don't remember really anything but that hazmat company. I do recall police officers kind of running up to us and they had their radios, their Department radios, and they kept saying guys, specifically to the officer, but we were right there. We have a report of a third inbound aircraft. That's all he said. He didn't say jet or anything like that. Just said we have a report of a third inbound aircraft. At that point just to the right of us was the World Financial Center, and immediately on our left was the beginning of the World Trade Center complex. Looks like here it's number 6 World Trade Center would be on my left. We were coming up to the first pedestrian bridge.

Came up to the pedestrian bridge, came under it. Now as we were under it, now we are looking at the plaza and you could see people, there was debris falling, people jumping, bodies hitting the ground. To our far right some other companies seemed to be gathering, I don't know if it was a command post but there seemed to be people gathering across the street from there. But there was so many companies coming in together, we were kind of spread out. So I don't know whether they were going somewhere they had been assigned to. All I know is our officer said we were looking for the south tower command post.

So in our minds we know we are going to the south tower, now we are way north of that at this point. So we pass under this pedestrian bridge and now we are in the plaza. I remember not being on the street or a regular sidewalk. I remember it being a few small stairs and we were walking through and there was a tremendous amount of body parts. Then there were full torsos. I notice a lot of people with heads missing, legs missing, arms missing. I almost walked into one and I wouldn't even have believed, it looked like a bundle of rags and it was a body.

We were looking up, kind of watching what was falling to see where our bearings were and our next goal at this point was, and it was quite a ways down, because I see now on the map we were heading towards Liberty Street. So we actually made it through. We went back out of that plaza because it was obviously more dangerous there and we worked our way back towards the street. We came down, we kept coming south down the street and we are still walking with all our gear. I remember at this point being really - we were all geared up, so it was getting very warm.

We went south to the next pedestrian bridge, which I guess was the south pedestrian bridge and we kind of took cover under there. At that point, our officer stepped away. I thought he had talked to a civilian, but it could have been a fire employee. I'm not sure who it was, but he was maybe about 10, 12 feet away. We are a 5 man company, so the chauffeur wasn't with us but the four of us were together. He walked back over and he said we have to go to the command post, it's in the Marriott lobby, which is I guess number 3 World Trade Center.

He said to us again about looking up, watch where we are going. We have to get over there as quickly as we can. So we kind of - I wouldn't say we ran, but we were going pretty fast and watching again, watching up at all the things that were dropping down, people and still there was a lot of debris still falling too.

We made it over to the entrance to the Marriott Hotel, which was on West Street. I guess we went in. We went in the West Street side. I don't think we went upstairs but we went into like -- I don't know if it was a driveway or not, but we came into the lobby and we passed under a big awning, and I remember the awning was glass, one of those glass and steel encased awnings and just as we got into the revolving doors to go into the lobby, this huge crash, a body hit the glass and the steel. Didn't come through, but it sounded like a bomb had gone off but it was a body hitting this glass.

Now we get into the lobby and I clearly remember right away seeing Deputy Chief Galvin from the Third Division. He was a little bit to our right. I remember him yelling out to the guys I want my Engine companies on the left, Truck companies on my right. Told the men hang back, officers come up to the desk. It was kind of like a front desk and the lobby was set up a little weird. It wasn't like you walked in and into the middle. It was kind of like the desk seemed to be a little to the right. We were gathered over waiting for our officer to come back. I actually saw a member of -- we saw 74 Engine, which is from our Battalion. We kind of started talking to them. One of the guys was saying to me that he had been here in '93, couldn't believe he was back. Another guy who I happened to know who I'm pretty friendly with who didn't survive, was in there also and his name is Ruben Correa. He is from Engine 74. We were talking with him and he actually told me to be safe in there, which I will never forget.

They ended up being assigned separately. Maybe 2 or 3 minutes later, the officer, who was my Lieutenant, came back after talking to Chief Galvin and he said that we are assigned to the 44th floor of the south tower. He said there is a report of fire as low as 44 and he wanted two guys from our company to go find the stairwell, get someone from the Marriott, there is supposed to be a staircase into the south tower that you can get to safely from the hotel.

So the control man and the doorman went to go find this. They went up a staircase. It was kind of like a grand staircase. They went up the staircase, they disappeared for maybe four or five minutes and came back. In the meantime we had been assigned with 3 Engine companies, Engine 47, Engine 22, Engine 21 and Ladder 13. The four of us had been assigned I guess as a group. But it was kind of strange, because I remember us being assigned as a group but we were kind of still functioning a little independently at this point.

Our two guys came back and they started to say that the guy showed them - a maintenance worker showed them a stairwell, but I don't think they were 100 percent convinced that it was a hotel stairwell and not a tower stairwell, but before we could even act on that, the Captain of Ladder 13 and, I since found out, I didn't know his name that day, his name was Captain Hynes, said that a couple of his guys found an elevator that was still working. He said we are going to check this elevator.

All four companies headed out of the Marriott and what I found out, it took a day later to piece together, we headed to the north tower, not the south tower. That changed -- that's one of the reasons I am still here. But also at this point we think we are still heading to the 44th floor of the south tower. He also said at the time, he said we found an elevator, it works. It will only get us to 24 and we will have to walk the other 20 flights, but at least it will get us halfway there.

I remember thinking - a lot of guys, a couple of my senior guys saying elevators, you know, we didn't know what was going on in the building, but elevators sounded kind of, let's see, we know this sounds like - it just sounded kind of scary. We came through the Marriott. We left the Marriott and it was determined now we would have walked out of the Marriott all internally though. I don't know whether it was on the concourse level or the street level exactly, but we came through what was a revolving door and it brings you into the north tower. I remember seeing in front of me, we walked a few feet and there was a small escalator, two escalators coming down off of another level and there were dozens and dozens of office workers streaming down this. There was Port Authority. I don't know if they were Port Authority, but definitely building security guards there with gray blazers on and little ear pieces. They were still directing a lot of people down these escalators. They weren't directing them out onto the street. I remember that now because when I came through the plaza there weren't people - there weren't civilians walking through the plaza.

Right in front of us were these escalators. Now we are moving as a whole group. I guess four companies, so it was a good amount of guys. We came into the lobby and to our left is the core. We walk up and come to the core of the building, which again I assume it was the south tower, but it wasn't. To our immediate left is turnstiles, like security turnstiles. There was a security guard. He goes okay guys, you got to come through here. So people were exiting, I guess from a staircase inside. They were coming out these turnstiles and we had to go through like one. I went to try another one to see if we could get through, but it was only one that was like reversed. We all went, kept going through, just a bunch of us went through. In front of me was a hallway, what I would call an elevator bank. I have been in the World Trade Center a few times on my own and I have been on these elevators, so I'm not familiar with them, but I kind of know the set up.

To my immediate left is a bank. If I had to guess I would say it was maybe 75, 80 feet long. It was a pretty long elevator bank and it was big sky lobby elevators. They were like floor to ceiling, the ones that hold, I don't know, 60, 70 people. There was tremendous damage in the lobby. There was already things that were fallen or cracked. A lot of structural wall damage and ceiling damage that I could see. There was also about four or five inches of water on the floor.

I remember that struck me at the time because I remember seeing all these office workers and civilians leaving. I remember seeing women's feet like they were in shoes or something or some didn't even have their shoes any more and they were trudging through this water. At the end of this elevator lobby, there was - it just looked to me like something had exploded. I don't remember how I heard it or who said it, but someone said I think an elevator - when the plane hit, it severed the elevator cable and it came all the way down and crashed. I don't know a hundred percent if that's what happened, but it looked to me like that could have been true. It looked like something had fallen down, hit and like exploded out. I mean the whole area around it was maybe 25, 30 feet of really severe damage. But I didn't get close enough to see exactly what it was. It just seemed that way.

Before we even got that far down we turned to our right and there is other local elevator banks to the right, so you are in this hallway. On the left is the big elevators and on the right is the small elevator banks with 6 elevator cars in each. We maybe went down about 30, 40 feet and there was a stairwell where people were exiting, just past this elevator bank, and we went into this elevator bank and these other companies that we were going to operate with, we were like the last ones behind them so they were already in this little elevator bank.

I remember thinking, I looked at the elevators and I still wasn't feeling good about them, because the damage that I spoke about was more severe or at least up close I got to see it. There were pieces of marble, like ornamental marble I guess, on the walls that were maybe 2 foot by 3 foot pieces, maybe even a little bigger, that had split and cracked and some had actually fallen. There was a couple that had fallen onto the lobby, this little lobby floor.

Some of the doors - they were silver colored elevator doors and they were almost like hanging out of plumb. They just didn't look right. But there was one elevator. I had the elevator key. At this point now we are with Engine 21. I know on the list it said to mention companies you saw and people you know. I saw Captain Billy Burke and he was the officer and Captain in Engine 21 that day. Now a few guys were saying who is making the call on this elevator. It was two Captains and two Lieutenants. And I thought I heard, I don't know if our Lieutenant or somebody else said it, a couple of the senior guys were saying you know, who is making this call.

I believe Billy Burke said well, we are going to test it first and see if it works before we commit to it. I believe him and another person got in. It was one elevator. As you looked down this bank, there were 3 on the left and 3 on the right. It was the second elevator in on the left. If you went down to the end, it's kind of like a dead end. I remember there was actually a -- it was strange. There was a little marble thing with flowers on it and the flowers were still standing, which amazed me because everything else had been crashed down around it.

He got in the elevator. They put the 1620 key in. They were having a little trouble with the one across, but that one went in. They disappeared for maybe I would say 10, 15 seconds, something like that. It wasn't very long. And they came back and oh, elevator doors opened up, no problem, they said it's working. So we proceeded now at this point to start putting gear and companies into the elevators. They were taking them to 24.

At this point I guess -- I don't know the exact order, but I know that 21 was pretty much gone. Most of 22 and most of 13, so I would say there were probably about three elevator trips. They come down and there is a guy -- the Captain from 13, again says can you - 47 give me one of your guys. He will come up with us and he will come back down and get you guys.

So we were going to be the last ones. We are in the lobby and our control man was a young guy. I have a little over six years on him. He has maybe three. The officer told him he didn't want him to go. He sent our guy with about 20 years on. Told him to take the radio and go take the elevator and then come back and get us.

So at this point, he gets in the elevator with the one guy, I believe it was - this is where I'm a little confused because I know from his story later that he is just with one guy -- no, no, no, I'm incorrect. I want to take that back. He actually is with 13. He goes up. They are about to exit the elevator, I find out later, and he is with one other guy who was going to come back down with him. The two of them ended up staying together as a team.

We are in the lobby waiting for the elevator. I put my roll up. We still had our roll ups. I put it down on the floor next to me, kind of propped up because there was water on the floor. I was standing kind of on the edge of where our elevator bank met the big elevator bank. That was when the - I determined that's when the north tower collapses. We are standing there and the first thing that happened, which I still think is strange to me, the lights went out. Completely pitch black. Since we were in that core little area of the building, there was no natural light. No nothing, I didn't see a thing.

I had heard right before the lights went out, I had heard a distant boom boom boom, sounded like three explosions. I don't know what it was. At the time, I would have said they sounded like bombs, but it was boom boom boom and then the lights all go out. I hear someone say oh, shit, that was just for the lights out. I would say about 3, 4 seconds, all of a sudden this tremendous roar. It sounded like being in a tunnel with the train coming at you. It sounded like nothing I had ever heard in my life, but it didn't sound good. All of a sudden I could feel the floor started to shake and sway. We were being thrown like literally off our feet, side to side, getting banged around and then a tremendous wind started to happen. It probably lasted maybe 15 seconds, 10 to 15 seconds. It seemed like a hurricane force wind. It would blow you off your feet and smoke and debris and more things started falling.

At this point, I got hit in the head with something. I think it came off the ceiling. I'm not sure, but in any event I ended up knocked down. My helmet stayed on and I landed on top of one of the other guys that I work with. Everything was still shaking and blowing through. I still don't know. I don't think I blacked out. They asked me that, but I don't recall blacking out because I know it was only a couple of seconds later and I felt now kind of everything stop.

My initial reaction was these bastards, whoever they were, because now I'm thinking terror. They got us with another plane, because out in the street the cops, they kept saying there is this third inbound plane, so I'm thinking we just got hit with another plane. That's it.

The first thing I'm thinking is that I'm dead because I didn't know what happened to me. I thought I was dead. Then I kind of started feeling like okay, I think I'm here. Then I thought - I thought we died together. I was sure everyone was dead that I was with. Then I started to hear them kind of groaning and moving about.

At this point I fished around and breathing was horrible, there was so much debris and smoke. I actually - my mask was activated. I opened the cylinder earlier. I grabbed the hose, the low pressure hose, and I kind of crunched it to me and I actually put it on my face. Unfortunately, I didn't see what was in it. I put that on my face and inhaled and it was just even more stuff that was in my mask that I sucked in and I actually finally got some air and I used that for maybe a minute or two.

At this point, the other four guys, three guys, were coming to their feet. So it was the officer, the three of us and that one guy who had been in the elevator who we don't see now. The officer said actually - I am laughing now looking back. He wanted us to count off. He meant a roll call, I kind of knew in all that was going on he meant a roll call, so we started yelling our names. I'm Murphy and the other two guys are saying their names. Kind of all gather together and asking how everyone is. One guy Steve, he got hit too and he lost his helmet.

Mine had stayed on. I don't know what happened to it. Later I ended up without a helmet but I don't know where. I had it on initially. I don't know where this thing went. We looked around, we kind of -- I should not say looked because you couldn't see anything, but we knew that Steve was missing his helmet. We kind of felt around the floor where we were and there wasn't anything. I think our officer actually gave him his helmet if I recall correctly now.

He told us, he goes all right, who is hurt. Is anybody hurt. I said he was the only one with the radio and he hadn't heard anything about a collapse. Nothing. That was one thing I forgot to mention before. When we got into the lobby, Chief Galvin told everyone with radios to switch to channel 3. That was where -- he is on channel 3. He says is anybody hurt.

The other guy Steve, he couldn't even barely say his name.

I said I hurt. I said something. I said I don't know what I did, I said my neck. I got hit in the head, my neck, I don't know what's wrong. He said all right, we are going to get you two out of here.

I don't know where we were at this point. Where we were was where we started. But he had his officer's hand light and he said each of you grab onto each other. We will go out in kind of like a chain. He says I know the way, I can get us out of here. So we started to follow him and some people who had been coming off the staircase that was right around the corner from us, maybe about ten feet away, had joined us, civilians.

I felt like I was the last one of us four, I'm not sure, but I know there were other people who were not firemen who were kind of grabbing onto my coat and we just started to proceed and you could see maybe a foot in front of you, if that, visibility. I remember everything stinging your eyes and lungs were stinging like crazy.

He walked out, which I found out later, which I found out later that was now where the security turnstiles were. I had wondered, I said oh, boy, I don't remember climbing over these things, but there was actually like a middle part, like a bar that was apparently gone now or had been moved, because he said he walked straight through that. He turned right and we continued to follow him. I also from clarifying with him later, I thought he could see things. I said how did you get us out. He says, well, I kept walking and then I hit the wall. I said oh, okay. Apparently he hits this wall and knows to make another turn right.

We didn't go back into the Marriott where we had come out, we kind of -- we basically made like a U turn around that elevator bank that I described. Now we started to walk, which turns out, towards West Street, and in the far distance, maybe 100 feet away, I started to see, not light, but a lightening of this cloud that we had been enveloped in in the darkness. We started to hear people yelling this way, this way. It was now - it started to become a little clearer and all the windows and I think they were already blown out from the initial impact. The first two stories or maybe three stories of the Trade Center has bigger windows and there was no windows. It was all shattered in between the columns.

We got to the edge. There was a lot of us and civilians and now I'm starting to see some other firemen. We got to this window and there was like a bannister kind of in front of it or I guess it was a handrail maybe. You could either kind of climb over it or crawl under it. So I'm a little short, I said let me go under. So I crawled under and I actually got a small burn on my hand going out because I ended up crawling over - putting my hand on a really hot beam or something that had fallen, collapsed down or fallen out.

Now we merged onto the plaza, I guess, in front of the building and it was completely, there was debris everywhere. It was like a gray. It started lightening up, but it looked like a gray snow storm and there was inches and inches of this powder and dust on everything. I remember seeing a Chief's car not too far out when we got out onto the street completely like - it was still intact but everything in the windows were gone, completely blown out and it was just kind of like, if I had to describe it, I would say everyone is just kind of like walking wounded. I mean you were just looking around, people were almost in trances.

I remember seeing - at this point now, I started to hear pass alarms. It didn't register in my head what it was. I heard pass alarms. I never really heard any radio traffic, but I understand there were a lot of Maydays being called.

The officer said all right. I'm going to get you guys to an ambulance. The two of us were hurt. I remember we were passing firemen. I remember seeing firemen carrying civilians over their shoulders. I remember seeing other civilians carrying people. I couldn't tell if they were dead or alive, but there were people everywhere trying to just get away. We ended up crossing West Street, so we probably came out - I would say we came out of the north tower and again I still think I'm in the south tower, but I know now from the map, piecing it together, we came out of the north tower through like lobby windows over the plaza onto West Street.

We crossed West Street, came up the other side of the highway and we were kind of in the - adjacent to this World Financial Center. We passed this Winter Garden and we went up underneath this other pedestrian bridge, the north pedestrian bridge, and we got to the corner of Vesey and West. On that block was a bunch of ambulances. If I had to guess a number, I would say there were ten ambulances there.

So the officer, an EMT, not a regular FD guy, I think he had like a golf shirt on. He said who needs help, who needs help. The officer said I got two guys here that are hurt. He said all right, I don't have my ambulance, but I have an ambulance I could treat them and I will get them out of here. We walked maybe around three or four ambulances down and he put us in an ambulance. I remember someone running over to me at this point, another fireman, I don't know where he came from or what, but he took my mask. I slid it off my back or whatever and he took my mask and he disappeared. I sat down in the back of the ambulance and now the officer and the other guy who wasn't hurt said all right, we are going back to get the other guy who was our control man now in the elevator.

At this point the officer apparently heard enough, I guess on the radio. Initially he didn't hear about the collapse, but out in the street he must have heard about the collapse: He knew it was collapsed. I didn't know the building even collapsed at this point. Looking back now, the sound, the noise, everything, it's the only thing that could have happened, but still not realizing. I'm thinking it's this plane crash.

He sits me down. I'm in the ambulance now. I start to realize about our other guys. I said no no, I'm all right. I want to go back. He made me sit down again. He said you are done. You are not going back. I kind of had tears in my eyes. I said we got to get Louie. He goes we are going back together. He goes sit down, you got to get treated and get out of here.

I'm looking at and him and he goes Murf, the tower just fell down and you are alive. You got to get out of here. I remember looking at him like the tower fell down. He goes the tower is down, it's gone. I was stunned. A, I was stunned because I thought we were in the tower that collapsed, so that was even more stunning and B, I just couldn't believe it.

He and the other guy left the two of us there and said they were going to go back to find Louie, our other guy, so the EMT at that point now started treating me and the other guy Steve. Gave us both oxygen, gave me a neck collar. He said listen I want to get you out of here but this street, it's blocked, you know, there was nothing moving. We must have been on the scene, because I remember the oxygen actually ran out. I would say we were a good 15 minutes, maybe 20 minutes.

We started to move. I believe we were going west on Vesey Street, kind of towards the Battery Park City area. So all of a sudden the ambulance, the EMT, it's just him and the two of us in the back, he jams on the brakes and the ambulance stops short. He wasn't going fast. He was only going a couple of miles an hour. He said guys, we got to get out of here, just get out of this ambulance. He runs to the back, pops open the doors and I'm looking around like what's going on.

The other guy I was with had kind of come a little more to now and he just grabbed me and he said we got to get out of here. As we jump out the back the other tower is starting to fall, the north tower now. At this point, it's very hazy in the sky from all the smoke, but you could still make out from our vantage point the lower portion of the north tower. You can't see really high up. So that whole thing starts collapsing again.

We ran. I didn't see the ambulance driver again, but the two of us ran west down Vesey Street and a lot of people I think went to the left. I saw other people in the street, some people ended up going left, which I think I found out they ended up going on boats to Jersey or something. We went north. Ripped off my neck collar. We were running. I thought we were actually going to end up in the water because we were heading towards Battery Park. There is kind of like an esplanade right on the water.

We ended up over there and at this point we kind of -- the buildings were kind of buffering everything that was coming around us, so we were out of the main cloud and we just started walking. I'm like what's going on, what's going on. He goes I don't know, we just got to get out of here. We ended up coming out north of Chambers Street, which is Stuyvesant High School. There was another bridge across the highway. We came out north of there. I remember lying down, the last thing I did there was lie down like in the middle of West Street there.

At that point there were tons of ambulances and there were people staggering all over and they ended up treating us there. So that was essentially where I left. Well, I didn't leave the scene yet. It took probably about another half an hour before we finally ended up in an ambulance that got us to Saint Vincents, but up until that point that's kind of - from the response to where both towers were down.

I would say that's pretty much the story.

Q. Okay, just to get it straight, all that time you thought you were in the north tower, but you were - you thought you were in the south tower but you were in the north tower?

A. Correct, yes.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: If you have nothing else to add, thanks for your help and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER GERARD CASEY

Interview Date: December 5, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF BURNS: Today is the 5th of December, 2001. The time is 3:59 p.m. I am Chief Robert Burns of the Safety Battalion conducting an interview with Firefighter Second Grade Casey from Ladder 122 in regard to the events that took place on September 11th, 2001.

Q. If you would, just tell me in your own words what happened at the World Trade Center fire.

A. We received the alarm about a quarter to 9. We responded to the tunnel with 132, 105, 101 and 131. 101 might have made -- I think 131. We got stuck in the tunnel for ten minutes. There was a car with two firefighters. They cleared out the left lane, and we finally made it through the tunnel.

We were last in line because we were getting into the tunnel via the service lane, and 105 and 132 were closer in, closer to the tunnel portals than we were, because we were in the service lane. So we ended up behind them. 105 took the front of the north tower. We went with 132 and I believe 131 or 101, I'm not sure.

We had to pull the rig out. We had spots in front of the rig where there were a lot of bodies and debris in front of us, body parts. We were in front of the north tower where the staging area was.

We positioned the rig up around -- passed the north tower at Vesey Street and we proceeded to walk towards the north tower at the staging area, which is in front of the north tower. There were two garages directly across the street from the north tower.

The incident commander and Ganci, Feehan was standing there too, divided up the trucks and the engines, engines on one side of the garage, trucks on the other side. We couldn't go through the front of the north tower because there were too many bodies on the ground.

So he wanted us to go to the south tower, all the truck companies that were in that garage bay front area, about five truck companies. We grabbed extra bottles, proceeded to the overpass that is next to the Marriott, I believe, on West Street, and we had to go underneath the overpass to avoid debris falling from the south tower and bodies. People were jumping.

We made it across there in time to get into the building. 132, 105 and 101 I saw. When we were in the lobby, I saw them. We were standing fast in the Marriott lobby. Close to the doors where the elevators were in the south tower was a doorway that leads into the lobby.

That was the last known positions I know that I saw them, those companies I mentioned that were next to us. I spoke to Vinny Brunton on the Brooklyn Battery's Brooklyn side. We thought we were going to be there all day. They were giving us water. Guys were cooling off. We knew we were going up. We didn't know if we could take any elevators at that point. Later on we found out we were going to go up and walked up.

We got the order to move, to go ahead and go forward. We started putting our gear on. Other companies moved up ahead of us maybe 20 feet, 25 feet ahead of us. There was a short distance between us, and 131 was behind us, waiting on us to move. We were just moving up in the line going in. I believe 24 Truck was behind 131. So it was us, 131 and 24 Truck. In front of us was 132, 105 and 101.

We put our gear on, started going moving forward, and that's when we heard the rumbling. Somebody screamed, "The building's coming down." I had one shoulder strap on, I dropped my mask and I turned around and made it to -- I tried to run towards the restaurant to get out.

I didn't get any more than one step and everything just turned black, and I got pulled into a corner in there that was still standing. My helmet came off. I had a concussion, I believe. That was it. At that point I didn't think I was going to make it out alive. I thought that was it.

I made noise at the door. I banged on the door really loud before guys came to me. One guy from 24 Truck was bleeding really bad. He had no face piece on his regulator. I said, "Let's get this door open." I put my light on and I started banging and making a lot of noise. Other guys came and started lifting up the door.

I heard a guy from my company screaming, "I've got the way out. It's over here." I followed his voice with two other firemen. I followed his voice.

That's pretty much what I remember as far as locations and locations of the companies that I saw that were operating.

Q. Which tower were you operating in?

A. South tower.

Q. South tower.

From there where did you go? Did you go to EMS?

A. I came out. I came out of the crater. The street was gone, the restaurant and everything was gone. I saw Koyles and Vitiello. They were alive. I saw them and then I turned around and I couldn't see them. Walker had come out. I turned around and Koyles was gone. I don't know where he went.

I told Vitiello, I said, "Follow me," because he's a proby. Then I turned around and he was gone. He walked another way. I walked up -- by the overpass was a fire truck there. There was a fireman crushed. There was another guy who was screaming, going crazy. I walked another 50 feet and there was another guy that was dead. There were bodies everywhere.

I walked another like 50 feet. I was limping. I hurt my knee, my back. My eyes were closing. I couldn't see. I bumped into a guy on the floor. I helped him. He was hurting. He was injured bad. I started walking with him. Another fireman came over and helped me.

We just kept walking, and we ended up at the water marina. A boat came over, and they pretty much threw us on the boat. They said, "You guys are banged up. Get on the boat." And that was it.

Q. Okay, Jerry, thanks for the interview.

CHIEF BURNS: It's 4:06 p.m. This is the end of the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOHN PICARELLO

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is December 6th at approximately 1320 hours. My name is Battalion Chief Art Lakiotes from the safety command. I'm here to interview -- FIREFIGHTER PICARELLO: John Picarello, 40 Battalion.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: -- regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. If you can start me off with the response. I guess it was you and Chief Henry.

A. Right. We responded from quarters with some units, went down toward Fourth Avenue. Our original assignment was to a staging area on the Brooklyn side of the Battery Tunnel. We reached somewhere around the tunnel when the second plane hit. The second plane hadn't hit yet. So it was right about that time the second plane hit.

The tunnel was a mess. They were trying to clear it for the rest of the emergency vehicles and everybody else and their mother trying to get out of the city.

I went through the tunnel, made a right out of the tunnel onto West Street and went up as far as I could. I dropped off Chief Henry and his equipment. Then I backed up to get the vehicle out of the middle of the street and parked it by West and Rector on West Street just short of Rector Street.

Q. Here's a map. That may help you a little bit.

A. Okay. That's where I parked, by Rector Street.

So I got out and suited up and told Chief Henry I'd meet up with him.

After parking it, I walked along West Street up to about Liberty, just a little past I guess it's the south bridge, the one that's by Liberty. I was there for a few minutes, just like everybody else, just looking up at the two gaping holes, looking at the towers, debris falling.

I remember in particular my attention was on the north tower, just watching jumpers and people falling. I don't know much about the south tower, the huge hole. My attention I just know was mostly toward the north tower.

After a few minutes walking underneath that south bridge, just because of the debris that was coming down, I made my way into the lobby of the hotel through the corner. There's a bar and grill or something there.

Q. Tall Ships?

A. I don't remember the name of it. I do remember that's where I entered. There was some EMS workers taking people out, swapping helmets with people so they can get across the street. I went through there, and walking through there you can go through a double doorway into the lobby.

So I got into the lobby of the hotel. There were some other guys there, the Fire Department, police, EMS. I always said there had to be about a hundred people. That's what I said, in my estimation. There were a lot of people there.

I walked through the lobby and got to about, I'd say, maybe halfway through to the center of it, met up with Chief Henry. There was another chief there. I wasn't sure exactly if he was a deputy or acting deputy. I wasn't sure. He was giving out assignments.

So it was me and Chief Henry. There were two other guys to my left, and there was Chief Stack on my right. I just remember looking up and seeing Safety Battalion. I never met him before. That was the first time I met him. So there was a group of us.

Our assignment was either the 70th or the 75th floor of the north tower. They gave us some units that Chief Henry had, so I didn't have them, and said some of them already started up and just meet up with them and go as far as you could.

I'd say we were there just maybe a couple of minutes. We took a couple of steps --

(Interruption.)

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Okay. We're continuing with the tape. We stopped it momentarily to answer the phone.

Q. John, you said you're in the lobby now. You saw Chief Stack with Chief Henry, and you were assigned to go to the 75th floor. Some of the units had already started up. You go?

A. Yeah. We go meet up with them.

So we were there a few minutes, and we started to walk, make our way through the lobby to the other side. I'd say we got maybe ten steps. We didn't go very far. I heard sort of like a rumbling sound. We stopped, looked at each other, and took off.

We just took off away from the doors. Instead of running out, we ran to our right, which would be toward the walls. It just happened really quick. I just remember running. Stack was in front of me. Henry went to my left with the other guys.

In about a second or two, you just heard like a ba-ba-ba-boom, and everything just came down and everything was pitch-black. I landed on top of Stack, and we were both in the corner by the wall. Everything was just quiet, pitch-black, quiet I guess for a few seconds or so, I would imagine.

We got up. Stack had gotten up. He didn't have his helmet. He looked like he was trying to get out of his turnout. He got out of his turnout. He asked me to give him a hand with it. He pulled on it, pulled out his flashlight, and it was half under the wall. So the wall we were against probably shifted. His turnout was under the wall, so we just left it.

Then we started hearing some guys calling. Chief Henry was trying to call outside on the handy talky. Nobody was responding. It was almost like it was dead. You could hear nothing on the handy talkies, but you could hear some muffled sounds, both guys calling for units and some guys calling for help.

About three or four feet behind me, when I stood up and Stack stood up, from ceiling to floor was all collapsed down, so we were cut off from the rest of the lobby. I couldn't see too far in front of us, but I could see debris all over the place.

Immediately to our right was the wall that we were against. I don't know, it looked like a coat check. That's the best I can make out of it. In there I could see debris probably shoulder high, and I could see the wall was open on the other side of that. You could see that it was collapsed.

Right to my right also there was a guy yelling for help. I found out later -- I don't know if he was an officer or what, but I do know that he made it out. But he was buried. It looked like he was in a wall. I don't know if it was in a hallway, but it looked like he was in a wall.

So there were a few of us, I'd say three or four of us, trying to dig him out, throwing stuff, chairs and everything, I would say maybe 15 minutes. It seemed longer, but it was probably about 15 minutes digging him out. He came out. He was able to walk.

Q. Firefighter?

A. He was a firefighter.

Q. You don't have any idea who he was?

A. No. The group I was with right there, I knew nobody.

Q. You had lost Larry? You had separated from Larry at this point?

A. No, Larry was with me the whole time.

Q. Okay. So the other group, you only knew Larry?

A. Yeah. It was like we were about two groups. After the collapse, I'd say it was probably maybe 12 to possibly 15 people. There was about 12 of us. But with that there were also some hotel employees that were with us. It wasn't only members.

Q. Of the 12 or 15 members besides Larry, did you know anybody else that was there with you?

A. No.

Q. Chief Henry wasn't with you at this point?

A. Chief Henry was with us, yeah. He was --

Q. Part of the group. So besides Larry, Stack and Chief Henry --

A. No, I didn't know anybody else.

Q. -- you didn't know anybody else?

A. No. I did know there was another battalion chief there.

Q. Big tall guy with gray hair?

A. I don't know if he had gray hair. Everybody had gray hair.

Q. I know. O'Flaherty?

A. That's what I found out. His arm was messed up. That's what I remember. I remember his arm -- he put his hand in the pocket of his turnout and he just couldn't use it. He was there.

Q. Chief Downey? Do you know Chief Downey?

A. I don't know Chief Downey, no.

I remember after a few minutes digging this guy out, Henry and one group started ahead of us. We felt like a cool breeze in our face, so we decided just follow that. They went on ahead. So we were a little bit ways behind them after we got this guy out.

We started to walk. We came down to I guess it was a corner, and there were three doors on the left. One was a stairway that went downstairs. That was pitch-black. We didn't think that was a good option. There was a stairway from the stairs next one.

The next one opened into a corridor that I thought looked like a service entrance, because it was cinder block, concrete. Then after that there were double doors with an exit sign. But we elected just to stay with that second door because when you opened it up we could see light all the way down at the end of the hall. So we elected to go down there.

At that point I don't know exactly how many were with us, but I do know there were some hotel employees. There was a big heavy guy. His leg looked a little mangled.

Q. A hotel employee?

A. A hotel employee.

Stack was helping him. Another one of the guys was helping him. We were just sort of helping him along down that hallway.

Q. In reference point, walking north towards tower one, do you think?

A. Okay, the best I can tell is when we got out, if I could say standing in that lobby right where we were after the collapse, if to my left was West Street, let's just say, then it was sort of in that direction. It was north, it would be, towards West Street but a little towards north. It was at an angle.

The hallway that we went down was on our left, but it did open up onto West Street. We came to the end of it. There was an opening. I don't know if it was a knee wall or originally it was a window. I have no idea. But it did open up onto West Street. You could see out onto West Street, nothing but rubble everywhere.

I remember looking out. I didn't think I was on West Street at first, because I thought there was a building on my left, a big slant, looked like it was going to come down. That looked like it might have been those big pieces that came down and stuck in West Street.

Chief Ganci was out there. So I saw him. There were some other members across the street, and at that point Ganci was waving guys out, telling them to get out. So some of the guys went over -- it was about four feet high. They went over that, went out across West Street onto the other side.

I remember to my left I saw two members coming toward the building and actually going in. One guy I don't know. The second one I do remember from 10 Truck was Georgie Bachman. Georgie Bachman was going in. It almost looked like a bay or something. I'm not sure. I remember him going in.

So I stuck my head back in and just wanted to go over, just head out. I was just waiting for a lull in the debris; to then run across.

At that point there were two or three guys who went to our right. If you're facing that opening on West Street, to my right there was another little hallway that went out. There was a door at the end of that and a set of stairs that also went downstairs.

The guys tried to open that door. It opened about maybe six inches, and you could see there was a ton of debris behind it. They couldn't get it open. They were going to look for another way out.

I'm not sure who went down the stairs, but I believe two members went down the stairs. I don't know who they were. They went down those stairs, looking for another way out. That's the point when I got separated from Chief Henry. So I don't know which way he went.

I came back to the area where all of us were. They had found a chair for this guy, big guy. He was sitting down. Now we were just questioning, do we lift him up, get him over the wall, who wants to go next?

At that point Ganci was motioning to us, "Come on. Let's get out." Stack said that he'll wait for another two guys who were still lagging behind and going to come up. I said, "I'll wait for them." He told me, "No, you go ahead and go."

So I went over the wall, and Ganci called me to him. He had told me that they had just moved the command post. He said they're probably not set up yet, but it's up toward Vesey Street.

He wanted me to go to the command post. He said he wants four trucks if they've got them, if there's a squad and a rescue available. He said just bring them back here as soon as possible. He just told me, go ahead, go.

That's when I left the building, left Ganci. I started walking north on West Street. I remember getting under the north bridge. I stopped for a few seconds just to catch my breath. I don't know how long I was there, probably about 30 seconds, I guess. I started to walk again. I don't know how far I walked, just a little ways, and started to hear that rumbling sound again.

I looked up, and the first thing I saw was the aerial on the top of the tower just rocking one way and rocking the other way, and all of a sudden there it goes. So I took off.

I remember running diagonally. I ran across Vesey diagonally to the other side of West Street. I do remember making it across Vesey. The next thing I know, I could feel pressure behind me. I could feel all sorts of stuff. You could feel it coming.

I do remember out of the corner of my eye things started looking grayish and dark. There was a truck there. A lot of vehicles were parked. There was a truck there. At that point I just dove behind the truck --

Q. Apparatus?

A. No, it wasn't apparatus. It was a plain truck. I don't even remember if it was either a van or a pickup. I'm not sure which. I saw the front of the truck.

I dove behind the truck. Just as I hit the floor, it was like this black just blew past me. It was like a hurricane. It just blew past. You could hear stuff breaking and everything. I just covered up.

When that stopped, I just remember opening my eyes and it was pitch-black. I couldn't see anything. I do remember it was just silence. You heard nothing, no radio transmissions, not even a call for help for a second or two. Everything was quiet. I didn't know, did I get buried or something, whatever. I took a breath. It felt like somebody threw a handful of sawdust in my mouth. The whole thing, vomiting and everything else.

At that point when it cleared, the first transmission I heard was Chief Henry calling me. So I acknowledged him and told him that I made it out, I was okay. He said he made it out. He was a little bit pinned under stuff, but he said, "I can get out of it." Nothing he felt was serious. So I told him "meet up with you later," because he wasn't sure where he was.

So at that point I was able to make it to my feet. I remember turning around looking toward where the buildings were. I don't have to tell you what it looked like. It was just a mess. The thing that struck me was just looking at the north bridge. I was just there. It was just crushed to the ground, rubble all over the place.

The first person I actually saw was actually Father John Delendick. He had told me about Father Judge.

I made it to an ambulance, got taken care of a little bit, and just went back to see whatever it is that I could do. So I actually didn't leave the scene until about 12:30, 1:00. I went to Roosevelt Hospital and came back to the scene.

Q. So the last place you saw Larry Stack --

A. The last place I saw Larry --

Q. -- would be east of West Street inside some part of the building?

A. Yeah, I don't know what part of the building, where that is. This really doesn't help me at all. I went back on Monday the 15th and just looked at the hotel. I couldn't make heads or tails of where we came out.

Q. But from your description, I'm guessing you were either at the very north end of the hotel or somehow had gotten into tower one.

A. Something like that. Somebody told me that we came out in the north tower, but then again I can't --

Q. No, I understand. The general area.

A. That would be accurate, because I do remember when I started to walk, when I left Ganci and went north -- I didn't walk very far at all and I was under that north bridge.

Stack, the last time I saw him was when I went over that little wall or out the window, whatever that thing was. He was standing there with two or three other members and some hotel personnel and one of the staff guys, the heavyset guy. He couldn't walk. His leg was really messed up.

Q. Brian went out over the wall too, I think, prior to you getting back. Brian and Henry went over that wall when you went left to go see the other firefighters or something by the stairwell, you said, that went down?

A. Right.

Q. When you got separated from Henry.

A. I got separated just prior to reaching that big opening. He had told me he was going to down the stairway. I do remember he had somebody there with a little flashlight or something. It wasn't even ours. I think one of the hotel employees had it. So that I remember.

But I had stopped at that point and turned around with Stack. There was a number of others. We just stopped, and we were just helping lead these people out. So Henry went down the stairs with the other group. That was the first group. We were sort of behind after we helped this guy out.

Q. You went down the same staircase, though?

A. No. It was the same staircase that was that first door. We didn't go down there. We passed that. We went through the second door, which was the long hallway and went through the opening.

Q. Brian talked about going over a wall with Henry.

A. So that might be, then, that second stairway, because there was another one -- you reached the end of the hall, there's the opening, and then to the right there's a stairway. I don't know where that goes.

Q. He explains it almost like you did. In fact, they had to put a chair in front of the wall so Eddie could step on the chair and get out.

A. Right. He was ahead of us, because there was a chair there by the opening. That's the chair we used for this big heavy guy.

Q. That was probably the chair that they used to step on to help everybody, Brian with his broken arm or his broken shoulder. They couldn't get over this wall; it was just high enough. Eddie probably couldn't get over. So they knew they had this chair there to step on and get over from our talk with Ladder 9.

A. Yeah.

Q. So this chair was there when you --

A. It was already there by the opening.

Q. So that was probably the chair they used to go through the opening.

A. Right.

Q. That's the last time you saw Larry and the heavyset --

A. Yeah, the last time was right by that opening. That was it. That's the last time I saw him. That's the last place I saw Ganci.

Q. Did you see Commissioner Feehan up there also?

A. No, I didn't see him.

Q. You don't know what Ray Downey looks like to know if you saw him at all?

A. No.

Some of the faces -- after the collapse, it was so dark. Even if I did, I didn't know if they were with me or not.

Q. Right, exactly.

A. That's basically it.

Q. Thank you, John.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: That concludes the interview. It is now 1547.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF STEVE GRABHER

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is December 6, 2001. The time is 1330. My name is Battalion Chief Art Lakiotes, Safety Command, New York City Fire Department. I'm here to interview --

BATTALION CHIEF STEVE GRABHER: Battalion Chief Steve Grabher.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Steve, in your own words, could you just take me through your day, responding out there and what transpired?

A. I responded with Engine 220 from quarters. I think we were assigned on the fifth alarm. I think it was after the second plane hit. We could hear it hit at quarters from where we were. So on the way, we heard Chief Cross say on the Department radio that the Brooklyn Bridge was open. So we headed right there and we headed right across the Brooklyn Bridge. I think it was the Brooklyn Bridge. What is the one right there on Flatbush?

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Manhattan. Brooklyn is over on Adams Street. Doesn't matter. You took the Manhattan.

A. I took the bridge Chief Cross said. Went across and came down. We ended up on the west side on West Street. We pulled down as far as we could, I guess somewhere up here, probably up here someplace, pretty far away, because a lot of rigs were parked there.

Q. Were you near the pedestrian overpass, that white pedestrian overpass?

A. This place?

Q. No the one that goes to the Stuyvesant High School.

A. I think we were closer than that. I'm not sure. Got out of the rig. I gave a 10-84, I got the guys together at that point and told them that we have to stick together because the rescue companies are going to be heavily engaged and that we are just going to go down there, walk up the stairs and put the fire out. We went down West Street, we were on the east side of West Street, up here, and as we got closer I told a -- a lot of people started to jump off the towers at that time, the north tower, and I was telling the guys keep your eyes out, keep your eyes up so you don't get hit by people.

Actually on the way while we were going, right before I got out of the rig, the dispatcher told all the Brooklyn units to switch over to channel 3. They would be going to work in the south tower. So I put it on channel 3. I told the guys switch over to channel 3. He also said that the command post was on West and Liberty. I took out the Hagstrom. I saw exactly where West and Liberty was. It was a map just like this. I knew I had to go down to here. We were on the closest side of the building. When I saw the smoke in the north towers, I was kind of glad that we were going to go to the south tower, because the north tower was roaring. There was no way that was getting put out. The south tower I thought we were going to go put out.

We came right down West Street, down here. We couldn't get too close, because by the time we got near 2 World Trade Center people were jumping off the roof like crazy. Landing near the hotel and the street was littered with body parts. I don't know if it was from the plane or what. But there was just body parts all over the place. Chunks of meat. I saw an airplane tire. I walked past an airplane tire. What looked like an airplane tire. Again we were looking up the whole time.

The thing was we were walking past a lot of rigs as we went down West. I didn't see anybody on the street. There was one cop somewhere around this pedestrian bridge. A lot of cars were on fire. A van was roaring on fire right here. Right over here.

I didn't see anybody. I stood on the corner of West and Liberty and there was nobody to be seen. There is not a building here, I don't think, right?

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: There was a church there at one time.

BATTALION CHIEF STEVE GRABHER: But not when we were there?

Q. Were you there before or after the collapse?

A. I was there before the collapse.

Q. That church was there, St. Nicholas Greek Church.

A. Really?

Q. Had a parking lot all around it.

A. Geez, that confuses me. We walked right up to the corner here of West and Liberty. We couldn't -- I was looking for the command post.

Q. It was a very small building, one or two stories?

A. It was small, yes.

Q. It was facing -- the entrance was on Cedar Street. It was right here the building.

A. Must be way over on this side. Was 90 West the building that had all the scaffolding on it?

Q. Yes.

A. There was nobody around. It was completely desolate. I couldn't find the command post. I told my guys look for the command post. There was nobody around. It was completely desolate, except for like I said, body parts and burning cars and the people who were jumping off the 2 World Trade Center had picked up tremendously. I mean it was, first of all pieces of building and a lot of pieces of building, a lot of glass coming down.

Like I said, a lot of bodies were coming down. They were coming away from the building because they were coming from such a great height. So we took a wide turn here. Finally, I saw a company in front of 90 West, right in front of here under the scaffold. I think it was 205. There was a Lieutenant there. I went up to him and said come on, let's go. We got to get into the lobby. I was thinking that the command post must be in the lobby of 2 World Trade Center, because where I was a Lieutenant -- where I was a Lieutenant in Long Island City we had one high rise and whenever we had anything there the lobby command post was right in the lobby of the place.

But these guys had a look on their face, like they wanted nothing to do with this. It turns out they had seen, they had helped with Danny Suhr. I don't know if they conveyed that to me then or later. They had seen the first fireman get hit. He said we are not going -- we can't make it across the street, whatever you call this, the promenade, to the building. When I took a second look, I realized that it wasn't going to happen. We had our backs right to 90 West and we were looking right across the street at the Trade Center.

I'm thinking we got to get into the World Trade Center, because obviously that's where the command post must be. There is a door behind us and a maintenance guy opens the door and I thought to ask him is there a subway here that comes up underneath the tower. I was thinking we could get in the entrance like half a block away and come right up the platform into the tower. He said yes, it's down this way.

Actually, before that happened, when I was standing in front of 90 West, I had the handy talky on channel 3 and really the only -- I heard a couple of handy talky messages. I heard, I thought it was Ladder 4, the roof man from Ladder 4 give a Mayday.

He said he has fallen 2 or 3 stories. I asked the guys in 220 a couple of weeks later if anybody heard anything from Ladder 4 and they said no. They thought they heard something from Rescue 4. I thought it was Ladder 4. I thought he said he is the roof man from Ladder 4. He gave a Mayday. He was as calm as a cucumber and it was right when I was standing in front of 90, right when I first got there to 90 West and I was looking up, I heard the Mayday come over, he said it two or three times.

He said, Firefighter so and so, I have fallen two or three stories. I'm trapped, come get me, help me, come get me. I heard someone give a reply, okay brother, we are coming to get you. Just give us your location. He was saying I don't know where I am. I have fallen 2 or 3 stories. This was all happening very quickly.

I heard a Battalion Chief, it might have been the 8th Battalion, but I'm not positive. I'm really not positive on that, say something about -- I heard him say something. I heard either the squad or the Rescue -- somebody said we are coming to get you brother, just give us your location, hold on. He gave a couple more Maydays. And then he said I'm losing consciousness, hurry up, come get me. This whole thing probably took about 15 seconds, if that.

With that, I heard someone say collapse. This wasn't the building collapsing yet. I heard someone say there has been a collapse. I heard a Battalion Chief -- might have been a Battalion Chief -- say everybody out, everybody out, back out. I don't know if it was back it out of the floor. I took it as everybody out of the building. I took it as this guy falling two or three stories, that there had been some type of internal collapse on the floors. This was in the south tower.

As all this is transpiring, it's probably happening while I'm talking to this building guy. He takes me into 90 West, we go about 15 feet, make a left turn. He said he was going to take me to the subway. We make a right turn and end up right here. I think there was another street here. Which is the big German building? Maybe a German bank. Is this Bankers Trust with the pillars on it? This might be it. Is this two buildings or one building?

Q. (inaudible) connect the building, this is where the fire house is. That's where 10 and 10 is.

A. Well, we go through - 90 West is the one with the scaffold. We go in about 30 feet and come out this way.

Q. Out to Washington.

A. As we come out here, I take a quick look to my left and I thought I saw 2 firemen somewhere over here. I should not say firemen. Two members of the Fire Department, I don't know if they were firemen or not. I thought I saw. There really weren't many people around and everything was happening very quickly.

With that, I told the guys before we left that place that we have to get to the corner of the building. At that point I wanted to approach the building from a diagonal here because that would be the safest way to come, so we weren't exposed to the two faces of the building with the stuff falling. I go this way.

Just as I go out of the building, one of my guys says hey Captain, the building is coming down. I looked over my shoulder and you could see the whole top of the south tower leaning towards us. It looked like it was coming over. You could see the windows pop out just like in the picture, looked like a movie. I saw one floor of windows pop out, like poof, poof. I saw one and a half floors pop out. It looked almost like an explosion. The whole top was teetering, and I really thought just the top of the building was falling off. I didn't think there was any way we were going to make it out because just being this close, it looked like it's leaning right on top of us.

So we ran. It wasn't that far. I guess it was right to here and just as we turned down Albany, the whole building -- we got behind some pillars right here. You could see over the top of the building from where we were standing. You could see coming over the building, the whole building was coming on top of us this other building. Just instantaneously, this was all in a fraction of a second, a big dust cloud come down this block and this block, just like whoo, like that, this coming -- the building coming over the top of this. That's what it looked like, it was a dust cloud. It looked to me like the building was coming down. Then pitch black.

That was it. We thought we were trapped there. We got into this building over here, until the dust cloud settled. Keep going?

Q. Sure, tell me the whole story.

A. After that, actually we were in this building and I was missing a guy. Turns out when we turned down here he decided go to this side of the street and I thought I lost him. So I told the guys to stay there. I'm going out trying to find this guy and there is no answer. I go back inside, tell the guys to count each other again. Because we were with 205 too. Some of the guys were with us from 205. I don't know if all of them were.

Went back out. Couldn't find him. Finally I think we got everybody together. We headed out. At this time I thought just the top of the building fell down. I really wasn't sure that the whole tower was going to come down.

We headed over here to Albany. We started going back this way, then the second tower came down. We headed into I think a building. I don't even know where we headed into at that point. I have no idea. We went down to another building. A big black dust cloud again. That time I had all my guys with me. Actually, you know what, I think we were in this building.

We went in here after the first one because we couldn't see too well, because of all the fiberglass and stuff, we were trying to get the stuff out of our eyes. We started evacuating this building. This building, I think it was this one. A bunch of secretaries coming down, I remember that. But I remember telling the security guard, has this building been evacuated yet? This was before the first tower -- the second -- tower one collapsed, in between. Told him you got to evacuate. You should evacuate. If anybody is left here you better get them out, have them head south, so they were evacuated.

We were cleaning stuff out of our eyes. Just as we left that building, the second one came down and we ran to another building. Again it was pitch black. You couldn't see anything. You had to wait I don't know even know how long. Five minutes, ten minutes, before we got came out. We headed down. When we got out, we headed back down this way. Whatever building we were in. Down this way. We saw the wreckage and we thought - I thought that's the top of the building. We have to go find the main part of the building. It turns out I was looking at the Vista, what was left of the Vista, and, of course, the tower on the street.

So, what's next?

By this time - by the time we got all over to this debris pile over here, there were - really nobody was looking into the pile. You still couldn't see much of the pile. It was all covered. It was all dust and we had taken - most of us could hardly even see ourselves. We could barely keep our eyes open from the fiberglass or whatever it was, the asbestos.

Q. Concrete?

A. Concrete, everything. We were exhausted. I guess it had been about 45 minutes and we spent most of the time running around. I think we came under here. We came over here and we were starting to run into firemen that had come all back through here.

Which building is this? No, not this one. This one. Gateway Plaza, yes, okay.

Q. That's an apartment house. That was the one that was on fire?

A. Yes, that's the one that we put out.

Q. Did you?

A. Yes.

Q. Don't worry about it.

A. Anyway, we come back over here. I remember I ran into an EMS doctor, who said he set up a triage center here and then I got on the radio and I was calling command. Trying to call somebody to tell them that we had the triage center set up over here with a doctor. But the funny thing was, after the first collapse, I was on channel 3, that was it. I didn't hear one other thing on the handy talky. It's like someone shut them all off.

I don't remember hearing anything on the handy talky until I got over there, until I started calling and I think I went back to channel 1 and I think I got in touch with somebody. Over here on -- I got in touch with some Chief. I said you got an EMS doctor set up over here with a triage center.

We started taking our stuff off by then because we were drained. Before we left the rig, I had the guys load up with everything, because I figured we were going to be there all day. Extra cylinders, search ropes, rabbit tool, all the EMS gear we had, we took everything. We cleaned the rig out completely. We were really like packing. Of course we were dropping stuff for the last 45 minutes. Things were getting dropped off. Two of my guys I didn't realize at the beginning of the tour, they were kind of old fellows, I think -- about 55.

Q. Be careful with that old stuff.

A. They were -- my proby was a spring chicken but the rest of these guys, these guys had basically had it by this time.

Q. Especially with some time on the job.

A. Very senior members, very experienced fellows. They were. One guy was a marine, I remember, and he wasn't going to say die, but this guy was, his eyes were popping out of his head. He had had it. He is carrying all the crap around.

We get over here and there seems to be -- actually, when we got over here, there was an Engine pump parked over here. It wasn't damaged. That's right, that's right.

They tell us that all the water mains in the area are out. You got to get water up to us. They got one rig parked here but their ECC is gone, there's nobody. I had an extra, I had my chauffeur, I told him this is your position. You take over this rig. I think he stayed there until 2:00 in the morning working that rig. That was right over here. I left him there. I took the rest of the guys away.

That's what we were doing. We were going to get water. As we went down the street there were other guys checking hydrants. There was nothing. Someone said there is a fire boat over here. We went up to the fire boat. It was that little teeny one that was parked over here, over here?

Q. That's a building.

A. That's a building? Where's the harbor?

Q. Right back there somewhere.

A. Out back.

Q. Off Albany?

A. You know what, it was in here, it was in here. We went down this way. Somebody said there is a fire boat. I go there is a fire boat. I said it's a little teeny fire boat that wasn't going to do anything.

So we work our way up this way. I think we went through the lobby here. No, actually, I told the guys to wait here at the fire boat, thinking that we could stretch a line through here. I went into this building. Is this the big glass atrium?

Q. That's what it is.

A. I went into here, right up to the end and I could see all the debris had piled right up up to there. So I could see we weren't going to take a hose through there. So we went back and got what was left of my guys that were still -- listened to me and stayed there. We went up this way. I ran into a Chief that said they have a manifold here. They need to get a line.

So we commandeered an ambulance here on Vesey. We drove it down this way. And there was one of the big marine boats set up right here with the big hose. So by this time we had the construction workers helping us and I had my proby driving the ambulance.

We hooked it on the back, the hose on the back and we drove it all the way down here where they had the big manifold set up. It looked look like they were setting up a north command post there because there were a bunch of Chiefs at this point.

After we left there, we said let's go back and get the rest. Get our gear, so we came back to here and as we are sitting here, there is smoke coming out of the window, Gateway Plaza, light smoke and there is a lot of firemen in the street. Probably the recall guys or guys that are like us, that had just been scattered. Nobody wants to look up at it. Everybody is kind of like, you know, I was doing the same thing.

We are looking up. It was light smoke. It was black but it was light. We are sitting there drinking some water and everybody is kind of licking their wounds. Then it got blacker. It got blacker. Next thing you know there is fire blowing out the windows. I said come on. We can take care of this and then some of the guys in the street, I don't know if they were recall guys or whatever, but they were like, hey Cap, got no water, we got no rigs that can pump.

There was a Lieutenant there from 201. I think he had come and I was talking to him but I said we can put this out. If we don't put it out now it's just going to get worse. So I had my proby grab two cans and we grabbed the -- I told what's his name, the guy's name, I thought was big face. He has a nickname. Bullet or biscuit, or something like that.

Q. Lieutenant from 201?

A. Yes. I said listen this is what we will do. I was talking to him. We will grab the Clorox bottle, we will drop it out the floor below, we will pull up two lines of hose. We got 500 gallons of water in the rig here. That's a start, you know. We go up, go up the stairs. I had a couple of my guys with me, not all of them, and the proby, and my nozzle man was with me.

Me and the Lieutenant went into the floor below and pulled the hose up, to the floor below, below the fire. The apartment was right there on the next floor up. We realized at that point we had a stand pipe. We turned the water on. There was still water in the stand pipe, so we pulled up one length of hose, disconnected it. Might have been two lines. We pulled up two lines, disconnected it, and, of course, give it to the fireman. One guy hooks up on the floor below and the other guy hooks up on the fire floor, which is two feet from the apartment but we had no pressure, so we ended up just putting the nozzle on one length of hose right there, went in and while they were hooking it up, me and the proby went in with the can.

That wasn't doing anything. It was going. The room was roaring. We got the line. My proby went in, not the proby, my nozzle man Dean went in and put the fire out. There was like no pressure on this line whatsoever. We almost had to put it out by draining the hose. By that point we were shot. We were just - I don't know even know what time it was, it was noon or afternoon or 2:00. I have no idea.

But I see my old boss from 14 coming up and they were coming up to do a second primary on the floor above or something like that. A few people had evacuated, but basically the building was empty. I mean everybody ran for their lives.

We went downstairs. Again we just dropped our gear because we were beat by that time. We took 5 there. At one point two of my guys were heading off to the hospital ship or something. They had hurt their backs. There were 3 of them, 2 of them. They were heading south. They got on a golf cart and headed south down somewhere over here. I think there is a walkway here.

Q. There is.

A. Right.

Q. Yes.

A. They headed out this way. I was left with the proby, Dean, the nozzle -- no Dean left too. The nozzle man left. This other proby that was a recall guy, Bob, his name is Bob they call him -- what's his name?

Q. That's the Lieutenant you saw?

A. I think that's Bob.

Q. No, it says Robert. So it's Robert.

A. He has got a nickname, Paul or something like that. Anyway. So most of my guys were gone. I had a proby with me. I also had this kid that had joined me before the fire. I don't know his name. I wrote his name on the riding list too. He was like just out of the Academy. He had no time on the job. He was wearing the old boots and the old turnout coat. He stayed with me for most of the morning. I don't remember his name.

Then later on he said I'm going to go find my own company. Then we were hanging out on Liberty with a lot of the other firemen right here, just waiting for orders. That's it.

Q. That's it? How did you get back to the house?

A. While I was waiting, I kept having the EMS clean my eyes out. They weren't getting any better. They kept swelling up. It got to the point where I couldn't open them any more. So me and the proby went up and they took us by ambulance to Bellevue, where they were irrigating my eyes for most of the evening and then some health team, Division Corps, somebody took me and him and a whole bunch of firemen dropped us off in different parts of Brooklyn.

That's when 118 got back. Not 118, 122, I guess is the truck. We thought they were killed. They thought we were killed, because they were assigned on the initial alarm.

Q. That's 220?

A. Yes, we all got back at like 11 o'clock at night or something like that. They came back separately, they were getting off sanitation rigs and stuff. They thought we were wiped out and we thought they were wiped out, but it was a very lucky fire house. Nobody was killed. But the handy talky messages when I was standing there, I'm trying to think exactly what it was. I could almost swear it was Ladder 4, Ladder 4 roof.

There was - somebody was insinuating that there had been a structural collapse and this is probably 15 to 30, 15 to 20 seconds before the building came down. I was hearing this. There was some collapse.

Q. It might have been an interior collapse happening prior to the exterior?

A. Yes.

Q. Nobody knew exactly what was going on. But you are saying you are pretty sure it was Ladder 4, the roof man.

A. I'm almost positive it was Ladder 4 roof. I remember him saying his name. This guy was calm as a cucumber. I'm thinking this guy is about to die and he is as calm as a cucumber.

Q. He didn't know it, I don't think.

A. Then he said I'm losing consciousness.

Q. Did you notice the firefighters you saw coming across Liberty Street, was it a Chief or could you tell?

A. It was such a glance. They were pretty far away, because I remember there wasn't much life that I was seeing. There really weren't people around. Especially over there, because I was looking over there for about 15 seconds when I was standing in front of 90 West, looking for someone, where is all these Chiefs, where is everybody. I talked to Mike Dunn, but I must have walked right in front of the command post. I was on the other side of West and we were looking at the building. We weren't looking that way. That was you?

Q. That's where I was, in the command post, staging area, right across the west side of West Street on Liberty.

A. Yes, so we were on the east side, we were looking at the building.

Q. Oh, well, you weren't going to see me up there.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: That concludes the interview. It's approximately 14 hundred hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MIKE ZECHEWYTZ

Interview Date: December 5, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today is December 5th, 2001. The time is approximately 1820. My name is Battalion Chief Art Lakiotes, Safety Command, New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER ZECHEWYTZ: Michael Zechewytz, engine 278, firefighter.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: This is in regard to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Mike, do me a favor and just tell me in your own words from probably the time you started responding with the company to the events that unfolded for you that day.

A. Well, I remember we were drinking coffee in the kitchen and we saw on the news breaking story on Channel 5 that a plane just hit. I remember I was right by the TV set and I said, "That must have been a drunk pilot." I mean, it was clear outside. So we were like, "Wow, the guy must have had a few last night or something."

So then Roger Jackson and myself went out to the front to see the smoke. If you were in front of the firehouse and you looked over to the right, you saw the smoke. Then he called and he goes, "Zech." That's my nickname. He goes, "Zech, look," and we saw the other plane going from left to right with its nose down.

So then we ran back in the kitchen, and then maybe 30 seconds later the news said that a bomb went off in the second building. But then they saw in slow motion it was a plane. So that was the plane that we saw go into it. Then the 4 responded, I forget what alarm, maybe third alarm, and then we went on the fifth alarm.

Then we went to the staging area right by the tunnel. 228 went through the tunnel and they couldn't make contact with them for a while. Then there was a collapse. Someone said it might be a collapse on the south side of the tunnel. Then we didn't hear from them and then later on they went through. There must have been a lot of debris in there.

Q. Let me ask you a question before we go any further. Were you there before or after the collapses?

A. We saw the collapse.

Q. You weren't there?

A. We were at the tunnel on the Brooklyn side.

Q. And you saw tower 2 go?

A. We saw tower 1.

Q. That was the second tower to go.

A. All right. No.

Q. The first tower to go was tower 2.

A. Okay. So that's the tower. We saw that from the Brooklyn side of the tunnel. I was right in front of the rig. It was me and Vinny Buonocore right in front of the rig. We were like the first thing out of our mouths after that was, "Wow, we have firemen just died." We saw it come down.

Then whatever Chief was there by the tunnel, they sent us and a couple other companies to the Brooklyn Bridge. Tower 1, then, I guess was still up. People were saying like, you know, it's crazy to give us the assignment to cross.

Then we went over the bridge. The tower was still up. That was tower 1, I guess, that was still up.

Q. The north tower.

A. I guess from that time, when we got over the bridge and where we parked our rig, it went down. But we didn't hear it. We just saw debris everywhere, but we didn't know that tower came down yet.

Q. Do you know who the Chief was that gave you the order to go back?

A. No, I don't know. I remember his face. I mean, I could remember like it was yesterday. No, I don't remember.

Like I said, we parked the rig on I forget exactly what street and we went to the West Side Highway. We were there for a while. Then, I guess, after an hour or two, they sent us to the Milennium Hotel with roll-ups. We went to the fourth floor there, hooked up to a standpipe.

Then another Chief -- I don't want to say the wrong name. I'm not sure exactly who. It might be Jensen, if he was there with us. We went there with a truck company, another engine company. We were there for at least an hour, an hour and 15 minutes, and then they said that someone gave a Mayday in the hallway up the stairwell that the Milennium Hotel might come down. So we just ran out of there. We left our folds right on the stairs. We left the hose on the standpipe and all our stuff.

Q. That's about it?

A. Yes. After that we were pretty much just going from -- we were helping dump trucks, we were doing like little searches, engine searches, moving debris.

Q. You said Roger was with you?

A. No. Vinny Buonocore, McLaughlin, John McLaughlin -- no, Jimmy McLaughlin. I'm sorry. Richie Vetland, Captain Henricksen. The only companies I remember with us at the staging area, I can remember 280 being there because I have a friend that was working that day. 102 truck was there. They walked through the tunnel. I knew a guy from there, Jimmy McCutcheon.

Q. Jimmy McCutcheon?

A. Yes. He actually walked through the tunnel.

Q. I hope he has a brother on the job. There's a Lieutenant in 122.

A. Oh, yeah?

Q. Yes. Somebody said they saw him there, Lieutenant McCutchan. Did you say 280?

A. 280 was with us at the staging area, 102 truck, 114 truck.

Q. 114 got through.

A. Yes, they got through. I don't know how they got through and we didn't.

Q. Because Dennis Oberg was standing next to me when the buildings came down.

A. Yes.

Q. I know 114 got through.

A. Because I remember seeing them. We had pulled up. They went in front of us at the staging area and that was it. We didn't see them anymore. But we saw the tower come down from the tunnel, and then, like I said, the first tower, which is the second tower that went down, we didn't see come down. I saw it up all the way until we got over the bridge.

Q. Very good.

A. That's all. I wish I could help you a little more.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: No, that's fine. This concludes the interview at 1825.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER TROY OWENS

Interview Date: December 5, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is December 5th, 2001. The time is approximately 1705. I am Chief Art Lakiotes, Safety Command of the N.Y.C. Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with --

FIREFIGHTER OWENS: Firefighter Troy Owens, Engine 279. That day I was working at Ladder 131.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: This is in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Troy, if you would, just take me through your day during the event, after the event, where you went and so on and so forth.

A. We responded on the fifth alarm or whatever it was at the time, and we were told to report to the staging area on the Brooklyn side of the Battery Tunnel. We were standing there when we were watching one building burn. The second plane hit while we were standing there.

At that time we were deployed into Manhattan. We were stuck in the tunnel for a little while. We finally made it through. It was a disaster area, of course. Everything was crazy. We took a position on the west side of West Street.

Q. If it will help you, here's a map.

A. I know exactly. We had to get right from underneath everything. There was too much shit coming down. We were standing on the other side of West Street. We were watching them jump and all of that there.

Then we received orders to proceed into building two via the World Trade Center Marriott Hotel. That's where we were. When we first arrived there, we didn't have any other specific orders. The lieutenant told us to take a minute, told us to take a breather.

We didn't have specific orders at the time. The first captain or lieutenant said, "Listen, guys, take your gear off. Take a breather, take a minute." What I chose to do is I went to say hello to someone I hadn't seen in a long time --

Q. Would you tell us who it was?

A. Yes. I went to say hello to Lieutenant Gregory McLetchie from Ladder 122. I saw another gentleman from proby school. I don't remember his name.

Q. Do you know what unit he was with at the time?

A. Lieutenant --

Q. No, the one from proby school.

A. I don't remember what unit he was in.

Also I came back to the company and said, "Lou, I'm going to the bathroom." I went to drink water and wanted to urinate. I didn't want to get stuck up there and have to be thirsty. I went to the bathroom. As soon as I came back, they said, "Troy, we're ready." I saw we had our orders, to proceed to whatever staircase, whatever.

At that time I just had my bunker pants on. I put my bunker coat on. Right after I put my bunker coat on, I went to grab my mask. I noticed one of the guys from the company said, "Look, they're all running."

I heard rumbling. There was a window there. I looked outside. I saw a black quick shadow come to the building. I thought it was another plane hitting. I just heard rumbling, and everything just came down.

I just had to turn -- they said, "Get down, get down." I heard someone say get down, and that's what I did. I dropped. My helmet was buried. I couldn't get it. I had my hand on the strap to my mask. As everything was coming down, I was getting blasted by the dust, the debris. I was getting blown away, tossed around and whatnot.

I turned the mask on, and I tried to open it up and it wouldn't work. So I just stayed there until everything finally came down. I didn't get hit. I didn't get hit with anything, but I was choking on that shit.

So at the time I was like, wow, everything had gone black. I had my big light on. I've got my big flashlight on. After everything eventually came down and I was still alive, at that time I just wanted to know where was the way out.

There was a gentleman; I think he worked in the hotel. Maybe he was a fire safety director or something. I said, "Where was the way out?" He pointed in that direction. I went out towards the way out to look. The ground was missing in some of the parts of -- in part of the lobby was like a bar area over there somewhere. It kind of went out a little bit.

At that point I said, okay, let me go see what's up with Ladder 131. I went back with 131. The first person I found was Lieutenant Woods. He was okay. He was okay. He was badly shaken up like I was.

The rest of the guys, we all came out. I think there was a door they were forcing to. Eventually we all got out. But I thought everybody was with us. Mattie Castrogiovanni, we didn't know where he was. From what I understand, somebody took him and put him in an ambulance and they took him away because his eyes got blasted pretty bad. We had communication with him at first, but then we lost him. So we didn't know where he was.

When we got out, we kept calling, kept calling. While we were trying to find out where he was, we helped pull this guy out from under an ambulance. I think lieutenant said pair up and help people. I paired up with Keith Kaiser.

We helped get this guy out from under an ambulance. He was a fireman. I don't know who he was. Hopefully he's all right. The other guys helped this photographer.

What we did is we went across West Street. There was a store over there. I know we all needed to drink something or get the stuff out of our eyes. So we got into the store. The first thing I did was go straight to the back where the sink was. When I went there to cut the water on, they said, "The other building's coming down." The other building came down. All the guys that were there that were outside the deli, they dove in the deli. I dropped behind the counter. That's how we survived the second collapse.

After that the lieutenant said, "Look, we just survived two collapses. Let's get the fuck out of here." So we kind of got away from the area. At that time we -- during the second collapse, we kind of lost what's his name? Craig Gutkes? He got disconnected from us. We were still communicating with him.

So we went south a little bit. He met us there further down. There was another building there, and I went inside this building to try to wash some of the stuff off my face and go to the bathroom. While I was in the building, I wanted to make a phone call also. While I was on the phone, they said you have to get out of the building because the building is going to blow, there's a gas leak.

At that time everybody in the vicinity, in that immediate vicinity, they made us all get on boats and they took us over to Jersey and that was it. We got on, me, Keith Kaiser and Mark Ruppert. We all got on together. We stayed together the whole time.

They took us to the decon units over by the triages over there. We tried to hook up with the lieutenant and Greg Gutkes was together. We tried to found out where they were. We spent a long time trying to find out where they were. We didn't want to go to any hospital until we knew where they were. Then eventually we found they were all right, because a gentleman from the house, Harry, he was helping us out, Harry (inaudible).

Q. (Inaudible.)

A. Yeah. He was helping us out. We knew everybody was okay. It was just Mattie, we didn't know what the hell was up with Mattie.

Eventually we wound up in the hospital. I forgot the name of the hospital.

Q. New Jersey? It's okay.

A. Actually the hospital was in I think Staten Island.

Q. That's what I'm saying, Staten Island, whatever. St. Vincent's or something like that.

A. I can't remember. They sent me a letter with the pictures that they took of us. They were real nice people. They took real good care of us. They washed out my eyes. My eyes got washed out three times. I still had a hard time. I was still choking on this stuff. My chest was burning and whatnot.

That was the end of it for us that day, for me.

Q. How many guys did you see in the lobby when you were in the lobby? 50? 60? 100? More?

A. There were a lot of guys going in with rollups. We were one of the last companies to go in the building. I believe we were -- when we first walked in the Marriott World Trade Center Hotel, if I remember correctly, there's a bar that you ran into first.

Q. I think it's called the Tall Ships bar or something like that.

A. Okay. Then right after you get to the bar, then you actually reach the lobby, the hotel lobby. We were like the last ones, because I remember there was this wall.

When I found out the building was dropping, I dove right on this side of this wall. I tried to get close to something. Instead of being out in the open, I was kind of like hugging the wall. The other guys were right on the other side of the wall. There was a bunch of guys in there. The hallway, it was a long hallway, a long lobby.

From what I understand, everything behind that -- if you were behind the revolving doors, it would be curtains. From what I understand, everything behind the revolving doors -- I believe not even that far. I don't know how many people made it out. I don't think it was too many. There were a lot of guys in the lobby. I can't really tell you a number because I know it was a deep lobby.

Q. What was that lieutenant's name from 122?

A. Lieutenant McLetchie.

Q. McLetchie?

A. Yeah, Lieutenant McLetchie, 122.

Q. So basically you were in the lobby close to the Liberty Street side.

A. Yeah. Actually they found my helmet.

Q. Did they?

A. The front piece only, just the front piece.

Q. You don't know what happened after tower one came down.

A. When tower one came down, we were on the other side --

Q. Yeah, I know. You left your helmet in the lobby of the hotel; right?

A. Yeah.

Q. That's what I'm saying. So we don't know what happened to the lobby after tower one came down.

A. The lobby itself?

Q. Yeah, after all the --

A. I have it up in my locker. The front piece, it's just the front piece of the helmet only, the leather part. It has a tag on it that says deceased.

Q. All right.

A. It said on Liberty Street.

Q. Very good.

A. It had a 9 on it, a 9. My badge number is the only one with Engine 279 on it because 279 is missing so maybe that's why they put "deceased" on it. I was working with 131.

Q. Okay. Sure. That's possible.

A. Mine was the only one from 279 that started with a 9, so it had to be mine.

Q. The guys from 279 didn't do too well.

So except for the lieutenant -- you really don't remember the name of the proby that you saw?

A. A Latin guy. I didn't see his name on the list of deceased. I would like to hear his story.

Q. What about his picture? I'm sure we have it.

A. I talked to Lieutenant McLetchie. He said that he just grabbed a column and held on. What held him up is he was waiting for one of their men in the bathroom. That held them up. After everything came down, I remember him saying he was trying to cut a lieutenant out, some lieutenant.

Q. I'll get to talk to him.

A. Their tool failed, and they went on to get another one. When they went to get another tool, the other building came down. So that's what he told me. I thought he was missing, actually. I got his name mixed up with someone else. But he's okay. I talked to him on the phone. They were a little further in the building than we were.

Q. I guess that's it. I want to thank you.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: This concludes the interview. It is approximately 1725.

Thank you, Troy.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN JAMES YAKIMOVICH

Interview Date: December 4, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today is December 4, 2001. The time is approximately 1530. I am Battalion Chief Art Lakiotes, Safety Command.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with?

A. Captain Jim Yakimovich.

Q. Regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Tell me in your own words how this day unfolded for you.

A. I was detailed to the Department of Citywide administrative services, preparing the Lieutenant's promotional exam. At approximately I guess 9, o'clock a little before, Lieutenant Marianne Monahan called me up and said that the World Trade Center had blown up in front of her. I crossed the hall at One Centre Street, the municipal building, the 14th floor, looked out the window and there was fire coming out 2 or 300 windows. Myself and Lieutenant Chris Ginocchio, also doing the test, took the elevator to the lobby and we proceeded to go down Park Row to Broadway and at Broadway and Vesey we headed west, to where we reached Church and Vesey when the second plane impacted.

Then we were -- I didn't see many uniformed personnel on that corner. A lot of civilians observing the first fire burning and when the second impact happened, everyone went running. A lot of civilian injuries, that's all I really saw was civilians injured. Other ambulances on the scene that were able to respond and remove these victims. A few ESU rigs responded. I assisted a couple of PD with this.

Got back and then I walked north on Church Street to Barclay. Barclay to Washington and at Washington Street I proceeded south to Vesey and that's where I went to OEM, because I figured since I worked there before I could give them a hand. I met Chief Peruggia, who said, see if you can get to the 23rd floor to staff the Office of Emergency Management, being the Fire Department representative.

When I got to the 23rd floor they told me they were evacuating the building and I proceeded to the lobby and from that time I don't recall what happened, but I did get to 10 Engine and 10 Truck. In front of their quarters I met Citywide Tour Commander Chief Cassano. He told me to get some bunker gear and report to the command post, which was on West Street.

I went to 10 Engine and 10 Truck and I spoke to Lieutenant O'Malley and I grabbed a helmet and a bunker coat and I signed it out in the day book and proceeded west on Liberty Street, where I was approximately at the western end of 2 World Trade Center when 2 World Trade Center collapsed.

I ran and at the first door I saw, which was at the corner of Liberty and West, there was a revolving door into the Marriott Hotel, 3 World Trade Center, Vista International Hotel, whatever it's called, and I went into that lobby and I found a piece of -- some kind of masonry thing in the lobby about a foot and a half square. I jumped behind that, then the windows fell and I got hit with the wind blast, it got dark and the debris then came.

I forget how long it was, it could have been 10 seconds, it could have been 30 seconds, it could have been a minute, I don't know. It stopped. Then there was some murmuring and moving about in this area where I was in and it wound up there were 8 people there with myself. There were 7 civilians and myself. I knew which way it was towards Liberty Street and we proceeded to walk that way. I don't know how many steps I took. I didn't know if I was inside or outside the building. I ran into an apparatus, a pumper and that's when I knew we were outside the building.

I then told the people I was with, "head towards the river, because that's where it's got to be clear." We proceeded west on Liberty Street past West Street to - there was a marina there and they let us use their bathrooms and I was able to get some of the debris out of my face.

I then came out and it was - it's not listed here but it's behind West Street, there is a way you can walk through, is it 2 World Trade Center? The Merrill Lynch building? It's around that way towards the Winter Garden. I proceeded east on that street underneath the Winter Garden, or right in that general vicinity. Then I came to West Street. I proceeded north on West Street not knowing that the command post was south of West Street on West Street and when I got to the corner of Vesey and West, I turned and saw tower one move a little bit. I proceeded to run as fast as I could north on West Street where I encountered 16 Truck and I jumped underneath the rear wheels of 16 Truck, then the second collapse hit.

At that time, it seemed like there were a lot of firemen around, but I don't recall seeing any one. The only people that I do recall seeing was, I guess his name is Billy Riggs from 44 Engine, that was between the two collapses. He was injured, but he swore that there were other people injured more than him, and he didn't need a hand. That was right around 2 World Financial Center, the Merrill Lynch building. He was on a bench right there.

I'm trying to think of any other guys that I saw. I mentioned I saw Chief Cassano. I saw members of Engine 53, Lieutenant Bob Dougherty, one or two other men, I can't remember who they were, but again they were directing people in the area behind 2 World Financial Center to head north away from the Trade Center collapse, number 2.

After the second collapse, I presumed, like everybody else, that most people in that area were hurt or dead, but it wound up that they were alive. After I got out from underneath the 16 Truck I proceeded north again on West Street to get away from the dust cloud, because I knew that's where it would be clear. I hit Chambers Street, made a right, walked up to Chambers Street to, I guess that would be Park Row again, came around and was headed back towards the site when a lot of Fire Department apparatus were arriving on the scene, and I told them what happened and that was pretty much what happened from the time I got there to the time when the second collapse was over.

I know the actions that I saw. I know I saw a lot of Fire Department people. Their names I don't know and I don't recall actual faces, but I could see many people in my travels.

Q. So you really don't have any ideas of names or where people were?

A. No. No keen ideas of names. I don't know if that's any help at all, but.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: This concludes the interview. It is now approximately 1540.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MICHAEL HAZEL

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 6, 2001. The time is 1625 hours. This is Battalion Chief Stephen King with the Safety Battalion of FDNY. I am conducting an interview with Firefighter Michael Hazel from Engine 224. The interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Mike, you can start any time you're ready.

A. Okay. That morning I was awaiting relief, believe it or not, and we were watching TV in the kitchen and we saw the news saying that the tower was hit, the first tower was hit.

So we had a couple of guys here. One guy was going off duty. The rest were all working. Another guy just came back from a detail. I said to them, "Don't go anywhere because we're going to be going to the World Trade Center," because we always respond to that box and you could see from the TV that it was a substantial fire and I knew we'd be going.

You couldn't tell at that point it was a jet. I thought originally it was a publicity stunt, especially after that guy with the parachute who got caught in the Statue of Liberty. I figured it was just some guy who was trying to fly between the towers and got lost because it really didn't look like that big of a hole. So a few minutes later we responded. We were sent a ticket and we responded, but to the Battery Tunnel, to the staging area. We didn't go directly to the Trade Center.

On the way to the Battery Tunnel, we're driving along Columbia Street and I'm sitting across from the proby, and as we're talking and I'm preparing him for the events, what to expect at this job we're going to go to, he just says to me, "Look at this dummy. He's flying underneath the smoke instead of over it." With that I turned to my right and looked at the Twin Towers and I saw the second jet hit. So he started screaming and I just said to him, "We're in big trouble. This is an attack. We're being attacked."

So we thought we were going to get sent right to the Trade Center, but we went to the Battery Tunnel and, obviously, everybody else who was there saw the second plane hit, so no one was sitting in their rig just waiting to go. We all jumped out and ran over to each other and started talking, like this isn't good, we're in trouble here, there's a lot of fire, there's a lot of people, and we couldn't understand why we weren't getting called yet.

A couple of the chauffeurs who got out of their rigs to mingle turned up their radios, so it was like in stereo. All the rigs just blared, "Anybody at the Battery Tunnel." They started rattling off the companies. "Respond." So we all wished each other luck and we jumped in our rigs and we went through the tunnel. We got stuck in the tunnel for a while, probably a good ten minutes, but it seemed like forever, where it just wasn't moving at all, and we pretty much all got the feeling that it was a setup, that we were meant to get stuck in there.

But we eventually got through the tunnel, and at first we started seeing bits and pieces, when we turned up West Street, of the plane and of what turned out to be body parts. But the closer we got, the bigger the parts got, the plane parts and the body parts, and it finally got to the point where I was facing forward and I told the proby, who was facing the rear, not to look anymore because I told him the things he was going to see he'd rather not see and that he would never be able to get it out of his head if he did see them.

At that point, Smitty was driving. That's when he started trying to snake his way up West Street. There was a lot of debris in the street and I remember yelling to the Lieutenant to keep going because stuff was still landing all around us. We just passed a compact car where the engine was running and the door was open, which looked to me like the driver had escaped, but from the back seat to the trunk was crushed by a jet engine. I said to the proby, "There goes the luckiest guy in the world right there." So we went past that and we saw a couple of more gruesome scenes, and at that point I just made sure that we weren't going to pull over because it was just raining down too much debris.

We started going up West Street. I believe that's when Smitty ran over the part of the plane, but he did that to avoid the bodies because there were obviously bodies in the street that were hit by either apparatus or cars or something and it wasn't a pretty picture. Like Smitty said, it's just very hard to intentionally run over a body, even if you know they're dead. So we tried to go around them as best as possible. I didn't hear him hit the debris in the street. The guys on the other side said they heard it.

Anyway, we pulled up. We got a hydrant. We all jumped off and the Lieutenant reminded everybody to take their extra cylinder. I told the Lieutenant that maybe we should help Smitty hook up because we'd probably need water more importantly than anything else. They had a lot of people there already. The hose I didn't think was going to be that important as much as water would be.

So we helped him hook up, and an officer came over from the command post. I thought it was a Chief. Somebody told me it was a Lieutenant. I'm not sure who it was. He told us to move. He said to get off the hydrant and move further up north to another hydrant so that rigs coming up from behind us would be able to form a chain rather than have them try to get around us because there wasn't much room to get through West Street. So we had to disconnect the rig.

We got back on the rig. We moved up to the next hydrant. Again we helped Smitty hook up and grabbed our roll-ups and our cylinders, and as we were turning to walk away, one of the guys just nonchalantly said, "Hey, Smitty, that's you," and he pointed to the ground. I didn't know what he meant. I looked down and it was transmission fluid. So I said, "What are you talking about?" He said, "That's from when he hit the plane. We must have a leak." So I stopped him and I said, "We can't leave him here like this because, if he runs out of transmission fluid, he's not going to be able to pump and he's going to be useless." So I said, "Let's see if we can help him."

So I called to one of the other guys, Richie Saulle, and I asked him to get the clay, the gunk that we use to fix gas tanks. I asked him to get it and see if he could go under there and try and patch this hole. So then we got the gunk and we went under the rig and it was a pinhole. It wasn't that much. We patched it up and we waited a while to see if it was going to stay. It looked like it was going to hold.

So we got out from under the rig and we got our roll-ups and our cylinders and we walked about maybe ten yards, 15 yards, and the tower started to come down. At first it looked to me like just the top of the tower, like maybe the top 15 floors, like the skin of the building was just peeling off and coming down. We pretty much all just stood there in disbelief, and what I did at that point was I told all the guys I was with to put their masks on, their face piece, because I saw the dust coming and I said, "Who knows how much we're going to get hit with? We might as well put our masks on." I told Smitty and this other guy, Bailey, who was just buffing the job, to get their masks on or to hightail it.

So we all put our face pieces on and we pretty much got hit with a lot more than we expected, so we tried to find refuge behind cars or up against fences or whatever we could. I got down on the ground and a civilian -- I don't remember now if he bumped into me or if he just was calling out, but I grabbed him and I started sharing my face piece with him, sharing the mask, and then you just started hearing people screaming and yelling because they started getting engulfed in the cloud and it started getting darker and darker. Another guy was coming running by crying, screaming. I called out to him. He came over. The two of those guys were sharing my mask now. After a little while, a third guy starts coming up and he was screaming and we grabbed him, and then I had all three guys sharing my mask. So I was trying to calm them down because one guy was panicking. He was pretty upset. He was getting hysterical.

CHIEF KING: We're going to stop the tape for a minute. It's 1635 hours.

(Pause.)

CHIEF KING: It's 1636 hours. We're going to restart the tape. Go ahead, Mike.

A. So the one guy was getting pretty hysterical. The other two guys were okay. They pretty much took their hits of the air and they gave it back to me when I asked. But the third guy kept grabbing it and screaming and yelling. So I told him, I said, "Listen, you keep it up, I'm not going to give you any more and then you're going to pass out and I'm going to leave you here." So he pretty much calmed down after that. The bottom line is, I had my hood over my face, but they pretty much used up all my air. When it finally started to lift, the first guy who was pretty calm said thanks a lot and took off. The other two guys were a little more out of it.

We regrouped and tried to go a little up north to try and find a place where we could clear our eyes and throats and noses so we could breathe better. At that point I called out to all of the other guys in the company. I wanted to make sure that we didn't lose Smitty or Bailey because they didn't have any masks and I knew it got pretty nasty and, if they didn't run, they were going to need help.

So we couldn't find them originally. We got together, all of us regrouped, and we stood there for a while because we had heard reports now that the tower came down and we didn't believe it. We just thought it was the top couple of floors. It was still too dusty and too dark to see. So we just stood there watching and waiting to see if it cleared and we could tell what was going on. At that point, on the radio, we heard a lot of Maydays and a lot of yelling and who's trapped and who's hurt.

It didn't seem like that long of a period of time, but by the time we regrouped and got our act together and we were going to start heading back down, that's when the second tower started coming down. When that tower started coming down, we knew from the first one, which, actually, the first collapse was blocked by the north tower from us. It sort of shielded us a little. When I looked up and I saw the antenna on the second tower coming straight, just like falling straight into the building, I knew it was coming down, and we pretty much just turned and started to run.

As we were running, it overtook us, the impact. A couple of guys went flying. We went diving under cars and up against fences. We started getting pelted with stuff. Nothing substantial, though. It turned pitch black. You couldn't see anything, but you could still hear the screaming again and the yelling.

Pretty much the radio went dead after that, the second tower. We didn't hear anybody screaming for help. It was just like an eerie silence. We knew that it was really bad.

At that point, I put my face piece on and my cylinder ran out. So I had the proby with me, who I had told to stick with me, and we ducked down behind a fence and I told him, I said, "Joe, you're going to have to remain calm here because you're going to have to change my cylinder." He said, "No problem," and he took my spare cylinder and changed it without a problem.

Then two guys behind us that were following the fence actually walked right into us and then a cop came by. I thought he was a transit cop. I'm not even sure now. We all stuck together and we started moving north up along the side of the fence because we still couldn't see anything. At that point, I think the four of us got together and we waited for it at least to clear up a little bit so we could see.

Most of the guys now were pretty bad as far as the dust and the breathing, and it seemed like a godsend. We were walking up West Street and a guy in a Poland Spring truck pulled over. I said to myself,

"I'm going to go over there and I'm going to grab some water. I don't care if this guy likes it or not." But we couldn't even blink. I told the guys to sit down, and as I ran over towards the truck, the guy got out of his truck and he just started opening up all the gates on the truck and started throwing us water. So we just took bottles and we started rinsing everybody's eyes out. By the time we got cleaned up, there were guys coming up by the hundreds, walking up the block and just needing to be rinsed and cleaned.

We got our act together. We regrouped and the Lieutenant and one of the other guys went down south again to see if we could find anybody left because at this point we didn't know what was going on and we wanted to see if we could find a command post or somebody down there that could tell us what to do. But we were northwest of the hotel and all the debris, it was like a roadblock. There was no way to get in there. That whole side of the West Side Highway was just pretty much just demolished. That's where the walkways were.

We went down there and there were numerous rigs burning, cars burning. It looked like something out of a war movie. There was really nothing to do. I mean, all the rigs that were crushed and with all the debris in the street, we couldn't even get to the World Trade Center complex.

That was about it. That's pretty much it. After the second tower collapsed, we tried to get together and stick together. We found Smitty. We never found Bailey, but it turned out, we found out later on, that he ran up to 20 truck and made a few phone calls. But, unfortunately, when they asked where we were, he said he didn't know, that we were lost. So that didn't work out too well, except for the fact that at least the guys that were here knew not to tell anybody who called what he said. But that's about it.

The only thing I left out was, in between the two towers collapsing, there were a couple of firemen who were walking up that were bleeding pretty badly from the head, and we stopped them. They didn't want to stop. They were lost. They didn't know what they were doing. They were sort of out of it. So we had to like grab them and restrain them and hold them by the rig while we patched up their injuries on their heads.

An ambulance was coming down the block and I pulled them over and I said, "These two guys are hurt pretty bad. You've got to take them." They said, "All right. We'll pull up and you can throw them in the back." I said, "Okay." So they drove to the back of the rig and I went behind the rig to grab these two guys and their heads were being bandaged by the proby and by Saulle, and the ambulance just took off. They kept going. So, when they kept going, I was like, you know, well, whatever. But anyway, they kept going, and that was only a few minutes before the second tower collapsed. So I don't know what became of them.

But most of the guys that were walking up the block after us were obviously closer to the building than us and they were injured. A lot of them were bleeding. Most of them were dazed and didn't even know where they were. That's why, when that water truck pulled over, that was really good because people couldn't breathe. The civilians didn't even realize, you know, when you can't breathe and when you've got dirt in your eyes, I guess, for some reason, we're a little more used to that than civilians are, but these civilians were panicking, and you know any time people are yelling and screaming and crying, it just adds more stress to the situation. So when this truck pulled over, we pulled out a couple of the five-gallon barrels of water, put them on like a ledge and just pulled the cap off, and there were people sitting underneath them just like a shower and it helped a lot of people. That calmed them down a lot anyway.

CHIEF KING: Okay, Mike. Thank you. The time is 1645 hours and we've concluded the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER THOMAS SMITH

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 6th, 2001. The time is 1355 hours. This is Battalion Chief Steven King of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual, Firefighter Thomas Smith from Engine 224. This interview is regarding events which occurred on September 11th, 2001.

Q. Tom, you can start whenever you want.

A. My story starts with, in the morning sitting having coffee at the firehouse table. Somebody says, "Turn on Channel 1. A plane crashed into the Trade Center." The guys getting off the night tour, day tour, we had about seven to eight guys in the kitchen. The young guys were saying, "Look at that, look at that."

So my first thought was somebody flew a small Cessna or some plane and flew into the tower. We were sitting there, and the guys were like, "Wow." I said, "You know what, we may go on that," because us being so close to the Battery Tunnel and we went there in '93 to the towers.

Two minutes later, tones go off, "224 respond to Brooklyn Battery Tunnel at the staging area." The plane crashed at 8:48. We got that tone probably at about 5 to 9, 8:55.

So now there were guys hanging over from the night tour, and it was like, all right, ba-ba-ba, things were going on. Who's jumping on the rig? Who's the day tour? Who's taking the ride? PS, we start responding towards the Battery Tunnel.

En route to the tunnel, making a left out of quarters on Hicks, a left on Joralemon and another left on Furman heading towards the Battery Tunnel, there's a wide open view at the foot of Atlantic Avenue that shows the Manhattan skyline.

As I'm making the turn heading towards Columbia Street which leads into the tunnel, the proby on the right side of the rig yells out, "Another one hit the tower." I'm driving and I'm looking, I'm looking. I didn't see the crash, but I could see the flame, the orange.

Now we get to the tunnel. Now, the whole time we're not even thinking when we're responding that it was a terrorist thing. En route to the tunnel, the second plane hitting, we meet at the tunnel. We were there with about six other companies. We're staging and, hey, how you doing, how you do, what's going on. Do you see what's going on? What are we going to do, blah, blah, blah.

With that they're trying to get Brooklyn-bound traffic out of the tunnel. It was chaotic at the toll plaza there. 224 and 210, we were on like a Rapelye Street, which is a side street leading into the tunnel. 101 was there already. Two or three other companies, this way, that way, at all different intersections leading into the toll plaza. Also we got word it had to be 9:08, 9:10 -- I'd say about 9:10, all right, let's go, respond to the towers. So we went through there, six or seven companies, I think it was; I'm not sure. If I see the ticket.

So we proceeded to go through, and it wasn't a straight run. We went and we had to stop because they had Port Authority guys in the tunnel, whatever. They still had cars inside. So it was go and stop. Cars would come along, go, stop, which is normally a two- to three-minute ride through the tunnel. It seemed like 20 minutes we were in that tunnel.

Q. It was long?

A. It was long, probably about ten minutes.

If the second plane hit 9:06, we were at the staging area there probably about three minutes. So by the time we came out of the tunnel on the Manhattan side, it had to be 9:20, 9:25.

When we came out of the tunnel, I came out of the tunnel, went to West Street, made a right. There were rigs backed up, backed up. We proceeded up to the front of tower one where they had a lieutenant there. I don't have his name. The trucks were getting orders, and the engines were getting orders.

The trucks were just -- they were saying everybody get as far left as you can because they want a passageway for rigs to get in. Me being an engine, my officer got orders from the lieutenant in the street, "Tell your chauffeur get as far left as he can. There's hydrants on West Street. Get a water supply. You're going to be relayed, you're going to feed," ba-ba-ba, the whole thing.

So we went as far left as we can, and there were rigs coming in, coming in all different angles and guys just coming up the rig. So I pulled up to my hydrant. My members get off, and we test the hydrant. We stretch our 35 foot yellow hose. We're hooked up to the hydrant.

One of the brothers in my firehouse turned to me and said, "Smitty, do you see that puddle of trannie fluid?" I said --

If I can go back a little bit. When we came out of the tunnel when we were heading on West Street, there was all debris in the street: airplane debris, building debris, body debris. So as we were going heading towards to get our orders at the tower, we were serpentining around body parts, airplane parts, building material. It was just chaotic.

So in the midst of me doing that, I hooked up to my hydrant, got my orders. My brother, one of the other firemen, noticed that I punctured my trannie pan. We had a 5 by 5 circle of pink trannie fluid in the street, and I'm saying to myself as the ECC that I'm going to be fed, I'm going to be supplying, my rig cannot break down. Plus I had my back to the tower.

So I don't know what made me do it, but I repositioned my rig. I think it was Murray Street where all the rigs were when I got there. So there was an opening. I went a half a block, and there was a cross street. I think it was Murray. I turned my rig around, and faced the towers where I was looking at my pump panel and looking at the towers.

So this whole thing took maybe seven to ten minutes. Here it is probably a quarter to 10, 20 to 10. I'm trying to replay the time in my mind, but it's very foggy. It might be 2 minutes; it might have been 12 minutes. But we did the maneuver with the rig. I don't know what made me do it, but personally I just said -- the guys helped me out, we repositioned, came back around, hooked back up.

Me and another fireman proceeded to get our putty out that we putty for gas leaks and everything on the highway. We took a piece of a chock. We chocked it up. The hole was probably a one by two hole. It was a nice gash. Obviously I ran over some airplane debris, propeller or whatever, a rough edge, blunt edge, gouged my pan.

So anyway, we proceeded to plug it. It was a steady plug coming out. When we finished probably three to five minutes -- because the fluid was hot, so it was tough. We had to plug, step back, wipe off. We were getting it down our arms. PS, about five minutes we plugged it to a slow leak.

Our guys, who had their rollups and everything ready to go in, I would say, approximate now, I would say probably quarter to 10, 10 to 10, and our guys -- "Smitty, you okay? You all set?" "Yeah, I'm all set. I'm all hooked up. I'm all right."

This whole time we're watching people from probably 95 to 105 come out of the first tower, just coming every three to five seconds. There's another one, there's another one.

I'm taking deep breaths in the street.

I'm almost getting sick. All I had was a cup of coffee in me. I just couldn't believe what was going on. It was sickening. There were so many urgents and maydays and chaotic radio transmissions.

Another person coming out, a couple holding hands coming out, splashing on the ground. I could see them coming down three-quarters of the way, but we couldn't see the splash. [redacted].

Our guys are all set. They start moving in. I'm standing there in a golf shirt and shorts. The tower comes down. My guys just rolled up in a ball, ran, rolled up in a ball. They were all donned up in gear.

I, seeing this coming, ran and I had to jump over two parked cars. I ran two, three blocks, myself, EMS and other units that were still there in the street trying to get set. So I jumped over two parked cars. I ran two blocks. So two blocks after Murray, I'm not sure what street it is. But there were cars parked on the side, and I just bailed over these cars, rolled up in a ball and just let the first cloud blow me over.

So after I regrouped, I hacked up a little bit more, because I had all that stuff in my throat, my eyes. EMS guys came over to me and gave me rinse for the eyes. I was taking water. I was a little disoriented, but I was fine.

The only thing I wanted to know is how my guys were, because I knew they were there. But me being in non-detective gear, I just did the 400 yard dash down West Street. I was a little shaken up.

So after I was tended to, eye rinse and washing out my throat, I proceeded to find my members, and we all embraced in the middle of West Street: Are you all right? Are you okay? Good, good.

One of the guys that was off duty, he was with me when we ran. He didn't have a mask, so he stayed with me. He never came back to the pack. So I ran another block to see if he was all right, couldn't find him, met up with the guys again. Everybody okay?

With that, guys that were on the outer part of the collapse were coming out. I took out first aid stuff, put it on the back step of the rig. The rig was just whited out, glass taken out, just whited out everything, smoke, debris. I mean, just debris, dust.

So we took our medical EMS stuff out, put it on the back step. There were guys on the outer part of the debris, guys coming out with glass hanging out of their forehead, guys couldn't see, their eyes were caked, they couldn't breathe because they had no breathing apparatus on, they got caught up in the ball.

We were just tending to ourselves, making sure everybody was okay. What went on was just bullshit, uncontrollable, this is crazy. Okay, everybody's okay? You're regrouped. The officers, everybody all right, ba-ba. Let's make sure we know what we're doing here. "Smitty, are you okay?" "Yeah."

I went to the rig. They proceeded to head towards the tower again. The second tower comes down. I still have no protection. I'm still whited out. The second tower, the cloud of debris was twice as big as the initial one. I knew I did this dash before. I knew I ain't going to die in West Street this way.

I knew there were brothers in there after the first one. I'm not even thinking about how I'm doing. I just know that there's casualties, not only civilians from jumping; I know there's 45 minutes of respond time worth of brothers in there.

PS, the second tower comes down. Every man for himself. I did another 400 yard dash down. There were so many people coming out of the scene already, I couldn't get to where I went to the last time, so I ended up running towards Stuyvesant High School. There were people running in there, so I could see them from a distance. So that's why I made a straight line, made a left-angled turn, headed towards the outside lobby of Stuyvesant.

As I was going there, the cloud was on the back of my head. I could feel it. I just lunged to the door. As I was lunging, a guy opened it up and I darted inside. They tended to me.

I was not shaken up, not upset. I was out of sorts, out of sync. I didn't know what to anticipate was going on, what can we do. There was no radio transmission. I had an empty feeling in my stomach.

Then I go back to see where my guys are again, because I'm fine. I knew my guys -- they had all their gear on. They weren't going to run as fast as I was. So we went back there and made sure everybody was okay. There was more crazy stuff in the street. There was bleeding civilians coming out. It was hysteria in the street.

I went to my guys. Everything was okay. "Smitty, are you all right?" We're hugging, kissing, making sure we're all here. All of a sudden I hear on the radio transmission, "Okay, 224 start water." I'm saying I'm 224. My officer is right there. I said, "Lou."

Anyway, to make a long story short, when I repositioned my rig, I was the only rig facing the towers. Everybody who was coming in from Brooklyn from the Battery Tunnel were facing going down West Street. I was facing the towers. So they obviously moved my rig, repositioned my rig from West and Murray to two, two and a half blocks up right on West -- on Vesey right up at West, and they started to relay from marine unit to 57 Engine, 84 Engine, feeding me. I was feeding 33 Engine, who was feeding the manifold.

I went back to my rig it had to be five minutes after the second tower came down, and I pumped from about 11:00 a.m. until quarter to 11 that night. My captain finally came on the scene probably about 12:00, and he took charge and made sure the guys were okay. I stayed with my rig until about 10:30, 11:00, quarter to 11 at night.

They backed me off the rig because seven was in dead jeopardy, so they backed everybody off and moved us to the rear end of Vesey Street. We just stood there for a half hour, 40 minutes, because seven was in imminent collapse and finally did come down. Then we proceeded to pump another six hours.

I was told to go back to the firehouse, jump on the first bus out of there. Relaxed, because to my group -- I was on a mutual that day anyway. I was working for somebody. I wasn't even supposed to work. My group was due in tomorrow morning at 0900. They wanted me here.

So the captain picked a few guys, they had to stay. The guys that were here all this morning, whatever, you guys go home. So instead of staying in the firehouse, I told him I'm going to go home.

In the midst of all this, I called my wife and let her know I was fine, called my mother and all the family, because it was a little -- I knew my wife would be a basket case, because she knows I was there in '93. My one son is up in college at Marist. He knew I was there in '93. He knows I'm five minutes away from the tunnel. They're watching it on TV. I wanted to make sure that everybody knew I was all right.

My wife said, "I saw Tommy on TV." They saw me fleeing from the scene. So I went home that night. I was shaken up. I was fine on the way home -- when we came back to the firehouse a little after 11:00, that was the first time I saw the actual footage on TV. We stayed there for an hour and a half, and we talked with the brothers.

Then I proceeded to drive home. I was fine. A block away from my house, knowing my wife and my three other kids were waiting for me, I just lost it. I watched it on TV for another three hours with my wife and kids and couldn't sleep, woke up about 7, was here by 8:00, and I went up there for the 12th and we did our part digging, digging, digging.

We all came back, but unfortunately the guys that we met outside the Battery Tunnel that morning, the six or seven companies that were there -- 118 went over the Brooklyn Bridge. So let me remember this. 101 was there. 226 was there. 279 was there. 35, 38 guys, I don't know how many extras that were on each rig. 19 or 20 of them didn't come back.

I'm just glad to be here. I don't know if it's a guilt complex thing, but I'll never forget. It was the most traumatic day in my life. I said it ten times in the street, I've got 18 and a half years on the job. I've got three sons. They all want to come on the job. I said it ten times in the street that day, I said, "This is it. I'll fight fires until I'm 65 years old, but I can't control it. This is bullshit."

But I was just concerned about guys that I knew that were unaccounted for. Then the twelve we met at 211. We went over there. I had to go on the bus. They had the list of the unaccounted members. That's just a tough nut to swallow.

That's my take on that whole morning from 9:05 to 10:55. I was at the scene -- I was back there 0900 the next morning. We did 24 on, 24 off. I went there in between a few tours.

I'm just coming back, just took a vacation, just came back from my vacation. I came back and I had what they called the WTC cough. I've been coughing since. Some shit nights sleeping. I'm just happy to be here, Chief.

Q. Thanks, Smitty.

CHIEF KING: The time is 1615 hours, and this interview is complete. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER RICHARD SAULLE

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 6th, 2001. The time is 1735 hours. This is Battalion Chief Stephen J. King from Safety Battalion, FDNY. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Richard Saulle from Engine Company 224 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Richard, you can start whenever you want.

A. To start off with, I was in the shower, because I have this fetish about taking a shower before every shift. No matter if it's the first half or the second half of the 24, I always take a shower. So unfortunately I was caught in the shower.

The run came in. Somebody came running up and said a plane just hit the tower. I said, "What are you talking about?" I thought they were trying to get me out of the shower, maybe flour me or do something hilarious like they normally do, or somebody will turn the water off. So here I am, I jump in my shorts, just a regular work shirt and a pair of shoes, no socks, no drawers. Here I go, I'm down.

The tones went off, responded. The first response was to respond to the World Trade Center. Then the second one came in as we were driving out of quarters to report to Rapelye Street at the base of the Battery Tunnel. That was the second one that came in.

So we sat there and waited. I believe we must have waited there until they were clearing the tunnel out. That was just my logic. There were cars coming in there. They shut it down, cleared the tunnel out. We were getting ready to go through as a convoy with the rest of the fire engines and fire trucks going through there.

I was on the chauffeur side of the rig, back of the chauffeur, like I normally sit when I ride in the back, unless I have the pipe. A young kid, Joe Sullivan, said, "Why is this plane flying through the smoke? Holy shit, he hit the second tower." I said, "Get the hell out of here." I stuck my head out the window, and I looked up and I was amazed what I saw. Both towers were on fire, and I said we're in a lot of trouble.

So we started going through the tunnel, and I said we're in a lot of trouble. They're coming with more planes. This is terrorism. My brain started -- I'm not the sharpest tool in the shed. Guys will tell you I say that about myself all the time. I said, they're coming, they're going to hit the tunnels, they're going to hit the bridges.

So my mind told me to say good-bye to everybody. So I reached across and I said to Hazel, "Good-bye, Mike, it's been nice working with you for 16 years." "Joe Sullivan, I'm sorry you're only on the job a couple of months."

I told Bradbury, who was sitting opposite me, "Kevin, I know we don't like one another very much," because me and him are always bickering, but we still like each other. That was just our way, we always fight with each other. I said, "Goodbye, Kev." Then I hit Smitty in the back of the head and I said, "Smitty, you still owe me $15. When we get up to heaven, you better pay me."

This kid, Stu Bailey, was in the middle of the officer and the chauffeur in the front, and I told him the same thing. I said, "You owe me $5 if you remember too." Then Desimone, I said, "Desimone, I'll see you at the big one."

Then we proceeded. We got through the tunnel. What we saw on the floor was amazing. There were plane parts, cars wrecked, body parts. It looked like Tales of the Crypt. There were arms sticking up in the air, and bodies were just shredded all over the place.

There was a car that we drove by that the driver's door and the passenger door were open, and there was a plane motor on the back half of the car. Two inches more, and both these guys would have been dead too. That was their ticket. It was amazing. The car was actually cut right in half with this motor, right there back of the front seat. I sat there in amazement.

Then we drove. Smitty is very aggressive, just like I am when I drive. We kind of hit a couple of bumps when we went over. I don't know what it was. But we got to a point in front of the two buildings. We looked up, and the flames were coming and the bodies were coming down and splattering on the street like watermelons.

Chief told us to supply an engine company in front of the building, find a hydrant. We started rolling up, and as we rolled up Kevin says, "Hey, we have a transmission leak." There was a puddle about two feet around of transmission fluid.

So we got to the spot, which was probably another 50 feet up. The first hydrant that we saw that was open, squeezing through all kinds of fire trucks that were angled all over the place. It was just the way everybody just parks and just gets out and runs.

So I climbed under the rig, and there was a little cut, about an inch cut, with a little drip hole coming out from the transmission. I need a chock. I said, "I need a chock. Do we have a chock?" I started jamming. The chock was too big.

So I actually started gnawing at it with my teeth. I made like a miniature size toothpick out of this, and I jammed it in there. It still was dripping. I had to put the goop on there, and it worked pretty well.

As I did that, that's when the first tower fell. As soon as I finished, got up, the tower came down. We heard somebody saying, "Sh." That's how the tower sounded coming down, "Shhhhhh." That's all you heard it, a big shush. The tower came down.

Hazel said to me, "It's going to get awfully dark in a minute," and that's exactly what it did. It just wiped us out. Nobody had masks on. People were running at us, knocking us over. It got black. You thought it was night. It was like night for five minutes.

The first thing that came to mind is, we all had masks on and everything, but we didn't don them. It didn't dawn on us until after the fact. We must have donned them a minute after this building came down and after the blackness hit us, because we didn't have time between people running you over and worrying about Joe Sullivan, make sure the proby was next to us, and Bailey, who had nothing but shorts on. He had dress shorts on.

After the first building came down and it finally cleared, it was like somebody blew pillows up. It was just dust in the air, totally dust. A couple of guys came walking out of the pile, truckies, because they had their tools with them.

One guy had an ax, one guy had a halogen, and they were actually throwing their halogen and axes on the floor in frustration and pissed off. Maybe somebody they knew got wiped out in front of them, maybe what they saw. One of them looked like he was scalped because the whole back of his head was opened up.

So we grabbed the EMS bag and we started bandaging his head, we washed him out. We actually washed his head out with booster water, which was rusty. The rig wasn't hooked up to a hydrant yet, and that's all we had, whatever we had, the 500 gallons in the tank.

We started washing his head off because the stuff was like glue. It was stuck to him. It didn't come off by just washing it. You had to rub and wash. So we washed the back of his head off, and this guy was so -- he was cursing up a storm. He was worried about what happened to him. He didn't even realize that the whole back of his head was ripped open.

So we were bandaging two guys heads, and then I guess it must have been a worker came out of the building. He had just a white shirt on. He was covered. When he opened up his eyes, it looked like the Little Rascals in the film when the guy got covered in stuff and you just saw the whites of his eyes. He was black. He couldn't see. So we proceeded to wash him and rub him down.

Geez, about a couple of minutes after that, here come the second tower on us. The first tower was in the way of the second tower. When the first tower came down, the second tower was blocking it in our hitting range. I figured this tower is definitely going to get us, because now we were closer, and there was no building to block it. I thought this is it, we're getting wiped out again.

We ran down the street. We must have gained 30 yards, 30 yards at most, and it was like you were running as fast as you can and somebody shoved you in the back of the head and you went head over heels tumbling, because the force of the wind was incredible. It knocked you over.

There was a guy actually on his hands and knees begging to me, "I have no mask. Don't leave me here. I don't want to die." I slapped this guy -- I don't know, he's from an engine company, because he had a black face piece. I slapped him and I said, "It's dust, stupid. It's dust. You're not going to die. Relax."

Then when the lieutenant heard me yelling at the guy and hitting him, he came crawling over and he said, "I have no mask." I said, "Listen, we're going to buddy share this mask. If you try and take it away, I swear to God I'll knock you on your ass," just like that. I said, "It's dust. Go like this. That's all you have to do. Put your coat over your mouth." These guys, they lost it, totally lost it.

The second tower came down. The same thing, blackness for longer this time. It was ten minutes now. Finally the dust cleared, and it was like panic. People were running. The whole street was running at us.

The chief was telling us, "I want everybody 300 feet back," because we didn't know if any other buildings, from the shock, or undermining or anything else if they were going to weaken any other buildings. He said, "I want everybody 300 feet down."

We walked all the way down. There was a couple of fire hydrants that were open. There were thousands of people giving us bottles of water. It was amazing. It was like a candy store in the street: water, drinks, this, that. Within minutes everybody was getting it. Trucks were there with food.

I jumped in a puddle because there was a fire hydrant running, and I washed this stuff off me, because, like I said, it was glue. I washed my helmet in the water. I had it all down my neck. I was breaking it, and everything, because it was gagging you.

After that it just ended right there for a while. It was like stagnant for a while. Then finally we heard the total recall. We heard the radio, we tried to listen to radio stations. Then everybody had radios around us. They hit this, they hit that, they hit this.

It was like oh, my God, we're in the middle of like a world war over here. They're hitting everything. I said they're going to hit more. I thought they were going to hit another building by us, because there were a couple buildings -- as we walked down West Street, there was a couple of big buildings that we were getting to.

I said, "Listen, they're going to start hitting this because this is the next tallest building. I said this is no good either. You're better off staying right here." In between this tall building, in between the towers, this is a regular low area. I said you're better off saying over here, and we did. We kind of like shacked up on the curb. It amazed me.

(Interruption.)

A. So now we're just sitting there it seemed like an hour, an hour and a half goes by, and we said what the hell are we doing? So we started walking back towards what I guess they gave it the name now ground zero. They might have given it the next day or whatever.

We were walking back towards that. Guys were just sprawled out all over the place. Who was there, who has a bandage on their head, who was just sitting there with their mouth open. It was terrible. It was terrible. You knew guys were dead. You knew guys were really dead.

It was hours, it must have been. We were trying to find the rest of the guys, because the recall was there. So we started walking -- you're walking in this stuff, and it was just like powder. So we were walking and breathing this shit all day long. It was like an inch thick. No matter where you looked, everywhere, blocks away, it was an inch thick. We're walking in this rubble, and nobody has a mask on. It only lasts for 17 minutes.

We walked down Vesey all the way around -- we actually found where the rig was, where Smitty was actually pumping water. He was pumping water for a few hours. Before that we packed up into a hotel, and they said there were some sandwiches up on one of the upper floors. So we ran to get a sandwich and thought of Smitty. We came around and gave him half a sandwich.

Then it creeped up until it must have been 2:00 in the morning they were ordering guys. They took a head count. Everybody had to report in. There were a few guys that were missing, but we got a head count of our whole company. Then they said, "Anybody on the day shift, you have to go home. You're ordered to go home." I said, "I'm not going home. I'm staying with my rig. I'm here. I'm not going anywhere."

Our captain was there, Captain Quinn, at that time. Now he's a chief. A few days later after that they made him a chief, the next rank up. He ordered us to go home. I said, "I'm not going home." He said, "I'm telling you, go, that's it. You've had enough. Go home. See you tomorrow." He said there's buses on West Street.

I walked for three miles on West Street. We didn't see a bus at all. There was like seven of us that were walking back. This guy Pacheco, who was one of the recall guys, he had an interview with I guess a Puerto Rican station. So they wanted him to talk a little Puerto Rican, and he started talking, and the rest of the guys filtered up. They must have jumped on the bus, and we missed the bus.

So me, Smith and Pacheco were left behind. We walked for three miles on West Street until we found nothing. There was a Con Edison crew there that we actually begged them, "Do us a favor. We just want to go home. We're tired." It's now 3:00 in the morning. We're exhausted. We want to go home.

One of the guys said, "I'll take them home. I'll take them. Where are you?" I said, "We're right over the Brooklyn Bridge, right there on Hicks Street." "That's no problem, but you have to get deconned first." Ai-yie-yie.

So here we are, stripped naked as a jaybird. We had to get washed down with ice-cold water from the fire hydrant. They gave us these coveralls. They put all our stuff in red bags, double taped them, gave us all the stuff.

Normally when something like this happens, they say usually you take everything that's on you. I had the commissary money on me. I had $600 in my right pocket. I said they're not getting that. I ripped open the kneecaps, the pads in the bunker pants, and I stuck it in there. I said they're not getting the money. I closed it back up. So I had the $600 on my right knee just about from 3:00 in the morning on. I said, "Sh, they're going to confiscate all our money. I put all my money in the kneecap."

They dropped us off and wound up giving us back our bags. So the first thing I did is I ripped my bag open and let all this air and shit out in the firehouse. The whole firehouse was white from everybody else coming in with their bags.

I didn't even go home. I just went upstairs and went to bed, I was so exhausted. The only thing is my wife was trying to get in touch with me the whole day. She didn't know. A couple of guys told her, "I don't know. I don't know where he is. I don't know." So she was kind of on pins and needles all day.

I woke up about 9:00 in the morning, 9:30. My eyes usually open up at 6:00. I was so overexhausted that I got three extra hours in there.

When I got home, I collapsed on the floor like a baby -- I have to say that -- right on the floor. I don't know why I did it, but my legs just gave out from under me as soon as I walked in my door. My wife and my kid was home, and my puppy. I just got a dog.

The only thing I wanted was to kiss that dog, kiss my wife. All four of us were on the floor. My dog was ballistic because he was licking the three us. He was licking us up, going from person to person and licking us up. It was amazing. It was amazing.

My legs buckled. They never did that before. Actually they probably buckled one other time. When I had my first son in the hospital, I got the jitters. But other than that, I usually hold everything. You know, I cry at funerals. That's me. I'm a little weak. But the weak legs, I usually never have them.

That's my story.

CHIEF KING: The time is 1755 hours, and we're concluding the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER STUART BAILEY

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 6, 2001. The time is 1715 hours and this is Battalion Chief Stephen King, Safety Battalion, FDNY. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Stuart Bailey from Engine Co. 224, and this interview is concerning the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Stuart, you can start the interview. Just tell me what position you had that day.

A. I actually didn't have a position that day. I was one of the guys that took the run-in being off duty.

Q. Okay. Tell us your story of what you saw that day.

A. I worked that night in Ladder 101, the night before, and got relieved there around 8:20, came here, got in the house around 8:30. We responded shortly after that on the first plane, took the run-in, jumped on a rig with another kid, Joe Sullivan, a proby. We both took the run-in, both were off duty.

We got to the staging area by the Battery Tunnel. Before we were going into the tunnel, we were pretty much just watching it, just watching the first plane. I believe the second plane hit as we were going into the tunnel, or possibly as we were going to the staging area, the second plane wound up hitting.

At that time we realized -- the kid in the back, the proby, said it was a terrorist attack. No one even realized what actually was going on. We just thought this plane accidentally hit, until that second plane hit, then we realized what was actually happening.

Maybe ten minutes after being at the staging area, they started moving the rigs into the tunnel. As we were going into the tunnel, one of the kids that was actually walking with his gear -- I can't even recall his name, but there's a big article. The guys know his name -- actually asked Tommy Smith, who was the chauffeur, if he could jump on the back of the rig. I didn't even realize that he jumped on, neither did Tommy or anyone else, until maybe later on, then we realized the kid actually did jump on the rig. I believe he was lost. He was missing.

When we pulled out of the tunnel, the way I saw it, they couldn't keep us really right there by the tunnel. We had to proceed past the building because of all the rigs that were behind us. I guess it would have delayed them from getting in. We would have been backing up the tunnel pretty much. So they kind of had everything blocked off and we kind of swerved around debris from the plane, body parts pretty much everywhere. That's the first time I've ever seen anything like that. I'm sure no one did.

Then I believe we went to get a hydrant. We had a pretty close hydrant to the Trade Center itself, pretty much almost right out in front, and a Lieutenant started screaming at Tommy Smith that he wanted the rig moved. He wanted to stand out front, I guess, to relay water or to help out with that, getting water over there. So that guy actually moved Tommy from pretty much in front of the Trade Center to a little bit further where we wound up being on Vesey and West Street, over there.

At that time both buildings were going, both planes had already hit the building, and we were just standing there. I looked up, realized the transmission, our transmission, from riding over the rubble that was on the ground, the remains of the plane, ruptured our transmission tank, so transmission fluid was leaking. Tommy noticed that. So we kind of spent an extra five minutes or so kind of trying to plug that in. I guess the guys rendered it useless at that time, it would have been useless if we didn't do that, you know, just another story out there of how you get saved. But the guys got off their gear.

Guys all had their gear. I didn't have any gear on me. I didn't realize. I was just going in for the ride. I thought it was just a regular fire, a little bit bigger than regular. But as we're standing there, the guys had all their tanks on. I didn't have anything. Tommy didn't have anything. So we were kind of like maybe even a step back from everyone else, realizing what's happening, jumpers. You didn't realize, until you actually looked and saw arms and legs waving, exactly what was happening, you know, one after another. There must have been three or four dozen that jumped out right there while we were standing there, just in amazement, exactly what actually was happening.

Then all of a sudden, the further tower, the south tower, I think it is, the first one that went down, the south tower went down. We really didn't realize that it was actually the whole building going down. It looked like just maybe a side or something because you couldn't really see because the other one was in the way, and then you realized exactly what happened because, as you saw on the TV, all the smoke, that pretty much came up ten stories high, 15 stories high, pretty much just came right at us.

Asses and elbows, you know, we just started running every which way. I think I might have actually ran a little bit further than everyone else being I had no gear on me or anything like that. I couldn't take a knee and just let everything blow over me. So I was kind of out in the front. I might have even ran an extra block or two before I turned around and just realized there was nobody even with me.

I would say it was 15, 20, 25 minutes before that cloud kind of dissipated even a little bit. I started working my way back slow, relaxing, just taking it easy, realizing what's happening. I would say about a half a block away from there, I came back with my company again, not even knowing what happened to them because they weren't even near me, the second one came down. I ran again. It might have even been another block I ran.

At that time jets were coming over your head and you didn't know what was happening. Is that our guys? It didn't even dawn on me that it was our guys. It was just this happened here, big buildings are all around, they're still hitting us.

It must have been another half an hour until I kind of got on my feet and just was like, okay, let me start working my way back. At that time guys from other companies were kind of there also, so I wound up hooking up with some kids from different companies. A kid from 20 Truck was there, a Lieutenant from 34, Lieutenant Winkler was there. I hooked up with them and I actually wound up not even seeing my company until maybe 11:00 o'clock that night, you know, working without anything. I wound up getting gear later on. Maybe a couple hours later I was able to get gear on the side, no bunker coat, no helmet, just pants.

I just pretty much worked through the whole night. I wound up finding out that they were actually alive from one of the guys from 202 that was actually on our side. Somehow or another I wound up being on the other side of the building. I wasn't even on the side where we were. I wound up being on the other side. I saw a kid from 202 and he showed me a way how to get to the other side to where 224 was. He let me know that the guys were okay. That was at 11:00 o'clock at night maybe I hooked up with them.

Then we went back to the house by bus like 1:30 in the morning, you know, finally taking the bus in. That's pretty much it. I went back to work the next day.

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Okay. Thank you, Stuart. The time is 1723 hours and I'm concluding the interview with Firefighter Bailey.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER DOMINICK MUSCHELLO

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 6th, 2001. The time is 1831 hours. This is Battalion Chief Stephen King, Safety Battalion, FDNY. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Dominick Muschello from Ladder Company 119. This interview is concerning the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Dominick, you can start any time you want.

A. I worked the 6 by 9 tour the day before and the day of September 11th. We saw the smoke when the first plane hit the towers from headquarters here because we have a clear view to the World Trade Center, but it was obstructed by the factory across the street from the first floor. So we went up to the third floor to see what it was, and we noticed that it was the World Trade Center.

At that point we flipped the TV on in the gym, which is on the third floor. There's a TV up there. We were watching the news, and they said a plane had hit. Plus a marshal had come in. The marshals are also in the building. He said he got on his pager that a plane had hit the tower and it wasn't just a bomb or a fire.

As we watched the fire from the third floor, we saw the second plane fly right into the center of the building clear as day, because there were about two or three of us up in the gym at that point.

I kind of thought we were going to go before that happened. But once the second plane hit, I knew we were going over there and then you knew that it wasn't any type of an accident, two planes, a terrorist. Then you started thinking it was going to be a long day. A lot of people definitely got hurt over there that day.

We got the alarm I think our ticket said 9:08. We were actually first due on the ticket to the second tower, out right first due on the first alarm.

So going over, looking at the towers as we were starting to go over the bridge -- I'm not the chauffeur, so I don't know what bridge we went over, but I believe it was the Brooklyn Bridge. I just remember saying to myself I hope they don't blow this bridge up on the way over, because I had a real bad feeling I wasn't going to come home that day. By the way everything looked, I had a feeling it was going to be a bad day.

When we got to the Trade Center, we had a hard time getting close because of all the debris that was falling from the building. So we parked I believe, near the corner of Church and Dey near that old church there, along that street with the wrought iron railing.

I remember walking down there. We were going to make a left and head down towards Liberty because we were first due to the second tower. We were going to go down Church to Liberty, but there was too much debris falling. So we made a right, and we went down Vesey or one of those streets, whatever streets goes over to the West Side Highway, around tower one.

As we were walking up, the jumpers were jumping clear as day, hitting the street and the marquis from tower one right in front of us on the West Side Highway there. That was a very disturbing sight.

There was the walkway that goes across right there that's no longer there, that walkway that goes across the West Side Highway. When we reached that walkway, we stopped for a second because there were so many people jumping we were afraid of getting hit by jumpers.

We walked across the street underneath that walkway, and at that point when we got across the street, that's where there was a command post set up, just maybe 100 feet south of that walkway on the northwest side of the West Side Highway. That's where the command post had been moved to, which we did not know at that point. We were going in to the lobby to the command post.

When we got to that command post, the chief, which I don't remember who it was, but I do remember seeing Chief Nigro there. I don't know if he was there when we got there or if he got there after us. Chief Ganci was down the road just another 30 feet or so. We were told to stay at that command center. It looked like there were about four or five other companies there.

While standing on the sidewalk, I looked up at the tower and I said to the captain, "Captain, this is not a good place to stand." I said, "If this building comes down, we have nowhere to run." He said that's a good idea.

We moved in front of this garage door. That luckily was open. We stood in front of the garage door. It was a basement-entering garage, a garage ramp, underground garage door there. I think it was Two World Financial Center building or one of the buildings there. We stood up on the sidewalk but knew that we had the garage to run into if anything happened.

We were kind of wondering why we were still standing there. I kept asking the captain, "Captain, what's going on? Let's go in the building." He said that there was a mayday given for a company -- I don't remember which company. I'm sure he'll have that information.

The command post chief told us, or the lieutenant or the captain at the command post told us we're getting a so-called rescue team together. We're putting together three engines, two trucks, and we're going in for the company that's giving the mayday. I believe we had three engines and one truck and we were just waiting for the second truck to come.

All of a sudden it felt like a train was pulling in, and the second tower came down. I only looked at that tower for a split second or two and knew it was time to run. Everybody ran into the garage. Upon running into the garage, there were people in front of me and there were people in back of me. You couldn't see anywhere. It was running into darkness.

I hid behind a pillar. I didn't know there was a way out. I wasn't thinking there was a way out. It was definitely every man for himself. There wasn't one person looking out for anybody else, which is understandable.

I didn't realize there was a rear door. There was a staircase that went up to -- and they were able to get out of the rear. I wasn't thinking that fast. I wasn't following the guys running in deep, deep, deep into this garage. I went in about 40 feet and dove behind a column. I didn't figure I had much more time than that.

I kneeled in the corner of this column and put my mask on, my face piece on, and took the respirator part out and got ready. I didn't want to use any air, and I didn't know what was going to happen at that point, if it was going to fill up with fire or what-have-you. So I didn't want to start using air.

I put my jacket over my head. I took my jacket off and put it over me kind of, not took it off but loosened it and put my hood and everything, just tried to cover as much as I could. I crawled into the corner.

A couple of other people got on top of me, and all of a sudden debris and stuff started falling in front of the garage and falling into the garage and the cloud of smoke and dust came in.

Then all of a sudden when it seemed safe and there was no more noise, I got up. There wasn't really anybody else around me anymore. I guess the guys that were on me had left. They didn't feel safe or whatever the story was.

So my first reaction was to head back out instead of going deeper into the garage, because I knew 40 feet up along the right wall, which is where I was, going in to the left but right on the way out, I would be able to get to the sidewalk again.

I couldn't see. I took my face piece off at that point because I knew it was just smoke. I reattached it to the respirator and just pulled my hood over my mouth and nose, just tried to breathe through that, because you really couldn't breathe at all. It was so thick that you spit it out. You coughed it and spit it right out. It filled your mouth up. Your nose got clogged instantly, you couldn't breathe anymore through your nose.

I made my way up to the sidewalk, and there was nobody there. There was one or two people around. You couldn't see very far. It was very, very quiet. There wasn't even any sound. I didn't have a radio.

I remember seeing Chief Nigro kneeling on the ground. It looked like he was saying a prayer. He had just his helmet on and his white shirt, no bunker gear. I tapped him on the shoulder, and I said, "Chief, are you all right?" He just looked up to me. I said to myself I know he's not hurt. So I looked around to see if there was anybody else that I could help.

This whole time I'm thinking that all the guys that ran into this garage were going to come back out the way I was. I didn't think they had found their way out the back door. So I was kind of hanging on the sidewalk and heading across the street, hitting the middle of the street, looking around.

There was a lot of rubble, a lot of debris around. I was looking for people to help, because I knew where the garage was. You could actually follow your footprints back. It was like snow. There was no problem seeing where you came from.

A firefighter came across the street at that point. He didn't have any bunker gear on; or he may have had bunker pants, but he didn't have a coat or helmet or anything. I don't know who he was. It looked to me like his fingers may have gotten cut off or something, but he was bleeding really, really bad. He was bleeding real, real bad. He was bleeding all over me.

I actually yanked my T-shirt off that was under my shirt, and I wrapped his hand. I brought him into the garage, because I wanted to get him off the sidewalk because there was still stuff that was falling. I don't know whether it was coming from the first tower now, because we were actually closer to the first tower, or if it was stuff from the building, maybe glass. There was still stuff falling down.

I went into the garage, and at that point I met up with somebody that had stretched a search rope. I didn't see who that was. All of a sudden he said this search rope leads out to the rear.

So I walked the guy that was hurt along the search rope, and I said, "Follow the search rope and you'll be able to get out through the rear," because there were guys that were coming. I said, "Somebody help him."

But he went into a closet and sat down and said, "I can't walk anymore." I said, "You can't sit in this closet. No one is going to find you." So I helped him back onto the search rope and started following the search rope. I myself didn't know where it went. I didn't follow it yet.

At that point a guy came who had a white windbreaker on, I believe it was. It might have been like retirees or a union or a chief association, but I don't know who he was. It was civilian clothes with some type of a white windbreaker on, an older fellow with gray hair.

I handed him this guy that was bleeding off to him. As I told him take this guy to the rear, I'm going to see if I can help anybody else, we heard a tapping noise. I stopped. I said, "Do you hear that?" He said, "Yeah, I do." I said, "It sounds like it's coming from over there." The guy said, "Yeah."

We started stretching the search rope over to the noise, and then it wouldn't go anymore. I told the guy, "You take the guy to the rear, and I'll be able to find my way back to the search rope."

I followed the noise, the tapping noise. It was an OEM guy. His name was Powell, I believe, or something like that, a big black guy, Calvin or something. I don't remember. I remember asking him. He was in this closet. I guess he was scared.

(Interruption.)

MR. KING: We're continuing the tape again. We had to stop the tape for about five or six minutes. It's now 1849 hours, and we're continuing with Firefighter Muschello.

A. So I helped the guy out of the closet there, the OEM guy. I brought him to the search rope. The search rope led to a set of stairs and a set of exits. At that point I said, "You can get out from here." He said, "No problem."

I went back out on the search rope towards the street again, went to look for more people to help. I made it pretty close to tower one across the street. Some guys, firemen, came running out. I don't know where they came from. You couldn't see no more than ten feet in front of you.

I didn't know where they came out from, but they came running and they were yelling something like a bomb or something. They were like, "Run, run, run!" Everyone was running. I didn't really know what they were talking about.

I knew where the garage was, so I said, "Come this way." They followed me to the garage. We ran into the garage. We still couldn't see. A few other guys came behind us, and they said run. We ran in.

At that point we ran past the search rope. Really you couldn't find it. I thought it was to the right, so I headed to the right. I think there was like a ledge or a curb of some type, a little bit of a drop. I kind of got trampled and ran and pushed and went down off the drop. I came down pretty hard, twisted a few things, but you know with adrenaline flowing I really didn't feel it until a day or two later, but I got banged up.

At that point I said to myself my guys from my company probably have to be wondering where I am. I tried to grab somebody with a radio and call my captain, but that wasn't happening. So I decided to follow the search rope out of the building, out of that garage, to the rear.

As I walked down the sidewalk in the rear like that Battery Park City thing close to the water, I met up with my company, they were coming back to look for me. They thought that I had perished.

Then we were in the back, and I just remember saying, "Captain, I saw three guys that were hurt over there. Let's go back and help them. There's definitely people that we can help over there." He said that the first tower is going to come down too and we're not going over there right now. We'll all group together, look for some kind of command. Then we'll plan from there, instead of just running aimlessly back in and becoming more victims.

One thing I never heard a mayday after that first one was given by the guys in the first tower. I never really heard one. Like I said, I didn't have a radio. I didn't hear too many people telling people in the first tower that the tower had collapsed, that the second tower had collapsed. So I don't know if they were given that information or not.

Some guys said that they knew it collapsed, and a lot of guys said they had no idea it collapsed. So I really don't know what happened at that point.

Then we walked around in the back there, and I just remember saying we have to try to find as much open space as possible, because there was nothing but tall buildings around, in case any more of them come down.

Then the second tower collapsed, on the first tower. Then we just ran a little bit, because that same puff of smoke engulfed you again. I would say we couldn't have been any more than a quarter mile away at that point. But that smoke went a long way, that dust cloud, whatever you want to call it.

The same thing happened again. I remember seeing a granite wall along the back of -- near the Battery Park City, kind of near where the New York Waterway Parks. I hid behind the granite wall, because I thought that was a pretty safe place.

Then we went out around past Stuyvesant High School. They were evacuating all the students. At that point there was nobody around. But then when we got around to Stuyvesant High School, there were a lot of people over there.

Everybody seemed to be walking along the sidewalk.

We jumped out onto the West Side Highway and gathered up the tools and stokes and things like that and headed back down to help whoever we could.

At that point they were saying all kinds of stories of gas, deadly gas, not natural gas, and stuff like that. So we really didn't know what was going on. We kind of had a feeling that there couldn't have been too many people more that we could help over there. We did go back there, but we just kind of waited until we felt it was a little safe.

Not to mention the fact that at that point a lot of our tools had gotten lost. A lot of our equipment had gotten lost by just dropping everything and running, guys trampling gear and whatnot. We really didn't have the gear that we needed to head back in.

Again, we gathered up what we could, and we went back over. Then we just proceeded to operate for the remainder of the day. Sometime later on that day, I believe after -- when they told us to evacuate the area for tower number seven, building seven, when they knew that was coming down, I had hooked up with my company, Ladder 119, at that point. I told the captain I was going to set up with my company at that point, because at that point the recall guys were there. There were a lot of guys from each company there, so there wasn't any type of manpower problem. This is later on in the day. I worked with Ladder 119 for the rest of the day.

We were on the Church Street side, which unfortunately -- I was there for two days straight. I never left until the 12th. Actually I didn't leave until the 13th, which would have been Thursday morning at sunlight. That's when I really couldn't stand anymore.

The whole time we were down there, the wind was blowing exactly that way. It was blowing right towards the Church Street side. So we were getting nothing but -- you couldn't blink anymore, your eyes or so dry and red. You couldn't even blink or rub them. I couldn't breathe anymore. It was unbelievable. But we were over there for the whole time.

That night all the cars and that afternoon all the cars and the trucks and everything that were along Church Street were all still burning, and there were water problems. We operated and did different things with the tower ladder.

Actually we were putting water on building number five I believe for a while. Then they moved us over to building number four, and we operated the tower on that.

That's about it.

Q. That's terrific. That's fine.

CHIEF KING: We're concluding this interview. The time is 1856 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN CHARLES CLARKE

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 6, 2001. The time is 1905 hours and this is Battalion Chief Stephen King from the Safety Battalion, FDNY. I'm conducting an interview with Captain Charles Clarke from Engine 211, and the interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Captain Clarke, you can start whenever you'd like.

A. Okay. Let's see. We were assigned on a first alarm, I believe. I know we were assigned on one of the alarms. I believe it was for the second tower hit. We came across the Williamsburg Bridge, followed Engine 230 down I guess it's Broadway. I know we parked by a church. I think it may be Dey Street. Either Broadway and Dey Street or Church. I'm not sure where we parked.

We came up the block. We came down Vesey Street. There were car fires in the street that I remember. We stayed to the right side because I remember there was an overhang there and I remember we could get down along the overhang without the -- there was stuff falling out of the building, not a tremendous amount of debris.

One thing I noted was I remember either it was on the handy-talkie or on the Department radio that said that the command post was being created at Vesey and West Street and bring an extra cylinder with you. I don't remember where the transmission came from. The transmission saved our lives, though.

So I said to a guy in the street, because I don't know Manhattan well, I said, "Do you know where Vesey and West Street is?" He pointed me down Vesey Street and he said, "Yeah, go right down to the corner and that will be West," and I said okay. So we went down the street. The street was empty. It was deserted. There was nobody on it.

We got down to West and I looked up West Street and there was a pedestrian bridge there. I'm trying to remember. I remember saying it looked like a lot of curtains were falling out of the building or somebody was throwing debris out the window. As we got closer, I realized it was people jumping, and that's when I realized the heat condition on the upper floors had to be unbelievable.

So we got to the pedestrian bridge and I told the guys that I wanted to stay there for a little bit to judge how far out the jumpers were landing and the debris, so we didn't get hit by it, and at that time I noticed the command post was on West Street right in front of the World Financial Center. So I walked up and told the -- I saw Chief Nigro. I did not see Chief Ganci. I told them, "211. What do you want us to do?" They took my piece off the board. They said, "Hang on. We're busy." I said, "Fine."

So we stepped back and one of my guys noticed a parking garage back across West Street and thought it was a good place to go if something happened. So I said okay. So we waited. I saw 210 there, 221, I think 34 Engine. We got together and we were deciding what the plan of action was and everybody was like everybody's feeling was, holy shit, we're going to have to walk 80 floors before we even get close to this thing.

So we were talking back and forth, whether or not you should wear your bunker gear, maybe you should carry it, carry your boots up with you. Literally, there was a lot of discussion about that. Definitely bring the second bottle because we saw smoke starting to issue from lower floors, you know, that lighter smoke. So we were wondering where that was coming from and I even heard some radio transmissions about fire in the elevator shafts from the jet fuel. So we said okay.

I started talking to a member of 219, who I had probably worked with for 20 years, and he was facing the tower and I was facing away from it. He stopped the conversation, his eyes lit up, and he said, "Charlie, run." He saw it before you could even hear it. We started running. I can't tell you how far I was away from that parking garage. I really don't remember. I just remember thinking let's just get in there.

I got into the parking garage and I hid behind a pole. A few other guys did. A lot of other guys ran deeper in. I lost track of my guys at that moment. Everybody was kind of running. I was kind of in disbelief that the building was actually collapsing. I kind of stopped to say, well, maybe that was a piece of the facade. I couldn't believe that the entire building was going to collapse in one heap. Once I started hearing it hitting into the street, I said, that's a lot of stuff. I've got to move deeper into the building.

So I ran further down into the parking garage and a guy was waving me into a doorway. Then I ran through the door. I heard the stuff piling in a distance back. It didn't seem close. We all got in, someone closed the door or the door closed, and then the hallway filled with smoke and the lights go out for maybe five seconds or so. Then they went back on again. They flickered. They went back on. So I said, "Oh, it's the generators." I said, "That's good. At least something in the building is still pretty good. Let's wait and see what happens."

Somebody said, "I found a door down at the end of that hallway." I said, "Okay. Let's go down there." So we went down to the door and, in my mind, with the towers being exposure one, that felt that exposure three, so I thought that's a good place to start. But I knew we had to climb a set of stairs to get to it. So, in my mind, I figured we've gone down a level if you ran into the garage. Now this is up a level. This may be where we want to be.

So I turned around and I looked and some guys had coats, some guys lost their helmets, nobody had any sets of irons or anything. It was about maybe 30 guys and three officers, all captains. I was wondering what happened to all the rest of the officers. I never really found out. So we were going to go back. Five of us were going to go back and see if we could search and find a set of irons or something.

With that, an elderly gentleman was coming down the stairs and he's got a custodian patch on his shirt. I said, "You work here?" He goes, "Yeah." I said, "You got a key for this door?" He goes, "I do." He goes, "What are you guys doing in here?" He had no idea what the fuck had just happened. He had no idea.

So he opened the door and I opened the door up and looked out and it was solid smoke. So I closed the door. I said, "Where does this lead to?" He said, "That's outside." I said, "Are you sure?" He goes, "Yeah." I opened the door again. I looked along the floor. I saw it was concrete. I said, "Okay." Then everything started to lift. I could see a tree. I said, "Oh, man. This thing wrapped around the whole building."

We went out into the field. I said, "Keep going." It was very difficult to breathe by the door. I said, "Let's keep going across." As we went through the dust, we realized this is the water. This is the end of the trip. Okay. I started counting heads, did a roll call, saw I was missing one man. I took a look around, waited for all the guys, couldn't find him. So I made a decision. I said me and my senior guy were going to go back to get him.

So we went back across the field, got back to the door, and just as we were going to cross in, I heard him yell out my name, and he was down maybe 50 feet, but he had gotten out of the door. I said great. I got all the guys together, and by that time I had about, I would say, 15 guys with no orders and everybody wanted to know what to do. I said, "Okay. Let's find our way around this building and we'll make a determination from there. Let's see what the hell just happened."

I looked up and through the smoke I could see one tower was still standing. The other one was gone. I could not tell by the angle that I was looking at it that it was in fact the north tower that was still standing and the south tower was down. When that guy told me to run, I never looked back. I just figured he's telling me -- the noise was very loud. I just decided to move out. I swore it was the north tower. In retrospect, now I know it was the south tower.

So we gathered up and made our way around, let's see, I guess that would be North End Avenue, to get around. So we headed up North End Avenue, got back onto Vesey Street, and the north tower started to collapse. I saw the top of it peel off and bend over, and I was struck by how long it stood there. It seemed like forever. Obviously, it was probably only seconds. But I said, "Man, that thing is cracked over," and then boom, the whole thing came down.

We didn't realize at first how much dust there was from that first wave. We didn't realize how incredible it was. We saw the second one. It looked like a wave, an ocean wave just coming very quickly, very rolling, very fast. But when it hit us, though, it wasn't very hot. It was just a lot of dust but not so bad.

At that point we then retreated back toward the field by the World Financial Center and then came back out again onto Vesey Street. At this point I had my five guys, probably three or four guys -- I believe 210 was with me and I know another proby -- he wasn't a proby. He's a rotator from -- I don't remember the truck he was in. I believe it's 30 Truck. I know he was from a Manhattan, Harlem company. He said, "Wherever you're going, I'm going." I said, "Okay, great. Move with us then."

At that point the cops came up, came running past us and told us that there was gas on West Street, and I said to them, "Well, what kind of gas? Is it natural? Is it this Saran gas they talk about?" I said, "What do you know about it?" He goes, "I have no idea. I know there's gas." So I said to the guys, "We're going to go back up West Street a little bit and let's see in fact what this is." We had no masks. We didn't have anything.

So we went back up West Street. It turned out to be a natural gas leak. I told the guys, "Start salvaging masks, tools, whatever you can get." They did a great job. They got a basket, they got a Stokes, they got cylinders, they got masks. We were back in business. Because as we looked, we could see that all the stuff that we had had was all buried up. It was gone. It was under a lot of debris. So we got that, and then by that time, as we came back up West Street, a couple of Chiefs had already formed at Vesey and West and were trying to put together teams. So we came back up. I told them I was 211 and that we would like to get back into the field, and they said, "Well, okay, we'll put you on the list. Hang on for a little bit." I said, "Okay." So we waited.

I was very concerned about my chauffeur. Like I said, we parked the rig right over on Church Street, and I was looking at the debris on West and I could only imagine how much debris was on Church and all those side streets. So I conveyed that to one of the Chiefs there, that I'd like to go over there, and he said to hang out and wait. I'd have to say that was for at least a half hour, maybe 40 minutes. I have no recollection of any of the times. But what I did was at that point I figured you know what? Let's go down Barclay and get back out onto Church. Maybe there's a command post there that will get me closer in so at least I can find out, because there were reports and rumors of chauffeurs hidden under the rigs that are now trapped.

So we went back that way. There was no command post. There was no one. There was nothing. The street was empty; a few cops here and there that I can remember. We went back down Church and found the apparatus. Now the apparatus, I believe, was on Fulton midway between Church and Broadway being operated by members of 211 who must have came from quarters, and they said they had found the chauffeur. His hand was broken, they believed, and he had a piece of glass through his leg, but he was okay. I said, "Good." I said, "Where was he?" He didn't know.

At that point there was a command post at Park and Broadway and they assigned us to the post office, the Federal Office Building. So I went down to the Federal Office Building. Oh, preceding that, No. 7 collapsed. We were on Fulton Street when No. 7 collapsed, which was another incredible dust storm. At that point they said, "The post office is on fire, the top floor." We said, "Okay." We went up there with a line and it was just all the dust had permeated all the windows. Literally, it filled the building with smoke, but there was no fire. So we came back down and I gave the guys a rest for a minute.

Then we went back down Church. We had a report of a firefighter down on Cortlandt and Church. We got down there. We didn't find anything like that. But at that point we realized that rescue was going on on Liberty Street for No. 2 World Trade. So we helped with the line, getting the line up the hill. There were supposedly two cops buried up there. We assisted with the line. By this time, it had to be 11:00 o'clock at night. They were working on this guy. I know a lot of tools were going up there. I don't know who was operating up there. We stayed on the hill until about, I guess, around midnight. My lungs were killing me. My back was killing me. I was shot, very tired. My legs were very heavy.

Then we came back down and started walking down Church, and I was kind of amazed that one building was burning on 90 West, I noticed, but I was amazed that all the tenements on Cortlandt and Dey, Fulton, none of them were on fire. I figured there would be a lot of fire and there was none. So we came back down.

By then I guess it was about 1:00 o'clock. We were done. We walked back down Park Row and a city bus was sitting there. I asked him to take me back to 211's quarters. He said he would do that. That's what we did. We went back to quarters and that was that. That's all we did that day.

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Okay. Thanks. The time is 1920 hours and this interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER EDWARD CACHIA

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 6th, 2001. The time is 2 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the New York City Fire Department, Safety Division. I'm conducting an interview with Ed Cachia of Engine 53.

Q. Please state your recollections for September 11th.

A. As far as that particular day, we were in the firehouse cleaning the kitchen, and a member had come in from the house watch and said put on Channel 7, whatever channel it was. He said a plane hit tower one of the World Trade Center, the north tower.

We all ran into the kitchen. Everybody regrouped in the kitchen. We were watching the news, and they had helicopters in the air immediately with the footage. We were discussing more than likely we're going to go down there, this is going to be a big fire.

We all witnessed the second plane hitting the south tower, and with that everybody got kind of psyched up and said we're definitely going to be going down there now, it's definitely some kind of terrorist act and everybody be safe. Everybody is very concerned.

With that the tone alarm went off, and 53 Engine was called down to the north tower. 43 Truck remained in quarters. As we got on the rig, everybody double-checked their equipment, checked the flashlights and all that.

We headed down. We had a very good chauffeur who went through the park and got us down there pretty quick. I believe we pulled up somewhere on West Street a couple blocks before the towers, the north tower. With that I remember seeing 22 parked in front of us, 13 Truck. They must have gone ahead of us.

We walked towards a command post which was set up by an underground garage across from tower two. There was a chief on both sides of this garage, the entrance and the exit. One was the truck, which was on the southern side. On the northern side of the garage were the engine companies. We were waiting there for our assignments. I believe as we were there a couple companies were assigned into the building. I remember seeing 13 Truck to our right.

Then the jumpers started to take effect as far as everybody's concentration and thoughts. There was a tremendous amount of people jumping from the top floors, and the sound and the vision of it kind of broke everybody's concentration. So with that I remember losing sight or record of 13 Truck, which I believe they soon went in after.

We moved to the top of the hill. I don't remember what companies were in front of us, but we worked our way up to the top of the hill. We were with 44 Engine, I believe. We were about to get our assignment to go into the building, and I remember Chief Ganci on the radio yelling, "There's another plane in the air. I don't want anybody to go into the towers. Everybody stay put."

Then I remember him desperately trying to get information: Is the military going to send a plane up to intercept the plane? He told the chiefs again, "Make sure no companies go in right now. There's another plane up in the air. We don't know what's going on."

With that I remember a chief coming over to us saying, "53, 44, do me a favor, before you get your assignment, before you go anywhere near this building, I want you to move a couple of rigs so we can get some ambulances in here."

So now that broke up our company. I remember standing there with my officer, Lieutenant Bob Dorritie, and the other members of the company -- Danny Schofield, Louis Giaconelli, Michael Catalano -- went to move some rigs.

As I'm standing with my officer, the people are continuing to jump. Ganci is still on the radio trying desperately to get some information concerning this third plane in the air.

As my officer and I were looking at the south tower, it just gave. It actually gave at a lower floor, not the floor where the plane hit, because we originally had thought there was like an internal detonation explosives because it went in succession, boom, boom, boom, boom, and then the tower came down.

With that everybody was just stunned for a second or two, looking at the tower coming down. Then everybody started to turn towards the garage. That was it. We were just kind of blown into the garage with all the dust and the debris and material from the building. It came up rapidly right up the street.

As I remember turning, if you were out in the street somewhat, a good amount out in the street, you were kind of blown down the street, where we were kind of forced into the garage. We were very fortunate. There were several companies.

We were encapsulated in this garage for quite some time, maybe 15 minutes or so. You couldn't see. You couldn't breathe. You couldn't even hear because all the residue and material was in your ears and your nose and your mouth.

Then as a few minutes went by, you heard some voices. It was dead silence at first. Just different emotions: How are we going to get out of here? I can't see. I can't breathe. My chest. It was still completely black. You couldn't see an inch in front of your face.

Then I remember an officer saying, "I've got a wall. I've got a wall. I'm going to hit the wall with the halogen. Follow the sound of the halogen. Come towards me. I've got a wall. We'll get out of here."

As I was on the floor -- I was very fortunate. I landed towards the incline of the garage. I was probably one of the last ones to get into the garage. I felt the incline with my left hand, and I had my light. I remember screaming, "I'm at the entrance. Follow my light." I was telling everybody, "Just follow this light, because this is the way out."

I remember another officer yelling, "How do you know that's the way out? I've got a wall. Come towards the wall." So there was a lot of different emotions and different things going on in everybody's mind at the time.

I started to kind of go up the hill myself, pointing the flashlight towards everybody in the garage, and came across like little tree limbs. At that point you still couldn't see. It was completely blacked out. I knew this was definitely the way to go. Some guys followed me out.

That was it. I remember hearing the chief's voice. Maybe this is like 15 minutes or so, maybe going a little towards 20 minutes, a little under 20 minutes, everybody kind of followed their way toward the incline of the garage.

The chief said, "We're going to regroup." It started to lighten up just a little bit. It was still kind of dark out but lightened up enough where you saw other people's faces. The chief said, "We have to regroup in another area."

With that guys were asking each other, "How are you doing? Are you all right?" This and that. Guys were starting to regroup little by little. It's still dark out but light enough to see people now where we were standing. People were still jumping from tower two because you could hear the bodies hitting the ground.

Then another chief came over and said, "We have to regroup, but I want everybody to go back into the garage. We're going to have a lifeline set up, and we're going to come out the back of the garage. It's safer." The other chief had said, "We'll walk along West Street and we'll regroup around the other end of the building."

So with that I remember my officer grabbed me by the shoulder and said we're going to go back through the garage. It's going to be safer. I remember him yelling out to a few other people too we'll go through the garage, it's a lot safer, because at this point in time it's still kind of dark out. People were still jumping. There still was a little confusion as to what was down the block from the collapse.

So a few guys regrouped on top of the garage and I believe started to walk along West Street on the outside. I walked back into the underground garage with my officer and several other guys. There was a lifeline set up, and we came out the rear of this building -- I don't know what building it was -- by the marina.

At that point in time, everybody got out the rear, and my officer and I, Bob Dorritie, was standing there. There was the chief that initiated the entire removal. My officer said to the chief, "Chief, I'm missing a couple of guys. I don't know where they are."

At that point in time, myself, Louis Giaconelli and my officer were the three left standing there with the chief. The chief said, "Send one of your guys back into the building. Maybe they're in the building somewhere. And you two guys stay out here in case they do come out." So I stood there with my officer, and we sent Giaconelli back into the building.

At that point in time, we're looking up at the north tower. I remember my officer saying, "I have a feeling this one is going to come down too." Just as he said that, that tower came down it looked like at the point of impact. We actually witnessed both towers coming down visually. We happened to be looking at that particular time. With that, the tower came down.

We ran towards the marina to seek shelter, and all the debris came over the building we were behind. We were kind of buried a second time with light debris, my officer being ahead of me by the boats, and I just didn't quite make it that far. I just hit the ground and hoped for the best.

You could hear the steel beams coming down. They flew everywhere. That was it. There's another point in time you couldn't see, couldn't breathe, for at least another ten minutes or so.

I remember finally getting in touch with my officer, calling his name out. It took quite some time, and he had said he couldn't speak because of all the residue in his mouth. I had my mask with me at the time, and I had it on. That was it.

After that we were hoping for the best with Louis Giaconelli who went into the building to look for the other members who were in another place. They moved the rigs and took shelter in the Winter Garden, I believe, at the time of the collapse. We were hoping that he was going to be all right. He had walked out of the building at that time, so we knew he was all right.

So what we did was we walked by the water to regroup in another area, which I don't exactly recollect. We were explaining to the chief we're missing a couple guys. He said, "A lot of guys took refuge in the Winter Garden, which was next door. Let's get some confirmation before we do anything, but everybody stay here."

Later on we did hook up with the members that we were missing. My officer was extremely concerned and very upset about that. He pursued it wholeheartedly. They regrouped with us.

At that point in time, they were trying to organize some kind of search for the missing members that were caught in the collapse. I remember walking towards tower two, basically back towards the front of the garage where we regrouped to leave the area. We wound up back in that area.

I remember seeing Chief Visconti very visibly upset, standing on a pile of rubble. It must have been a story or two high in that area. He was explaining that we're going to create a line. We're all going to walk across the rubble as wide as we can, and we're going to search every little nook and cranny and hole or cabin, whatever we can find. Where there's a space, you're going to look for the brothers that might have got caught in the collapse.

At that point in time, we did that, this being maybe half an hour from the point in time of actually leaving that marina area, maybe half an hour after that. I remember several guys came across a fireman's body here, a fireman's body there, a helmet. You saw the back of someone's bunker gear, his legs, a rig twisted under the rubble. Basically that was it.

There wasn't the equipment at the time to dig anybody out, because of the twisted steel. So we put markers for the bodies. They would try and get as deep as possible and close to a body to see if there was a pulse. If there was a confirmation that this person didn't make it, they would mark off the area and we would continue forward, hopefully to find someone that was still alive.

We did that for some time. The inhalation of the dust and the initial collapse just was overwhelming. You were just choking and coughing on your own phlegm and this and that. So we did that maybe 45 minutes or an hour or so.

Then my company and I, we regrouped in another area just to get a breather, because at that particular time more and more firemen were coming in. My officer said, "Look, we've got to really just take a break here. We're really overloading ourselves here," because he saw our condition. We were kind of waning at that point in time from exhaustion.

So that was it. We went back to another staging area. We regrouped. We replenished water. Basically that was the last thing I remember, we regrouped. At that point in time, other members from our company met us at that area, and they were going off into the area to search also.

I myself personally had my eyes encrusted with the cement and lime dust. The second I stopped working, I couldn't even keep my eyes open. So my officer said, "Look, we've got to get you to see the eye doctor right away," because my eyes were bloodshot red and I couldn't even keep them open at that point, knowing that this was it, we're going to take a break, more guys are coming in.

Then I remember it was a little while after that we all went to the triage center, and everybody was getting treated for eye injuries.

Then they said they felt that we had cornea damage so we should go right to a hospital.

So my officer and myself, I think Mike Catalano and Louis Giaconelli went to Cornell. That was it. That was it for us. We were examined.

Q. Thank you very much.

FIREFIGHTER JOHN COLON

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is December 6, 2001. The time is 1:35 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with John Colon of Ladder 43 about the events on September 11.

Q. Please tell us what you know from that day.

A. Well, I'm John Colon, I was a chauffeur for 43 Truck that morning. We were watching TV and we got a run to 43 Street and Lexington Avenue for a person trapped in a revolving door. We go from here from 102 Street and 3 Avenue and it was a 10-91. Then we got called to the World Trade Center. We kept hearing what was going on. I made a right on 57 Street. I went down the West Side Highway and we parked around 4 blocks away, 5 blocks away. We got out of the rig, we got ourselves organized.

We started, not running, but walking fast towards the -- towards one of the buildings. We didn't see whether the first building was down. We really couldn't tell. When we got about approximately a block, block and a half away, the building started coming down. We stopped, we paused because we were in awe. The whole building starts coming down. We turn around, we run. Luckily we got into a loading dock and I asked the junior guy, Jerry Suden, to force open a chain.

We got in there. The whole building came running down, came falling down. We waited a few minutes. We regrouped, we went back to, I presume it was the second tower, the building that came down, that we were looking at. There was numerous fires all over the place. The officer, Glen Rohan, told Jerry Suden to put out car fires. There were car fires. The rigs were on fire. Jerry got a hose line, started putting the fires out.

We climbed up a 35 foot portable ladder and we helped get the officer from Engine 1, who was deceased. We continued from there. I don't know how much more I could tell you. I could tell you what we did all day long.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: No, that's not really what we are interested in.

Q. So as far as you know, you didn't see any companies go into any particular position prior to the collapse?

A. No, not at all. No, we didn't. We saw the rigs parked there, but I have no idea where their positions were.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay, thanks a lot. This concludes the interview. The time is 1:35.

FIREFIGHTER RICHARD BANACISKI

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: December 6, 2001. The time is 3:30 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Rich Banaciski of Ladder 22.

Q. Please tell us the events of September 11 as you recall them?

A. We got the alarm for us to respond, just, I would say, a minute after the second plane had hit the tower. Then they actually came over the voice alarm. Actually told the companies to respond outlet. We responded in and it was all the west side companies were actually all running down together, down the West Side Highway, because it was closed going northbound. So we could see what was going on, the two towers, both of them burning pretty good and then we got into, down to the site. We were at the corner of West and Vesey. That's where we parked the rig, in front of the Verizon building.

We were told to bring extra cylinders. We each brought our extra cylinders and we brought our rollups, the whole thing, and we reported in to the command post, which was in front of -- I think it was the Merrill Lynch building. There was a parking garage. There were two ramps that went in that parking garage.

Q. On West Street?

A. On West Street. We reported in to there and I remember they had the command post set up. They were telling the engines to the one side, all the trucks to the other side, put your cylinders in the middle. We were there. They were getting the command structure going. I just remember we were -- initially we were out by the street and they started having jumpers, so they all kind of moved back towards the parking garage, towards the building, so nothing would come down on us.

We were there I don't know, maybe 10, 15 minutes and then I just remember there was just an explosion. It seemed like on television they blow up these buildings. It seemed like it was going all the way around like a belt, all these explosions. Everybody just said run and we all turned around and we ran into the parking garage because that's basically where we were. Running forward would be running towards it. Not thinking that this building is coming down. We just thought there was going to be a big explosion, stuff was going to come down.

There was just a tremendous cloud that came into the parking garage. Somebody actually laid out a search rope, I think it was the officer of 76 Engine too, Lieutenant Farrington. He laid out a search rope so some of the guys could find their way to a back door, set up a back staircase in the Merrill Lynch building. We followed that up and we ended up coming out behind the building where the Marina is. Back in there. A lot of guys made their way out there.

We kind of -- from there we kind of regrouped together because we lost each other when the building came down. We all ran, so we kind of regrouped there, got ourselves together. Then there was a lot of people not knowing what to do, do you know what I mean.

I said to the officer, I'm going to go look for our chauffeur and I knew he parked the rig right in front of the Verizon building. I went up there. I started looking for him. He had moved the rig, not knowing now -- now I know, but he had moved the rig. I'm not exactly sure where he put it, but I went to go look for him because I couldn't get him on the radio due to the amount of radio traffic. People looking for this guy, this guy, companies looking for their own guys.

So I was kind of looking around over there, up and down West Street and looking on Vesey and I just remember there was a police officer standing there and he just started saying, it's starting to lean, it's starting to lean. I remember looking up, looking at the second building and just seeing it starting to move. I just started running back down Vesey towards the water again to where I had come from. That's -- the second building came down there.

So we kind of -- same thing, there was a time period where people were kind of in shock, not knowing what to do. I just remember we finally said we got to go somewhere now. We got to figure out what's going on.

I remember going back up Vesey to West and then they were telling us to go north. Go north up on West Street, because there is a foot bridge north, like an arched foot bridge. Had everybody going north of that. We will regroup up there.

I just remember that's when I started seeing all the guys coming in from home, all the guys from the company and we actually -- everybody from this house, we stuck together and we actually from there, a little bit of time, maybe an hour or so, they actually started telling us to go here, go there. They moved us from one spot, they moved us on to Vesey again. Because then they were worried about -- we actually searched the Verizon building, because there was reports of firemen there. Basically our whole house searched that building.

They told us to get out of there because they were worried about 7 World Trade Center, which is right behind it, coming down. We were up on the upper floors of the Verizon building looking at it. You could just see the whole bottom corner of the building was gone. We could look right out over to where the Trade Centers were because we were that high up. Looking over the smaller buildings. I just remember it was tremendous, tremendous fires going on.

Finally they pulled us out. They said all right, get out of that building because that 7, they were really worried about. They pulled us out of there and then they regrouped everybody on Vesey Street, between the water and West Street. They put everybody back in there.

Finally it did come down. From there -- this is much later on in the day, because every day we were so worried about that building we didn't really want to get people close. They were trying to limit the amount of people that were in there. Finally it did come down. That's when they let the guys go on. I just remember we started searching around all the rigs.

That was basically the rest of the day, the rest of the night. We were searching around rigs looking for men. That was it.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: All right.

Q. Do you have anything else to add?

A. No.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay. Thank you very much for your cooperation. The time now is 3:45 p.m. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER RICHARD BATTISTA

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: The time is 4:49 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan, the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with Richard Battista of Engine 76.

Q. Richard, explain to us what you remember on September 11.

A. Well, September 11, the day started out normally just like any other day. The men had gotten up for breakfast and I turned on the channel, I turned on the news TV and we saw that one of the World Trade Center towers had been struck by an airplane. At that time we thought it was an accident. Shortly after, the second plane struck the second building. We started receiving our alarms and everybody came over the voice alarm telling us exactly what to do.

Members started to turn out and we made our way downtown. We took a route along the West Side Highway and on our way down there you could see both towers in flames and you could see a lot of smoke in the immediate area. On arrival we got there, the Lieutenant had - Lieutenant Farrington, told us basically what we needed to do as to - just start getting to a staging area and while he was receiving his orders from the Battalion, we pretty much kept a wait in front of what is now -- I think was the American Express building.

At that time he just told us basically to prepare, getting extra water, whatever else we might have needed for the flight up. I think he was getting reports of possibly going up to a building, one of the floors in the second tower.

Q. North tower or the south tower?

A. Sorry, the north tower. At this time, I had just been waiting for a while, and all I could remember from my vantage point was seeing civilians jump out of the buildings in the west side of the tower and landing around the surrounding streets. At that time, to be honest I didn't really focus too much on what was going on around me because I was sort of fixated on what was happening up above, so I didn't really get too much of a time to notice what was happening immediately around me. I know there was a lot of people running back and forth and there was havoc, but it didn't really dawn upon me at that time that I should be aware of my immediate surroundings.

Once they started falling, we got a report of a firefighter being injured, from someone maybe falling, so we decided to move back further away from the tower. I remember specifically the command post, which may have been, I don't know, maybe 40 feet in front of us, something in that nature. When I saw that, Lieutenant Farrington told us to move back so we were sort of underneath a garage area when we first heard reports or guys yelling that one of the towers was coming down. I was able to stick my head out and look up a bit and once I saw that I just immediately turned around and ran into the building.

Within seconds everything was pitch dark. I remember something actually hit me on my shoulder, what it was I don't know. It could have been a helmet, it could have been something that hit me on my left shoulder. Even though we weren't immediately in front of the south tower, in that vicinity, because I wasn't able to see what was coming down around me, I thought maybe it was a piece of the building or something, so at that point I just ducked into a corner and put my -- rolled up in a fetal position, just balled up and waiting for the worst to be over.

Once things settled down I heard firefighters asking for help. Someone actually stated oh, I have asthma. I can't breathe, whatever. So I was one of the few firefighters that I remember who actually had my cylinder on my back, because some of the firefighters had actually put them down to rest, because we had been waiting for a while.

At this point I turned on my flashlight and I tried to look for anyone that I might be able to assist within the garage area, keeping in mind I didn't know how badly affected the building I was in was. I just knew it was pitch black in front. I couldn't see out where I came in from originally, so I thought who knows, maybe we are underneath or trapped as well.

After some of the haze started clearing, we started seeing bits of light, but we couldn't exactly see the entrance. Lieutenant Farrington had the forethought of getting a search rope tied off to a bannister and made his way out to the back of the building heading towards the west river. He started calling out to the members of the 76 and other companies. We found the line and made our way out the building and back down under some steps and coming out, surfacing on the other side.

At that time I really don't remember too many other faces, because myself, I have a little over a year on the job, so I really don't know too many other people from surrounding companies, just a few familiar faces.

I do remember once we made it out the back of the building, running towards the river and I saw several members of our truck company, 22 Truck. Those were the only distinguishing faces I could make out. Not only was it hard to see, but a lot of helmets were covered with soot at that point after we made it out the back, so it was difficult to even see some of the numbers, even if I did look for it.

At that point we waited by the river and tried to gather everyone because all the members who were in the Engine that day, I think two of the members might have gone a different way, so we were waiting to catch up with them and then we were waiting to make a voice communication with them over the handy talky, but there was just so much confusion that that wasn't able to happen right away.

Eventually we did meet up with them and we started walking up north when the second tower collapsed. At this point that walk turned into a run very quickly and we made our way to, I believe it's Vesey or on West Street, and started going up West Street until we were able to come to another meeting point.

Other than that, that's pretty much all I can recall at this point.

Q. The point that you are just talking about now, had the second tower come down yet or not?

A. No.

Q. What happened after you met at that point, did you go back at all or did you stay up there when the second tower came down?

A. Once we made it out to that meeting point where the Chiefs were trying to get a head count over on West Street, I was (inaudible) for a message from the Chief's aide and found out that we had to go back in eventually to find -- to see how many members we could find. This took some time, because like I said, everything was out of whack. People -- whole companies weren't together, so it took some time for us to not only gather the men but gather our bearings, because you could imagine once we were waiting we also got another report of a plane in the area, so we thought possibly at that time that another building around us might get struck.

I remember sitting down and drinking water and trying to get a bite of an apple or something by that time. When we finally did get our job duties, what we were supposed to do, we started gathering up again and we were told we had to turn out on a spreading fire in what I believe is 6 World Trade Center or the customs building, possibly a bank.

At that point, this was later on, closer to the afternoon maybe, maybe 12, but I'm not exactly sure, during that time --

As I was saying, once the afternoon came around, 12 or 1, by that time I think a new officer had met up with our company, we had Captain Jirak take us into that fire on that 6 World Trade Center where we helped extinguish some fires on the back of that building.

Prior to that, earlier in the day, just to backtrack a little bit, when the second tower collapsed, I remember we were all by the water way, by the river, right on the river's edge, and we were looking in the general direction of the towers, but you couldn't see much, because I believe the other building, maybe 4 World Trade Center or the American Express building, was blocking our view. We couldn't really see nothing but what was up in the sky.

Once we finished extinguishing the fires, we once again met up on West Street with Captain Jirak and we just waited for further orders to go out and start making searches. That's about it.

Q. Okay, anything else you would like to add?

A. No.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Thank you Richard, for all your help. This concludes the interview it's now 5:05 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER TODD HEANEY

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: The date is December 6, 2001. The time is 11:10, and this is Battalion Chief Kenahan of the safety battalion of the New York City Fire Department.

I'm conducting an interview with Todd Heaney of Engine 209.

Q. Please tell us any information you have about September 11.

A. All right. I'm going to -- just a little checklist you gave me, Chief, might help me --

Q. Fine.

A. -- if I can use it.

Q. Whatever way.

A. We were here in quarters, just like everybody else, and we saw what happened. When the second tower got hit, we were dispatched on the fifth alarm.

We left quarters. We took the Brooklyn Bridge to Manhattan. En route we could just see the damage to the towers. It was bad.

We got to Manhattan. I think we were dispatched around ten after nine. We got to Manhattan quickly. We were there in 20 minutes, but maybe less. We were there about 9:30. I don't remember where we parked our apparatus.

We came down Chambers Street off the Brooklyn Bridge, made a left-hand turn onto Broadway, and we took one of the side streets. Might have been Liberty. I don't remember. I don't remember where we parked exactly, but when we got off the rig, we took our roll-ups, and we took some forcible entry tools, search rope, things like that.

No civilians or anything approached us. It was pretty -- pretty much had people evacuated from around the towers at the time. A lot of people on Broadway and the side streets, but when we got down to the complex, I expected to see a lot of people running around, but there weren't. They had most of the people out.

We saw Engine Company 217 on the corner of Liberty and Church. At that time, I had a handy-talkie, and we were supposed to report to the lobby of Tower 2, but our handy-talkie message told us to report to command post at West and Vesey Street.

Now, at that time, they also were telling us to bring additional cylinders, so our rig wasn't parked that far from where we were, which was Liberty and Church, so we went back to the rig and grabbed additional cylinders.

We -- our officer spoke with the officer of 217 for a couple of seconds at the corner of Liberty and Church. I don't know if that's 4 or 5 World Trade Center on the corner, and then there's a Burger King right there.

We proceeded down Liberty towards West Street. We ran into an injured fireman. I don't remember too well, but there was an injured fireman. Dr. Kelly was there. She came out of a building, and they were carrying this fireman. They put him into an ambulance right away.

I asked Dr. Kelly if she needed our help, and she said, "No, we're going to take him to the hospital." We passed 10 and 10's quarters.

I mean, I don't know what they want me to tell them. There were people -- dead people everywhere. I don't know if you want to know that.

Q. What did you do, you know, you can say it. Whatever you saw.

A. You know, they -- the people were just everywhere. Saw some luggage. From the plane, I imagine. A lot of debris from the upper floors, papers and things of that nature.

We ran into a truck company. I don't remember who they were. This was on Liberty. On the corner of Liberty and West is 90 West Street. I know that building, the old -- an older building with scaffolding all around it. This building is located next to 90 West. It's the building -- it's still standing. It has a big slash in it from the -- that's where we bumped into this truck company.

There was some type of, like, promenade there or steps that could go up into, like, some type of balcony, steps that could go down, and they came up to us and said, "There is no command post. We're going to the lobby." And they went to the lobby.

Our officers -- we were very close to West Street at this time, standing right across the street from Tower 2. We thought we could just go to West Street and look. If there was no command post there, we were going to go to Vesey.

At this time we found an officer's helmet badly crushed with a lot of blood on it. I don't know what company it was. I don't remember. 54, 50 something, but it was an officer's helmet, badly damaged.

We continued down Liberty to West Street, and there was this chief standing there in the middle of West, a little bit south of West Street, and he had his own little, like, command post in there, you know, like the flip-up, and he was standing there all by himself.

Before we went to go to Vesey, our officer said, "Let me just ask this guy if he wants us to do something from here." That chief told our officer to stand fast right here, and the buildings came down. Tower 2 came town.

We ran across West Street to one of the financial buildings, which is near the south pedestrian overpass.

Q. Right.

A. The doors were locked. We couldn't get in the building. Two of our guys got caught at that door. Me and another guy got caught outside, and that was it. Just -- the buildings came down. It became black as night.

Q. All your members went the same way, like --

A. We all headed towards that building. That's where we all headed towards. I mean, it happened very quickly. You heard the sound, like a crack, like a giant tree branch breaking, and I was frozen. I couldn't even run.

People were just running past me, and I watched the building, and the top half cracked and started to fall towards Liberty, started to fall towards Liberty Street, towards where 10 and 10 is, and then it just started coming down, and the pounding got louder, and louder and louder, and then we just started running.

Q. What happened with that chief?

A. I don't even know. I don't know what happened, if he made it. I don't know.

Q. I guess he didn't go the same direction you went or --

A. I don't know. He was -- he was a little south of us. We were on the corner of Liberty and West. He was a little south of that, so our officer went to him. We stayed, like, in the middle of West Street right by the Marriott Hotel and the south overpass, the south pedestrian overpass.

When it started to come down, we just ran. There was nothing else to do, and we tried to head towards that building.

Two guys got caught in the revolving door. I didn't find out until later that they were able to break the window and get into the building. Myself and Tommy Hansard, who was working that day, we got caught outside. There was a -- there was a police officer and a woman civilian, who were kind of, like, curled up on the floor. I kind of just, like, curled up with them. I thought that was it. This is the end. You can't out run the World Trade Center, and the concussion was -- it was deafening, and this hot, super wind blew, and it just got dark as night, and you couldn't breathe because of the dust, and we didn't have our -- we dropped our masks. We had them on, and so we -- really that was it.

I -- I didn't know what happened to everybody else. I thought I was by myself, but I knew -- I knew what direction I was facing. I knew that that building we were running to was the west side, and that if we could make it to the west side, we'd hit the water, and maybe we'd be able to get away, so I crawled along the side of the building, and I had this police officer and this woman with me. They held onto me, and I crawled along the wall until I got to the corner, and I made the right, and we just kept crawling.

Along the way, I found a fireman's helmet from 101, and I picked it up, and I kept calling out to 101 on the way there. Nobody answered. Other companies would answer. I don't remember who answered, but it wasn't 101.

We crawled to just about the end of this building, and we got to the west side where it was a little bit clearer. We got into a restaurant and dropped those two people off there.

Now, I don't think I bumped into my guys again. I went back to where we were to try to find our gear, and I still had the guy's helmet in my hand, and I kept calling out for him, and he didn't answer, so I put the helmet back down basically where I found it.

When I got to the front of the building, it tossed rigs down the street like it was -- like they were toys. They were upside down, on fire. There was a large chunk of the facade basically where we were standing. I didn't know where the officer was or what happened to that chief, but I found Tommy Hansard, the guy who was caught outside with me.

We went back to the west side because it was clearer, and then we found our other guys. They had went through the building and came out basically on the other end, so we regrouped there. We started to head back. We weren't on Liberty. It would be the next street north of Liberty, and we were heading back towards the towers, and we found three firemen climbing -- just coming up out of the rubble. Two were trying to help one, so me and another guy took him. He had a bad head wound.

While we were down by the water dropping off the civilians I was with and that cop -- there was an ESU cop or someone there who said, "I have medical equipment," so I remembered him saying that, and we brought this officer to him, and he had a few people. There was even -- there was a police launch boat there.

It cleared -- the air cleared pretty good down by the water, so we dropped him off, and we started heading back. I don't remember what street we were on. I don't remember exact -- I really don't remember where we were, but as we were heading back, the next tower came down, and again we were just totally engulfed in just debris, and we just curled up next to a building until it blew away.

We made our way back, and everything was gone. Everything was gone. It was gone.

Q. With the second collapse, did you see anything?

A. No, we weren't close enough to the second collapse, plus the dust cloud from the first -- I couldn't even see the tower. I knew where it was, you know. I mean, you could hear the fire.

You had a good idea where it was, but you couldn't see it any more, so instead of walking straight down the block, we just figured that we headed -- we were now more north than we were when we were at the south tower, so we're right near the north tower.

We were figuring if the second tower -- if the Tower 2 came down, Tower 1's coming down, too. Just don't know when, so instead of walking straight down the street, we headed a block south, and then headed east to go back to the towers.

Just figured if the towers are going to come down, we'd put a block between us, we might be able to make it. Just knew that there were guys in the tower. We knew there were guys in the tower. We saw them coming -- I saw them running out of the building, and I knew they didn't make it, and there is no way those guys I saw emerging from the tower were going to make it.

We got back to basically where the Marriott Hotel was. That's the only landmark I can remember, that and the south pedestrian walk, and we got split up from there. They were trying to get water. Marine companies pulled in at the foot of one of the streets, and they just started laying hose, and I just started helping out with that.

My eyes were really bad at this point. I -- they were just really bad, and they bothered me and progressively got worse as the day went on.

I don't know where my company went, but at some point on that street I ran into 102. 102 truck was housed with us, and they were sent to the staging area at the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel on the Brooklyn side when this happened. They ended up walking through the tunnel, and by the time they came out, the towers were down, but they met up with me at Tower 2 basically, what was left of Tower 2.

I don't know where my officer was. I didn't know where my chauffeur was. I didn't see them again. We started stretching hose. We couldn't get water for anything. The satellite units were showing up. I saw the manifolds being brought in.

Officers were pleading for help to try and get a line in place, so I just stayed with them and helped stretch a line. There was a rig there that we were stretching hose off of. I don't know what rig it was. I saw 113 truck, their rig. It was basically intact, but heavily damaged.

I remember getting a drink of water out of their cooler there, and then we just started to put out the car fires, and the rigs were going, ambulances. I mean, there must have been 50 of these things burning heavily. The Scott cylinders and the oxygen cylinders were all letting go. They were all blowing up left and right.

It was quiet in the beginning, but then the radio transmissions started on the radio, and they just didn't stop, who was stuck here. I remember hearing 9 truck being stuck in a staircase and then trying to figure out how to get to them. I think it was 9 truck. I don't know. I don't know what truck it was.

Q. It was 6.

A. Was it 6? I heard that whole transmission of them trying to tell where they were, and them not even knowing that the building was gone, and -- but I knew that they had help. I knew that people were going for them.

I ended up with an officer who seemed to be by himself trying to put out these car fires, so I just hooked up with him, and we put out a bunch of them.

By this time, it was really, really getting hard to see. My eyes were really, really bad. I tried to get in touch with my officer several times. The radio traffic really, really started getting bad, because people were trapped. People were trying to find out who was where.

It was very hard to get through. I heard him calling me. I tried to respond. I don't know if he ever got the message. I don't think I even saw him again that day.

Time went by very quickly. Before I knew it, it was four o'clock in the afternoon, something like that, and I was losing it. I was pretty shot. [redacted] I couldn't really see too good.

So I went up to -- I went up to Broadway. Someone said that they were -- a recall was being held at City Hall Park, and I went up to -- I went up there and I saw some of the guys from this firehouse who reported for the recall, and I told them what I knew.

I knew that 102 was okay. I saw them in the collapse. The collapses had already occurred, and they were still alive, all of them. I told them who I knew was still alive from 209. Again, I didn't know what happened to the chauffeur or the officer. I just told them who was alive.

I went back down. I went back down. I tried to -- I flushed my eyes out with water. It wasn't helping. I went back down. Finally, one of the guys found me, and they put me in an ambulance, and they sent me to the Staten Island Ferry Terminal. They treated me there, and they put something in my eyes that numbed them, and like a miracle I could see again, and it didn't hurt. So I left there. I told them I'm okay, and I went back.

And the last thing I remember was being on Church Street, seeing 4 and 5 World Trade Center blazing. Every floor of the building was going, and just thousands and thousands of people coming now -- our guys, cops, people -- I don't know. Just thousands of people just started showing up.

Within a half an hour, that medicine they gave me wore off, and I was totally blind again. One of the guys found me. It happened to be one of the guys from this firehouse found me wandering around. I couldn't see. I was -- I was shot. I just couldn't do anything any more, and they sent me to Pace University, where I got triaged and sent to the hospital from there. And that's all.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Well, thanks for your help, Todd.

And the time now is 11:30. This concludes the interview.
